57*z*Those who had arrested Jesus led him away to Caiaphas* the high priest, where the scribes and the elders were assembled. 58Peter was following him at a distance as far as the high priest's courtyard, and going inside he sat down with the servants to see the outcome. 59The chief priests and the entire Sanhedrin* kept trying to obtain false testimony against Jesus in order to put him to death, 60*a*but they found none, though many false witnesses came forward. Finally two* came forward 61who stated, "This man said, 'I can destroy the temple of God and within three days rebuild it.'" 62The high priest rose and addressed him, "Have you no answer? What are these men testifying against you?" 63*b*But Jesus was silent.* Then the high priest said to him, "I order you to tell us under oath before the living God whether you are the Messiah, the Son of God." 64*c*Jesus said to him in reply, "You have said so.* But I tell you:

From now on you will see 'the Son of Man
and 'coming on the clouds of heaven.'"

65Then the high priest tore his robes and said, "He has blasphemed!* What further need have we of witnesses? You have now heard the blasphemy; 66what is your opinion?" They said in reply, "He deserves to die!" 67d*Then they spat in his face and struck him, while some slapped him, 68saying, "Prophesy for us, Messiah: who is it that struck you?"

Peter’s Denial of Jesus

[69][e]Now Peter was sitting outside in the courtyard. One of the maids came over to him and said, “You too were with Jesus the Galilean.” [70]*But he denied it in front of everyone, saying, “I do not know what you are talking about!” [71]As he went out to the gate, another girl saw him and said to those who were there, “This man was with Jesus the Nazorean.” [72]Again he denied it with an oath, “I do not know the man!” [73]*A little later the bystanders came over and said to Peter, “Surely you too are one of them; even your speech gives you away.” [74]At that he began to curse and to swear, “I do not know the man.” And immediately a cock crowed. [75][f]Then Peter remembered the word that Jesus had spoken: “Before the cock crows you will deny me three times.” He went out and began to weep bitterly.

Peter

Peter is the most important of the original twelve apostles. The NT shows his prominence in several ways, especially by means of his role as the primary voice of the apostles. Peter uniformly appears first in the lists of the Twelve (Mt 10:2 and par.), he confessed Jesus as the Messiah (Mk 8:29 and par.), and he is among the first to encounter the risen Jesus (1 Cor 15:5). While his preeminence is clear, he is also a complex figure whose limitations the NT does not hide. Essentially, Peter is both saint and sinner.

“Peter” is actually a nickname for the apostle Simon, whose brother was Andrew. They, along with Philip, were natives of Bethsaida and fishermen on the Sea of Galilee (Jn 1:44; Mk 1:16). Jesus bestowed the name “Peter” on Simon, making a pun in reference to his steadfastness in faith (Mt 16:18; Mk 3:16; Acts 10:5). The pun appears in Greek (petros) and Aramaic (kephas), for both words mean “rock.” The NT occasionally refers to Peter as Kephas (Gal 1:18; 2:9; “Cephas”). Jesus promised to build his church on this “rock” so that it would withstand the inevitable trials and tribulations of the ages (Mt 16:18).

How did this simple fisherman become so central a figure to the church? The NT portrays Peter as sometimes impulsive and unpredictable, as when he jumped into the sea with his clothes on in his excitement to see the risen Lord (Jn 21:7) or when Peter brashly says that his faith will never falter, shortly before he denies that he even knows Jesus (Mk 14:29, 68). Mark unrelentingly shows Peter, along with the other disciples, as somewhat obtuse in his understanding of Jesus’ ministry.

Just after his proper confession of Jesus' identity, Peter shows that he does not grasp the necessity of Jesus' suffering and death. Jesus goes so far as to call him "Satan," a human stumbling block (Greek, skandalon) to God's plan fulfilled in Jesus (Mk 8:33).

Yet the faith of this man endured. Emboldened by the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, Peter appears in Acts as the primary evangelist among the apostles. Indeed, if the second half of Acts (chs. 16–28) is almost exclusively devoted to Paul, the first half focuses primarily on Peter (chs. 2–15). Peter gives bold and effective speeches, performs great miracles, and is frequently imprisoned or persecuted for the sake of the faith (e.g., Acts 2:17-41; 3:1-10; 5:18). His ordinary working-class background yields to a boundless evangelical spirit to carry forth Jesus' message to the world (Acts 4:13).

Perhaps the most serious flaw in this saint is the fact that he denied the Lord, not once but three times (Lk 22:54-62 and par.). That the NT proclaims this embarrassing scene boldly is sufficient proof of its historicity. John's gospel shows the most poignant scene of Peter's reconciliation, however, through the story of Peter's encounter with the risen Lord. Just as Peter had denied Jesus three times, so the risen Jesus asks him three times if he "loves" him (Jn 21:15-17). Peter's threefold positive response leads to a commission to shepherd the flock.

Peter is the source of the Petrine ministry in the church, which Roman Catholics identify with the papacy. Although in the early church Peter was not the only prominent leader among the apostles (remember James the brother of the Lord, Paul, Barnabas, the Beloved Disciple, etc.), he nonetheless became the most prominent of the apostles over time. He is especially identified with the early Christian community in the imperial city of Rome. Ancient tradition holds that he was martyred and buried there in the early 60s.

Jesus Before Pilate

3[b]Then Judas, his betrayer, seeing that Jesus had been condemned, deeply regretted what he had done. He returned the thirty pieces of silver* to the chief priests and elders,[c] 4saying, “I have sinned in betraying innocent blood.” They said, “What is that to us? Look to it yourself.” 5*Flinging the money into the temple, he departed and went off and hanged himself. 6The chief priests gathered up the money, but said, “It is not lawful to deposit this in the temple treasury, for it is the price of blood.” 7After consultation, they used it to buy the potter’s field as a burial place for foreigners. 8That is why that field even today is called the Field of Blood. 9Then was fulfilled what had been said through Jeremiah the prophet,* “And they took the thirty pieces of silver, the value of a man with a price on his head, a price set by some of the Israelites, 10[d]and they paid it out for the potter’s field just as the Lord had commanded me.”

The title “King of the Jews” is curious in that it represents an “outsider’s” perspective. The normal title for a Davidic king is “King of Israel.” But Alexander Jannaeus (103–76 B.C.) and Herod the Great (37–4 B.C.), neither of whom was Davidic, both possessed the title “King of the Jews” when they ruled Palestine. An archaeological find in 1996 confirmed the title for Herod the Great when an inscription was discovered on a clay wine jug at a 2000-year-old garbage dump at Masada in Israel. This fact makes the passion narratives of the gospels all the more comprehensible. Jesus may have been crucified for political reasons as a threat to Roman authority for trying, in their view, to reestablish a Jewish monarchy.

What evil has he done?” They only shouted the louder, “Let him be crucified!” 24*[i]When Pilate saw that he was not succeeding at all, but that a riot was breaking out instead, he took water and washed his hands in the sight of the crowd, saying, “I am innocent of this man’s blood. 57[a]When it was evening, there came a rich man from Arimathea named Joseph, who was himself a disciple of Jesus.[b] 58He went to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus; then Pilate ordered it to be handed over. 59Taking the body, Joseph wrapped it [in] clean linen 60and laid it in his new tomb that he had hewn in the rock. Then he rolled a huge stone across the entrance to the tomb and departed. 61But Mary Magdalene and the other Mary remained sitting there, facing the tomb.

62The next day, the one following the day of preparation,* the chief priests and the Pharisees gathered before Pilate 63cand said, “Sir, we remember that this impostor while still alive said, ‘After three days I will be raised up.’ 64Give orders, then, that the grave be secured until the third day, lest his disciples come and steal him and say to the people, ‘He has been raised from the dead.’ This last imposture would be worse than the first.”* 65Pilate said to them, “The guard is yours;* go secure it as best you can.” 66So they went and secured the tomb by fixing a seal to the stone and setting the guard.

Joseph of Arimathea

Toward the end of all four gospels, one person is named explicitly in relation to the burial of Jesus: Joseph of Arimathea. Burial was a necessity of Jewish law that opened Joseph to ritual impurity. Who was Joseph? And how is his role described in each gospel account?

Mark 15:42-46: The earliest gospel calls Joseph “a distinguished member of the council” (presumably the Sanhedrin) who was “awaiting the kingdom of God.” Mark, known for describing discipleship as carrying the cross, notes Joseph’s courage in asking Pilate for the body of one crucified.

Matthew 27:57-60: Noting that Joseph was a “rich man,” Matthew identifies him as a disciple of Jesus. In this account, Joseph uses his own tomb for Jesus, emphasizing personal generosity.

Luke 23:50-54: Here Joseph is identified as “virtuous and righteous.” Though a member of the council, Joseph apparently did not go along with their plans about Jesus. In this account, Joseph buries Jesus in a rock-hewn tomb that is unused by anyone else.

John 19:38-42: The final gospel writer notes that Joseph was “secretly a disciple of Jesus for fear of the Jews” and that he was accompanied by Nicodemus when they buried Jesus in a new tomb. Recall that Nicodemus had earlier come to Jesus under cover of darkness (Jn 3:1-21), perhaps also fearful.

It appears that Joseph’s secret devotion to Jesus was made public at the cross and tomb. His care of Jesus’ body foreshadows the care every disciple of Jesus must have for the Body of Christ. His witness of courage in spite of fear, virtue in the face of injustice, and personal generosity model for us the way to follow the risen Christ.

[2]*[b]And behold, there was a great earthquake; for an angel of the Lord descended from heaven, approached, rolled back the stone, and sat upon it. [3][c]His appearance was like lightning and his clothing was white as snow. [4]The guards were shaken with fear of him and became like dead men. [5]Then the angel said to the women in reply, “Do not be afraid! I know that you are seeking Jesus the crucified. [6]He is not here, for he has been raised just as he said. Come and see the place where he lay. [7][d]Then go quickly and tell his disciples, ‘He has been raised from the dead, and he is going before you to Galilee; there you will see him.’ Behold, I have told you.” [8]Then they went away quickly from the tomb, fearful yet overjoyed, and ran to announce this to his disciples. [9]*[e]And behold, Jesus met them on their way and greeted them. They approached, embraced his feet, and did him homage. [10]Then Jesus said to them, “Do not be afraid. Go tell my brothers to go to Galilee, and there they will see me.”

The church reads this account of Jesus’ resurrection at the Easter Vigil of Year A. It is one of the most detailed accounts of the resurrection in the NT.

The Report of the Guard*

11While they were going, some of the guard went into the city and told the chief priests all that had happened. 12They assembled with the elders and took counsel; then they gave a large sum of money to the soldiers, 13telling them, “You are to say, ‘His disciples came by night and stole him while we were asleep.’ 14And if this gets to the ears of the governor, we will satisfy [him] and keep you out of trouble.” 15The soldiers took the money and did as they were instructed. And this story has circulated among the Jews to the present [day].

Matthew’s scene of Jesus commissioning the disciples is one of the most powerful in the NT. It emphasizes the worldwide task of evangelization, carrying forth the Good News (Gospel) of Jesus Christ. In 1990, Pope John Paul II called for a new evangelization: “I wish to invite the Church to renew her missionary commitment … For missionary activity renews the Church, revitalizes faith and Christian identity, and offers fresh enthusiasm and new incentive. Faith is strengthened when it is given to others! It is in commitment to the Church’s universal mission that the new evangelization of Christian peoples will find inspiration and support” (RM, 2).

1:1–2:23 The infancy narrative forms the prologue of the gospel. Consisting of a genealogy and five stories, it presents the coming of Jesus as the climax of Israel's history, and the events of his conception, birth, and early childhood as the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy. The genealogy is probably traditional material that Matthew edited. In its first two sections (1:2-11) it was drawn from Ruth 4:18-22; 1 Chronicles 1–3. Except for Jechoniah, Shealtiel, and Zerubbabel, none of the names in the third section (1:12-16) is found in any Old Testament genealogy. While the genealogy shows the continuity of God's providential plan from Abraham on, discontinuity is also present. The women Tamar (1:3), Rahab and Ruth (1:5), and the wife of Uriah, Bathsheba (1:6), bore their sons through unions that were in varying degrees strange and unexpected. These "irregularities" culminate in the supreme "irregularity" of the Messiah's birth of a virgin mother; the age of fulfillment is inaugurated by a creative act of God. Drawing upon both biblical tradition and Jewish stories, Matthew portrays Jesus as reliving the Exodus experience of Israel and the persecutions of Moses. His rejection by his own people and his passion are foreshadowed by the troubled reaction of "all Jerusalem" to the question of the magi who are seeking the "newborn king of the Jews" (2:2-3), and by Herod's attempt to have him killed. The magi who do him homage prefigure the Gentiles who will accept the preaching of the gospel. The infancy narrative proclaims who Jesus is, the savior of his people from their sins (1:21), Emmanuel in whom "God is with us" (1:23), and the Son of God (2:15).

1:1 The Son of David, the son of Abraham: two links of the genealogical chain are singled out. Although the later, David is placed first in order to emphasize that Jesus is the royal Messiah. The mention of Abraham may be due not only to his being the father of the nation Israel but to Matthew's interest in the universal scope of Jesus' mission; cf. Genesis 22:18 "… in your descendants all the nations of the earth shall find blessing."

1:7 The successor of Abijah was not Asaph but Asa (see 1 Chr 3:10). Some textual witnesses read the latter name; however, Asaph is better attested. Matthew may have deliberately introduced the psalmist Asaph into the genealogy (and in 1:10 the prophet Amos) in order to show that Jesus is the fulfillment not only of the promises made to David (see 2 Sm 7) but of all the Old Testament.

1:10 Amos: some textual witnesses read Amon, who was the actual successor of Manasseh (see 1 Chr 3:14).

1:17 Matthew is concerned with fourteen generations, probably because fourteen is the numerical value of the Hebrew letters forming the name of David. In the second section of the genealogy (1:6b-11), three kings of Judah, Ahaziah, Joash, and Amaziah, have been omitted (see 1 Chr 3:11-12), so that there are fourteen generations in that section. Yet the third (1:12-16) apparently has only thirteen. Since Matthew here emphasizes that each section has fourteen, it is unlikely that the thirteen of the last was due to his oversight. Some scholars suggest that Jesus who is called the Messiah (1:16b) doubles the final member of the chain: Jesus, born within the family of David, opens up the new age as Messiah, so that in fact there are fourteen generations in the third section. This is perhaps too subtle, and the hypothesis of a slip not on the part of Matthew but of a later scribe seems likely. On Messiah, see the note on Luke 2:11.

1:18-25 This first story of the infancy narrative spells out what is summarily indicated in Matthew 1:16. The virginal conception of Jesus is the work of the Spirit of God. Joseph's decision to divorce Mary is overcome by the heavenly command that he take her into his home and accept the child as his own. The natural genealogical line is broken but the promises to David are fulfilled; through Joseph's adoption the child belongs to the family of David. Matthew sees the virginal conception as the fulfillment of Isaiah 7:14.

1:18 Betrothed to Joseph: betrothal was the first part of the marriage, constituting a man and woman as husband and wife. Subsequent infidelity was considered adultery. The betrothal was followed some months later by the husband's taking his wife into his home, at which time normal married life began.

1:19 A righteous man: as a devout observer of the Mosaic law, Joseph wished to break his union with someone whom he suspected of gross violation of the law. It is commonly said that the law required him to do so, but the texts usually given in support of that view, e.g., Deuteronomy 22:20-21 do not clearly pertain to Joseph's situation. Unwilling to expose her to shame: the penalty for proved adultery was death by stoning; cf. Deuteronomy 22:21-23.

1:20 The angel of the Lord: in the Old Testament a common designation of God in communication with a human being. In a dream: see Matthew 2:13, 19, 22. These dreams may be meant to recall the dreams of Joseph, son of Jacob the patriarch (Gn 37:5–11, 19). A closer parallel is the dream of Amram, father of Moses, related by Josephus (Antiquities 2:212, 215–16).

1:21 Jesus: in first-century Judaism the Hebrew name Joshua (Greek Iēsous) meaning "Yahweh helps" was interpreted as "Yahweh saves."

1:23 God is with us: God's promise of deliverance to Judah in Isaiah's time is seen by Matthew as fulfilled in the birth of Jesus, in whom God is with his people. The name Emmanuel is alluded to at the end of the gospel where the risen Jesus assures his disciples of his continued presence, "… I am with you always, until the end of the age" (28:20).

1:25 Until she bore a son: the evangelist is concerned to emphasize that Joseph was not responsible for the conception of Jesus. The Greek word translated "until" does not imply normal marital conduct after Jesus' birth, nor does it exclude it.

2:1-12 The future rejection of Jesus by Israel and his acceptance by the Gentiles are retrojected into this scene of the narrative.

2:1 In the days of King Herod: Herod reigned from 37 to 4 B.C. Magi: originally a designation of the Persian priestly caste, the word became used of those who were regarded as having more than human knowledge. Matthew's magi are astrologers.

2:2 We saw his star: it was a common ancient belief that a new star appeared at the time of a ruler's birth. Matthew also draws upon the Old Testament story of Balaam, who had prophesied that "A star shall advance from Jacob" (Nm 24:17), though there the star means not an astral phenomenon but the king himself.

2:4 Herod's consultation with the chief priests and scribes has some similarity to a Jewish legend about the child Moses in which the "sacred scribes" warn Pharaoh about the imminent birth of one who will deliver Israel from Egypt and the king makes plans to destroy him.

2:11 Cf. Psalm 72:10, 15; Isaiah 60:6. These Old Testament texts led to the interpretation of the magi as kings.

2:13-23 Biblical and nonbiblical traditions about Moses are here applied to the child Jesus, though the dominant Old Testament type is not Moses but Israel (2:15).

2:13 Flee to Egypt: Egypt was a traditional place of refuge for those fleeing from danger in Palestine (see 1 Kgs 11:40; Jer 26:21), but the main reason why the child is to be taken to Egypt is that he may relive the Exodus experience of Israel.

2:15 The fulfillment citation is taken from Hosea 11:1. Israel, God's son, was called out of Egypt at the time of the Exodus; Jesus, the Son of God, will similarly be called out of that land in a new exodus. The father-son relationship between God and the nation is set in a higher key. Here the son is not a group adopted as "son of God," but the child who, as conceived by the holy Spirit, stands in unique relation to God. He is son of David and of Abraham, of Mary and of Joseph, but, above all, of God.

2:18 Jeremiah 31:15 portrays Rachel, wife of the patriarch Jacob, weeping for her children taken into exile at the time of the Assyrian invasion of the northern kingdom (722–21 B.C.). Bethlehem was traditionally identified with Ephrath, the place near which Rachel was buried (see Gn 35:19; 48:7), and the mourning of Rachel is here applied to her lost children of a later age. Ramah: about six miles north of Jerusalem. The lamentation of Rachel is so great as to be heard at a far distance.

2:20 For those who sought the child's life are dead: Moses, who had fled from Egypt because the Pharaoh sought to kill him (see Ex 2:15), was told to return there, "for all the men who sought your life are dead" (Ex 4:19).

2:22 With the agreement of the emperor Augustus, Archelaus received half of his father's kingdom, including Judea, after Herod's death. He had the title "ethnarch" (i.e., "ruler of a nation") and reigned from 4 B.C. to A.D. 6.

2:23 Nazareth … he shall be called a Nazorean: the tradition of Jesus' residence in Nazareth was firmly established, and Matthew sees it as being in accordance with the foreannounced plan of God. The town of Nazareth is not mentioned in the Old Testament, and no such prophecy can be found there. The vague expression "through the prophets" may be due to Matthew's seeing a connection between Nazareth and certain texts in which there are words with a remote similarity to the name of that town. Some such Old Testament texts are Isaiah 11:1 where the Davidic king of the future is called "a bud" (nēser) that shall blossom from the roots of Jesse, and Judges 13:5, 7 where Samson, the future deliverer of Israel from the Philistines, is called one who shall be consecrated (a nāzîr) to God.

3:1-12 Here Matthew takes up the order of Jesus' ministry found in the gospel of Mark, beginning with the preparatory preaching of John the Baptist.

3:1 Unlike Luke, Matthew says nothing of the Baptist's origins and does not make him a relative of Jesus. The desert of Judea: the barren region west of the Dead Sea extending up the Jordan valley.

3:2 Repent: the Baptist calls for a change of heart and conduct, a turning of one's life from rebellion to obedience towards God. The kingdom of heaven is at hand: "heaven" (literally, "the heavens") is a substitute for the name "God" that was avoided by devout Jews of the time out of reverence. The expression "the kingdom of heaven" occurs only in the gospel of Matthew. It means the effective rule of God over his people. In its fullness it includes not only human obedience to God's word, but the triumph of God over physical evils, supremely over death. In the expectation found in Jewish apocalyptic, the kingdom was to be ushered in by a judgment in which sinners would be condemned and perish, an expectation shared by the Baptist. This was modified in Christian understanding where the kingdom was seen as being established in stages, culminating with the parousia of Jesus.

3:3 See the note on John 1:23.

3:4 The clothing of John recalls the austere dress of the prophet Elijah (2 Kgs 1:8). The expectation of the return of Elijah from heaven to prepare Israel for the final manifestation of God's kingdom was widespread, and according to Matthew this expectation was fulfilled in the Baptist's ministry (11:14; 17:11-13).

3:6 Ritual washing was practiced by various groups in Palestine between 150

B.C. and A.D. 250. John’s baptism may have been related to the purificatory washings of the Essenes at Qumran.

3:7 Pharisees and Sadducees: the former were marked by devotion to the law, written and oral, and the scribes, experts in the law, belonged predominantly to this group. The Sadducees were the priestly aristocratic party, centered in Jerusalem. They accepted as scripture only the first five books of the Old Testament, followed only the letter of the law, rejected the oral legal traditions, and were opposed to teachings not found in the Pentateuch, such as the resurrection of the dead. Matthew links both of these groups together as enemies of Jesus (16:1, 6, 11, 12; cf. Mk 8:11-13, 15). The threatening words that follow are addressed to them rather than to “the crowds” as in Luke 3:7. The coming wrath: the judgment that will bring about the destruction of unrepentant sinners.

3:11 Baptize you with the holy Spirit and fire: the water baptism of John will be followed by an “immersion” of the repentant in the cleansing power of the Spirit of God, and of the unrepentant in the destroying power of God’s judgment. However, some see the holy Spirit and fire as synonymous, and the effect of this “baptism” as either purification or destruction. See the note on Luke 3:16.

3:12 The discrimination between the good and the bad is compared to the procedure by which a farmer separates wheat and chaff. The winnowing fan was a forklike shovel with which the threshed wheat was thrown into the air. The kernels fell to the ground; the light chaff, blown off by the wind, was gathered and burned up.

3:13-17 The baptism of Jesus is the occasion on which he is equipped for his ministry by the holy Spirit and proclaimed to be the Son of God.

3:14-15 This dialogue, peculiar to Matthew, reveals John’s awareness of Jesus’ superiority to him as the mightier one who is coming and who will baptize with the holy Spirit (3:11). His reluctance to admit Jesus among the sinners whom he is baptizing with water is overcome by Jesus’ response. To fulfill all righteousness: in this gospel to fulfill usually refers to fulfillment of prophecy, and righteousness to moral conduct in conformity with God’s will. Here, however, as in Matthew 5:6; 6:33, righteousness seems to mean the saving activity of God. To fulfill all righteousness is to submit to the plan of God for the salvation of the human race. This involves Jesus’ identification with sinners; hence the propriety of his accepting John’s baptism.

3:16 The Spirit … coming upon him: cf. Isaiah 42:1.

3:17 This is my beloved Son: the Marcan address to Jesus (Mk 1:11) is changed into a proclamation. The Father’s voice speaks in terms that reflect Isaiah 42:1; Psalm 2:7; Genesis 22:2.

4:1-11 Jesus, proclaimed Son of God at his baptism, is subjected to a triple temptation. Obedience to the Father is a characteristic of true sonship, and Jesus is tempted by the devil to rebel against God, overtly in the third case, more subtly in the first two. Each refusal of Jesus is expressed in language taken from the Book of Deuteronomy (Dt 8:3; 6:13, 16). The testings of Jesus resemble those of Israel during the wandering in the desert and later in Canaan, and the victory of Jesus, the true Israel and the true Son, contrasts with the failure of the ancient and disobedient “son,” the old Israel. In the temptation account Matthew is almost identical with Luke; both seem to have drawn upon the same source.

4:2 Forty days and forty nights: the same time as that during which Moses remained on Sinai (Ex 24:18). The time reference, however, seems primarily intended to recall the forty years during which Israel was tempted in the desert (Dt 8:2).

4:4 Cf. Deuteronomy 8:3. Jesus refuses to use his power for his own benefit and accepts whatever God wills.

4:5-7 The devil supports his proposal by an appeal to the scriptures, Psalm 91:11a, 12. Unlike Israel (Dt 6:16), Jesus refuses to "test" God by demanding from him an extraordinary show of power.

4:9 The worship of Satan to which Jesus is tempted is probably intended to recall Israel's worship of false gods. His refusal is expressed in the words of Deuteronomy 6:13.

4:12-17 Isaiah's prophecy of the light rising upon Zebulun and Naphtali (Is 8:22–9:1) is fulfilled in Jesus' residence at Capernaum. The territory of these two tribes was the first to be devastated (733–32 B.C.) at the time of the Assyrian invasion. In order to accommodate Jesus' move to Capernaum to the prophecy, Matthew speaks of that town as being "in the region of Zebulun and Naphtali" (4:13), whereas it was only in the territory of the latter, and he understands the sea of the prophecy, the Mediterranean, as the sea of Galilee.

4:17 At the beginning of his preaching Jesus takes up the words of John the Baptist (3:2) although with a different meaning; in his ministry the kingdom of heaven has already begun to be present (12:28).

4:18-22 The call of the first disciples promises them a share in Jesus' work and entails abandonment of family and former way of life. Three of the four, Simon, James, and John, are distinguished among the disciples by a closer relation with Jesus (17:1; 26:37).

4:20 Here and in Matthew 4:22, as in Mark (Mk 1:16-20) and unlike the Lucan account (Lk 5:1-11), the disciples' response is motivated only by Jesus' invitation, an element that emphasizes his mysterious power.

4:23-25 This summary of Jesus' ministry concludes the narrative part of the first book of Matthew's gospel (3–4). The activities of his ministry are teaching, proclaiming the gospel, and healing; cf. Matthew 9:35.

4:23 Their synagogues: Matthew usually designates the Jewish synagogues as their synagogue(s) (9:35; 10:17; 12:9; 13:54) or, in address to Jews, your synagogues (23:34), an indication that he wrote after the break between church and synagogue.

4:24 Syria: the Roman province to which Palestine belonged.

4:25 The Decapolis: a federation of Greek cities in Palestine, originally ten in number, all but one east of the Jordan.

5:1–7:29 The first of the five discourses that are a central part of the structure of this gospel. It is the discourse section of the first book and contains sayings of Jesus derived from Q and from M. The Lucan parallel is in that gospel's "Sermon on the Plain" (Lk 6:20-49), although some of the sayings in Matthew's "Sermon on the Mount" have their parallels in other parts of Luke. The careful topical arrangement of the sermon is probably not due only to Matthew's editing; he seems to have had a structured discourse of Jesus as one of his sources. The form of that source may have been as follows: four beatitudes (5:3-4, 6, 11-12), a section on the new righteousness with illustrations (5:17, 20-24, 27-28, 33-48), a section on good works (6:1-6, 16-18), and three warnings (7:1-2, 15-21, 24-27).

5:1-2 Unlike Luke's sermon, this is addressed not only to the disciples but to the crowds (see 7:28).

5:3-12 The form Blessed are (is) occurs frequently in the Old Testament in the Wisdom literature and in the Psalms. Although modified by Matthew, the first, second, fourth, and ninth beatitudes have Lucan parallels (Mt 5:3 // Lk 6:20; Mt 5:4 // Lk 6:21, 22; Mt 5:6 // Lk 6:21a; Mt 5:11-12 // Lk 5:22-23). The others were added by the evangelist and are probably his own composition. A few manuscripts, Western and Alexandrian, and many versions and patristic quotations give the second and third beatitudes in inverted order.

5:3 The poor in spirit: in the Old Testament, the poor (aˇnāwîm) are those who are without material possessions and whose confidence is in God (see Is 61:1; Zep 2:3; in the NAB the word is translated lowly and humble, respectively, in those texts). Matthew added in spirit in order either to indicate that only the devout poor were meant or to extend the beatitude to all, of whatever social rank, who recognized their complete dependence on God. The same phrase poor in spirit is found in the Qumran literature (1QM 14:7).

5:4 Cf. Isaiah 61:2 "(The Lord has sent me) … to comfort all who mourn." They will be comforted: here the passive is a "theological passive" equivalent to the active "God will comfort them"; so also in Matthew 5:6, 7.

5:5 Cf. Psalm 37:11, "… the meek shall possess the land." In the psalm "the land" means the land of Palestine; here it means the kingdom.

5:6 For righteousness: a Matthean addition. For the meaning of righteousness here, see the note on Matthew 3:14-15.

5:8 Cf. Psalm 24:4. Only one "whose heart is clean" can take part in the temple worship. To be with God in the temple is described in Psalm 42:2 as "beholding his face," but here the promise to the clean of heart is that they will see God not in the temple but in the coming kingdom.

5:10 Righteousness here, as usually in Matthew, means conduct in conformity with God's will.

5:12 The prophets who were before you: the disciples of Jesus stand in the line of the persecuted prophets of Israel. Some would see the expression as indicating also that Matthew considered all Christian disciples as prophets.

5:13-16 By their deeds the disciples are to influence the world for good. They can no more escape notice than a city set on a mountain. If they fail in good works, they are as useless as flavorless salt or as a lamp whose light is concealed.

5:13 The unusual supposition of salt losing its flavor has led some to suppose that the saying refers to the salt of the Dead Sea that, because chemically impure, could lose its taste.

5:17-20 This statement of Jesus' position concerning the Mosaic law is composed of traditional material from Matthew's sermon documentation (see the note on 5:1–7:29), other Q material (cf. 18; Lk 16:17), and the evangelist's own editorial touches. To fulfill the law appears at first to mean a literal enforcement of the law in the least detail: until heaven and earth pass away nothing of the law will pass (5:18). Yet the "passing away" of heaven and earth is not necessarily the end of the world understood, as in much apocalyptic literature, as the dissolution of the existing universe. The "turning of the ages" comes with the apocalyptic event of Jesus' death and resurrection, and those to whom this gospel is addressed are living in the new and final age, prophesied by Isaiah as the time of "new heavens and a new earth" (Is 65:17; 66:22). Meanwhile, during Jesus' ministry when the kingdom is already breaking in, his mission remains within the framework of the law, though with significant anticipation of the age to come, as the following antitheses (5:21-48) show.

5:19 Probably these commandments means those of the Mosaic law. But this is an interim ethic “until heaven and earth pass away.”

5:21-48 Six examples of the conduct demanded of the Christian disciple. Each deals with a commandment of the law, introduced by You have heard that it was said to your ancestors or an equivalent formula, followed by Jesus’ teaching in respect to that commandment, But I say to you; thus their designation as “antitheses.” Three of them accept the Mosaic law but extend or deepen it (5:21-22; 27-28; 43-44); three reject it as a standard of conduct for the disciples (5:31-32; 33-37; 38-39).

5:21 Cf. Exodus 20:13; Deuteronomy 5:17. The second part of the verse is not an exact quotation from the Old Testament, but cf. Exodus 21:12.

5:22-26 Reconciliation with an offended brother is urged in the admonition of Matthew 5:23-24 and the parable of Matthew 5:25-26 (Lk 12:58-59). The severity of the judge in the parable is a warning of the fate of unrepentant sinners in the coming judgment by God.

5:22 Anger is the motive behind murder, as the insulting epithets are steps that may lead to it. They, as well as the deed, are all forbidden. Raqa: an Aramaic word *rēqāʾ or rēqâ probably meaning “imbecile,” “blockhead,” a term of abuse. The ascending order of punishment, judgment (by a local council?), trial before the Sanhedrin, condemnation to Gehenna, points to a higher degree of seriousness in each of the offenses. Sanhedrin: the highest judicial body of Judaism. Gehenna: in Hebrew gê-hinnōm, “Valley of Hinnom,” or gê ben-hinnōm, “Valley of the son of Hinnom,” southwest of Jerusalem, the center of an idolatrous cult during the monarchy in which children were offered in sacrifice (see 2 Kgs 23:10; Jer 7:31). In Joshua 18:16 (Septuagint, Codex Vaticanus) the Hebrew is transliterated into Greek as gaienna, which appears in the New Testament as geenna. The concept of punishment of sinners by fire either after death or after the final judgment is found in Jewish apocalyptic literature (e.g., Enoch 90:26) but the name geenna is first given to the place of punishment in the New Testament.

5:27 See Exodus 20:14; Deuteronomy 5:18.

5:29-30 No sacrifice is too great to avoid total destruction in Gehenna.

5:31-32 See Deuteronomy 24:1-5. The Old Testament commandment that a bill of divorce be given to the woman assumes the legitimacy of divorce itself. It is this that Jesus denies. (Unless the marriage is unlawful): this “exceptive clause,” as it is often called, occurs also in Matthew 19:9, where the Greek is slightly different. There are other sayings of Jesus about divorce that prohibit it absolutely (see Mk 10:11-12; Lk 16:18; cf. 1 Cor 7:10, 11b), and most scholars agree that they represent the stand of Jesus. Matthew’s “exceptive clauses” are understood by some as a modification of the absolute prohibition. It seems, however, that the unlawfulness that Matthew gives as a reason why a marriage must be broken refers to a situation peculiar to his community: the violation of Mosaic law forbidding marriage between persons of certain blood and/or legal relationship (Lv 18:6-18). Marriages of that sort were regarded as incest (porneia), but some rabbis allowed Gentile converts to Judaism who had contracted such marriages to remain in them. Matthew’s “exceptive clause” is against such permissiveness for Gentile converts to Christianity; cf. the similar prohibition of porneia in Acts 15:20, 29. In this interpretation, the clause constitutes no exception to the absolute prohibition of divorce when the marriage is lawful.

5:33 This is not an exact quotation of any Old Testament text, but see Exodus 20:7; Deuteronomy 5:11; Leviticus 19:12. The purpose of an oath was to guarantee truthfulness by one’s calling on God as witness.

5:34-36 The use of these oath formularies that avoid the divine name is in fact equivalent to swearing by it, for all the things sworn by are related to God.

5:37 Let your 'Yes' mean 'Yes,' and your 'No' mean 'No': literally, "let your speech be 'Yes, yes,' 'No, no.'" Some have understood this as a milder form of oath, permitted by Jesus. In view of Matthew 5:34, "Do not swear at all," that is unlikely. From the evil one: i.e., from the devil. Oath-taking presupposes a sinful weakness of the human race, namely, the tendency to lie. Jesus demands of his disciples a truthfulness that makes oaths unnecessary.

5:38-42 See Leviticus 24:20. The Old Testament commandment was meant to moderate vengeance; the punishment should not exceed the injury done. Jesus forbids even this proportionate retaliation. Of the five examples that follow, only the first deals directly with retaliation for evil; the others speak of liberality.

5:41 Roman garrisons in Palestine had the right to requisition the property and services of the native population.

5:43-48 See Leviticus 19:18. There is no Old Testament commandment demanding hatred of one's enemy, but the "neighbor" of the love commandment was understood as one's fellow countryman. Both in the Old Testament (Ps 139:19-22) and at Qumran (1QS 9:21) hatred of evil persons is assumed to be right. Jesus extends the love commandment to the enemy and the persecutor. His disciples, as children of God, must imitate the example of their Father, who grants his gifts of sun and rain to both the good and the bad.

5:46 Tax collectors: Jews who were engaged in the collection of indirect taxes such as tolls and customs. See the note on Mark 2:14.

5:47 Jesus' disciples must not be content with merely usual standards of conduct; see Matthew 5:20 where the verb "surpass" (Greek perisseuō) is cognate with the unusual (perisson) of this verse.

5:48 Perfect: in the gospels this word occurs only in Matthew, here and in Matthew 19:21. The Lucan parallel (Lk 6:36) demands that the disciples be merciful.

6:1-18 The sermon continues with a warning against doing good in order to be seen and gives three examples, almsgiving (6:2-4), prayer (6:5-15), and fasting (6:16-18). In each, the conduct of the hypocrites (6:2) is contrasted with that demanded of the disciples. The sayings about reward found here and elsewhere (5:12, 46; 10:41-42) show that this is a genuine element of Christian moral exhortation. Possibly to underline the difference between the Christian idea of reward and that of the hypocrites, the evangelist uses two different Greek verbs to express the rewarding of the disciples and that of the hypocrites; in the latter case it is the verb apechō, a commercial term for giving a receipt for what has been paid in full (6:2, 5, 16).

6:2 The hypocrites: the scribes and Pharisees, see Matthew 23:13, 15, 23, 25, 27, 29. The designation reflects an attitude resulting not only from the controversies at the time of Jesus' ministry but from the opposition between Pharisaic Judaism and the church of Matthew. They have received their reward: they desire praise and have received what they were looking for.

6:7-15 Matthew inserts into his basic traditional material an expansion of the material on prayer that includes the model prayer, the "Our Father." That prayer is found in Luke 11:2-4 in a different context and in a different form.

6:7 The example of what Christian prayer should be like contrasts it now not with the prayer of the hypocrites but with that of the pagans. Their babbling probably means their reciting a long list of divine names, hoping that one of them will force a response from the deity.

6:9-13 Matthew’s form of the “Our Father” follows the liturgical tradition of his church. Luke’s less developed form also represents the liturgical tradition known to him, but it is probably closer than Matthew’s to the original words of Jesus.

6:9 Our Father in heaven: this invocation is found in many rabbinic prayers of the post–New Testament period. Hallowed be your name: though the “hallowing” of the divine name could be understood as reverence done to God by human praise and by obedience to his will, this is more probably a petition that God hallow his own name, i.e., that he manifest his glory by an act of power (cf. Ez 36:23), in this case, by the establishment of his kingdom in its fullness.

6:10 Your kingdom come: this petition sets the tone of the prayer, and inclines the balance toward divine rather than human action in the petitions that immediately precede and follow it. Your will be done, on earth as in heaven: a petition that the divine purpose to establish the kingdom, a purpose present now in heaven, be executed on earth.

6:11 Give us today our daily bread: the rare Greek word epiousios, here daily, occurs in the New Testament only here and in Luke 11:3. A single occurrence of the word outside of these texts and of literature dependent on them has been claimed, but the claim is highly doubtful. The word may mean daily or “future” (other meanings have also been proposed). The latter would conform better to the eschatological tone of the whole prayer. So understood, the petition would be for a speedy coming of the kingdom (today), which is often portrayed in both the Old Testament and the New under the image of a feast (Is 25:6; Mt 8:11; 22:1-10; Lk 13:29; 14:15-24).

6:12 Forgive us our debts: the word debts is used metaphorically of sins, “debts” owed to God (see Lk 11:4). The request is probably for forgiveness at the final judgment.

6:13 Jewish apocalyptic writings speak of a period of severe trial before the end of the age, sometimes called the “messianic woes.” This petition asks that the disciples be spared that final test.

6:14-15 These verses reflect a set pattern called “Principles of Holy Law.” Human action now will be met by a corresponding action of God at the final judgment.

6:16 The only fast prescribed in the Mosaic law was that of the Day of Atonement (Lv 16:31), but the practice of regular fasting was common in later Judaism; cf. Didache 9:1.

6:19-34 The remaining material of this chapter is taken almost entirely from Q. It deals principally with worldly possessions, and the controlling thought is summed up in Matthew 6:24, the disciple can serve only one master and must choose between God and wealth (mammon). See further the note on Luke 16:9.

6:22-23 In this context the parable probably points to the need for the disciple to be enlightened by Jesus’ teaching on the transitory nature of earthly riches.

6:24 Mammon: an Aramaic word meaning wealth or property.

6:25-34 Jesus does not deny the reality of human needs (6:32), but forbids making them the object of anxious care and, in effect, becoming their slave.

6:27 Life-span: the Greek word can also mean “stature.” If it is taken in that sense, the word here translated moment (literally, “cubit”) must be translated literally as a unit not of time but of spatial measure. The cubit is about eighteen inches.

6:30 Of little faith: except for the parallel in Luke 12:28, the word translated of little faith is found in the New Testament only in Matthew. It is used by him of those who are disciples of Jesus but whose faith in him is not as deep as it should be (see 8:26; 14:31; 16:8 and the cognate noun in 17:20).

6:33 Righteousness: see the note on Matthew 3:14-15.

7:1-12 In Matthew 7:1 Matthew returns to the basic traditional material of the sermon (Lk 6:37-38, 41-42). The governing thought is the correspondence between conduct toward one's fellows and God's conduct toward the one so acting.

7:1 This is not a prohibition against recognizing the faults of others, which would be hardly compatible with Matthew 7:5, 6 but against passing judgment in a spirit of arrogance, forgetful of one's own faults.

7:5 Hypocrite: the designation previously given to the scribes and Pharisees is here given to the Christian disciple who is concerned with the faults of another and ignores his own more serious offenses.

7:6 Dogs and swine were Jewish terms of contempt for Gentiles. This saying may originally have derived from a Jewish Christian community opposed to preaching the gospel (what is holy, pearls) to Gentiles. In the light of Matthew 28:19 that can hardly be Matthew's meaning. He may have taken the saying as applying to a Christian dealing with an obstinately impenitent fellow Christian (18:17).

7:9-10 There is a resemblance between a stone and a round loaf of bread and between a serpent and the scaleless fish called barbut.

7:12 See Luke 6:31. This saying, known since the eighteenth century as the "Golden Rule," is found in both positive and negative form in pagan and Jewish sources, both earlier and later than the gospel. This is the law and the prophets is an addition probably due to the evangelist.

7:13-28 The final section of the discourse is composed of a series of antitheses, contrasting two kinds of life within the Christian community, that of those who obey the words of Jesus and that of those who do not. Most of the sayings are from Q and are found also in Luke.

7:13-14 The metaphor of the "two ways" was common in pagan philosophy and in the Old Testament. In Christian literature it is found also in the Didache (1–6) and the Epistle of Barnabas (18–20).

7:15-20 Christian disciples who claimed to speak in the name of God are called prophets (7:15) in Matthew 10:41; Matthew 23:34. They were presumably an important group within the church of Matthew. As in the case of the Old Testament prophets, there were both true and false ones, and for Matthew the difference could be recognized by the quality of their deeds, the fruits (7:16). The mention of fruits leads to the comparison with trees, some producing good fruit, others bad.

7:21-23 The attack on the false prophets is continued, but is broadened to include those disciples who perform works of healing and exorcism in the name of Jesus (Lord) but live evil lives. Entrance into the kingdom is only for those who do the will of the Father. On the day of judgment (on that day) the morally corrupt prophets and miracle workers will be rejected by Jesus.

7:23 I never knew you: cf. Matthew 10:33. Depart from me, you evildoers: cf. Psalm 6:8.

7:24-27 The conclusion of the discourse (cf. Lk 6:47-49). Here the relation is not between saying and doing as in Matthew 7:15-23 but between hearing and doing, and the words of Jesus are applied to every Christian (everyone who listens).

7:28-29 When Jesus finished these words: this or a similar formula is used by Matthew to conclude each of the five great discourses of Jesus (cf. 11:1; 13:53; 19:1; 26:1).

7:29 Not as their scribes: scribal instruction was a faithful handing down of the traditions of earlier teachers; Jesus' teaching is based on his own authority. Their scribes: for the implications of their, see the note on Matthew 4:23.

8:1–9:38 This narrative section of the second book of the gospel is composed of nine miracle stories, most of which are found in Mark, although Matthew does not follow the Marcan order and abbreviates the stories radically. The stories are arranged in three groups of three, each group followed by a section composed principally of sayings of Jesus about discipleship. Matthew 9:35 is an almost verbatim repetition of Matthew 4:23. Each speaks of Jesus' teaching, preaching, and healing. The teaching and preaching form the content of Matthew 5–7; the healing, that of Matthew 8–9. Some scholars speak of a portrayal of Jesus as "Messiah of the Word" in Matthew 5–7 and "Messiah of the Deed" in Matthew 8–9. That is accurate so far as it goes, but there is also a strong emphasis on discipleship in Matthew 8–9; these chapters have not only christological but ecclesiological import.

8:2 A leper: see the note on Mark 1:40.

8:4 Cf. Leviticus 14:2-9. That will be proof for them: the Greek can also mean "that will be proof against them." It is not clear whether them refers to the priests or the people.

8:5-13 This story comes from Q (see Lk 7:1-10) and is also reflected in John 4:46-54. The similarity between the Q story and the Johannine is due to a common oral tradition, not to a common literary source. As in the later story of the daughter of the Canaanite woman (15:21-28) Jesus here breaks with his usual procedure of ministering only to Israelites and anticipates the mission to the Gentiles.

8:5 A centurion: a military officer commanding a hundred men. He was probably in the service of Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee; see the note on Matthew 14:1.

8:8-9 Acquainted by his position with the force of a command, the centurion expresses faith in the power of Jesus' mere word.

8:10 In no one in Israel: there is good textual attestation (e.g., Codex Sinaiticus) for a reading identical with that of Luke 7:9, "not even in Israel." But that seems to be due to a harmonization of Matthew with Luke.

8:11-12 Matthew inserts into the story a Q saying (see Lk 13:28-29) about the entrance of Gentiles into the kingdom and the exclusion of those Israelites who, though descended from the patriarchs and members of the chosen nation (the children of the kingdom), refused to believe in Jesus. There will be wailing and grinding of teeth: the first occurrence of a phrase used frequently in this gospel to describe final condemnation (13:42, 50; 22:13; 24:51; 25:30). It is found elsewhere in the New Testament only in Luke 13:28.

8:14-15 Cf. Mark 1:29-31. Unlike Mark, Matthew has no implied request by others for the woman's cure. Jesus acts on his own initiative, and the cured woman rises and waits not on "them" (Mk 1:31) but on him.

8:16 By a word: a Matthean addition to Mark 1:34; cf. 8:8.

8:17 This fulfillment citation from Isaiah 53:4 follows the MT, not the LXX. The prophet speaks of the Servant of the Lord who suffers vicariously for the sins ("infirmities") of others; Matthew takes the infirmities as physical afflictions.

8:18-22 This passage between the first and second series of miracles about following Jesus is taken from Q (see Lk 9:57-62). The third of the three sayings found in the source is absent from Matthew.

8:18 The other side: i.e., of the Sea of Galilee.

8:19 Teacher: for Matthew, this designation of Jesus is true, for he has Jesus using it of himself (10:24, 25; 23:8; 26:18), yet when it is used of him by others they are either his opponents (9:11; 12:38; 17:24; 22:16, 24, 36) or, as here and in Matthew 19:16, well-disposed persons who cannot see more deeply. Thus it reveals an inadequate recognition of who Jesus is.

8:20 Son of Man: see the note on Mark 8:31. This is the first occurrence in Matthew of a term that appears in the New Testament only in sayings of Jesus, except for Acts 7:56 and possibly Matthew 9:6 (Mk 2:10; Lk 5:24). In Matthew it refers to Jesus in his ministry (seven times, as here), in his passion and resurrection (nine times, e.g., 17:22), and in his glorious coming at the end of the age (thirteen times, e.g., 24:30).

8:22 Let the dead bury their dead: the demand of Jesus overrides what both the Jewish and the Hellenistic world regarded as a filial obligation of the highest importance. See the note on Luke 9:60.

8:23 His disciples followed him: the first miracle in the second group (8:23–9:8) is introduced by a verse that links it with the preceding sayings by the catchword “follow.” In Mark the initiative in entering the boat is taken by the disciples (Mk 4:35-41); here, Jesus enters first and the disciples follow.

8:24 Storm: literally, “earthquake,” a word commonly used in apocalyptic literature for the shaking of the old world when God brings in his kingdom. All the synoptics use it in depicting the events preceding the parousia of the Son of Man (24:7; Mk 13:8; Lk 21:11). Matthew has introduced it here and in his account of the death and resurrection of Jesus (27:51-54; 28:2).

8:25 The reverent plea of the disciples contrasts sharply with their reproach of Jesus in Mark 4:38.

8:26 You of little faith: see the note on Matthew 6:30. Great calm: Jesus’ calming the sea may be meant to recall the Old Testament theme of God’s control over the chaotic waters (Pss 65:8; 89:10; 93:3-4; 107:29).

8:28 Gadarenes: this is the reading of Codex Vaticanus, supported by other important textual witnesses. The original reading of Codex Sinaiticus was Gazarenes, later changed to Gergesenes, and a few versions have Gerasenes. Each of these readings points to a different territory connected, respectively, with the cities Gadara, Gergesa, and Gerasa (modern Jerash). There is the same confusion of readings in the parallel texts, Mark 5:1 and Luke 8:26; there the best reading seems to be “Gerasenes,” whereas “Gadarenes” is probably the original reading in Matthew. The town of Gadara was about five miles southeast of the Sea of Galilee, and Josephus (Life 9:42) refers to it as possessing territory that lay on that sea. Two demoniacs: Mark (5:1-20) has one.

8:29 What have you to do with us?: see the note on John 2:4. Before the appointed time: the notion that evil spirits were allowed by God to afflict human beings until the time of the final judgment is found in Enoch 16:1 and Jubilees 10:7-10.

8:30 The tending of pigs, animals considered unclean by Mosaic law (Lv 11:6-7), indicates that the population was Gentile.

9:1 His own town: Capernaum; see Matthew 4:13.

9:3 Scribes: see the note on Mark 2:6. Matthew omits the reason given in the Marcan story for the charge of blasphemy: “Who but God alone can forgive sins?” (Mk 2:7).

9:6 It is not clear whether “But that you may know … to forgive sins” is intended to be a continuation of the words of Jesus or a parenthetical comment of the evangelist to those who would hear or read this gospel. In any case, Matthew here follows the Marcan text.

9:8 Who had given such authority to human beings: a significant difference from Mark 2:12 (“They … glorified God, saying, ‘We have never seen anything like this’”). Matthew’s extension to human beings of the authority to forgive sins points to the belief that such authority was being claimed by Matthew’s church.

9:9-17 In this section the order is the same as that of Mark 2:13-22.

9:9 A man named Matthew: Mark names this tax collector Levi (Mk 2:14). No such name appears in the four lists of the twelve who were the closest companions of Jesus (10:2-4; Mk 3:16-19; Lk 6:14-16; Acts 1:13 [eleven, because of the defection of Judas Iscariot]), whereas all four list a Matthew, designated in Matthew 10:3 as “the tax collector.” The evangelist may have changed the “Levi” of his source to Matthew so that this man, whose call is given special notice, like that of the first four disciples (4:18-22), might be included among the twelve. Another reason for the change may be that the disciple Matthew was the source of traditions peculiar to the church for which the evangelist was writing.

9:10 His house: it is not clear whether his refers to Jesus or Matthew. Tax collectors: see the note on Matthew 5:46. Table association with such persons would cause ritual impurity.

9:11 Teacher: see the note on Matthew 8:19.

9:12 See the note on Mark 2:17.

9:13 Go and learn … not sacrifice: Matthew adds the prophetic statement of Hosea 6:6 to the Marcan account (see also 12:7). If mercy is superior to the temple sacrifices, how much more to the laws of ritual impurity.

9:15 Fasting is a sign of mourning and would be as inappropriate at this time of joy, when Jesus is proclaiming the kingdom, as it would be at a marriage feast. Yet the saying looks forward to the time when Jesus will no longer be with the disciples visibly, the time of Matthew’s church. Then they will fast: see Didache 8:1.

9:16-17 Each of these parables speaks of the unsuitability of attempting to combine the old and the new. Jesus’ teaching is not a patching up of Judaism, nor can the gospel be contained within the limits of Mosaic law.

9:18-34 In this third group of miracles, the first (9:18-26) is clearly dependent on Mark (Mk 5:21-43). Though it tells of two miracles, the cure of the woman had already been included within the story of the raising of the official’s daughter, so that the two were probably regarded as a single unit. The other miracles seem to have been derived from Mark and Q, respectively, though there Matthew’s own editing is much more evident.

9:18 Official: literally, “ruler.” Mark calls him “one of the synagogue officials” (Mk 5:22). My daughter has just died: Matthew heightens the Marcan “my daughter is at the point of death” (Mk 5:23).

9:20 Tassel: possibly “fringe.” The Mosaic law prescribed that tassels be worn on the corners of one’s garment as a reminder to keep the commandments (see Nm 15:37-39; Dt 22:12).

9:24 Sleeping: sleep is a biblical metaphor for death (see Ps 87:6 LXX; Dn 12:2;

1 Thes 5:10). Jesus' statement is not a denial of the child's real death, but an assurance that she will be roused from her sleep of death.

9:27-31 This story was probably composed by Matthew out of Mark's story of the healing of a blind man named Bartimaeus (Mk 10:46-52). Mark places the event late in Jesus' ministry, just before his entrance into Jerusalem, and Matthew has followed his Marcan source at that point in his gospel also (see 20:29-34). In each of the Matthean stories the single blind man of Mark becomes two. The reason why Matthew would have given a double version of the Marcan story and placed the earlier one here may be that he wished to add a story of Jesus' curing the blind at this point in order to prepare for Jesus' answer to the emissaries of the Baptist (11:4-6) in which Jesus, recounting his works, begins with his giving sight to the blind.

9:27 Son of David: this messianic title is connected once with the healing power of Jesus in Mark (Mk 10:47-48) and Luke (Lk 18:38-39) but more frequently in Matthew (see also 12:23; 15:22; 20:30-31).

9:32-34 The source of this story seems to be Q (see Lk 11:14-15). As in the preceding healing of the blind, Matthew has two versions of this healing, the later in Matthew 12:22-24 and the earlier here.

9:34 This spiteful accusation foreshadows the growing opposition to Jesus in Matthew 11; 12.

9:35 See the notes on Matthew 4:23-25; Matthew 8:1–9:38.

9:36 See Mark 6:34; Numbers 27:17; 1 Kings 22:17.

9:37-38 This Q saying (see Lk 10:2) is only imperfectly related to this context. It presupposes that only God (the master of the harvest) can take the initiative in sending out preachers of the gospel, whereas in Matthew's setting it leads into Matthew 10 where Jesus does so.

10:1–11:1 After an introductory narrative (10:1-4), the second of the discourses of the gospel. It deals with the mission now to be undertaken by the disciples (10:5-15), but the perspective broadens and includes the missionary activity of the church between the time of the resurrection and the parousia.

10:1 His twelve disciples: although, unlike Mark (Mk 3:13-14) and Luke (Lk 6:12-16), Matthew has no story of Jesus' choosing the Twelve, he assumes that the group is known to the reader. The earliest New Testament text to speak of it is 1 Corinthians 15:5. The number probably is meant to recall the twelve tribes of Israel and implies Jesus' authority to call all Israel into the kingdom. While Luke (Lk 6:13) and probably Mark (Mk 4:10, 34) distinguish between the Twelve and a larger group also termed disciples, Matthew tends to identify the disciples and the Twelve. Authority … every illness: activities the same as those of Jesus; see Matthew 4:23; 9:35; 10:8. The Twelve also share in his proclamation of the kingdom (10:7). But although he teaches (4:23; 7:28; 9:35), they do not. Their commission to teach comes only after Jesus' resurrection, after they have been fully instructed by him (28:20).

10:2-4 Here, for the only time in Matthew, the Twelve are designated apostles. The word "apostle" means "one who is sent," and therefore fits the situation here described. In the Pauline letters, the place where the term occurs most frequently in the New Testament, it means primarily one who has seen the risen Lord and has been commissioned to proclaim the resurrection. With slight variants in Luke and Acts, the names of those who belong to this group are the same in the four lists given in the New Testament (see the note on 9:9). Cananean: this represents an Aramaic word meaning "zealot." The meaning of that designation is unclear (see the note on

10:5-6 Like Jesus (15:24), the Twelve are sent only to Israel. This saying may reflect an original Jewish Christian refusal of the mission to the Gentiles, but for Matthew it expresses rather the limitation that Jesus himself observed during his ministry.

10:8-11 The Twelve have received their own call and mission through God's gift, and the benefits they confer are likewise to be given freely. They are not to take with them money, provisions, or unnecessary clothing; their lodging and food will be provided by those who receive them.

10:13 The greeting of peace is conceived of not merely as a salutation but as an effective word. If it finds no worthy recipient, it will return to the speaker.

10:14 Shake the dust from your feet: this gesture indicates a complete disassociation from such unbelievers.

10:17 The persecutions attendant upon the post-resurrection mission now begin to be spoken of. Here Matthew brings into the discourse sayings found in Mark 13, which deals with events preceding the parousia.

10:21 See Micah 7:6 which is cited in Matthew 10:35, 36.

10:22 To the end: the original meaning was probably "until the parousia." But it is not likely that Matthew expected no missionary disciples to suffer death before then, since he envisages the martyrdom of other Christians (10:21). For him, the end is probably that of the individual's life (see 10:28).

10:23 Before the Son of Man comes: since the coming of the Son of Man at the end of the age had not taken place when this gospel was written, much less during the mission of the Twelve during Jesus' ministry, Matthew cannot have meant the coming to refer to the parousia. It is difficult to know what he understood it to be: perhaps the "proleptic parousia" of Matthew 28:16-20, or the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70, viewed as a coming of Jesus in judgment on unbelieving Israel.

10:25 Beelzebul: see Matthew 9:34 for the charge linking Jesus with "the prince of demons," who is named Beelzebul in Matthew 12:24. The meaning of the name is uncertain; possibly, "lord of the house."

10:26 The concealed and secret coming of the kingdom is to be proclaimed by them, and no fear must be allowed to deter them from that proclamation.

10:32-33 In the Q parallel (Lk 12:8-9), the Son of Man will acknowledge those who have acknowledged Jesus, and those who deny him will be denied (by the Son of Man) before the angels of God at the judgment. Here Jesus and the Son of Man are identified, and the acknowledgment or denial will be before his heavenly Father.

10:38 The first mention of the cross in Matthew, explicitly that of the disciple, but implicitly that of Jesus (and follow after me). Crucifixion was a form of capital punishment used by the Romans for offenders who were not Roman citizens.

10:39 One who denies Jesus in order to save one's earthly life will be condemned to everlasting destruction; loss of earthly life for Jesus' sake will be rewarded by everlasting life in the kingdom.

10:40-42 All who receive the disciples of Jesus receive him, and God who sent him, and will be rewarded accordingly.

10:41 A prophet: one who speaks in the name of God; here, the Christian prophets who proclaim the gospel. Righteous man: since righteousness is demanded of all the disciples, it is difficult to take the righteous man of this verse and one of these little ones (10:42) as indicating different groups within the followers of Jesus. Probably all three designations are used here of Christian missionaries as such.

11:1 The closing formula of the discourse refers back to the original addressees, the Twelve.

11:2–12:50 The narrative section of the third book deals with the growing opposition to Jesus. It is largely devoted to disputes and attacks relating to faith and discipleship and thus contains much sayings-material, drawn in large part from Q.

11:2 In prison: see Matthew 4:12; 14:1-12. The works of the Messiah: the deeds of Matthew 8–9.

11:3 The question probably expresses a doubt of the Baptist that Jesus is the one who is to come (cf. Mal 3:1) because his mission has not been one of fiery judgment as John had expected (3:2).

11:5-6 Jesus' response is taken from passages of Isaiah (Is 26:19; 29:18-19; 35:5-6; 61:1) that picture the time of salvation as marked by deeds such as those that Jesus is doing. The beatitude is a warning to the Baptist not to disbelieve because his expectations have not been met.

11:7-19 Jesus' rebuke of John is counterbalanced by a reminder of the greatness of the Baptist's function (11:7-15) that is followed by a complaint about those who have heeded neither John nor Jesus (11:16-19).

11:9-10 In common Jewish belief there had been no prophecy in Israel since the last of the Old Testament prophets, Malachi. The coming of a new prophet was eagerly awaited, and Jesus agrees that John was such. Yet he was more than a prophet, for he was the precursor of the one who would bring in the new and final age. The Old Testament quotation is a combination of Malachi 3:1 and Exodus 23:20 with the significant change that the before me of Malachi becomes before you. The messenger now precedes not God, as in the original, but Jesus.

11:11 John's preeminent greatness lies in his function of announcing the imminence of the kingdom (3:1). But to be in the kingdom is so great a privilege that the least who has it is greater than the Baptist.

11:12 The meaning of this difficult saying is probably that the opponents of Jesus are trying to prevent people from accepting the kingdom and to snatch it away from those who have received it.

11:13 All the prophets and the law: Matthew inverts the usual order, "law and prophets," and says that both have prophesied. This emphasis on the prophetic character of the law points to its fulfillment in the teaching of Jesus and to the transitory nature of some of its commandments (see the note on 5:17-20).

11:16-19 See Luke 7:31-35. The meaning of the parable (11:16-17) and its explanation (11:18-19b) is much disputed. A plausible view is that the children of the parable are two groups, one of which proposes different entertainments to the other that will not agree with either proposal. The first represents John, Jesus, and their disciples; the second those who reject John for his asceticism and Jesus for his table association with those despised by the religiously observant. Matthew 11:19c (her works) forms an inclusion with Matthew 11:2 ("the works of the Messiah"). The original form of the saying is better preserved in Luke 7:35, "… wisdom is vindicated by all her children." There John and Jesus are the children of Wisdom; here the works of Jesus the Messiah are those of divine Wisdom, of which he is the embodiment. Some important textual witnesses, however, have essentially the same reading as in Luke.

11:21 Tyre and Sidon were pagan cities denounced for their wickedness in the Old Testament; cf. Joel 3:4-7.

11:23 Capernaum's pride and punishment are described in language taken from the taunt song against the king of Babylon (Is 14:13-15).

11:25-27 This Q saying, identical with Luke 10:21-22 except for minor variations, introduces a joyous note into this section, so dominated by the theme of unbelief. While the wise and the learned, the scribes and Pharisees, have rejected Jesus' preaching and the significance of his mighty deeds, the childlike have accepted them. Acceptance depends upon the Father's revelation, but this is granted to those who are open to receive it and refused to the arrogant. Jesus can speak of all mysteries because he is the Son and there is perfect reciprocity of knowledge between him and the Father; what has been handed over to him is revealed only to those whom he wishes.

11:28-29 These verses are peculiar to Matthew and are similar to Ben Sirach's invitation to learn wisdom and submit to her yoke (Sir 51:23, 26).

11:28 Who labor and are burdened: burdened by the law as expounded by the scribes and Pharisees (23:4).

11:29 In place of the yoke of the law, complicated by scribal interpretation, Jesus invites the burdened to take the yoke of obedience to his word, under which they will find rest; cf. Jeremiah 6:16.

12:1-14 Matthew here returns to the Marcan order that he left in Matthew 9:18. The two stories depend on Mark 2:23-28 and 3:1-6, respectively, and are the only places in either gospel that deal explicitly with Jesus' attitude toward sabbath observance.

12:1-2 The picking of the heads of grain is here equated with reaping, which was forbidden on the sabbath (Ex 34:21).

12:3-4 See 1 Samuel 21:2-7. In the Marcan parallel (Mk 2:25-26) the high priest is called Abiathar, although in 1 Samuel this action is attributed to Ahimelech. The Old Testament story is not about a violation of the sabbath rest; its pertinence to this dispute is that a violation of the law was permissible because of David's men being without food.

12:5-6 This and the following argument (12:7) are peculiar to Matthew. The temple service seems to be the changing of the showbread on the sabbath (Lv 24:8) and the doubling on the sabbath of the usual daily holocausts (Nm 28:9-10). The argument is that the law itself requires work that breaks the sabbath rest, because of the higher duty of temple service. If temple duties outweigh the sabbath law, how much more does the presence of Jesus, with his proclamation of the kingdom (something greater than the temple), justify the conduct of his disciples.

12:7 See the note on Matthew 9:13.

12:8 The ultimate justification for the disciples' violation of the sabbath rest is that Jesus, the Son of Man, has supreme authority over the law.

12:10 Rabbinic tradition later than the gospels allowed relief to be given to a sufferer on the sabbath if life was in danger. This may also have been the view of Jesus' Pharisaic contemporaries. But the case here is not about one in danger of death.

12:11 Matthew omits the question posed by Jesus in Mark 3:4 and substitutes one about rescuing a sheep on the sabbath, similar to that in Luke 14:5.

12:14 See Mark 3:6. Here the plan to bring about Jesus' death is attributed to the Pharisees only. This is probably due to the situation of Matthew's church, when the sole opponents were the Pharisees.

12:15-21 Matthew follows Mark 3:7-12 but summarizes his source in two verses (12:15, 16) that pick up the withdrawal, the healings, and the command for silence. To this he adds a fulfillment citation from the first Servant Song (Is 42:1-4) that does not correspond exactly to either the Hebrew or the LXX of that passage. It is the longest Old Testament citation in this gospel, emphasizing the meekness of Jesus, the Servant of the Lord, and foretelling the extension of his mission to the Gentiles.

12:15 Jesus' knowledge of the Pharisees' plot and his healing all are peculiar to Matthew.

12:19 The servant's not contending is seen as fulfilled in Jesus' withdrawal from the disputes narrated in Matthew 12:1-14.

12:21 Except for a minor detail, Matthew here follows the LXX, although the meaning of the Hebrew ("the coastlands will wait for his teaching") is similar.

12:22-32 For the exorcism, see the note on Matthew 9:32-34. The long discussion combines Marcan and Q material (Mk 3:22-30; Lk 11:19-20, 23; 12:10). Mark 3:20-21 is omitted, with a consequent lessening of the sharpness of Matthew 12:48.

12:23 See the note on Matthew 9:27.

12:24 See the note on Matthew 10:25.

12:25-26 Jesus' first response to the Pharisees' charge is that if it were true, Satan would be destroying his own kingdom.

12:27 Besides pointing out the absurdity of the charge, Jesus asks how the work of Jewish exorcists (your own people) is to be interpreted. Are they, too, to be charged with collusion with Beelzebul? For an example of Jewish exorcism see Josephus, Antiquities 8, 2, 5, 42-49.

12:28 The Q parallel (Lk 11:20) speaks of the "finger" rather than of the "spirit" of God. While the difference is probably due to Matthew's editing, he retains the kingdom of God rather than changing it to his usual "kingdom of heaven." Has come upon you: see Matthew 4:17.

12:29 A short parable illustrates what Jesus is doing. The strong man is Satan, whom Jesus has tied up and whose house he is plundering. Jewish expectation was that Satan would be chained up in the last days (Rev 20:2); Jesus' exorcisms indicate that those days have begun.

12:30 This saying, already attached to the preceding verses in Q (see Lk 11:23), warns that there can be no neutrality where Jesus is concerned. Its pertinence in a context where Jesus is addressing not the neutral but the bitterly opposed is not clear. The accusation of scattering, however, does fit the situation. Jesus is the shepherd of God's people (2:6), his mission is to the lost sheep of Israel (15:24); the Pharisees, who oppose him, are guilty of scattering the sheep.

12:31 Blasphemy against the Spirit: the sin of attributing to Satan (12:24) what is the work of the Spirit of God (12:28).

12:33 Declare: literally, "make." The meaning of this verse is obscure. Possibly it is a challenge to the Pharisees either to declare Jesus and his exorcisms good or both of them bad. A tree is known by its fruit; if the fruit is good, so must the tree be. If the driving out of demons is good, so must its source be.

12:34 The admission of Jesus' goodness cannot be made by the Pharisees, for they are evil, and the words that proceed from their evil hearts cannot be good.

12:36-37 If on the day of judgment people will be held accountable for even their careless words, the vicious accusations of the Pharisees will surely lead to their condemnation.

12:38-42 This section is mainly from Q (see Lk 11:29-32). Mark 8:11-12, which Matthew has followed in Matthew 16:1-4, has a similar demand for a sign. The scribes and Pharisees refuse to accept the exorcisms of Jesus as authentication of his claims and demand a sign that will end all possibility of doubt. Jesus' response is that no such sign will be given. Because his opponents are evil and see him as an agent of Satan, nothing will convince them.

12:38 Teacher: see the note on Matthew 8:19. In Matthew 16:1 the request is for a sign "from heaven" (Mk 8:11).

12:39 Unfaithful: literally, "adulterous." The covenant between God and Israel was portrayed as a marriage bond, and unfaithfulness to the covenant as adultery; cf. Hosea 2:4-15; Jeremiah 3:6-10.

12:40 See Jonah 2:1. While in Q the sign was simply Jonah's preaching to the Ninevites (Lk 11:30, 32), Matthew here adds Jonah's sojourn in the belly of the whale for three days and three nights, a prefigurement of Jesus' sojourn in the abode of the dead and, implicitly, of his resurrection.

12:41-42 The Ninevites who repented (see Jon 3:1-10) and the queen of the south (i.e., of Sheba; see 1 Kgs 10:1-13) were pagans who responded to lesser opportunities than have been offered to Israel in the ministry of Jesus, something greater than Jonah or Solomon. At the final judgment they will condemn the faithless generation that has rejected him.

12:43-45 Another Q passage; cf. Matthew 11:24-26. Jesus' ministry has broken Satan's hold over Israel, but the refusal of this evil generation to accept him will lead to a worse situation than what preceded his coming.

12:46-50 See Mark 3:31-35. Matthew has omitted Mark 3:20-21 which is taken up in Mark 3:31 (see the note on Mt 12:22-32), yet the point of the story is the same in both gospels: natural kinship with Jesus counts for nothing; only one who does the will of his heavenly Father belongs to his true family.

13:1-53 The discourse in parables is the third great discourse of Jesus in Matthew and constitutes the second part of the third book of the gospel. Matthew follows the Marcan outline (Mk 4:1-35) but has only two of Mark's parables, the five others being from Q and M. In addition to the seven parables, the discourse gives the reason why Jesus uses this type of speech (10-15), declares the blessedness of those who understand his teaching (16-17), explains the parable of the sower (18-23) and of the weeds (36-43), and ends with a concluding statement to the disciples (51-52).

13:3-8 Since in Palestine sowing often preceded plowing, much of the seed is scattered on ground that is unsuitable. Yet while much is wasted, the seed that falls on good ground bears fruit in extraordinarily large measure. The point of the parable is that, in spite of some failure because of opposition and indifference, the message of Jesus about the coming of the kingdom will have enormous success.

13:3 In parables: the word "parable" (Greek parabolē) is used in the LXX to translate the Hebrew māshāl, a designation covering a wide variety of literary forms such as axioms, proverbs, similitudes, and allegories. In the New Testament the same breadth of meaning of the word is found, but there it primarily designates stories that are illustrative comparisons between Christian truths and events of everyday life. Sometimes the event has a strange element that is quite different from usual experience (e.g., in 13:33 the enormous amount of dough in the parable of the yeast); this is meant to sharpen the curiosity of the hearer. If each detail of such a story is given a figurative meaning, the story is an allegory. Those who maintain a sharp distinction between parable and allegory insist that a parable has only one point of comparison, and that while parables were characteristic of Jesus' teaching, to see allegorical details in them is to introduce meanings that go beyond their original intention and even falsify it. However, to exclude any allegorical elements from a parable is an excessively rigid mode of interpretation, now abandoned by many scholars.

13:11 Since a parable is figurative speech that demands reflection for understanding, only those who are prepared to explore its meaning can come to know it. To understand is a gift of God, granted to the disciples but not to the crowds. In Semitic fashion, both the disciples' understanding and the crowd's obtuseness are attributed to God. The question of human responsibility for the obtuseness is not dealt with, although it is asserted in Matthew 13:13. The mysteries: as in Luke 8:10; Mark 4:11 has "the mystery." The word is used in Daniel 2:18, 19, 27 and in the Qumran literature (1QpHab 7:8; 1QS 3:23; 1QM 3:9) to designate a divine plan or decree affecting the course of history that can be known only when revealed. Knowledge of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven means recognition that the kingdom has become present in the ministry of Jesus.

13:12 In the New Testament use of this axiom of practical "wisdom" (see 25:29; Mk 4:25; Lk 8:18; 19:26), the reference transcends the original level. God gives further understanding to one who accepts the revealed mystery; from the one who does not, he will take it away (note the "theological passive," more will be given, what he has will be taken away).

13:13 Because "they look … or understand": Matthew softens his Marcan source, which states that Jesus speaks in parables so that the crowds may not understand (Mk 4:12), and makes such speaking a punishment given because they have not accepted his previous clear teaching. However, his citation of Isaiah 6:9-10 in Matthew 13:14 supports the harsher Marcan view.

13:16-17 Unlike the unbelieving crowds, the disciples have seen that which the prophets and the righteous of the Old Testament longed to see without having their longing fulfilled.

13:18-23 See Mark 4:14-20; Luke 8:11-15. In this explanation of the parable the emphasis is on the various types of soil on which the seed falls, i.e., on the dispositions with which the preaching of Jesus is received. The second and third types particularly are explained in such a way as to support the view held by many scholars that the explanation derives not from Jesus but from early Christian reflection upon apostasy from the faith that was the consequence of persecution and worldliness, respectively. Others, however, hold that the explanation may come basically from Jesus even though it was developed in the light of later Christian experience. The four types of persons envisaged are (1) those who never accept the word of the kingdom (13:19); (2) those who believe for a while but fall away because of persecution (13:20-21); (3) those who believe, but in whom the word is choked by worldly anxiety and the seduction of riches (13:22); (4) those who respond to the word and produce fruit abundantly (13:23).

13:24-30 This parable is peculiar to Matthew. The comparison in Matthew 13:24 does not mean that the kingdom of heaven may be likened simply to the person in question but to the situation narrated in the whole story. The refusal of the householder to allow his slaves to separate the wheat from the weeds while they are still growing is a warning to the disciples not to attempt to anticipate the final judgment of God by a definitive exclusion of sinners from the kingdom. In its present stage it is composed of the good and the bad. The judgment of God alone will eliminate the sinful. Until then there must be patience and the preaching of repentance.

13:25 Weeds: darnel, a poisonous weed that in its first stage of growth resembles wheat.

13:30 Harvest: a common biblical metaphor for the time of God's judgment; cf. Jeremiah 51:33; Joel 4:13; Hosea 6:11.

13:31-33 See Mark 4:30-32; Luke 13:18-21. The parables of the mustard seed and the yeast illustrate the same point: the amazing contrast between the small beginnings of the kingdom and its marvelous expansion.

13:32 See Daniel 4:7-9, 17-19 where the birds nesting in the tree represent the people of Nebuchadnezzar's kingdom. See also Ezekiel 17:23; 31:6.

13:33 Except in this Q parable and in Matthew 16:12, yeast (or "leaven") is, in New Testament usage, a symbol of corruption (see 16:6, 11-12; Mk 8:15; Lk 12:1; 1 Cor 5:6-8; Gal 5:9). Three measures: an enormous amount, enough to feed a hundred people. The exaggeration of this element of the parable points to the greatness of the kingdom's effect.

13:34 Only in parables: see Matthew 13:10-15.

13:35 The prophet: some textual witnesses read "Isaiah the prophet." The quotation is actually from Psalm 78:2; the first line corresponds to the LXX text of the psalm. The psalm's title ascribes it to Asaph, the founder of one of the guilds of temple musicians. He is called "the prophet" (NAB "the seer") in 2 Chronicles 29:30 but it is doubtful that Matthew averted to that; for him, any Old Testament text that could be seen as fulfilled in Jesus was prophetic.

13:36 Dismissing the crowds: the return of Jesus to the house marks a break with the crowds, who represent unbelieving Israel. From now on his attention is directed more and more to his disciples and to their instruction. The rest of the discourse is addressed to them alone.

13:37-43 In the explanation of the parable of the weeds emphasis lies on the fearful end of the wicked, whereas the parable itself concentrates on patience with them until judgment time.

13:38 The field is the world: this presupposes the resurrection of Jesus and the granting to him of "all power in heaven and on earth" (28:18).

13:39 The end of the age: this phrase is found only in Matthew (13:40, 49; 24:3; 28:20).

13:41 His kingdom: the kingdom of the Son of Man is distinguished from that of the Father (13:43); see 1 Corinthians 15:24-25. The church is the place where Jesus' kingdom is manifested, but his royal authority embraces the entire world; see the note on Matthew 13:38.

13:43 See Daniel 12:3.

13:44-50 The first two of the last three parables of the discourse have the same point. The person who finds a buried treasure and the merchant who finds a pearl of great price sell all that they have to acquire these finds; similarly, the one who understands the supreme value of the kingdom gives up whatever he must to obtain it. Thejoy with which this is done is made explicit in the first parable, but it may be presumed in the second also. The concluding parable of the fishnet resembles the explanation of the parable of the weeds with its stress upon the final exclusion of evil persons from the kingdom.

13:44 In the unsettled conditions of Palestine in Jesus' time, it was not unusual to guard valuables by burying them in the ground.

13:51 Matthew typically speaks of the understanding of the disciples.

13:52 Since Matthew tends to identify the disciples and the Twelve (see the note on 10:1), this saying about the Christian scribe cannot be taken as applicable to all who accept the message of Jesus. While the Twelve are in many ways representative of all who believe in him, they are also distinguished from them in certain respects. The church of Matthew has leaders among whom are a group designated as "scribes" (23:34). Like the scribes of Israel, they are teachers. It is the Twelve and these their later counterparts to whom this verse applies. The scribe … instructed in the kingdom of heaven knows both the teaching of Jesus (the new) and the law and prophets (the old) and provides in his own teaching both the new and the old as interpreted and fulfilled by the new. On the translation head of a household (for the same Greek word translated householder in 13:27), see the note on Matthew 24:45-51.

13:54–17:27 This section is the narrative part of the fourth book of the gospel.

13:54 After the Sermon on the Mount the crowds are in admiring astonishment at Jesus' teaching (7:28); here the astonishment is of those who take offense at him. Familiarity with his background and family leads them to regard him as pretentious. Matthew modifies his Marcan source (6:1-6). Jesus is not the carpenter but the carpenter's son (13:55), "and among his own kin" is omitted (13:57), he did not work many mighty deeds in face of such unbelief (13:58) rather than the Marcan "… he was not able to perform any mighty deed there" (6:5), and there is no mention of his amazement at his townspeople's lack of faith.

14:1-12 The murder of the Baptist by Herod Antipas prefigures the death of Jesus (see 17:12). The Marcan source (6:14-29) is much reduced and in some points changed. In Mark Herod reveres John as a holy man and the desire to kill him is attributed to Herodias (6:19, 20), whereas here that desire is Herod's from the beginning (14:5).

14:1 Herod the tetrarch: Herod Antipas, son of Herod the Great. When the latter died, his territory was divided among three of his surviving sons, Archelaus who received half of it (2:23), Herod Antipas who became ruler of Galilee and Perea, and Philip who became ruler of northern Transjordan. Since he received a quarter of his father's domain, Antipas is accurately designated tetrarch ("ruler of a fourth [part]"), although in Matthew 14:9 Matthew repeats the "king" of his Marcan source (6:26).

14:3 Herodias was not the wife of Herod's half-brother Philip but of another half-brother, Herod Boethus. The union was prohibited by Leviticus 18:16; 20:21. According to Josephus (Antiquities 18, 5, 2 116–19), Herod imprisoned and then executed John because he feared that the Baptist's influence over the people might enable him to lead a rebellion.

14:13-21 The feeding of the five thousand is the only miracle of Jesus that is recounted in all four gospels. The principal reason for that may be that it was seen as anticipating the Eucharist and the final banquet in the kingdom (8:11; 26:29), but it looks not only forward but backward, to the feeding of Israel with manna in the desert at the time of the Exodus (Ex 16), a miracle that in some contemporary Jewish expectation would be repeated in the messianic age (2 Bar 29:8). It may also be meant to recall Elisha's feeding a hundred men with small provisions (2 Kgs 4:42-44).

14:19 The taking, saying the blessing, breaking, and giving to the disciples correspond to the actions of Jesus over the bread at the Last Supper (26:26). Since they were usual at any Jewish meal, that correspondence does not necessarily indicate a eucharistic reference here. Matthew's silence about Jesus' dividing the fish among the people (Mk 6:41) is perhaps more significant in that regard.

14:20 The fragments left over: as in Elisha's miracle, food was left over after all had been fed. The word fragments (Greek klasmata) is used, in the singular, of the broken bread of the Eucharist in Didache 9:3-4.

14:22-33 The disciples, laboring against the turbulent sea, are saved by Jesus. For his power over the waters, see the note on Matthew 8:26. Here that power is expressed also by his walking on the sea (14:25; cf. Ps 77:20; Jb 9:8). Matthew has inserted into the Marcan story (Mk 6:45-52) material that belongs to his special traditions on Peter (14:28-31).

14:25 The fourth watch of the night: between 3 a.m. and 6 a.m. The Romans divided the twelve hours between 6 p.m. and 6 a.m. into four equal parts called "watches."

14:27 It is I: see the note on Mark 6:50.

14:31 You of little faith: see the note on Matthew 6:30. Why did you doubt?: the verb is peculiar to Matthew and occurs elsewhere only in Matthew 28:17.

14:33 This confession is in striking contrast to the Marcan parallel (Mk 6:51) where the disciples are "completely astounded."

15:1-20 This dispute begins with the question of the Pharisees and scribes why Jesus' disciples are breaking the tradition of the elders about washing one's hands before eating (15:2). Jesus' counterquestion accuses his opponents of breaking the commandment of God for the sake of their tradition (15:3) and illustrates this by their interpretation of the commandment of the Decalogue concerning parents (15:4-6). Denouncing them as hypocrites, he applies to them a derogatory prophecy of Isaiah (15:7-8). Then with a wider audience (the crowd, 15:10) he goes beyond the violation of tradition with which the dispute has started. The parable (15:11) is an attack on the Mosaic law concerning clean and unclean foods, similar to those antitheses that abrogate the law (5:31-32, 33-34, 38-39). After a warning to his disciples not to follow the moral guidance of the Pharisees (15:13-14), he explains the parable (15:15) to them, saying that defilement comes not from what enters the mouth (15:17) but from the evil thoughts and deeds that rise from within, from the heart (15:18-20). The last verse returns to the starting point of the dispute (eating with unwashed hands). Because of Matthew's omission of Mark 7:19b, some scholars think that Matthew has weakened the Marcan repudiation of the Mosaic food laws. But that half verse is ambiguous in the Greek, which may be the reason for its omission here.

15:2 The tradition of the elders: see the note on Mark 7:5. The purpose of the handwashing was to remove defilement caused by contact with what was ritually unclean.

15:3-4 For the commandment see Exodus 20:12 (Dt 5:16); 21:17. The honoring of one's parents had to do with supporting them in their needs.

15:5 See the note on Mark 7:11.

15:8 The text of Isaiah 29:13 is quoted approximately according to the Septuagint.

15:13-14 Jesus leads his disciples away from the teaching authority of the Pharisees.

15:15 Matthew specifies Peter as the questioner, unlike Mark 7:17. Given his tendency to present the disciples as more understanding than in his Marcan source, it is noteworthy that here he retains the Marcan rebuke, although in a slightly milder form. This may be due to his wish to correct the Jewish Christians within his church who still held to the food laws and thus separated themselves from Gentile Christians who did not observe them.

15:19 The Marcan list of thirteen things that defile (7:21-22) is here reduced to seven that partially cover the content of the Decalogue.

15:21-28 See the note on Matthew 8:5-13.

15:24 See the note on Matthew 10:5-6.

15:26 The children: the people of Israel. Dogs: see the note on Matthew 7:6.

15:28 As in the case of the cure of the centurion’s servant (8:10), Matthew ascribes Jesus’ granting the request to the woman’s great faith, a point not made equally explicit in the Marcan parallel (7:24-30).

15:32-39 Most probably this story is a doublet of that of the feeding of the five thousand (14:13-21). It differs from it notably only in that Jesus takes the initiative, not the disciples (15:32), and in the numbers: the crowd has been with Jesus three days (15:32), seven loaves are multiplied (15:36), seven baskets of fragments remain after the feeding (15:37), and four thousand men are fed (15:38).

15:36 Gave thanks: see Matthew 14:19, “said the blessing.” There is no difference in meaning. The thanksgiving was a blessing of God for his benefits.

16:1 A sign from heaven: see the note on Matthew 12:38-42.

16:2-3 The answer of Jesus in these verses is omitted in many important textual witnesses, and it is very uncertain that it is an original part of this gospel. It resembles Luke 12:54-56 and may have been inserted from there. It rebukes the Pharisees and Sadducees who are able to read indications of coming weather but not the indications of the coming kingdom in the signs that Jesus does offer, his mighty deeds and teaching.

16:4 See the notes on Matthew 12:39, 40.

16:5-12 Jesus’ warning his disciples against the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees comes immediately before his promise to confer on Peter the authority to bind and to loose on earth (16:19), an authority that will be confirmed in heaven. Such authority most probably has to do, at least in part, with teaching. The rejection of the teaching authority of the Pharisees (see also 12:12-14) prepares for a new one derived from Jesus.

16:6 Leaven: see the note on Matthew 13:33. Sadducees: Matthew’s Marcan source speaks rather of “the leaven of Herod” (Mk 8:15).

16:7-11 The disciples, men of little faith, misunderstand Jesus’ metaphorical use of leaven, forgetting that, as the feeding of the crowds shows, he is not at a loss to provide them with bread.

16:12 After his rebuke, the disciples understand that by leaven he meant the corrupting influence of the teaching of the Pharisees and Sadducees. The evangelist probably understands this teaching as common to both groups. Since at the time of Jesus’ ministry the two differed widely on points of teaching, e.g., the resurrection of the dead, and at the time of the evangelist the Sadducee party was no longer a force in Judaism, the supposed common teaching fits neither period. The disciples’ eventual understanding of Jesus’ warning contrasts with their continuing obtuseness in the Marcan parallel (Mk 8:14-21).

16:13-20 The Marcan confession of Jesus as Messiah, made by Peter as spokesman for the other disciples (Mk 8:27-29; cf. also Lk 9:18-20), is modified significantly here. The confession is of Jesus both as Messiah and as Son of the living God (16:16). Jesus' response, drawn principally from material peculiar to Matthew, attributes the confession to a divine revelation granted to Peter alone (16:17) and makes him the rock on which Jesus will build his church (16:18) and the disciple whose authority in the church on earth will be confirmed in heaven, i.e., by God (16:19).

16:13 Caesarea Philippi: situated about twenty miles north of the Sea of Galilee in the territory ruled by Philip, a son of Herod the Great, tetrarch from 4 B.C. until his death in A.D. 34 (see the note on 14:1). He rebuilt the town of Paneas, naming it Caesarea in honor of the emperor, and Philippi ("of Philip") to distinguish it from the seaport in Samaria that was also called Caesarea. Who do people say that the Son of Man is?: although the question differs from the Marcan parallel (Mk 8:27: "Who … that I am?"), the meaning is the same, for Jesus here refers to himself as the Son of Man (cf. 16:15).

16:14 John the Baptist: see Matthew 14:2. Elijah: cf. Malachi 3:19; Sirach 48:10; and see the note on Matthew 3:4. Jeremiah: an addition of Matthew to the Marcan source.

16:16 The Son of the living God: see Matthew 2:15; 3:17. The addition of this exalted title to the Marcan confession eliminates whatever ambiguity was attached to the title Messiah. This, among other things, supports the view proposed by many scholars that Matthew has here combined his source's confession with a post-resurrectional confession of faith in Jesus as Son of the living God that belonged to the appearance of the risen Jesus to Peter; cf. 1 Corinthians 15:5; Luke 24:34.

16:17 Flesh and blood: a Semitic expression for human beings, especially in their weakness. Has not revealed this … but my heavenly Father: that Peter's faith is spoken of as coming not through human means but through a revelation from God is similar to Paul's description of his recognition of who Jesus was; see Galatians 1:15-16, "… when he [God] … was pleased to reveal his Son to me …."

16:18 You are Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church: the Aramaic word *kēpā*ʾ* meaning rock and transliterated into Greek as Kēphas is the name by which Peter is called in the Pauline letters (1 Cor 1:12; 3:22; 9:5; 15:4; Gal 1:18; 2:9, 11, 14) except in Galatians 2:7-8 ("Peter"). It is translated as Petros ("Peter") in John 1:42. The presumed original Aramaic of Jesus' statement would have been, in English, "You are the Rock (*Kēpā*ʾ*) and upon this rock (*kēpā*ʾ*) I will build my church." The Greek text probably means the same, for the difference in gender between the masculine noun petros, the disciple's new name, and the feminine noun petra (rock) may be due simply to the unsuitability of using a feminine noun as the proper name of a male. Although the two words were generally used with slightly different nuances, they were also used interchangeably with the same meaning, "rock." Church: this word (Greek ekklēsia) occurs in the gospels only here and in Matthew 18:17 (twice). There are several possibilities for an Aramaic original. Jesus' church means the community that he will gather and that, like a building, will have Peter as its solid foundation. That function of Peter consists in his being witness to Jesus as the Messiah, the Son of the living God. The gates of the netherworld shall not prevail against it: the netherworld (Greek Hadēs, the abode of the dead) is conceived of as a walled city whose gates will not close in upon the church of Jesus, i.e., it will not be overcome by the power of death.

16:19 The keys to the kingdom of heaven: the image of the keys is probably drawn from Isaiah 22:15-25 where Eliakim, who succeeds Shebna as master of the palace, is given "the key of the House of David," which he authoritatively "opens" and "shuts" (22:22). Whatever you bind … loosed in heaven: there are many instances in rabbinic literature of the binding-loosing imagery. Of the several meanings given there to the metaphor, two are of special importance here: the giving of authoritative teaching, and the lifting or imposing of the ban of excommunication. It is disputed whether the image of the keys and that of binding and loosing are different metaphors meaning the same thing. In any case, the promise of the keys is given to Peter alone. In Matthew 18:18 all the disciples are given the power of binding and loosing, but the context of that verse suggests that there the power of excommunication alone is intended. That the keys are those to the kingdom of heaven and that Peter's exercise of authority in the church on earth will be confirmed in heaven show an intimate connection between, but not an identification of, the church and the kingdom of heaven.

16:20 Cf. Mark 8:30. Matthew makes explicit that the prohibition has to do with speaking of Jesus as the Messiah; see the note on Mark 8:27-30.

16:21-23 This first prediction of the passion follows Mark 8:31-33 in the main and serves as a corrective to an understanding of Jesus' messiahship as solely one of glory and triumph. By his addition of from that time on (16:21) Matthew has emphasized that Jesus' revelation of his coming suffering and death marks a new phase of the gospel. Neither this nor the two later passion predictions (17:22-23; 20:17-19) can be taken as sayings that, as they stand, go back to Jesus himself. However, it is probable that he foresaw that his mission would entail suffering and perhaps death, but was confident that he would ultimately be vindicated by God (see 26:29).

16:21 He: the Marcan parallel (Mk 8:31) has "the Son of Man." Since Matthew has already designated Jesus by that title (13), its omission here is not significant. The Matthean prediction is equally about the sufferings of the Son of Man. Must: this necessity is part of the tradition of all the synoptics; cf. Mark 8:31; Luke 9:21. The elders, the chief priests, and the scribes: see the note on Mark 8:31. On the third day: so also Luke 9:22, against the Marcan "after three days" (Mk 8:31). Matthew's formulation is, in the Greek, almost identical with the pre-Pauline fragment of the kerygma in 1 Corinthians 15:4 and also with Hosea 6:2 which many take to be the Old Testament background to the confession that Jesus was raised on the third day. Josephus uses "after three days" and "on the third day" interchangeably (Antiquities 7, 11, 6 280–81; 8, 8, 1–2 214, 218) and there is probably no difference in meaning between the two phrases.

16:22-23 Peter's refusal to accept Jesus' predicted suffering and death is seen as a satanic attempt to deflect Jesus from his God-appointed course, and the disciple is addressed in terms that recall Jesus' dismissal of the devil in the temptation account (4:10: "Get away, Satan!"). Peter's satanic purpose is emphasized by Matthew's addition to the Marcan source of the words You are an obstacle to me.

16:24-28 A readiness to follow Jesus even to giving up one's life for him is the condition for true discipleship; this will be repaid by him at the final judgment.

16:24 Deny himself: to deny someone is to disown him (see 10:33; 26:34-35) and to deny oneself is to disown oneself as the center of one's existence.

16:27 The parousia and final judgment are described in Matthew 25:31 in terms almost identical with these.

16:28 Coming in his kingdom: since the kingdom of the Son of Man has been described as “the world” and Jesus’ sovereignty precedes his final coming in glory (13:38, 41), the coming in this verse is not the parousia as in the preceding but the manifestation of Jesus’ rule after his resurrection; see the notes on Matthew 13:38, 41.

17:1-8 The account of the transfiguration confirms that Jesus is the Son of God (17:5) and points to fulfillment of the prediction that he will come in his Father’s glory at the end of the age (16:27). It has been explained by some as a resurrection appearance retrojected into the time of Jesus’ ministry, but that is not probable since the account lacks many of the usual elements of the resurrection-appearance narratives. It draws upon motifs from the Old Testament and noncanonical Jewish apocalyptic literature that express the presence of the heavenly and the divine, e.g., brilliant light, white garments, and the overshadowing cloud.

17:1 These three disciples are also taken apart from the others by Jesus in Gethsemane (26:37). A high mountain: this has been identified with Tabor or Hermon, but probably no specific mountain was intended by the evangelist or by his Marcan source (Mk 9:2). Its meaning is theological rather than geographical, possibly recalling the revelation to Moses on Mount Sinai (Ex 24:12-18) and to Elijah at the same place (1 Kgs 19:8-18; Horeb = Sinai).

17:2 His face shone like the sun: this is a Matthean addition; cf. Daniel 10:6. His clothes became white as light: cf. Daniel 7:9 where the clothing of God appears “snow bright.” For the white garments of other heavenly beings, see Revelation 4:4; 7:9; 19:14.

17:3 See the note on Mark 9:5.

17:4 Three tents: the booths in which the Israelites lived during the feast of Tabernacles (cf. Jn 7:2) were meant to recall their ancestors’ dwelling in booths during the journey from Egypt to the promised land (Lv 23:39-42). The same Greek word, skēnē, here translated tents, is used in the LXX for the booths of that feast, and some scholars have suggested that there is an allusion here to that liturgical custom.

17:5 Cloud cast a shadow over them: see the note on Mark 9:7. This is my beloved Son … listen to him: cf. Matthew 3:17. The voice repeats the baptismal proclamation about Jesus, with the addition of the command listen to him. The latter is a reference to Deuteronomy 18:15 in which the Israelites are commanded to listen to the prophet like Moses whom God will raise up for them. The command to listen to Jesus is general, but in this context it probably applies particularly to the preceding predictions of his passion and resurrection (16:21) and of his coming (16:27, 28).

17:9-13 In response to the disciples’ question about the expected return of Elijah, Jesus interprets the mission of the Baptist as the fulfillment of that expectation. But that was not suspected by those who opposed and finally killed him, and Jesus predicts a similar fate for himself.

17:9 The vision: Matthew alone uses this word to describe the transfiguration. Until the Son of Man has been raised from the dead: only in the light of Jesus’ resurrection can the meaning of his life and mission be truly understood; until then no testimony to the vision will lead people to faith.

17:10 See the notes on Matthew 3:4; 16:14.

17:11-12 The preceding question and this answer may reflect later controversy with Jews who objected to the Christian claims for Jesus that Elijah had not yet come.

17:13 See Matthew 11:14.

17:14-20 Matthew has greatly shortened the Marcan story (Mk 9:14-29). Leaving aside several details of the boy's illness, he concentrates on the need for faith, not so much on the part of the boy's father (as does Mark, for Matthew omits Mk 9:22b-24) but on that of his own disciples whose inability to drive out the demon is ascribed to their little faith (17:20).

17:15 A lunatic: this description of the boy is peculiar to Matthew. The word occurs in the New Testament only here and in Matthew 4:24 and means one affected or struck by the moon. The symptoms of the boy's illness point to epilepsy, and attacks of this were thought to be caused by phases of the moon.

17:17 Faithless and perverse: so Matthew and Luke (Lk 9:41) against Mark's faithless (Mt 9:19). The Greek word here translated perverse is the same as that in Deuteronomy 32:5 LXX, where Moses speaks to his people. There is a problem in knowing to whom the reproach is addressed. Since the Matthean Jesus normally chides his disciples for their little faith (as in 17:20), it would appear that the charge of lack of faith could not be made against them and that the reproach is addressed to unbelievers among the Jews. However in Matthew 17:20b (if you have faith the size of a mustard seed), which is certainly addressed to the disciples, they appear to have not even the smallest faith; if they had, they would have been able to cure the boy. In the light of Matthew 17:20b the reproach of Matthew 17:17 could have applied to the disciples. There seems to be an inconsistency between the charge of little faith in Matthew 17:20a and that of not even a little in Matthew 17:20b.

17:18 The demon came out of him: not until this verse does Matthew indicate that the boy's illness is a case of demoniacal possession.

17:20 The entire verse is an addition of Matthew who (according to the better attested text) omits the reason given for the disciples' inability in Mark 9:29. Little faith: see the note on Matthew 6:30. Faith the size of a mustard seed … and it will move: a combination of a Q saying (cf. Lk 17:6) with a Marcan saying (cf. Mk 11:23).

17:21 Some manuscripts add, "But this kind does not come out except by prayer and fasting"; this is a variant of the better reading of Mark 9:29.

17:22-23 The second passion prediction (cf. 16:21-23) is the least detailed of the three and may be the earliest. In the Marcan parallel the disciples do not understand (Mk 9:32); here they understand and are overwhelmed with grief at the prospect of Jesus' death (17:23).

17:24-27 Like Matthew 14:28-31 and Matthew 16:16b-19, this episode comes from Matthew's special material on Peter. Although the question of the collectors concerns Jesus' payment of the temple tax, it is put to Peter. It is he who receives instruction from Jesus about freedom from the obligation of payment and yet why it should be made. The means of doing so is provided miraculously. The pericope deals with a problem of Matthew's church, whether its members should pay the temple tax, and the answer is given through a word of Jesus conveyed to Peter. Some scholars see here an example of the teaching authority of Peter exercised in the name of Jesus (see 16:19). The specific problem was a Jewish Christian one and may have arisen when the Matthean church was composed largely of that group.

17:24 The temple tax: before the destruction of the Jerusalem temple in A.D. 70 every male Jew above nineteen years of age was obliged to make an annual contribution to its upkeep (cf. Ex 30:11-16; Neh 10:33). After the destruction the Romans imposed upon Jews the obligation of paying that tax for the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. There is disagreement about which period the story deals with.

17:25 From their subjects or from foreigners?: the Greek word here translated subjects literally means "sons."

17:26 Then the subjects are exempt: just as subjects are not bound by laws applying to foreigners, neither are Jesus and his disciples, who belong to the kingdom of heaven, bound by the duty of paying the temple tax imposed on those who are not of the kingdom. If the Greek is translated "sons," the freedom of Jesus, the Son of God, and of his disciples, children ("sons") of the kingdom (cf. 13:38), is even more clear.

17:27 That we may not offend them: though they are exempt (17:26), Jesus and his disciples are to avoid giving offense; therefore the tax is to be paid. A coin worth twice the temple tax: literally, "a stater," a Greek coin worth two double drachmas. Two double drachmas were equal to the Jewish shekel and the tax was a half-shekel. For me and for you: not only Jesus but Peter pays the tax, and this example serves as a standard for the conduct of all the disciples.

18:1-35 This discourse of the fourth book of the gospel is often called the "church order" discourse, but it lacks most of the considerations usually connected with church order, such as various offices in the church and the duties of each, and deals principally with the relations that must obtain among the members of the church. Beginning with the warning that greatness in the kingdom of heaven is measured not by rank or power but by childlikeness (18:1-5), it deals with the care that the disciples must take not to cause the little ones to sin or to neglect them if they stray from the community (18:6-14), the correction of members who sin (18:15-18), the efficacy of the prayer of the disciples because of the presence of Jesus (18:19-20), and the forgiveness that must be repeatedly extended to sinful members who repent (18:21-35).

18:1 The initiative is taken not by Jesus as in the Marcan parallel (Mk 9:33-34) but by the disciples. Kingdom of heaven: this may mean the kingdom in its fullness, i.e., after the parousia and the final judgment. But what follows about causes of sin, church discipline, and forgiveness, all dealing with the present age, suggests that the question has to do with rank also in the church, where the kingdom is manifested here and now, although only partially and by anticipation; see the notes on Matthew 3:2; 4:17.

18:3 Become like children: the child is held up as a model for the disciples not because of any supposed innocence of children but because of their complete dependence on, and trust in, their parents. So must the disciples be, in respect to God.

18:5 Cf. Matthew 10:40.

18:6 One of these little ones: the thought passes from the child of Matthew 18:2-4 to the disciples, little ones because of their becoming like children. It is difficult to know whether this is a designation of all who are disciples or of those who are insignificant in contrast to others, e.g., the leaders of the community. Since apart from this chapter the designation little ones occurs in Matthew only in Matthew 10:42 where it means disciples as such, that is its more likely meaning here. Who believe in me: since discipleship is impossible without at least some degree of faith, this further specification seems superfluous. However, it serves to indicate that the warning against causing a little one to sin is principally directed against whatever would lead such a one to a weakening or loss of faith. The Greek verb skandalizein, here translated causes … to sin, means literally "causes to stumble"; what the stumbling is depends on the context. It is used of falling away from faith in Matthew 13:21. According to the better reading of Mark 9:42, in me is a Matthean addition to the Marcan source. It would be better … depths of the sea: cf. Mark 9:42.

18:7 This is a Q saying; cf. Luke 17:1. The inevitability of things that cause sin (literally, "scandals") does not take away the responsibility of the one through whom they come.

18:8 These verses are a doublet of Matthew 5:29-30. In that context they have to do with causes of sexual sin. As in the Marcan source from which they have been drawn (Mk 9:42-48), they differ from the first warning about scandal, which deals with causing another person to sin, for they concern what causes oneself to sin and they do not seem to be related to another's loss of faith, as the first warning is. It is difficult to know how Matthew understood the logical connection between these verses and Matthew 18:6-7.

18:10-14 The first and last verses are peculiar to Matthew. The parable itself comes from Q; see Luke 15:3-7. In Luke it serves as justification for Jesus' table-companionship with sinners; here, it is an exhortation for the disciples to seek out fellow disciples who have gone astray. Not only must no one cause a fellow disciple to sin, but those who have strayed must be sought out and, if possible, brought back to the community. The joy of the shepherd on finding the sheep, though not absent in Matthew 18:13 is more emphasized in Luke. By his addition of Matthew 18:10, 14 Matthew has drawn out explicitly the application of the parable to the care of the little ones.

18:10 Their angels in heaven … my heavenly Father: for the Jewish belief in angels as guardians of nations and individuals, see Daniel 10:13, 20-21; Tobit 5:4-7; 1QH 5:20-22; as intercessors who present the prayers of human beings to God, see Tobit 13:12, 15. The high worth of the little ones is indicated by their being represented before God by these heavenly beings.

18:11 Some manuscripts add, "For the Son of Man has come to save what was lost"; cf. Matthew 9:13. This is practically identical with Luke 19:10 and is probably a copyist's addition from that source.

18:15-20 Passing from the duty of Christian disciples toward those who have strayed from their number, the discourse now turns to how they are to deal with one who sins and yet remains within the community. First there is to be private correction (18:15); if this is unsuccessful, further correction before two or three witnesses (18:16); if this fails, the matter is to be brought before the assembled community (the church), and if the sinner refuses to attend to the correction of the church, he is to be expelled (18:17). The church's judgment will be ratified in heaven, i.e., by God (18:18). This three-step process of correction corresponds, though not exactly, to the procedure of the Qumran community; see 1QS 5:25–6:1; 6:24–7:25; CD 9:2-8. The section ends with a saying about the favorable response of God to prayer, even to that of a very small number, for Jesus is in the midst of any gathering of his disciples, however small (18:19-20). Whether this prayer has anything to do with the preceding judgment is uncertain.

18:15 Your brother: a fellow disciple; see Matthew 23:8. The bracketed words, against you, are widely attested but they are not in the important codices Sinaiticus and Vaticanus or in some other textual witnesses. Their omission broadens the type of sin in question. Won over: literally, "gained."

18:16 Cf. Deuteronomy 19:15.

18:17 The church: the second of the only two instances of this word in the gospels; see the note on Matthew 16:18. Here it refers not to the entire church of Jesus, as in Matthew 16:18, but to the local congregation. Treat him … a Gentile or a tax collector: just as the observant Jew avoided the company of Gentiles and tax collectors, so must the congregation of Christian disciples separate itself from the arrogantly sinful member who refuses to repent even when convicted of his sin by the whole church. Such a one is to be set outside the fellowship of the community. The harsh language about Gentile and tax collector probably reflects a stage of the Matthean church when it was principally composed of Jewish Christians. That time had long since passed, but the principle of exclusion for such a sinner remained. Paul makes a similar demand for excommunication in 1 Corinthians 5:1-13.

18:18 Except for the plural of the verbs bind and loose, this verse is practically identical with Matthew 16:19b and many scholars understand it as granting to all the disciples what was previously given to Peter alone. For a different view, based on the different contexts of the two verses, see the note on Matthew 16:19.

18:19-20 Some take these verses as applying to prayer on the occasion of the church’s gathering to deal with the sinner of Matthew 18:17. Unless an a fortiori argument is supposed, this seems unlikely. God’s answer to the prayer of two or three envisages a different situation from one that involves the entire congregation. In addition, the object of this prayer is expressed in most general terms as anything for which they are to pray.

18:20 For where two or three … midst of them: the presence of Jesus guarantees the efficacy of the prayer. This saying is similar to one attributed to a rabbi executed in A.D. 135 at the time of the second Jewish revolt: “… When two sit and there are between them the words of the Torah, the divine presence (Shekinah) rests upon them” (Pirqê *ʿ*Abôt* 3:3).

18:21-35 The final section of the discourse deals with the forgiveness that the disciples are to give to their fellow disciples who sin against them. To the question of Peter how often forgiveness is to be granted (18:21), Jesus answers that it is to be given without limit (18:22) and illustrates this with the parable of the unmerciful servant (18:23-34), warning that his heavenly Father will give those who do not forgive the same treatment as that given to the unmerciful servant (18:35). Matthew 18:21-22 correspond to Luke 17:4; the parable and the final warning are peculiar to Matthew. That the Parable did not originally belong to this context is suggested by the fact that it really does not deal with repeated forgiveness, which is the point of Peter’s question and Jesus’ reply.

18:22 Seventy-seven times: the Greek corresponds exactly to the LXX of Genesis 4:24. There is probably an allusion, by contrast, to the limitless vengeance of Lamech in the Genesis text. In any case, what is demanded of the disciples is limitless forgiveness.

18:24 A huge amount: literally, “ten thousand talents.” The talent was a unit of coinage of high but varying value depending on its metal (gold, silver, copper) and its place of origin. It is mentioned in the New Testament only here and in Matthew 25:14-30.

18:26 Pay you back in full: an empty promise, given the size of the debt.

18:28 A much smaller amount: literally, “a hundred denarii.” A denarius was the normal daily wage of a laborer. The difference between the two debts is enormous and brings out the absurdity of the conduct of the Christian who has received the great forgiveness of God and yet refuses to forgive the relatively minor offenses done to him.

18:34 Since the debt is so great as to be unpayable, the punishment will be endless.

18:35 The Father's forgiveness, already given, will be withdrawn at the final judgment for those who have not imitated his forgiveness by their own.

19:1–23:39 The narrative section of the fifth book of the gospel. The first part (19:1–20:34) has for its setting the journey of Jesus from Galilee to Jerusalem; the second (21:1–23:39) deals with Jesus' ministry in Jerusalem up to the final great discourse of the gospel (24–25). Matthew follows the Marcan sequence of events, though adding material both special to this gospel and drawn from Q. The second part ends with the denunciation of the scribes and Pharisees (23:1-36) followed by Jesus' lament over Jerusalem (23:37-39). This long and important speech raises a problem for the view that Matthew is structured around five other discourses of Jesus (see Introduction) and that this one has no such function in the gospel. However, it is to be noted that this speech lacks the customary concluding formula that follows the five discourses (see the note on 7:28), and that those discourses are all addressed either exclusively (10; 18; 24; 25) or primarily (5-7; 13) to the disciples, whereas this is addressed primarily to the scribes and Pharisees (23:13-36). Consequently, it seems plausible to maintain that the evangelist did not intend to give it the structural importance of the five other discourses, and that, in spite of its being composed of sayings-material, it belongs to the narrative section of this book. In that regard, it is similar to the sayings-material of Matthew 11:7-30. Some have proposed that Matthew wished to regard it as part of the final discourse of Matthew 24–25, but the intervening material (24:1-4) and the change in matter and style of those chapters do not support that view.

19:1-12 In giving Jesus' teaching on divorce (19:3-9), Matthew here follows his Marcan source (Mk 10:2-12) as he does Q in Matthew 5:31-32 (cf. Lk 16:18). Matthew 19:10-12 are peculiar to Matthew.

19:1 When Jesus finished these words: see the note on Matthew 7:28-29. The district of Judea across the Jordan: an inexact designation of the territory. Judea did not extend across the Jordan; the territory east of the river was Perea. The route to Jerusalem by way of Perea avoided passage through Samaria.

19:3 Tested him: the verb is used of attempts of Jesus' opponents to embarrass him by challenging him to do something they think impossible (16:1; Mk 8:11; Lk 11:16) or by having him say something that they can use against him (22:18, 35; Mk 10:2; 12:15). For any cause whatever: this is peculiar to Matthew and has been interpreted by some as meaning that Jesus was being asked to take sides in the dispute between the schools of Hillel and Shammai on the reasons for divorce, the latter holding a stricter position than the former. It is unlikely, however, that to ask Jesus' opinion about the differing views of two Jewish schools, both highly respected, could be described as "testing" him, for the reason indicated above.

19:4-6 Matthew recasts his Marcan source, omitting Jesus' question about Moses' command (Mk 10:3) and having him recall at once two Genesis texts that show the will and purpose of the Creator in making human beings male and female (Gn 1:27), namely, that a man may be joined to his wife in marriage in the intimacy of one flesh (Gn 2:24). What God has thus joined must not be separated by any human being. (The NAB translation of the Hebrew bāśår of Gn 2:24 as "body" rather than "flesh" obscures the reference of Matthew to that text.)

19:9 Moses' concession to human sinfulness (the hardness of your hearts, 19:8) is repudiated by Jesus, and the original will of the Creator is reaffirmed against that concession. (Unless the marriage is unlawful): see the note on Matthew 5:31-32. There is some evidence suggesting that Jesus' absolute prohibition of divorce was paralleled in the Qumran community (see 11QTemple 57:17-19; CD 4:12b–5:14). Matthew removes Mark's setting of this verse as spoken to the disciples alone "in the house" (Mk 10:10) and also his extension of the divorce prohibition to the case of a woman's divorcing her husband (Mk 10:12), probably because in Palestine, unlike the places where Roman and Greek law prevailed, the woman was not allowed to initiate the divorce.

19:11 [This] word: probably the disciples' "it is better not to marry" (19:10). Jesus agrees but says that celibacy is not for all but only for those to whom that is granted by God.

19:12 Incapable of marriage: literally, "eunuchs." Three classes are mentioned, eunuchs from birth, eunuchs by castration, and those who have voluntarily renounced marriage (literally, "have made themselves eunuchs") for the sake of the kingdom, i.e., to devote themselves entirely to its service. Some scholars take the last class to be those who have been divorced by their spouses and have refused to enter another marriage. But it is more likely that it is rather those who have chosen never to marry, since that suits better the optional nature of the decision: whoever can … ought to accept it.

19:13-15 This account is understood by some as intended to justify the practice of infant baptism. That interpretation is based principally on the command not to prevent the children from coming, since that word sometimes has a baptismal connotation in the New Testament; see Acts 8:36.

19:16-30 Cf. Mark 10:17-31. This story does not set up a "two-tier" morality, that of those who seek (only) eternal life (19:16) and that of those who wish to be perfect (19:21). It speaks rather of the obstacle that riches constitute for the following of Jesus and of the impossibility, humanly speaking, for one who has many possessions (19:22) to enter the kingdom (19:24). Actual renunciation of riches is not demanded of all; Matthew counts the rich Joseph of Arimathea as a disciple of Jesus (27:57). But only the poor in spirit (5:3) can enter the kingdom and, as here, such poverty may entail the sacrifice of one's possessions. The Twelve, who have given up everything (19:27) to follow Jesus, will have as their reward a share in Jesus' (the Son of Man's) judging the twelve tribes of Israel (19:28), and all who have similarly sacrificed family or property for his sake will inherit eternal life (19:29).

19:16 Gain eternal life: this is equivalent to "entering into life" (19:17) and "being saved" (19:25); the life is that of the new age after the final judgment (see 25:46). It probably is also equivalent here to "entering the kingdom of heaven" (19:23) or "the kingdom of God" (19:24), but see the notes on Matthew 3:2; 4:17; 18:1 for the wider reference of the kingdom in Matthew.

19:17 By Matthew's reformulation of the Marcan question and reply (Mk 10:17-18) Jesus' repudiation of the term "good" for himself has been softened. Yet the Marcan assertion that "no one is good but God alone" stands, with only unimportant verbal modification.

19:18-19 The first five commandments cited are from the Decalogue (see Ex 20:12-16; Dt 5:16-20). Matthew omits Mark's "you shall not defraud" (Mk 10:19; see Dt 24:14) and adds Leviticus 19:18. This combination of commandments of the Decalogue with Leviticus 19:18 is partially the same as Paul's enumeration of the demands of Christian morality in Romans 13:9.

19:20 Young man: in Matthew alone of the synoptics the questioner is said to be a young man; thus the Marcan "from my youth" (Mk 10:20) is omitted.

19:21 If you wish to be perfect: to be perfect is demanded of all Christians; see Matthew 5:48. In the case of this man, it involves selling his possessions and giving to the poor; only so can he follow Jesus.

19:23-24 Riches are an obstacle to entering the kingdom that cannot be overcome by human power. The comparison with the impossibility of a camel's passing through the eye of a needle should not be mitigated by such suppositions as that the eye of a needle means a low or narrow gate. The kingdom of God: as in Matthew 12:28; 21:31, 43 instead of Matthew's usual kingdom of heaven.

19:25-26 See the note on Mark 10:23-27.

19:28 This saying, directed to the Twelve, is from Q; see Luke 22:29-30. The new age: the Greek word here translated "new age" occurs in the New Testament only here and in Titus 3:5. Literally, it means "rebirth" or "regeneration," and is used in Titus of spiritual rebirth through baptism. Here it means the "rebirth" effected by the coming of the kingdom. Since that coming has various stages (see the notes on 3:2; 4:17), the new age could be taken as referring to the time after the resurrection when the Twelve will govern the true Israel, i.e., the church of Jesus. (For "judge" in the sense of "govern," cf. Jgs 12:8, 9, 11; 15:20; 16:31; Ps 2:10). But since it is connected here with the time when the Son of Man will be seated on his throne of glory, language that Matthew uses in Matthew 25:31 for the time of final judgment, it is more likely that what the Twelve are promised is that they will be joined with Jesus then in judging the people of Israel.

19:30 Different interpretations have been given to this saying, which comes from Mark 10:31. In view of Matthew's associating it with the following parable (20:1-15) and substantially repeating it (in reverse order) at the end of that parable (20:16), it may be that his meaning is that all who respond to the call of Jesus, at whatever time (first or last), will be the same in respect to inheriting the benefits of the kingdom, which is the gift of God.

20:1-16 This parable is peculiar to Matthew. It is difficult to know whether the evangelist composed it or received it as part of his traditional material and, if the latter is the case, what its original reference was. In its present context its close association with Matthew 19:30 suggests that its teaching is the equality of all the disciples in the reward of inheriting eternal life.

20:4 What is just: although the wage is not stipulated as in the case of those first hired, it will be fair.

20:8 Beginning with the last … the first: this element of the parable has no other purpose than to show how the first knew what the last were given (20:12).

20:13 I am not cheating you: literally, "I am not treating you unjustly."

20:14-15 The owner's conduct involves no violation of justice (20:4, 13), and that all the workers receive the same wage is due only to his generosity to the latest arrivals; the resentment of the first comes from envy.

20:16 See the note on Matthew 19:30.

20:17-19 Cf. Mark 10:32-34. This is the third and the most detailed of the passion predictions (16:21-23; 17:22-23). It speaks of Jesus' being handed over to the Gentiles (27:2), his being mocked (27:27-30), scourged (27:26), and crucified (27:31, 35). In all but the last of these points Matthew agrees with his Marcan source, but whereas Mark speaks of Jesus' being killed (Mk 10:34), Matthew has the specific to be … crucified.

20:20-28 Cf. Mark 10:35-45. The request of the sons of Zebedee, made through their mother, for the highest places of honor in the kingdom, and the indignation of the other ten disciples at this request, show that neither the two brothers nor the others have understood that what makes for greatness in the kingdom is not lordly power but humble service. Jesus gives the example, and his ministry of service will reach its highest point when he gives his life for the deliverance of the human race from sin.

20:20-21 The reason for Matthew's making the mother the petitioner (cf. Mk 10:35) is not clear. Possibly he intends an allusion to Bathsheba's seeking the kingdom for Solomon; see 1 Kings 1:11-21. Your kingdom: see the note on Matthew 16:28.

20:22 You do not know what you are asking: the Greek verbs are plural and, with the rest of the verse, indicate that the answer is addressed not to the woman but to her sons. Drink the cup: see the note on Mark 10:38-40. Matthew omits the Marcan "or be baptized with the baptism with which I am baptized" (Mk 10:38).

20:28 Ransom: this noun, which occurs in the New Testament only here and in the Marcan parallel (Mk 10:45), does not necessarily express the idea of liberation by payment of some price. The cognate verb is used frequently in the LXX of God's liberating Israel from Egypt or from Babylonia after the Exile; see Exodus 6:6; 15:13; Psalm 77:16 (76 LXX); Isaiah 43:1; 44:22. The liberation brought by Jesus' death will be for many; cf. Isaiah 53:12. Many does not mean that some are excluded, but is a Semitism designating the collectivity who benefit from the service of the one, and is equivalent to "all." While there are few verbal contacts between this saying and the fourth Servant Song (Is 52:13–53:12), the ideas of that passage are reflected here.

20:29-34 The cure of the blind men is probably symbolic of what will happen to the disciples, now blind to the meaning of Jesus' passion and to the necessity of their sharing his suffering. As the men are given sight, so, after the resurrection, will the disciples come to see that to which they are now blind. Matthew has abbreviated his Marcan source (Mk 10:46-52) and has made Mark's one man two. Such doubling is characteristic of this gospel; see Matthew 8:28-34 (Mk 5:1-20) and the note on Matthew 9:27-31.

20:30 [Lord]: some important textual witnesses omit this, but that may be because copyists assimilated this verse to Matthew 9:27. Son of David: see the note on Matthew 9:27.

21:1-11 Jesus' coming to Jerusalem is in accordance with the divine will that he must go there (cf. 16:21) to suffer, die, and be raised. He prepares for his entry into the city in such a way as to make it a fulfillment of the prophecy of Zechariah 9:9 (21:2) that emphasizes the humility of the king who comes (21:5). That prophecy, absent from the Marcan parallel account (Mk 11:1-11) although found also in the Johannine account of the entry (Jn 12:15), is the center of the Matthean story. During the procession from Bethphage to Jerusalem, Jesus is acclaimed as the Davidic messianic king by the crowds who accompany him (21:9). On his arrival the whole city was shaken, and to the inquiry of the amazed populace about Jesus' identity the crowds with him reply that he is the prophet, from Nazareth in Galilee (21:10, 11).

21:1 Bethphage: a village that can no longer be certainly identified. Mark mentions it before Bethany (Mk 11:1), which suggests that it lay to the east of the latter. The Mount of Olives: the hill east of Jerusalem that is spoken of in Zechariah 14:4 as the place where the Lord will come to rescue Jerusalem from the enemy nations.

21:2 An ass tethered, and a colt with her: instead of the one animal of Mark 11:2, Matthew has two, as demanded by his understanding of Zechariah 9:9.

21:4-5 The prophet: this fulfillment citation is actually composed of two distinct Old Testament texts, Isaiah 62:11 (Say to daughter Zion) and Zechariah 9:9. The ass and the colt are the same animal in the prophecy, mentioned twice in different ways, the common Hebrew literary device of poetic parallelism. That Matthew takes them as two is one of the reasons why some scholars think that he was a Gentile rather than a Jewish Christian who would presumably not make that mistake (see Introduction).

21:7 Upon them: upon the two animals; an awkward picture resulting from Matthew's misunderstanding of the prophecy.

21:8 Spread … on the road: cf. 2 Kings 9:13. There is a similarity between the cutting and strewing of the branches and the festivities of Tabernacles (Lv 23:39-40); see also 2 Maccabees 10:5-8 where the celebration of the rededication of the temple is compared to that of Tabernacles.

21:9 Hosanna: the Hebrew means "(O Lord) grant salvation"; see Psalm 118:25, but that invocation had become an acclamation of jubilation and welcome. Blessed is he … in the name of the Lord: see Psalm 118:26 and the note on John 12:13. In the highest: probably only an intensification of the acclamation, although Hosanna in the highest could be taken as a prayer, "May God save (him)."

21:10 Was shaken: in the gospels this verb is peculiar to Matthew where it is used also of the earthquake at the time of the crucifixion (27:51) and of the terror of the guards of Jesus' tomb at the appearance of the angel (28:4). For Matthew's use of the cognate noun, see the note on Matthew 8:24.

21:11 The prophet: see Matthew 16:14 ("one of the prophets") and 21:46.

21:12-17 Matthew changes the order of Mark (11:11, 12, 15) and places the cleansing of the temple on the same day as the entry into Jerusalem, immediately after it. The activities going on in the temple area were not secular but connected with the temple worship. Thus Jesus' attack on those so engaged and his charge that they were making God's house of prayer a den of thieves (21:12-13) constituted a claim to authority over the religious practices of Israel and were a challenge to the priestly authorities. Matthew 21:14-17 are peculiar to Matthew. Jesus' healings and his countenancing the children's cries of praise rouse the indignation of the chief priests and the scribes (21:15). These two groups appear in the infancy narrative (2:4) and have been mentioned in the first and third passion predictions (16:21; 20:18). Now, as the passion approaches, they come on the scene again, exhibiting their hostility to Jesus.

21:12 These activities were carried on in the court of the Gentiles, the outermost court of the temple area. Animals for sacrifice were sold; the doves were for those who could not afford a more expensive offering; see Leviticus 5:7. Tables of the money changers: only the coinage of Tyre could be used for the purchases; other money had to be exchanged for that.

21:13 'My house … prayer': cf. Isaiah 56:7. Matthew omits the final words of the quotation, "for all peoples" ("all nations"), possibly because for him the worship of the God of Israel by all nations belongs to the time after the resurrection; see Matthew 28:19. A den of thieves: the phrase is taken from Jeremiah 7:11.

21:14 The blind and the lame: according to 2 Samuel 5:8 (LXX) the blind and the lame were forbidden to enter "the house of the Lord," the temple. These are the last of Jesus' healings in Matthew.

21:15 The wondrous things: the healings.

21:16 ‘Out of the mouths … praise’: cf. Psalm 8:3 (LXX).

21:18-22 In Mark the effect of Jesus’ cursing the fig tree is not immediate; see Mark 11:14, 20. By making it so, Matthew has heightened the miracle. Jesus’ act seems arbitrary and ill-tempered, but it is a prophetic action similar to those of Old Testament prophets that vividly symbolize some part of their preaching; see, e.g., Ezekiel 12:1-20. It is a sign of the judgment that is to come upon the Israel that with all its apparent piety lacks the fruit of good deeds (3:10) and will soon bear the punishment of its fruitlessness (21:43). Some scholars propose that this story is the development in tradition of a parable of Jesus about the destiny of a fruitless tree, such as Luke 13:6-9. Jesus’ answer to the question of the amazed disciples (21:20) makes the miracle an example of the power of prayer made with unwavering faith (21:21-22).

21:21 See Matthew 17:20.

21:23-27 Cf. Mark 11:27-33. This is the first of five controversies between Jesus and the religious authorities of Judaism in Matthew 21:23–22:46, presented in the form of questions and answers.

21:23 These things: probably his entry into the city, his cleansing of the temple, and his healings there.

21:24 To reply by counterquestion was common in rabbinical debate.

21:26 We fear … as a prophet: cf. Matthew 14:5.

21:27 Since through embarrassment on the one hand and fear on the other the religious authorities claim ignorance of the origin of John’s baptism, they show themselves incapable of speaking with authority; hence Jesus refuses to discuss with them the grounds of his authority.

21:28-32 The series of controversies is interrupted by three parables on the judgment of Israel (21:28–22:14) of which this, peculiar to Matthew, is the first. The second (21:33-46) comes from Mark (12:1-12), and the third (22:1-14) from Q; see Luke 14:15-24. This interruption of the controversies is similar to that in Mark, although Mark has only one parable between the first and second controversy. As regards Matthew’s first parable, Matthew 21:28-30 if taken by themselves could point simply to the difference between saying and doing, a theme of much importance in this gospel (cf. 7:21; 12:50); that may have been the parable’s original reference. However, it is given a more specific application by the addition of Matthew 21:31-32. The two sons represent, respectively, the religious leaders and the religious outcasts who followed John’s call to repentance. By the answer they give to Jesus’ question (21:31) the leaders condemn themselves. There is much confusion in the textual tradition of the parable. Of the three different forms of the text given by important textual witnesses, one has the leaders answer that the son who agreed to go but did not was the one who did the father’s will. Although some scholars accept that as the original reading, their arguments in favor of it seem unconvincing. The choice probably lies only between a reading that puts the son who agrees and then disobeys before the son who at first refuses and then obeys, and the reading followed in the present translation. The witnesses to the latter reading are slightly better than those that support the other.

21:31 Entering … before you: this probably means “they enter; you do not.”

21:32 Cf. Luke 7:29-30. Although the thought is similar to that of the Lucan text, the formulation is so different that it is improbable that the saying comes from Q. Came to you … way of righteousness: several meanings are possible: that John himself was righteous, that he taught righteousness to others, or that he had an important place in God’s plan of salvation. For the last, see the note on Matthew 3:14-15.

21:33-46 Cf. Mark 12:1-12. In this parable there is a close correspondence between most of the details of the story and the situation that it illustrates, the dealings of God with his people. Because of that heavy allegorizing, some scholars think that it does not in any way go back to Jesus, but represents the theology of the later church. That judgment applies to the Marcan parallel as well, although the allegorizing has gone farther in Matthew. There are others who believe that while many of the allegorical elements are due to church sources, they have been added to a basic parable spoken by Jesus. This view is now supported by the Gospel of Thomas 65, where a less allegorized and probably more primitive form of the parable is found.

21:33 Planted a vineyard … a tower: cf. Isaiah 5:1-2. The vineyard is defined in Isaiah 5:7 as “the house of Israel.”

21:34-35 His servants: Matthew has two sendings of servants as against Mark’s three sendings of a single servant (Mk 12:2-5a) followed by a statement about the sending of “many others” (Mk 12:2, 5b). That these servants stand for the prophets sent by God to Israel is clearly implied but not made explicit here, but see Matthew 23:37. His produce: cf. Mark 12:2 “some of the produce.” The produce is the good works demanded by God, and his claim to them is total.

21:38 Acquire his inheritance: if a Jewish proselyte died without heir, the tenants of his land would have final claim on it.

21:39 Threw him out … and killed him: the change in the Marcan order where the son is killed and his corpse then thrown out (Mk 12:8) was probably made because of the tradition that Jesus died outside the city of Jerusalem; see John 19:17; Hebrews 13:12.

21:41 They answered: in Mark 12:9 the question is answered by Jesus himself; here the leaders answer and so condemn themselves; cf. Matthew 21:31. Matthew adds that the new tenants to whom the vineyard will be transferred will give the owner the produce at the proper times.

21:42 Cf. Psalm 118:22-23. The psalm was used in the early church as a prophecy of Jesus’ resurrection; see Acts 4:11; 1 Peter 2:7. If, as some think, the original parable ended at Matthew 21:39 it was thought necessary to complete it by a reference to Jesus’ vindication by God.

21:43 Peculiar to Matthew. Kingdom of God: see the note on Matthew 19:23-24. Its presence here instead of Matthew’s usual “kingdom of heaven” may indicate that the saying came from Matthew’s own traditional material. A people that will produce its fruit: believing Israelites and Gentiles, the church of Jesus.

21:44 The majority of textual witnesses omit this verse. It is probably an early addition to Matthew from Luke 20:18 with which it is practically identical.

21:45 The Pharisees: Matthew inserts into the group of Jewish leaders (21:23) those who represented the Judaism of his own time.

22:1-14 This parable is from Q; see Luke 14:15-24. It has been given many allegorical traits by Matthew, e.g., the burning of the city of the guests who refused the invitation (22:7), which corresponds to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans in A.D. 70. It has similarities with the preceding parable of the tenants: the sending of two groups of servants (22:3, 4), the murder of the servants (22:6) the punishment of the murderers (22:7), and the entrance of a new group into a privileged situation of which the others had proved themselves unworthy (22:8-10). The parable ends with a section that is peculiar to Matthew (22:11-14), which some take as a distinct parable. Matthew presents the kingdom in its double aspect, already present and something that can be entered here and now (22:1-10), and something that will be possessed only by those present members who can stand the scrutiny of the final judgment (22:11-14). The parable is not only a statement of God's judgment on Israel but a warning to Matthew's church.

22:2 Wedding feast: the Old Testament's portrayal of final salvation under the image of a banquet (Is 25:6) is taken up also in Matthew 8:11; cf. Luke 13:15.

22:3-4 Servants … other servants: probably Christian missionaries in both instances; cf. Matthew 23:34.

22:7 See the note on Matthew 22:1-14.

22:10 Bad and good alike: cf. Matthew 13:47.

22:11 A wedding garment: the repentance, change of heart and mind, that is the condition for entrance into the kingdom (3:2; 4:17) must be continued in a life of good deeds (7:21-23).

22:13 Wailing and grinding of teeth: the Christian who lacks the wedding garment of good deeds will suffer the same fate as those Jews who have rejected Jesus; see the note on Matthew 8:11-12.

22:15-22 The series of controversies between Jesus and the representatives of Judaism (see the note on 21:23-27) is resumed. As in the first (21:23-27), here and in the following disputes Matthew follows his Marcan source with few modifications.

22:15 The Pharisees: while Matthew retains the Marcan union of Pharisees and Herodians in this account, he clearly emphasizes the Pharisees' part. They alone are mentioned here, and the Herodians are joined with them only in a prepositional phrase of Matthew 22:16. Entrap him in speech: the question that they will pose is intended to force Jesus to take either a position contrary to that held by the majority of the people or one that will bring him into conflict with the Roman authorities.

22:16 Herodians: see the note on Mark 3:6. They would favor payment of the tax; the Pharisees did not.

22:17 Is it lawful: the law to which they refer is the law of God.

22:19 They handed him the Roman coin: their readiness in producing the money implies their use of it and their acceptance of the financial advantages of the Roman administration in Palestine.

22:21 Caesar's: the emperor Tiberius (A.D. 14–37). Repay to Caesar what belongs to Caesar: those who willingly use the coin that is Caesar's should repay him in kind. The answer avoids taking sides in the question of the lawfulness of the tax. To God what belongs to God: Jesus raises the debate to a new level. Those who have hypocritically asked about tax in respect to its relation to the law of God should be concerned rather with repaying God with the good deeds that are his due; cf. Matthew 21:41, 43.

22:23-33 Here Jesus' opponents are the Sadducees, members of the powerful priestly party of his time; see the note on Matthew 3:7. Denying the resurrection of the dead, a teaching of relatively late origin in Judaism (cf. Dn 12:2), they appeal to a law of the Pentateuch (Dt 25:5-10) and present a case based on it that would make resurrection from the dead ridiculous (22:24-28). Jesus chides them for knowing neither the scriptures nor the power of God (22:29). His argument in respect to God's power contradicts the notion, held even by many proponents as well as by opponents of the teaching, that the life of those raised from the dead would be essentially a continuation of the type of life they had had before death (22:30). His argument based on the scriptures (22:31-32) is of a sort that was accepted as valid among Jews of the time.

22:23 Saying that there is no resurrection: in the Marcan parallel (Mk 22:12, 18) the Sadducees are correctly defined as those “who say there is no resurrection”; see also Luke 20:27. Matthew’s rewording of Mark can mean that these particular Sadducees deny the resurrection, which would imply that he was not aware that the denial was characteristic of the party. For some scholars this is an indication of his being a Gentile Christian; see the note on Matthew 21:4-5.

22:24 ‘If a man dies … his brother’: this is known as the “law of the levirate,” from the Latin levir, “brother-in-law.” Its purpose was to continue the family line of the deceased brother (Dt 25:6).

22:29 The sexual relationships of this world will be transcended; the risen body will be the work of the creative power of God.

22:31-32 Cf. Exodus 3:6. In the Pentateuch, which the Sadducees accepted as normative for Jewish belief and practice, God speaks even now (to you) of himself as the God of the patriarchs who died centuries ago. He identifies himself in relation to them, and because of their relation to him, the living God, they too are alive. This might appear no argument for the resurrection, but simply for life after death as conceived in Wisdom 3:1-3. But the general thought of early first-century Judaism was not influenced by that conception; for it human immortality was connected with the existence of the body.

22:34-40 The Marcan parallel (Mk 12:28-34) is an exchange between Jesus and a scribe who is impressed by the way in which Jesus has conducted himself in the previous controversy (Mk 12:28), who compliments him for the answer he gives him (Mk 12:32), and who is said by Jesus to be “not far from the kingdom of God” (Mk 12:34). Matthew has sharpened that scene. The questioner, as the representative of other Pharisees, tests Jesus by his question (22:34-35), and both his reaction to Jesus’ reply and Jesus’ commendation of him are lacking.

22:35 [A scholar of the law]: meaning “scribe.” Although this reading is supported by the vast majority of textual witnesses, it is the only time that the Greek word so translated occurs in Matthew. It is relatively frequent in Luke, and there is reason to think that it may have been added here by a copyist since it occurs in the Lucan parallel (Lk 10:25-28). Tested: see the note on Matthew 19:3.

22:36 For the devout Jew all the commandments were to be kept with equal care, but there is evidence of preoccupation in Jewish sources with the question put to Jesus.

22:37-38 Cf. Deuteronomy 6:5. Matthew omits the first part of Mark’s fuller quotation (Mk 12:29; Dt 6:4-5), probably because he considered its monotheistic emphasis needless for his church. The love of God must engage the total person (heart, soul, mind).

22:39 Jesus goes beyond the extent of the question put to him and joins to the greatest and the first commandment a second, that of love of neighbor, Leviticus 19:18; see the note on Matthew 19:18-19. This combination of the two commandments may already have been made in Judaism.

22:40 The double commandment is the source from which the whole law and the prophets are derived.

22:41-46 Having answered the questions of his opponents in the preceding three controversies, Jesus now puts a question to them about the sonship of the Messiah. Their easy response (22:43a) is countered by his quoting a verse of Psalm 110 that raises a problem for their response (43b-45). They are unable to solve it and from that day on their questioning of him is ended.

22:41 The Pharisees … questioned them: Mark is not specific about who are questioned (Mk 12:35).

22:42-44 David's: this view of the Pharisees was based on such Old Testament texts as Isaiah 11:1-9; Jeremiah 23:5; and Ezekiel 34:23; see also the extrabiblical Psalms of Solomon 17:21. How, then … saying: Jesus cites Psalm 110:1 accepting the Davidic authorship of the psalm, a common view of his time. The psalm was probably composed for the enthronement of a Davidic king of Judah. Matthew assumes that the Pharisees interpret it as referring to the Messiah, although there is no clear evidence that it was so interpreted in the Judaism of Jesus' time. It was widely used in the early church as referring to the exaltation of the risen Jesus. My lord: understood as the Messiah.

22:45 Since Matthew presents Jesus both as Messiah (16:16) and as Son of David (1:1; see also the note on 9:27), the question is not meant to imply Jesus' denial of Davidic sonship. It probably means that although he is the Son of David, he is someone greater, Son of Man and Son of God, and recognized as greater by David who calls him my 'lord.'

23:1-39 The final section of the narrative part of the fifth book of the gospel is a denunciation by Jesus of the scribes and the Pharisees (see the note on 3:7). It depends in part on Mark and Q (cf. Mk 12:38-39; Lk 11:37-52; 13:34-35), but in the main it is peculiar to Matthew. (For the reasons against considering this extensive body of sayings-material either as one of the structural discourses of this gospel or as part of the one that follows in Matthew 24–25, see the note on 19:1–23:39.) While the tradition of a deep opposition between Jesus and the Pharisees is well founded, this speech reflects an opposition that goes beyond that of Jesus' ministry and must be seen as expressing the bitter conflict between Pharisaic Judaism and the church of Matthew at the time when the gospel was composed. The complaint often made that the speech ignores the positive qualities of Pharisaism and of its better representatives is true, but the complaint overlooks the circumstances that gave rise to the invective. Nor is the speech purely anti-Pharisaic. The evangelist discerns in his church many of the same faults that he finds in its opponents and warns his fellow Christians to look to their own conduct and attitudes.

23:2-3 Have taken their seat … Moses: it is uncertain whether this is simply a metaphor for Mosaic teaching authority or refers to an actual chair on which the teacher sat. It has been proved that there was a seat so designated in synagogues of a later period than that of this gospel. Do and observe … they tell you: since the Matthean Jesus abrogates Mosaic law (5:31-42), warns his disciples against the teaching of the Pharisees (14:1-12), and, in this speech, denounces the Pharisees as blind guides in respect to their teaching on oaths (16–22), this commandment to observe all things whatsoever they (the scribes and Pharisees) tell you cannot be taken as the evangelist's understanding of the proper standard of conduct for his church. The saying may reflect a period when the Matthean community was largely Jewish Christian and was still seeking to avoid a complete break with the synagogue. Matthew has incorporated this traditional material into the speech in accordance with his view of the course of salvation history, in which he portrays the time of Jesus' ministry as marked by the fidelity to the law, although with significant pointers to the new situation that would exist after his death and resurrection (see the note on 5:17-20). The crowds and the disciples (23:1) are exhorted not to follow the example of the Jewish leaders, whose deeds do not conform to their teaching (23:3).

23:4 Tie up heavy burdens: see the note on Matthew 11:28.

23:5 To the charge of preaching but not practicing (23:3), Jesus adds that of acting in order to earn praise. The disciples have already been warned against this same fault (see the note on 6:1-18). Phylacteries: the Mosaic law required that during prayer small boxes containing parchments on which verses of scripture were written be worn on the left forearm and the forehead (see Ex 13:9, 16; Dt 6:8; 11:18). Tassels: see the note on Matthew 9:20. The widening of phylacteries and the lengthening of tassels were for the purpose of making these evidences of piety more noticeable.

23:6 Cf. Mark 12:38-39. 'Rabbi': literally, "my great one," a title of respect for teachers and leaders.

23:8-12 These verses, warning against the use of various titles, are addressed to the disciples alone. While only the title 'Rabbi' has been said to be used in addressing the scribes and Pharisees (23:7), the implication is that Father and 'Master' also were. The prohibition of these titles to the disciples suggests that their use was present in Matthew's church. The Matthean Jesus forbids not only the titles but the spirit of superiority and pride that is shown by their acceptance. Whoever exalts … will be exalted: cf. Luke 14:11.

23:13-36 This series of seven "woes," directed against the scribes and Pharisees and addressed to them, is the heart of the speech. The phrase woe to occurs often in the prophetic and apocalyptic literature, expressing horror of a sin and punishment for those who commit it. Hypocrites: see the note on Matthew 6:2. The hypocrisy of the scribes and Pharisees consists in the difference between their speech and action (23:3) and in demonstrations of piety that have no other purpose than to enhance their reputation as religious persons (23:5).

23:13 You lock the kingdom of heaven: cf. Matthew 16:19 where Jesus tells Peter that he will give him the keys to the kingdom of heaven. The purpose of the authority expressed by that metaphor is to give entrance into the kingdom (the kingdom is closed only to those who reject the authority); here the charge is made that the authority of the scribes and Pharisees is exercised in such a way as to be an obstacle to entrance. Cf. Luke 11:52 where the accusation against the "scholars of the law" (Matthew's scribes) is that they "have taken away the key of knowledge."

23:14 Some manuscripts add a verse here or after Matthew 23:12 "Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, you hypocrites. You devour the houses of widows and, as a pretext, recite lengthy prayers. Because of this, you will receive a very severe condemnation." Cf. Mark 12:40; Luke 20:47. This "woe" is almost identical with Mark 12:40 and seems to be an interpolation derived from that text.

23:15 In the first century A.D. until the First Jewish Revolt against Rome (A.D. 66–70), many Pharisees conducted a vigorous missionary campaign among Gentiles. Convert: literally, "proselyte," a Gentile who accepted Judaism fully by submitting to circumcision and all other requirements of Mosaic law. Child of Gehenna: worthy of everlasting punishment; for Gehenna, see the note on Matthew 5:22. Twice as much as yourselves: possibly this refers simply to the zeal of the convert, surpassing that of the one who converted him.

23:16-22 An attack on the casuistry that declared some oaths binding (one is obligated) and others not (it means nothing) and held the binding oath to be the one made by something of lesser value (the gold; the gift on the altar). Such teaching, which inverts the order of values, reveals the teachers to be blind guides; cf. Matthew 15:14. Since the Matthean Jesus forbids all oaths to his disciples

(5:33-37), this woe does not set up a standard for Christian moral conduct, but ridicules the Pharisees on their own terms.

23:23 The Mosaic law ordered tithing of the produce of the land (Lv 27:30; Dt 14:22-23), and the scribal tradition is said here to have extended this law to even the smallest herbs. The practice is criticized not in itself but because it shows the Pharisees' preoccupation with matters of less importance while they neglect the weightier things of the law.

23:24 Cf. Leviticus 11:41-45 that forbids the eating of any "swarming creature." The Pharisees' scrupulosity about minor matters and neglect of greater ones (23:23) is further brought out by this contrast between straining liquids that might contain a tiny "swarming creature" and yet swallowing the camel. The latter was one of the unclean animals forbidden by the law (Lv 11:4), but it is hardly possible that the scribes and Pharisees are being denounced as guilty of so gross a violation of the food laws. To swallow the camel is only a hyperbolic way of speaking of their neglect of what is important.

23:25-26 The ritual washing of utensils for dining (cf. Mk 7:4) is turned into a metaphor illustrating a concern for appearances while inner purity is ignored. The scribes and Pharisees are compared to cups carefully washed on the outside but filthy within. Self-indulgence: the Greek word here translated means lack of self-control, whether in drinking or in sexual conduct.

23:27-28 The sixth woe, like the preceding one, deals with concern for externals and neglect of what is inside. Since contact with dead bodies, even when one was unaware of it, caused ritual impurity (Nm 19:11-22), tombs were whitewashed so that no one would contract such impurity inadvertently.

23:29-36 The final woe is the most serious indictment of all. It portrays the scribes and Pharisees as standing in the same line as their ancestors who murdered the prophets and the righteous.

23:34-36 There are important differences between the Matthean and the Lucan form of this Q material; cf. Luke 11:49-51. In Luke the one who sends the emissaries is the "wisdom of God." If, as many scholars think, that is the original wording of Q, Matthew, by making Jesus the sender, has presented him as the personified divine wisdom. In Luke, wisdom's emissaries are the Old Testament "prophets" and the Christian "apostles." Matthew's prophets and wise men and scribes are probably Christian disciples alone; cf. Matthew 10:41 and see the note on Matthew 13:52. You will kill: see Matthew 24:9. Scourge in your synagogues … town to town: see Matthew 10:17, 23 and the note on Matthew 10:17. All the righteous blood shed upon the earth: the slaying of the disciples is in continuity with all the shedding of righteous blood beginning with that of Abel. The persecution of Jesus' disciples by this generation involves the persecutors in the guilt of their murderous ancestors. The blood of Zechariah: see the note on Luke 11:51. By identifying him as the son of Barachiah Matthew understands him to be Zechariah the Old Testament minor prophet; see Zechariah 1:1.

23:37-39 Cf. Luke 13:34-35. The denunciation of Pharisaic Judaism ends with this lament over Jerusalem, which has repeatedly rejected and murdered those whom God has sent to her. How many times: this may refer to various visits of Jesus to the city, an aspect of his ministry found in John but otherwise not in the synoptics. As a hen … under her wings: for imagery similar to this, see Psalm 17:8; 91:4. Your house … desolate: probably an allusion to the destruction of the temple in A.D. 70. You will not see me … in the name of the Lord: Israel will not see Jesus again until he comes in glory for the final judgment. The acclamation has been interpreted in contrasting ways, as an indication that Israel will at last accept Jesus at that time, and as its troubled recognition of him as its dreaded judge who will pronounce its condemnation; in support of the latter view see Matthew 24:30.

24:1–25:46 The discourse of the fifth book, the last of the five around which the gospel is structured. It is called the "eschatological" discourse since it deals with the coming of the new age (the eschaton) in its fullness, with events that will precede it, and with how the disciples are to conduct themselves while awaiting an event that is as certain as its exact time is unknown to all but the Father (24:36). The discourse may be divided into two parts, Matthew 24:1-44 and Matthew 24:45–25:46. In the first, Matthew follows his Marcan source (Mk 13:1-37) closely. The second is drawn from Q and from the evangelist's own traditional material. Both parts show Matthew's editing of his sources by deletions, additions, and modifications. The vigilant waiting that is emphasized in the second part does not mean a cessation of ordinary activity and concentration only on what is to come, but a faithful accomplishment of duties at hand, with awareness that the end, for which the disciples must always be ready, will entail the great judgment by which the everlasting destiny of all will be determined.

24:2 As in Mark, Jesus predicts the destruction of the temple. By omitting the Marcan story of the widow's contribution (Mk 12:41-44) that immediately precedes the prediction in that gospel, Matthew has established a close connection between it and Matthew 23:38, "… your house will be abandoned desolate."

24:3 The Mount of Olives: see the note on Matthew 21:1. The disciples: cf. Mark 13:3-4 where only Peter, James, John, and Andrew put the question that is answered by the discourse. In both gospels, however, the question is put privately: the ensuing discourse is only for those who are disciples of Jesus. When will this happen … end of the age?: Matthew distinguishes carefully between the destruction of the temple (this) and the coming of Jesus that will bring the end of the age. In Mark the two events are more closely connected, a fact that may be explained by Mark's believing that the one would immediately succeed the other. Coming: this translates the Greek word parousia, which is used in the gospels only here and in Matthew 24:27, 37, 39. It designated the official visit of a ruler to a city or the manifestation of a saving deity, and it was used by Christians to refer to the final coming of Jesus in glory, a term first found in the New Testament with that meaning in 1 Thessalonians 2:19. The end of the age: see the note on Matthew 13:39.

24:4-14 This section of the discourse deals with calamities in the world (24:6-7) and in the church (24:9-12). The former must happen before the end comes (24:6), but they are only the beginning of the labor pains (24:8). (It may be noted that the Greek word translated the end in Matthew 24:6 and in Matthew 24:13-14 is not the same as the phrase "the end of the age" in Matthew 24:3 although the meaning is the same.) The latter are sufferings of the church, both from within and without, that will last until the gospel is preached … to all nations. Then the end will come and those who have endured the sufferings with fidelity will be saved (24:13-14).

24:6-7 The disturbances mentioned here are a commonplace of apocalyptic language, as is the assurance that they must happen (see Dn 2:28 LXX), for that is the plan of God. Kingdom against kingdom: see Isaiah 19:2.

24:8 The labor pains: the tribulations leading up to the end of the age are compared to the pains of a woman about to give birth. There is much attestation for rabbinic use of the phrase “the woes (or birth pains) of the Messiah” after the New Testament period, but in at least one instance it is attributed to a rabbi who lived in the late first century A.D. In this Jewish usage it meant the distress of the time preceding the coming of the Messiah; here, the labor pains precede the coming of the Son of Man in glory.

24:9-12 Matthew has used Mark 13:9-12 in his missionary discourse (10:17-21) and omits it here. Besides the sufferings, including death, and the hatred of all nations that the disciples will have to endure, there will be worse affliction within the church itself. This is described in Matthew 24:10-12, which are peculiar to Matthew. Will be led into sin: literally, “will be scandalized,” probably meaning that they will become apostates; see Matthew 13:21 where “fall away” translates the same Greek word as here. Betray: in the Greek this is the same word as the hand over of Matthew 24:9. The handing over to persecution and hatred from outside will have their counterpart within the church. False prophets: these are Christians; see the note on Matthew 7:15-20. Evildoing: see Matthew 7:23. Because of the apocalyptic nature of much of this discourse, the literal meaning of this description of the church should not be pressed too hard. However, there is reason to think that Matthew’s addition of these verses reflects in some measure the condition of his community.

24:14 Except for the last part (and then the end will come), this verse substantially repeats Mark 13:10. The Matthean addition raises a problem since what follows in Matthew 24:15-23 refers to the horrors of the First Jewish Revolt including the destruction of the temple, and Matthew, writing after that time, knew that the parousia of Jesus was still in the future. A solution may be that the evangelist saw the events of those verses as foreshadowing the cosmic disturbances that he associates with the parousia (24:29) so that the period in which the former took place could be understood as belonging to the end.

24:15-28 Cf. Mark 13:14-23; Luke 17:23-24, 37. A further stage in the tribulations that will precede the coming of the Son of Man, and an answer to the question of Matthew 24:3a, “when will this (the destruction of the temple) happen?”

24:15 The desolating abomination: in 167 B.C. the Syrian king Antiochus IV Epiphanes desecrated the temple by setting up in it a statue of Zeus Olympios (see 1 Mc 1:54). That event is referred to in Daniel 12:11 LXX as the “desolating abomination” (NAB “horrible abomination”) and the same Greek term is used here; cf. also Daniel 9:27; 11:31. Although the desecration had taken place before Daniel was written, it is presented there as a future event, and Matthew sees that “prophecy” fulfilled in the desecration of the temple by the Romans. In the holy place: the temple; more precise than Mark’s where he should not (Mk 13:14). Let the reader understand: this parenthetical remark, taken from Mark 13:14 invites the reader to realize the meaning of Daniel’s “prophecy.”

24:16 The tradition that the Christians of Jerusalem fled from that city to Pella, a city of Transjordan, at the time of the First Jewish Revolt is found in Eusebius (Ecclesiastical History, 3, 5, 3), who attributes the flight to “a certain oracle given by revelation before the war.” The tradition is not improbable but the Matthean command, derived from its Marcan source, is vague in respect to the place of flight (to the mountains), although some scholars see it as applicable to the flight to Pella.

24:17-19 Haste is essential, and the journey will be particularly difficult for women who are burdened with unborn or infant children.

24:20 On the sabbath: this addition to in winter (cf. Mk 13:18) has been understood as an indication that Matthew was addressed to a church still observing the Mosaic law of sabbath rest and the scribal limitations upon the length of journeys that might lawfully be made on that day. That interpretation conflicts with Matthew’s view on sabbath observance (cf. 12:1-14). The meaning of the addition may be that those undertaking on the sabbath a journey such as the one here ordered would be offending the sensibilities of law-observant Jews and would incur their hostility.

24:21 For the unparalleled distress of that time, see Daniel 12:1.

24:26-28 Claims that the Messiah is to be found in some distant or secret place must be ignored. The coming of the Son of Man will be as clear as lightning is to all and as the corpse of an animal is to vultures; cf. Luke 17:24, 37. Here there is clear identification of the Son of Man and the Messiah; cf. Matthew 24:23.

24:29 The answer to the question of Matthew 24:3b “What will be the sign of your coming?” Immediately after … those days: the shortening of time between the preceding tribulation and the parousia has been explained as Matthew’s use of a supposed device of Old Testament prophecy whereby certainty that a predicted event will occur is expressed by depicting it as imminent. While it is questionable that that is an acceptable understanding of the Old Testament predictions, it may be applicable here, for Matthew knew that the parousia had not come immediately after the fall of Jerusalem, and it is unlikely that he is attributing a mistaken calculation of time to Jesus. The sun … be shaken: cf. Isaiah 13:10, 13.

24:30 The sign of the Son of Man: perhaps this means the sign that is the glorious appearance of the Son of Man; cf. Matthew 12:39-40 where “the sign of Jonah” is Jonah’s being in the “belly of the whale.” Tribes of the earth will mourn: peculiar to Matthew; cf. Zechariah 12:12-14. Coming upon the clouds … glory: cf. Daniel 7:13, although there the “one like a son of man” comes to God to receive kingship; here the Son of Man comes from heaven for judgment.

24:31 Send out his angels: cf. Matthew 13:41 where they are sent out to collect the wicked for punishment. Trumpet blast: cf. Isaiah 27:13; 1 Thessalonians 4:16.

24:32-35 Cf. Mark 13:28-31.

24:34 The difficulty raised by this verse cannot be satisfactorily removed by the supposition that this generation means the Jewish people throughout the course of their history, much less the entire human race. Perhaps for Matthew it means the generation to which he and his community belonged.

24:36-44 The statement of Matthew 24:34 is now counterbalanced by one that declares that the exact time of the parousia is known only to the Father (24:36), and the disciples are warned to be always ready for it. This section is drawn from Mark and Q (cf. Lk 17:26-27, 34-35; 12:39-40).

24:36 Many textual witnesses omit nor the Son, which follows Mark 13:32. Since its omission can be explained by reluctance to attribute this ignorance to the Son, the reading that includes it is probably original.

24:37-39 Cf. Luke 17:26-27. In the days of Noah: the Old Testament account of the flood lays no emphasis upon what is central for Matthew, i.e., the unexpected coming of the flood upon those who were unprepared for it.

24:40-41 Cf. Luke 17:34-35. Taken … left: the former probably means taken into the kingdom; the latter, left for destruction. People in the same situation will be dealt with in opposite ways. In this context, the discrimination between them will be based on their readiness for the coming of the Son of Man.

24:42-44 Cf. Luke 12:39-40. The theme of vigilance and readiness is continued with the bold comparison of the Son of Man to a thief who comes to break into a house.

24:45-51 The second part of the discourse (see the note on 24:1–25:46) begins with this parable of the faithful or unfaithful servant; cf. Luke 12:41-46. It is addressed to the leaders of Matthew's church; the servant has been put in charge of his master's household (24:45) even though that household is composed of those who are his fellow servants (24:49).

24:45 To distribute … proper time: readiness for the master's return means a vigilance that is accompanied by faithful performance of the duty assigned.

24:48 My master … delayed: the note of delay is found also in the other parables of this section; cf. Matthew 25:5, 19.

24:51 Punish him severely: the Greek verb, found in the New Testament only here and in the Lucan parallel (Lk 12:46), means, literally, "cut in two." With the hypocrites: see the note on Matthew 6:2. Matthew classes the unfaithful Christian leader with the unbelieving leaders of Judaism. Wailing and grinding of teeth: see the note on Matthew 8:11-12.

25:1-13 Peculiar to Matthew.

25:1 Then: at the time of the parousia. Kingdom … will be like: see the note on Matthew 13:24-30.

25:2-4 Foolish … wise: cf. the contrasted "wise man" and "fool" of Matthew 7:24, 26 where the two are distinguished by good deeds and lack of them, and such deeds may be signified by the oil of this parable.

25:11-12 Lord, Lord: cf. Matthew 7:21. I do not know you: cf. Matthew 7:23 where the Greek verb is different but synonymous.

25:13 Stay awake: some scholars see this command as an addition to the original parable of Matthew's traditional material, since in Matthew 25:5 all the virgins, wise and foolish, fall asleep. But the wise virgins are adequately equipped for their task, and stay awake may mean no more than to be prepared; cf. Matthew 24:42, 44.

25:14-30 Cf. Luke 19:12-27.

25:14 It will be as when … journey: literally, "For just as a man who was going on a journey." Although the comparison is not completed, the sense is clear; the kingdom of heaven is like the situation here described. Faithful use of one's gifts will lead to participation in the fullness of the kingdom, lazy inactivity to exclusion from it.

25:15 Talents: see the note on Matthew 18:24.

25:18 Buried his master's money: see the note on Matthew 13:44.

25:20-23 Although the first two servants have received and doubled large sums, their faithful trading is regarded by the master as fidelity in small matters only, compared with the great responsibilities now to be given to them. The latter are unspecified. Share your master's joy: probably the joy of the banquet of the kingdom; cf. Matthew 8:11.

25:26-28 Wicked, lazy servant: this man's inactivity is not negligible but seriously culpable. As punishment, he loses the gift he had received, that is now given to the first servant, whose possessions are already great.

25:29 See the note on Matthew 13:12 where there is a similar application of this maxim.

25:30 See the note on Matthew 8:11-12.

25:31-46 The conclusion of the discourse, which is peculiar to Matthew, portrays the final judgment that will accompany the parousia. Although often called a "parable," it is not really such, for the only parabolic elements are the depiction of the Son of Man as a shepherd and of the righteous and the wicked as sheep and goats respectively (25:32-33). The criterion of judgment will be the deeds of mercy that have been done for the least of Jesus' brothers (25:40). A difficult and important question is the identification of these least brothers. Are they all people who have suffered hunger, thirst, etc. (25:35, 36) or a particular group of such sufferers? Scholars are divided in their response and arguments can be made for either side. But leaving aside the problem of what the traditional material that Matthew edited may have meant, it seems that a stronger case can be made for the view that in the evangelist's sense the sufferers are Christians, probably Christian missionaries whose sufferings were brought upon them by their preaching of the gospel. The criterion of judgment for all the nations is their treatment of those who have borne to the world the message of Jesus, and this means ultimately their acceptance or rejection of Jesus himself; cf. Matthew 10:40, "Whoever receives you, receives me."

25:31 See the note on Matthew 16:27.

25:32 All the nations: before the end the gospel will have been preached throughout the world (24:14); thus the Gentiles will be judged on their response to it. But the phrase all the nations includes the Jews also, for at the judgment "the Son of Man … will repay everyone according to his conduct" (16:27).

25:37-40 The righteous will be astonished that in caring for the needs of the sufferers they were ministering to the Lord himself. One of these least brothers of mine: cf. Matthew 10:42.

25:41 Fire prepared … his angels: cf. 1 Enoch 10, 13 where it is said of the evil angels and Semyaza, their leader, "In those days they will lead them into the bottom of the fire—and in torment—in the prison (where) they will be locked up forever."

25:44-45 The accursed (25:41) will be likewise astonished that their neglect of the sufferers was neglect of the Lord and will receive from him a similar answer.

26:1–28:20 The five books with alternating narrative and discourse (3:1–25:46) that give this gospel its distinctive structure lead up to the climactic events that are the center of Christian belief and the origin of the Christian church, the passion and resurrection of Jesus. In his passion narrative (chaps. 26–27) Matthew follows his Marcan source closely but with omissions (e.g., Mk 14:51-52) and additions (e.g., 27:3-10, 19). Some of the additions indicate that he utilized traditions that he had received from elsewhere; others are due to his own theological insight (e.g., 26:28 "… for the forgiveness of sins"; 27:52). In his editing Matthew also altered Mark in some minor details. But there is no need to suppose that he knew any passion narrative other than Mark's.

26:1-2 When Jesus finished all these words: see the note on Matthew 7:28-29. "You know … crucified": Matthew turns Mark's statement of the time (Mk 14:1) into Jesus' final prediction of his passion. Passover: see the note on Mark 14:1.

26:3 Caiaphas was high priest from A.D. 18 to 36.

26:5 Not during the festival: the plan to delay Jesus' arrest and execution until after the festival was not carried out, for according to the synoptics he was arrested on the night of Nisan 14 and put to death the following day. No reason is given why the plan was changed.

26:6-13 See the notes on Mark 14:3-9 and John 12:1-8.

26:12 To prepare me for burial: cf. Mark 14:8. In accordance with the interpretation of this act as Jesus' burial anointing, Matthew, more consistent than Mark, changes the purpose of the visit of the women to Jesus' tomb; they do not go to anoint him (Mk 16:1) but “to see the tomb” (28:1).

26:14 Iscariot: see the note on Luke 6:16.

26:15 The motive of avarice is introduced by Judas’s question about the price for betrayal, which is absent in the Marcan source (Mk 14:10-11). Hand him over: the same Greek verb is used to express the saving purpose of God by which Jesus is handed over to death (cf. 17:22; 20:18; 26:2) and the human malice that hands him over. Thirty pieces of silver: the price of the betrayal is found only in Matthew. It is derived from Zechariah 11:12 where it is the wages paid to the rejected shepherd, a cheap price (Zec 11:13). That amount is also the compensation paid to one whose slave has been gored by an ox (Ex 21:32).

26:17 The first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread: see the note on Mark 14:1. Matthew omits Mark’s “when they sacrificed the Passover lamb.”

26:18 By omitting much of Mark 14:13-15, adding My appointed time draws near, and turning the question into a statement, in your house I shall celebrate the Passover, Matthew has given this passage a solemnity and majesty greater than that of his source.

26:21 Given Matthew’s interest in the fulfillment of the Old Testament, it is curious that he omits the Marcan designation of Jesus’ betrayer as “one who is eating with me” (Mk 14:18), since that is probably an allusion to Psalm 41:10. However, the shocking fact that the betrayer is one who shares table fellowship with Jesus is emphasized in Matthew 26:23.

26:24 It would be better … born: the enormity of the deed is such that it would be better not to exist than to do it.

26:25 Peculiar to Matthew. You have said so: cf. Matthew 26:64; 27:11. This is a half-affirmative. Emphasis is laid on the pronoun and the answer implies that the statement would not have been made if the question had not been asked.

26:26-29 See the note on Mark 14:22-24. The Marcan-Matthean is one of the two major New Testament traditions of the words of Jesus when instituting the Eucharist. The other (and earlier) is the Pauline-Lucan (1 Cor 11:23-25; Lk 22:19-20). Each shows the influence of Christian liturgical usage, but the Marcan-Matthean is more developed in that regard than the Pauline-Lucan. The words over the bread and cup succeed each other without the intervening meal mentioned in 1 Corinthians 11:25; Luke 22:20; and there is parallelism between the consecratory words (this is my body … this is my blood). Matthew follows Mark closely but with some changes.

26:26 See the note on Matthew 14:19. Said the blessing: a prayer blessing God. Take and eat: literally, Take, eat. Eat is an addition to Mark’s “take it” (literally, “take”; Mk 14:22). This is my body: the bread is identified with Jesus himself.

26:27-28 Gave thanks: see the note on Matthew 15:36. Gave it to them … all of you: cf. Mark 14:23-24. In the Marcan sequence the disciples drink and then Jesus says the interpretative words. Matthew has changed this into a command to drink followed by those words. My blood: see Leviticus 17:11 for the concept that the blood is “the seat of life” and that when placed on the altar it “makes atonement.” Which will be shed: the present participle, “being shed” or “going to be shed,” is future in relation to the Last Supper. On behalf of: Greek peri; see the note on Mark 14:24. Many: see the note on Matthew 20:28. For the forgiveness of sins: a Matthean addition. The same phrase occurs in Mark 1:4 in connection with John’s baptism but Matthew avoids it there (3:11). He places it here probably because he wishes to emphasize that it is the sacrificial death of Jesus that brings forgiveness of sins.

26:29 Although his death will interrupt the table fellowship he has had with the disciples, Jesus confidently predicts his vindication by God and a new table fellowship with them at the banquet of the kingdom.

26:30 See the note on Mark 14:26.

26:31 Will have … shaken: literally, “will be scandalized in me”; see the note on Matthew 24:9-12. I will strike … dispersed: cf. Zechariah 13:7.

26:34 Before the cock crows: see the note on Matthew 14:25. The third watch of the night was called “cockcrow.” Deny me: see the note on Matthew 16:24.

26:36-56 Cf. Mark 14:32-52. The account of Jesus in Gethsemane is divided between that of his agony (26:36-46) and that of his betrayal and arrest (26:47-56). Jesus’ sorrow and distress (26:37) in face of death is unrelieved by the presence of his three disciples who, though urged to watch with him (26:38, 41), fall asleep (26:40, 43). He prays that if … possible his death may be avoided (26:39) but that his Father’s will be done (26:39, 42, 44). Knowing then that his death must take place, he announces to his companions that the hour for his being handed over has come (26:45). Judas arrives with an armed band provided by the Sanhedrin and greets Jesus with a kiss, the prearranged sign for his identification (26:47-49). After his arrest, he rebukes a disciple who has attacked the high priest’s servant with a sword (26:51-54), and chides those who have come out to seize him with swords and clubs as if he were a robber (26:55-56). In both rebukes Jesus declares that the treatment he is now receiving is the fulfillment of the scriptures (26:55, 56). The subsequent flight of all the disciples is itself the fulfillment of his own prediction (cf. 31). In this episode, Matthew follows Mark with a few alterations.

26:36 Gethsemane: the Hebrew name means “oil press” and designates an olive orchard on the western slope of the Mount of Olives; see the note on Matthew 21:1. The name appears only in Matthew and Mark. The place is called a “garden” in John 18:1.

26:37 Peter and the two sons of Zebedee: cf. Matthew 17:1.

26:38 Cf. Psalm 42:6, 12. In the Septuagint (Ps 41:5, 12) the same Greek word for sorrowful is used as here. To death: i.e., “enough to die”; cf. Jonah 4:9.

26:39 My Father: see the note on Mark 14:36. Matthew omits the Aramaic ʾabbāʾ and adds the qualifier my. This cup: see the note on Mark 10:38-40.

26:41 Undergo the test: see the note on Matthew 6:13. In that verse “the final test” translates the same Greek word as is here translated the test, and these are the only instances of the use of that word in Matthew. It is possible that the passion of Jesus is seen here as an anticipation of the great tribulation that will precede the parousia (see the notes on 24:8; 24:21) to which Matthew 6:13 refers, and that just as Jesus prays to be delivered from death (26:39), so he exhorts the disciples to pray that they will not have to undergo the great test that his passion would be for them. Some scholars, however, understand not undergo (literally, “not enter”) the test as meaning not that the disciples may be spared the test but that they may not yield to the temptation of falling away from Jesus because of his passion even though they will have to endure it.

26:42 Your will be done: cf. Matthew 6:10.

26:49 Rabbi: see the note on Matthew 23:6-7. Jesus is so addressed twice in Matthew (26:25), both times by Judas. For the significance of the closely related address “teacher” in Matthew, see the note on Matthew 8:19.

26:55 Day after day … arrest me: cf. Mark 14:49. This suggests that Jesus had taught for a relatively long period in Jerusalem, whereas Matthew 21:1-11 puts his coming to the city for the first time only a few days before.

26:57-68 Following Mark 14:53-65 Matthew presents the nighttime appearance of Jesus before the Sanhedrin as a real trial. After many false witnesses bring charges against him that do not suffice for the death sentence (26:60), two came forward who charge him with claiming to be able to destroy the temple … and within three days to rebuild it (26:60-61). Jesus makes no answer even when challenged to do so by the high priest, who then orders him to declare under oath … whether he is the Messiah, the Son of God (26:62-63). Matthew changes Mark's clear affirmative response (Mk 14:62) to the same one as that given to Judas (26:25), but follows Mark almost verbatim in Jesus' predicting that his judges will see him (the Son of Man) seated at the right hand of God and coming on the clouds of heaven (26:64). The high priest then charges him with blasphemy (26:65), a charge with which the other members of the Sanhedrin agree by declaring that he deserves to die (26:66). They then attack him (26:67) and mockingly demand that he prophesy (26:68). This account contains elements that are contrary to the judicial procedures prescribed in the Mishnah, the Jewish code of law that dates in written form from ca. A.D. 200, e.g., trial on a feast day, a night session of the court, pronouncement of a verdict of condemnation at the same session at which testimony was received. Consequently, some scholars regard the account entirely as a creation of the early Christians without historical value. However, it is disputable whether the norms found in the Mishnah were in force at the time of Jesus. More to the point is the question whether the Matthean-Marcan night trial derives from a combination of two separate incidents, a nighttime preliminary investigation (cf. Jn 18:13, 19-24) and a formal trial on the following morning (cf. Lk 22:66-71).

26:57 Caiaphas: see the note on Matthew 26:3.

26:59 Sanhedrin: see the note on Luke 22:66.

26:60-61 Two: cf. Deuteronomy 19:15. I can destroy … rebuild it: there are significant differences from the Marcan parallel (Mk 14:58). Matthew omits "made with hands" and "not made with hands" and changes Mark's "will destroy" and "will build another" to can destroy and (can) rebuild. The charge is probably based on Jesus' prediction of the temple's destruction; see the notes on Matthew 23:37-39; 24:2; and John 2:19. A similar prediction by Jeremiah was considered as deserving death; cf. Jeremiah 7:1-15; 26:1-8.

26:63 Silent: possibly an allusion to Isaiah 53:7. I order you … living God: peculiar to Matthew; cf. Mark 14:61.

26:64 You have said so: see the note on Matthew 26:25. From now on … heaven: the Son of Man who is to be crucified (cf. 20:19) will be seen in glorious majesty (cf. Ps 110:1) and coming on the clouds of heaven (cf. Dn 7:13). The Power: see the note on Mark 14:61-62.

26:65 Blasphemed: the punishment for blasphemy was death by stoning (see Lv 24:10-16). According to the Mishnah, to be guilty of blasphemy one had to pronounce "the Name itself," i.e., Yahweh; cf. Sanhedrin 7, 4.5. Those who judge the gospel accounts of Jesus' trial by the later Mishnah standards point out that Jesus uses the surrogate "the Power," and hence no Jewish court would have regarded him as guilty of blasphemy; others hold that the Mishnah's narrow understanding of blasphemy was a later development.

26:67-68 The physical abuse, apparently done to Jesus by the members of the Sanhedrin themselves, recalls the sufferings of the Isaian Servant of the Lord; cf. Isaiah 50:6. The mocking challenge to prophesy is probably motivated by Jesus' prediction of his future glory (26:64).

26:70 Denied it in front of everyone: see Matthew 10:33. Peter's repentance (26:75) saves him from the fearful destiny of which Jesus speaks there.

26:73 Your speech … away: Matthew explicates Mark's "you too are a Galilean" (Mk 14:70).

27:1-31 Cf. Mark 15:1-20. Matthew's account of the Roman trial before Pilate is introduced by a consultation of the Sanhedrin after which Jesus is handed over to … the governor (27:1-2). Matthew follows his Marcan source closely but adds some material that is peculiar to him, the death of Judas (27:3-10), possibly the name Jesus as the name of Barabbas also (27:16-17), the intervention of Pilate's wife (27:19), Pilate's washing his hands in token of his disclaiming responsibility for Jesus' death (27:24), and the assuming of that responsibility by the whole people (27:25).

27:1-2 There is scholarly disagreement about the meaning of the Sanhedrin's taking counsel (symboulion elabon; cf. 12:14; 22:15; 27:7; 28:12); see the note on Mark 15:1. Some understand it as a discussion about the strategy for putting their death sentence against Jesus into effect since they lacked the right to do so themselves. Others see it as the occasion for their passing that sentence, holding that Matthew, unlike Mark (Mk 14:64), does not consider that it had been passed in the night session (26:66). Even in the latter interpretation, their handing him over to Pilate is best explained on the hypothesis that they did not have competence to put their sentence into effect, as is stated in John 18:31.

27:5-8 For another tradition about the death of Judas, cf. Acts 1:18-19. The two traditions agree only in the purchase of a field with the money paid to Judas for his betrayal of Jesus and the name given to the field, the Field of Blood. In Acts Judas himself buys the field and its name comes from his own blood shed in his fatal accident on it. The potter's field: this designation of the field is based on the fulfillment citation in Matthew 27:10.

27:9-10 Cf. Matthew 26:15. Matthew's attributing this text to Jeremiah is puzzling, for there is no such text in that book, and the thirty pieces of silver thrown by Judas "into the temple" (27:5) recall rather Zechariah 11:12-13. It is usually said that the attribution of the text to Jeremiah is due to Matthew's combining the Zechariah text with texts from Jeremiah that speak of a potter (Jer 18:2-3), the buying of a field (Jer 32:6-9), or the breaking of a potter's flask at Topheth in the valley of Ben-Hinnom with the prediction that it will become a burial place (Jer 19:1-13).

27:11 King of the Jews: this title is used of Jesus only by pagans. The Matthean instances are, besides this verse, Matthew 2:2; 27:29, 37. Matthew equates it with "Messiah"; cf. Matthew 2:2, 4 and 27:17, 22 where he has changed "the king of the Jews" of his Marcan source (Mk 15:9, 12) to "(Jesus) called Messiah." The normal political connotation of both titles would be of concern to the Roman governor. You say so: see the note on Matthew 26:25. An unqualified affirmative response is not made because Jesus' kingship is not what Pilate would understand it to be.

27:12-14 Cf. Matthew 26:62-63. As in the trial before the Sanhedrin, Jesus' silence may be meant to recall Isaiah 53:7. Greatly amazed: possibly an allusion to Isaiah 52:14-15.

27:15-26 The choice that Pilate offers the crowd between Barabbas and Jesus is said to be in accordance with a custom of releasing at the Passover feast one prisoner chosen by the crowd (27:15). This custom is mentioned also in Mark 15:6 and John 18:39 but not in Luke; see the note on Luke 23:17. Outside of the gospels there is no direct attestation of it, and scholars are divided in their judgment of the historical reliability of the claim that there was such a practice.

27:16-17 [Jesus] Barabbas: it is possible that the double name is the original reading; Jesus was a common Jewish name; see the note on Matthew 1:21. This reading is found in only a few textual witnesses, although its absence in the majority can be explained as an omission of Jesus made for reverential reasons. That name is bracketed because of its uncertain textual attestation. The Aramaic name Barabbas means "son of the father"; the irony of the choice offered between him and Jesus, the true son of the Father, would be evident to those addressees of Matthew who knew that.

27:18 Cf. Mark 14:10. This is an example of the tendency, found in varying degree in all the gospels, to present Pilate in a relatively favorable light and emphasize the hostility of the Jewish authorities and eventually of the people.

27:19 Jesus' innocence is declared by a Gentile woman. In a dream: in Matthew's infancy narrative, dreams are the means of divine communication; cf. Matthew 1:20; 2:12, 13, 19, 22.

27:22 Let him be crucified: incited by the chief priests and elders (27:20), the crowds demand that Jesus be executed by crucifixion, a peculiarly horrible form of Roman capital punishment. The Marcan parallel, "Crucify him" (Mk 15:3), addressed to Pilate, is changed by Matthew to the passive, probably to emphasize the responsibility of the crowds.

27:24-25 Peculiar to Matthew. Took water … blood: cf. Deuteronomy 21:1-8, the handwashing prescribed in the case of a murder when the killer is unknown. The elders of the city nearest to where the corpse is found must wash their hands, declaring, "Our hands did not shed this blood." Look to it yourselves: cf. Matthew 27:4. The whole people: Matthew sees in those who speak these words the entire people (Greek laos) of Israel. His blood … and upon our children: cf. Jeremiah 26:15. The responsibility for Jesus' death is accepted by the nation that was God's special possession (Ex 19:5), his own people (Hos 2:25), and they thereby lose that high privilege; see Matthew 21:43 and the note on that verse. The controversy between Matthew's church and Pharisaic Judaism about which was the true people of God is reflected here. As the Second Vatican Council has pointed out, guilt for Jesus' death is not attributable to all the Jews of his time or to any Jews of later times.

27:26 He had Jesus scourged: the usual preliminary to crucifixion.

27:27 The praetorium: the residence of the Roman governor. His usual place of residence was at Caesarea Maritima on the Mediterranean coast, but he went to Jerusalem during the great feasts, when the influx of pilgrims posed the danger of a nationalistic riot. It is disputed whether the praetorium in Jerusalem was the old palace of Herod in the west of the city or the fortress of Antonia northwest of the temple area. The whole cohort: normally six hundred soldiers.

27:28 Scarlet military cloak: so Matthew as against the royal purple of Mark 15:17 and John 19:2.

27:29 Crown out of thorns: probably of long thorns that stood upright so that it resembled the "radiant" crown, a diadem with spikes worn by Hellenistic kings. The soldiers' purpose was mockery, not torture. A reed: peculiar to Matthew; a mock scepter.

27:30 Spat upon him: cf. Matthew 26:67 where there also is a possible allusion to Isaiah 50:6.

27:32 See the note on Mark 15:21. Cyrenian named Simon: Cyrenaica was a Roman province on the north coast of Africa and Cyrene was its capital city. The city had a large population of Greek-speaking Jews. Simon may have been living in Palestine or have come there for the Passover as a pilgrim. Pressed into service: see the note on Matthew 5:41.

27:34 Wine … mixed with gall: cf. Mark 15:23 where the drink is "wine drugged with myrrh," a narcotic. Matthew's text is probably an inexact allusion to Psalm 69:22. That psalm belongs to the class called the individual lament, in which a persecuted just man prays for deliverance in the midst of great suffering and also expresses confidence that his prayer will be heard. That theme of the suffering Just One is frequently applied to the sufferings of Jesus in the passion narratives.

27:35 The clothing of an executed criminal went to his executioner(s), but the description of that procedure in the case of Jesus, found in all the gospels, is plainly inspired by Psalm 22:19. However, that psalm verse is quoted only in John 19:24.

27:37 The offense of a person condemned to death by crucifixion was written on a tablet that was displayed on his cross. The charge against Jesus was that he had claimed to be the King of the Jews (cf. 27:11), i.e., the Messiah (cf. 27:17, 22).

27:38 Revolutionaries: see the note on John 18:40 where the same Greek word as that found here is used for Barabbas.

27:39-40 Reviled him … heads: cf. Psalm 22:8. You who would destroy … three days; cf. Matthew 26:61. If you are the Son of God: the same words as those of the devil in the temptation of Jesus; cf. Matthew 4:3, 6.

27:42 King of Israel: in their mocking of Jesus the members of the Sanhedrin call themselves and their people not "the Jews" but Israel.

27:43 Peculiar to Matthew. He trusted in God … wants him: cf. Psalm 22:9. He said … of God: probably an allusion to Wisdom 2:12-20 where the theme of the suffering Just One appears.

27:45 Cf. Amos 8:9 where on the day of the Lord "the sun will set at midday."

27:46 Eli, Eli, lema sabachthani?: Jesus cries out in the words of Psalm 22:2, a psalm of lament that is the Old Testament passage most frequently drawn upon in this narrative. In Mark the verse is cited entirely in Aramaic, which Matthew partially retains but changes the invocation of God to the Hebrew Eli, possibly because that is more easily related to the statement of the following verse about Jesus' calling for Elijah.

27:47 Elijah: see the note on Matthew 3:4. This prophet, taken up into heaven (2 Kgs 2:11), was believed to come to the help of those in distress, but the evidences of that belief are all later than the gospels.

27:50 Gave up his spirit: cf. the Marcan parallel (Mk 15:37), "breathed his last." Matthew's alteration expresses both Jesus' control over his destiny and his obedient giving up of his life to God.

27:51-53 Veil of the sanctuary … bottom: cf. Mark 15:38; Luke 23:45. Luke puts this event immediately before the death of Jesus. There were two veils in the Mosaic tabernacle on the model of which the temple was constructed, the outer one before the entrance of the Holy Place and the inner one before the Holy of Holies (see Ex 26:31-36). Only the high priest could pass through the latter and that only on the Day of Atonement (see Lv 16:1-18). Probably the torn veil of the gospels is the inner one. The meaning of the scene may be that now, because of Jesus' death, all people have access to the presence of God, or that the temple, its holiest part standing exposed, is now profaned and will soon be destroyed. The earth quaked … appeared to many: peculiar to Matthew. The earthquake, the splitting of the rocks, and especially the resurrection of the dead saints indicate the coming of the final age. In the Old Testament the coming of God is frequently portrayed with the imagery of an earthquake (see Pss 68:9; 77:19), and Jesus speaks of the earthquakes that will accompany the "labor pains" that signify the beginning of the dissolution of the old world (24:7-8). For the expectation of the resurrection of the dead at the coming of the new and final age, see Daniel 12:1-3. Matthew knows that the end of the old age has not yet come (28:20), but the new age has broken in with the death (and resurrection; cf. the earthquake in 28:2) of Jesus; see the note on Matthew 16:28. After his resurrection: this qualification seems to be due to Matthew's wish to assert the primacy of Jesus' resurrection even though he has placed the resurrection of the dead saints immediately after Jesus' death.

27:54 Cf. Mark 15:39. The Christian confession of faith is made by Gentiles, not only the centurion, as in Mark, but the other soldiers who were keeping watch over Jesus (cf. 27:36).

27:55-56 Looking on from a distance: cf. Psalm 38:12. Mary Magdalene … Joseph: these two women are mentioned again in Matthew 27:61 and 28:1 and are important as witnesses of the reality of the empty tomb. A James and Joseph are referred to in Matthew 13:55 as brothers of Jesus.

27:57-61 Cf. Mark 15:42-47. Matthew drops Mark's designation of Joseph of Arimathea as "a distinguished member of the council" (the Sanhedrin), and makes him a rich man and a disciple of Jesus. The former may be an allusion to Isaiah 53:9 (the Hebrew reading of that text is disputed and the one followed in the NAB OT has nothing about the rich, but they are mentioned in the LXX version). That the tomb was the new tomb of a rich man and that it was seen by the women are indications of an apologetic intent of Matthew; there could be no question about the identity of Jesus' burial place. The other Mary: the mother of James and Joseph (56).

27:62-66 Peculiar to Matthew. The story prepares for Matthew 28:11-15 and the Jewish charge that the tomb was empty because the disciples had stolen the body of Jesus (28:13, 15).

27:62 The next day … preparation: the sabbath. According to the synoptic chronology, in that year the day of preparation (for the sabbath) was the Passover; cf. Mark 15:42. The Pharisees: the principal opponents of Jesus during his ministry and, in Matthew's time, of the Christian church, join with the chief priests to guarantee against a possible attempt of Jesus' disciples to steal his body.

27:64 This last imposture … the first: the claim that Jesus has been raised from the dead is clearly the last imposture; the first may be either his claim that he would be raised up (63) or his claim that he was the one with whose ministry the kingdom of God had come (see 12:28).

27:65 The guard is yours: literally, "have a guard" or "you have a guard." Either the imperative or the indicative could mean that Pilate granted the petitioners some Roman soldiers as guards, which is the sense of the present translation. However, if the verb is taken as an indicative it could also mean that Pilate told them to use their own Jewish guards.

28:1-20 Except for Matthew 28:1-8 based on Mark 16:1-8, the material of this final chapter is peculiar to Matthew. Even where he follows Mark, Matthew has altered his source so greatly that a very different impression is given from that of the Marcan account. The two points that are common to the resurrection testimony of all the gospels are that the tomb of Jesus had been found empty and that the risen Jesus had appeared to certain persons, or, in the original form of Mark, that such an appearance was promised as soon to take place (see Mk 16:7). On this central and all-important basis, Matthew has constructed an account that interprets the resurrection as the turning of the ages (28:2-4), shows the Jewish opposition to Jesus as continuing to the present in the claim that the resurrection is a deception perpetrated by the disciples who stole his body from the tomb (28:11-15), and marks a new stage in the mission of the disciples once limited to Israel (10:5-6); now they are to make disciples of all nations. In this work they will be strengthened by the presence of the exalted Son of Man, who will be with them until the kingdom comes in fullness at the end of the age (28:16-20).

28:1 After the sabbath … dawning: since the sabbath ended at sunset, this could mean in the early evening, for dawning can refer to the appearance of the evening star; cf. Luke 23:54. However, it is probable that Matthew means the morning dawn of the day after the sabbath, as in the similar though slightly different text of Mark, "when the sun had risen" (Mk 16:2). Mary Magdalene and the other Mary: see the notes on Matthew 27:55-56; 57-61. To see the tomb: cf. Mark 16:1-2 where the purpose of the women's visit is to anoint Jesus' body.

28:2-4 Peculiar to Matthew. A great earthquake: see the note on Matthew 27:51-53. Descended from heaven: this trait is peculiar to Matthew, although his interpretation of the "young man" of his Marcan source (Mk 16:5) as an angel is probably true to Mark's intention; cf. Luke 24:23 where the "two men" of Luke 24:4 are said to be "angels." Rolled back the stone … upon it: not to allow the risen Jesus to leave the tomb but to make evident that the tomb is empty (see 28:6). Unlike the apocryphal Gospel of Peter (9:35–11:44), the New Testament does not describe the resurrection of Jesus, nor is there anyone who sees it. His appearance was like lightning … snow: see the note on Matthew 17:2.

28:6-7 Cf. Mark 16:6-7. Just as he said: a Matthean addition referring to Jesus' predictions of his resurrection, e.g., Matthew 16:21; 17:23; 20:19. Tell his disciples: like the angel of the Lord of the infancy narrative, the angel interprets a fact and gives a commandment about what is to be done; cf. Matthew 1:20-21. Matthew omits Mark's "and Peter" (Mk 16:7); considering his interest in Peter, this omission is curious. Perhaps the reason is that the Marcan text may allude to a first appearance of Jesus to Peter alone (cf. 1 Cor 15:5; Lk 24:34) which Matthew has already incorporated into his account of Peter's confession at Caesarea Philippi; see the note on Matthew 16:16. He is going … Galilee: like Mark 16:7, a reference to Jesus' prediction at the Last Supper (26:32; Mk 14:28). Matthew changes Mark's "as he told you" to a declaration of the angel.

28:8 Contrast Mark 16:8 where the women in their fear "said nothing to anyone."

28:9-10 Although these verses are peculiar to Matthew, there are similarities between them and John's account of the appearance of Jesus to Mary Magdalene (Jn 20:17). In both there is a touching of Jesus' body, and a command of Jesus to bear a message to his disciples, designated as his brothers. Matthew may have drawn upon a tradition that appears in a different form in John. Jesus' words to the women are mainly a repetition of those of the angel (28:5a, 7b).

28:11-15 This account indicates that the dispute between Christians and Jews about the empty tomb was not whether the tomb was empty but why.

28:16-20 This climactic scene has been called a "proleptic parousia," for it gives a foretaste of the final glorious coming of the Son of Man (26:64). Then his triumph will be manifest to all; now it is revealed only to the disciples, who are commissioned to announce it to all nations and bring them to belief in Jesus and obedience to his commandments.

28:16 The eleven: the number recalls the tragic defection of Judas Iscariot. To the mountain … ordered them: since the message to the disciples was simply that they were to go to Galilee (28:10), some think that the mountain comes from a tradition of the message known to Matthew and alluded to here. For the significance of the mountain, see the note on Matthew 17:1.

28:17 But they doubted: the Greek can also be translated, "but some doubted." The verb occurs elsewhere in the New Testament only in Matthew 14:31 where it is associated with Peter's being of "little faith." For the meaning of that designation, see the note on Matthew 6:30.

28:18 All power … me: the Greek word here translated power is the same as that found in the LXX translation of Daniel 7:13-14 where one "like a son of man" is given power and an everlasting kingdom by God. The risen Jesus here claims universal power, i.e., in heaven and on earth.

28:19 Therefore: since universal power belongs to the risen Jesus (28:18), he gives the eleven a mission that is universal. They are to make disciples of all nations. While all nations is understood by some scholars as referring only to all Gentiles, it is probable that it included the Jews as well. Baptizing them: baptism is the means of entrance into the community of the risen one, the Church. In the name of the Father … holy Spirit: this is perhaps the clearest expression in the New Testament of trinitarian belief. It may have been the baptismal formula of Matthew's church, but primarily it designates the effect of baptism, the union of the one baptized with the Father, Son, and holy Spirit.

28:20 All that I have commanded you: the moral teaching found in this gospel, preeminently that of the Sermon on the Mount (5–7). The commandments of Jesus are the standard of Christian conduct, not the Mosaic law as such, even though some of the Mosaic commandments have now been invested with the authority of Jesus. Behold, I am with you always: the promise of Jesus' real though invisible presence echoes the name Emmanuel given to him in the infancy narrative; see the note on Matthew 1:23. End of the age: see the notes on Matthew 13:39 and 24:3.

The Gospel According to

This shortest of all New Testament gospels is likely the first to have been written, yet it often tells of Jesus' ministry in more detail than either Matthew or Luke (for example, the miracle stories at 5:1-20 or 9:14-29). It recounts what Jesus did in a vivid style, where one incident follows directly upon another. In this almost breathless narrative, Mark stresses Jesus' message about the kingdom of God now breaking into human life as good news (1:14-15) and Jesus himself as the gospel of God (1:1; 8:35; 10:29). Jesus is the Son whom God has sent to rescue humanity by serving and by sacrificing his life (10:45).

The opening verse about good news in Mark (1:1) serves as a title for the entire book. The action begins with the appearance of John the Baptist, a messenger of God attested by scripture. But John points to a mightier one, Jesus, at whose baptism God speaks from heaven, declaring Jesus his Son. The Spirit descends upon Jesus, who eventually, it is promised, will baptize "with the holy Spirit." This presentation of who Jesus really is (1:1-13) is rounded out with a brief reference to the temptation of Jesus and how Satan's attack fails. Jesus as Son of God will be victorious, a point to be remembered as one reads of Jesus' death and the enigmatic ending to Mark's Gospel.

The key verses at Mark 1:14-15, which are programmatic, summarize what Jesus proclaims as gospel: fulfillment, the nearness of the kingdom, and therefore the need for repentance and for faith. After the call of the first four disciples, all fishermen (1:16-20), we see Jesus engaged in teaching (1:21, 22, 27), preaching (1:38, 39), and healing (1:29-31, 34, 40-45), and exorcising demons (Mk 1:22-27, 34-39). The content of Jesus' teaching is only rarely stated, and then chiefly in parables (chap. 4) about the kingdom. His cures, especially on the sabbath (3:1-5); his claim, like God, to forgive sins (2:3-12); his table fellowship with tax collectors and sinners (2:14-17); and the statement that his followers need not now fast but should rejoice while Jesus is present (2:18-22), all stir up opposition that will lead to Jesus’ death (3:6).

SUMMARY

Mark recounts the story of Jesus of Nazareth, emphasizing his identity as Son of God and powerful miracle worker. The gospel begins with John the Baptist’s preaching and extends through Jesus’ public ministry of miracles and teaching, concluding with his passion, death, and resurrection, and the discovery of the empty tomb.

Author: Unknown, but ancient tradition calls him “Mark” and identifies him with John Mark (Acts 12:12), a cousin of Barnabas, and sometime interpreter for the apostle Peter.

Date: Shortly before A.D. 70.

Content: John the Baptist’s announcement of Jesus’ coming; Jesus’ baptism by John; many miracle stories; Peter’s confession of faith; the transfiguration; the passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus; story of the empty tomb.

Main Characters: Jesus of Nazareth, John the Baptist, Peter, Andrew, James and John (the sons of Zebedee), some Jewish leaders opposed to Jesus, Judas Iscariot, Pontius Pilate.

In Mark, Jesus is portrayed as immensely popular with the people in Galilee during his ministry (2:2; 3:7; 4:1). He appoints twelve disciples to help preach and drive out demons, just as he does (3:13-19). He continues to work many miracles; the blocks Mark 4:35–6:44 and 6:45–7:10 are cycles of stories about healings, miracles at the Sea of Galilee, and marvelous feedings of the crowds. Jesus’ teaching in Mark 7 exalts the word of God over “the tradition of the elders” and sees defilement as a matter of the heart, not of unclean foods. Yet opposition mounts. Scribes charge that Jesus is possessed by Beelzebul (3:22). His relatives think him “out of his mind” (3:21). Jesus’ kinship is with those who do the will of God, in a new eschatological family, not even with mother, brothers, or sisters by blood ties (3:31-35; cf. 6:1-6). But all too often his own disciples do not understand Jesus (4:13, 40; 6:52; 8:17-21). The fate of John the Baptist (6:17-29) hints ominously at Jesus’ own passion (9:13; cf. 8:31).

A breakthrough seemingly comes with Peter's confession that Jesus is the Christ (Messiah; 8:27-30). But Jesus himself emphasizes his passion (8:31; 9:31; 10:33-34), not glory in the kingdom (10:35-45). Momentarily he is glimpsed in his true identity when he is transfigured before three of the disciples (9:2-8), but by and large Jesus is depicted in Mark as moving obediently along the way to his cross in Jerusalem. Occasionally there are miracles (9:17-27; 10:46-52; 11:12-14, 20-21, the only such account in Jerusalem), sometimes teachings (10:2-11, 23-31), but the greatest concern is with discipleship (8:34–9:1; 9:33-50). For the disciples do not grasp the mystery being revealed (9:32; 10:32, 38). One of them will betray him, Judas (14:10-11, 43-45); one will deny him, Peter (14:27, 31, 54, 66-72); all eleven men will desert Jesus (14:27, 50).

The passion account, with its condemnation of Jesus by the Sanhedrin (14:53, 55-65; 15:1a) and sentencing by Pilate (15:1b-15), is prefaced with the entry into Jerusalem (11:1-11), ministry and controversies there (11:15–12:44), Jesus' Last Supper with the disciples (14:1-26), and his arrest at Gethsemane (14:32-52). A chapter of apocalyptic tone about the destruction of the temple (13:1-2, 14-23) and the coming of the Son of Man (13:24-27), a discourse filled with promises (13:11, 31) and admonitions to be watchful (13:2, 23, 37), is significant for Mark's Gospel, for it helps one see that God, in Jesus, will be victorious after the cross and at the end of history.

The Gospel of Mark ends in the most ancient manuscripts with an abrupt scene at Jesus' tomb, which the women find empty (16:1-8). His own prophecy of Mark 14:28 is reiterated, that Jesus goes before the disciples into Galilee; "there you will see him." These words may imply resurrection appearances there, or Jesus' parousia there, or the start of Christian mission, or a return to the roots depicted in Mark 1:9, 14-15 in Galilee. Other hands have attached additional endings after Mark 16:8; see the note on Mark 16:9-20.

The framework of Mark's Gospel is partly geographical: Galilee (1:14–9:49), through the area "across the Jordan" (10:1) and through Jericho (10:46-52), to Jerusalem (11:1–16:8). Only rarely does Jesus go into Gentile territory (5:1-20; 7:24-37), but those who acknowledge him there and the centurion who confesses Jesus at the cross (15:39) presage the gospel's expansion into the world beyond Palestine.

Mark's Gospel is even more oriented to christology. Jesus is the Son of God (1:11; 9:7; 15:39; cf. 1:1; 14:61). He is the Messiah, the anointed king of Davidic descent (12:35; 15:32), the Greek for which, Christos, has, by the time Mark wrote, become in effect a proper name (1:1; 9:41). Jesus is also seen as Son of Man, a term used in Mark not simply as a substitute for “I” or for humanity in general (cf. 2:10, 27-28; 14:21) or with reference to a mighty figure who is to come (13:26; 14:62), but also in connection with Jesus’ predestined, necessary path of suffering and vindication (8:31; 10:45).

The unfolding of Mark’s story about Jesus is sometimes viewed by interpreters as centered around the term “mystery.” The word is employed just once, at Mark 4:11, in the singular, and its content there is the kingdom, the open secret that God’s reign is now breaking into human life with its reversal of human values. There is a related sense in which Jesus’ real identity remained a secret during his lifetime, according to Mark, although demons and demoniacs knew it (1:24; 3:11; 5:7); Jesus warned against telling of his mighty deeds and revealing his identity (1:44; 3:12; 5:43; 7:36; 8:26, 30), an injunction sometimes broken (1:45; cf. 5:19-20). Further, Jesus teaches by parables, according to Mark, in such a way that those “outside” the kingdom do not understand, but only those to whom the mystery has been granted by God.

Mark thus shares with Paul, as well as with other parts of the New Testament, an emphasis on election (13:20, 22) and upon the gospel as Christ and his cross (cf. 1 Cor 1:23). Yet in Mark the person of Jesus is also depicted with an unaffected naturalness. He reacts to events with authentic human emotion: pity (1:44), anger (3:5), triumph (4:40), sympathy (5:36; 6:34), surprise (6:9), admiration (7:29; 10:21), sadness (14:33-34), and indignation (14:48-49).

Although the book is anonymous, apart from the ancient heading “According to Mark” in manuscripts, it has traditionally been assigned to John Mark, in whose mother’s house (at Jerusalem) Christians assembled (Acts 12:12). This Mark was a cousin of Barnabas (Col 4:10) and accompanied Barnabas and Paul on a missionary journey (Acts 12:25; 13:3; 15:36-39). He appears in Pauline letters (2 Tm 4:11; Phlm 1:24) and with Peter (1 Pt 5:13). Papias (ca. A.D. 135) described Mark as Peter’s “interpreter,” a view found in other patristic writers. Petrine influence should not, however, be exaggerated. The evangelist has put together various oral and possibly written sources—miracle stories, parables, sayings, stories of controversies, and the passion—so as to speak of the crucified Messiah for Mark’s own day.

Traditionally, the gospel is said to have been written shortly before A.D. 70 in Rome, at a time of impending persecution and when destruction loomed over Jerusalem. Its audience seems to have been Gentile, unfamiliar with Jewish customs (hence 7:3-4, 11). The book aimed to equip such Christians to stand faithful in the face of persecution (13:9-13), while going on with the proclamation of the gospel begun in Galilee (13:10; 14:9). Modern research often proposes as the author an unknown Hellenistic Jewish Christian, possibly in Syria, and perhaps shortly after the year 70.

The principal divisions of the Gospel according to Mark are the following:

I. The Preparation for the Public Ministry of Jesus (1:1-13)

II. The Mystery of Jesus (1:14–8:26)

III. The Mystery Begins to Be Revealed (8:27–9:32)

IV. The Full Revelation of the Mystery (9:33–16:8)

II: THE MYSTERY OF JESUS

The Beginning of the Galilean Ministry

Mt 4:12-17; Lk 4:14-15

[14][h]After John had been arrested,* Jesus came to Galilee proclaiming the gospel of God: [15][i]“This is the time of fulfillment. The kingdom of God is at hand. Repent, and believe in the gospel.”

John the Baptist

All four gospels feature John, but only the Synoptics call him “the Baptist” (because of his activity of baptizing for the forgiveness of sins). In his writings, Josephus, the first-century Jewish historian, describes John and his ministry of baptism. John was a relative of Jesus, the son of Zechariah the priest, and Elizabeth, who was related to Mary, mother of Jesus.

Luke alone in the NT provides detailed background of John, indicating that his parents were devout Jews associated with the temple in Jerusalem (Lk 1:5-17). The story is replete with OT imagery, which helps to flesh out John’s identity as a prophet. In fulfillment of God’s will, John is dedicated to the service of God and becomes destined to be a great leader who will turn the people back to God.

John was an ascetic who lived a simple life in wilderness settings. Exactly how John came to exercise his ministry of repentance by baptizing with water at the Jordan River is uncertain. Scholars suggest that he may have been associated with the Qumran community near the Dead Sea. Those living there, the Essenes, used ritual bathing as a sign of spiritual cleansing. Archaeologists have unearthed some pools used for these rites. They lived an ascetical life, believing that they were preserving the authentic Jewish faith.

Regardless of John’s possible connection with Qumran, John had disciples of his own (Jn 3:25) who likely identified him as the Messiah. Some of these disciples later became Jesus’ disciples (Jn 1:35-37). The Synoptic Gospels also narrate John’s baptism of Jesus, albeit each with different details. The fact of Jesus’ baptism clearly caused some anxiety among early Christians, as baptism was associated with cleansing from sin. Since Jesus was considered born sinless, they viewed his baptism as unnecessary (cf. Mt 4:14-15). The gospels, however, associate Jesus’ baptism primarily not with washing sin away but with the inauguration of Jesus’ mission of preaching, teaching, and healing.

John’s intense ministry resulted in conflict with both religious and political authorities. The Jewish leaders allied to the temple were afraid of him, and Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, had John beheaded because he dared oppose his marriage to his half-brother’s wife (Mt 14:3-12; Mk 6:17-29). This intriguing story has been celebrated in art and even in music (e.g., Richard Strauss' opera Salome).

From the NT perspective, John's primary significance is as the forerunner of Jesus. Matthew explicitly identifies him with Elijah (17:11-13), the OT prophet who was expected to precede the Messiah in the apocalyptic time of trials and tribulations. John's gospel, which does not emphasize John's baptismal activity but his preaching and his identification of Jesus as the “Lamb of God,” portrays John as a minor lamp who prepares for the coming of “the light of the world” and gives testimony about him (Jn 1:1-30). In a sense, the NT portrait of John makes him a transitional figure who embodies the essence of OT prophecy, on the one hand, but prepares for the totally new ways of Jesus the Messiah, on the other.

The Call of the First Disciples*

[16] [j]As he passed by the Sea of Galilee, he saw Simon and his brother Andrew casting their nets into the sea; they were fishermen. [17]Jesus said to them, “Come after me, and I will make you fishers of men.” [18]Then they abandoned their nets and followed him. [19]He walked along a little farther and saw James, the son of Zebedee, and his brother John. They too were in a boat mending their nets. [20]Then he called them. So they left their father Zebedee in the boat along with the hired men and followed him.

Have you come to destroy us? I know who you are—the Holy One of God!” 25 Jesus rebuked him and said, “Quiet! Come out of him!” 26 The unclean spirit convulsed him and with a loud cry came out of him. 27 All were amazed and asked one another, “What is this? A new teaching with authority. He commands even the unclean spirits and they obey him.” 28 His fame spread everywhere throughout the whole region of Galilee.

Other Healings

[32]When it was evening, after sunset, they brought to him all who were ill or possessed by demons. [33]The whole town was gathered at the door. [34]He cured many who were sick with various diseases, and he drove out many demons, not permitting them to speak because they knew him.

Be made clean."[p] 42 The leprosy left him immediately, and he was made clean.[q] 43 Then, warning him sternly, he dismissed him at once. 44 Then he said to him, "See that you tell no one anything, but go, show yourself to the priest and offer for your cleansing what Moses prescribed; that will be proof for them."[r] 45 The man went away and began to publicize the whole matter. He spread the report abroad so that it was impossible for Jesus to enter a town openly. He remained outside in deserted places, and people kept coming to him from everywhere.

2 [1]When Jesus returned to Capernaum[a] after some days, it became known that he was at home. [2]Many gathered together so that there was no longer room for them, not even around the door, and he preached the word to them. [3]They came bringing to him a paralytic carried by four men. [4]Unable to get near Jesus because of the crowd, they opened up the roof above him. After they had broken through, they let down the mat on which the paralytic was lying. [5]*When Jesus saw their faith, he said to the paralytic, “Child, your sins are forgiven.” [6]Now some of the scribes were sitting there asking themselves, [7]“Why does this man speak that way? He is blaspheming. Who but God alone can forgive sins?”[b] [8]Jesus immediately knew in his mind what they were thinking to themselves, so he said, “Why are you thinking such things in your hearts? [9]Which is easier, to say to the paralytic, ‘Your sins are forgiven,’ or to say, ‘Rise, pick up your mat and walk’? [10]*But that you may know that the Son of Man has authority to forgive sins on earth”—[11]he said to the paralytic, “I say to you, rise, pick up your mat, and go home.” [12]He rose, picked up his mat at once, and went away in the sight of everyone. They were all astounded and glorified God, saying, “We have never seen anything like this.”

Mark exhibits a curious feature that scholars have dubbed “the messianic secret,” or perhaps more accurately, “the secret of Jesus’ identity.” After many miracles, Jesus instructs the recipient(s) not to tell anyone; they abruptly ignore the command and spread the news of Jesus’ miraculous ministry! This may be a literary technique to show how the characters in the story fail to comprehend fully the true goal of Jesus’ ministry. He is destined to suffer and die on the cross for the sake of “ransoming” sinful humanity. Christian readers understand this meaning, but the centurion standing at the cross is the only human character in Mark to exclaim, “Truly this man was the Son of God!” (15:39). The “secret” is finally revealed (by a Gentile!) who watches Jesus’ death.

The Call of Levi

[13][c]Once again he went out along the sea. All the crowd came to him and he taught them. [14][d]As he passed by, he saw Levi, son of Alphaeus, sitting at the customs post. He said to him, “Follow me.” And he got up and followed him. [15]While he was at table in his house,* many tax collectors and sinners sat with Jesus and his disciples; for there were many who followed him. [16]Some scribes who were Pharisees saw that he was eating with sinners and tax collectors and said to his disciples, “Why does he eat with tax collectors and sinners?” [17]Jesus heard this and said to them [that], “Those who are well do not need a physician, but the sick do. I did not come to call the righteous but sinners.”

Levi, the Hospitable Tax Collector

Tax collectors in the ancient world did not have the best reputations. They were known for extortion and were often ostracized socially and religiously. When Jesus spoke with Levi, and not because of some tax obligation, Levi responded in two ways: he followed him, and he provided a meal for him.

Sharing a meal is an intrinsically social thing to do. Food is given as a gift; time is involved in preparation and in the mealtime itself; conversation is a natural part of the backdrop. Jesus was often criticized for eating with sinners and tax collectors, those who were on the fringes of society, not because of the food but because of the social connections it indicated.

And maybe that all began with one tax collector who was addressed as a person rather than a social outcast: one tax collector who hosted a meal where Jesus was a guest and sinners were welcome at the table.

The Question About Fasting*

18The disciples of John and of the Pharisees were accustomed to fast.[e] People came to him and objected, “Why do the disciples of John and the disciples of the Pharisees fast, but your disciples do not fast?” 19Jesus answered them, “Can the wedding guests fast* while the bridegroom is with them? As long as they have the bridegroom with them they cannot fast. 20But the days will come when the bridegroom is taken away from them, and then they will fast on that day. 21No one sews a piece of unshrunken cloth on an old cloak. If he does, its fullness pulls away, the new from the old, and the tear gets worse. 22Likewise, no one pours new wine into old wineskins. Otherwise, the wine will burst the skins, and both the wine and the skins are ruined. Rather, new wine is poured into fresh wineskins.”

[3]He said to the man with the withered hand, “Come up here before us.” [4]Then he said to them, “Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath rather than to do evil, to save life rather than to destroy it?” But they remained silent. [5]Looking around at them with anger and grieved at their hardness of heart, he said to the man, “Stretch out your hand.” He stretched it out and his hand was restored.[b] [6]*The Pharisees went out and immediately took counsel with the Herodians against him to put him to death.

Jas 5:7

26He said, “This is how it is with the kingdom of God;* it is as if a man were to scatter seed[j] on the land 27and would sleep and rise night and day and the seed would sprout and grow, he knows not how. 28Of its own accord the land yields fruit, first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear. 29And when the grain is ripe, he wields the sickle at once, for the harvest has come.”

5 1*[a]They came to the other side of the sea, to the territory of the Gerasenes. 2When he got out of the boat, at once a man* from the tombs who had an unclean spirit met him. 3The man had been dwelling among the tombs, and no one could restrain him any longer, even with a chain. 4In fact, he had frequently been bound with shackles and chains, but the chains had been pulled apart by him and the shackles smashed, and no one was strong enough to subdue him. 5Night and day among the tombs and on the hillsides he was always crying out and bruising himself with stones. 6Catching sight of Jesus from a distance, he ran up and prostrated himself before him, 7crying out in a loud voice, “What have you to do with me,* Jesus, Son of the Most High God? I adjure you by God, do not torment me!” 8(He had been saying to him, “Unclean spirit, come out of the man!”) 9*He asked him, “What is your name?” He replied, “Legion is my name. There are many of us.”[b] 10And he pleaded earnestly with him not to drive them away from that territory.

11Now a large herd of swine* was feeding there on the hillside. 12And they pleaded with him, “Send us into the swine. Let us enter them.” 13And he let them, and the unclean spirits came out and entered the swine. The herd of about two thousand rushed down a steep bank into the sea, where they were drowned. 14The swineherds ran away and reported the incident in the town and throughout the countryside. And people came out to see what had happened. 15As they approached Jesus, they caught sight of the man who had been possessed by Legion, sitting there clothed and in his right mind. And they were seized with fear. 16Those who witnessed the incident explained to them what had happened to the possessed man and to the swine. 17Then they began to beg him to leave their district. 18As he was getting into the boat, the man who had been possessed pleaded to remain with him. 19But he would not permit him but told him instead, “Go home* to your family and announce to them all that the Lord in his pity has done for you.” 20Then the man went off and began to proclaim in the Decapolis what Jesus had done for him; and all were amazed.

[21]When Jesus had crossed again [in the boat] to the other side, a large crowd gathered around him, and he stayed close to the sea.[c] [22]One of the synagogue officials, named Jairus, came forward.[d] Seeing him he fell at his feet [23]and pleaded earnestly with him, saying, “My daughter is at the point of death. Please, come lay your hands on her* that she may get well and live.” [24]He went off with him, and a large crowd followed him and pressed upon him.

[25]There was a woman afflicted with hemorrhages for twelve years. [26]She had suffered greatly at the hands of many doctors and had spent all that she had. Yet she was not helped but only grew worse. [27]She had heard about Jesus and came up behind him in the crowd and touched his cloak. [28]*She said, “If I but touch his clothes, I shall be cured.” [29]Immediately her flow of blood dried up. She felt in her body that she was healed of her affliction. [30]Jesus, aware at once that power had gone out from him, turned around in the crowd and asked, “Who has touched my clothes?” [31]But his disciples said to him, “You see how the crowd is pressing upon you, and yet you ask, ‘Who touched me?’” [32]And he looked around to see who had done it. [33]The woman, realizing what had happened to her, approached in fear and trembling. She fell down before Jesus and told him the whole truth. [34]He said to her, “Daughter, your faith has saved you. Go in peace and be cured of your affliction.”[e]

Vestiges of Aramaic and Hebrew occur in the NT, although the text is entirely written in Koine (common) Greek (the language of the Roman Empire at the time of Jesus). Aramaic was the spoken language used by Jews in daily life, while Hebrew was the formal language of the written Scriptures and used in liturgical services. In addition to place names (Gehenna, Golgotha, etc.) and the liturgical word amen (“so be it”), the main Aramaic-Hebrew expressions include:

Talitha koum (Little girl, arise!) Mk 5:41

Qorban (dedicated to God) Mk 7:11

Ephphatha (Be opened!) Mk 7:34

Abba (dearest father) Mk 14:36; Rom 8:15; Gal 4:6

Raqa (evil) Mt 5:22

Eloi, Eloi, lema sabachthani? Mk 15:34 and par. (My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?)

Scholars have reconstructed the Our Father (Mt 6:9b-13; Lk 11:2b-4) into an Aramaic version possibly spoken by Jesus, but only the Greek translation remains in the NT. Other Semitic influences appear occasionally in the style of writing.

35*While he was still speaking, people from the synagogue official's house arrived and said, "Your daughter has died; why trouble the teacher any longer?" 36Disregarding the message that was reported, Jesus said to the synagogue official, "Do not be afraid; just have faith." 37He did not allow anyone to accompany him inside except Peter, James, and John, the brother of James. 38When they arrived at the house of the synagogue official, he caught sight of a commotion, people weeping and wailing loudly. 39*[f]So he went in and said to them, "Why this commotion and weeping? The child is not dead but asleep." 40And they ridiculed him. Then he put them all out. He took along the child's father and mother and those who were with him and entered the room where the child was. 41*He took the child by the hand and said to her, "Talitha koum," which means, "Little girl, I say to you, arise!" 42The girl, a child of twelve, arose immediately and walked around. [At that] they were utterly astounded. 43He gave strict orders that no one should know this and said that she should be given something to eat.

17Herod was the one who had John arrested and bound in prison on account of Herodias, the wife of his brother Philip, whom he had married.[i] 18John had said to Herod, "It is not lawful for you to have your brother's wife."[j] 19Herodias* harbored a grudge against him and wanted to kill him but was unable to do so. 20Herod feared John, knowing him to be a righteous and holy man, and kept him in custody. When he heard him speak he was very much perplexed, yet he liked to listen to him. 21She had an opportunity one day when Herod, on his birthday, gave a banquet for his courtiers, his military officers, and the leading men of Galilee. 22Herodias's own daughter came in and performed a dance that delighted Herod and his guests. The king said to the girl, "Ask of me whatever you wish and I will grant it to you." 23He even swore [many things] to her, "I will grant you whatever you ask of me, even to half of my kingdom."[k] 24She went out and said to her mother, "What shall I ask for?" She replied, "The head of John the Baptist." 25The girl hurried back to the king's presence and made her request, "I want you to give me at once on a platter the head of John the Baptist." 26The king was deeply distressed, but because of his oaths and the guests he did not wish to break his word to her. 27[l]So he promptly dispatched an executioner with orders to bring back his head. He went off and beheaded him in the prison. 28He brought in the head on a platter and gave it to the girl. The girl in turn gave it to her mother. 29When his disciples heard about it, they came and took his body and laid it in a tomb.

30The apostles* gathered together with Jesus and reported all they had done and taught.[m] 31*He said to them, “Come away by yourselves to a deserted place and rest a while.” People were coming and going in great numbers, and they had no opportunity even to eat.[n] 32So they went off in the boat by themselves to a deserted place.[o] 33People saw them leaving and many came to know about it. They hastened there on foot from all the towns and arrived at the place before them.

The Feeding of the Five Thousand

34When he disembarked and saw the vast crowd, his heart was moved with pity for them, for they were like sheep without a shepherd; and he began to teach them many things. 35*By now it was already late and his disciples approached him and said, “This is a deserted place and it is already very late. 36Dismiss them so that they can go to the surrounding farms and villages and buy themselves something to eat.” 37He said to them in reply, “Give them some food yourselves.” But they said to him, “Are we to buy two hundred days’ wages worth of food and give it to them to eat?” 38He asked them, “How many loaves do you have? Go and see.” And when they had found out they said, “Five loaves and two fish.” 39So he gave orders to have them sit down in groups on the green grass. 40*The people took their places in rows by hundreds and by fifties. 41Then, taking the five loaves and the two fish and looking up to heaven, he said the blessing, broke the loaves, and gave them to [his] disciples to set before the people; he also divided the two fish among them all.* 42They all ate and were satisfied. 43And they picked up twelve wicker baskets full of fragments and what was left of the fish. 44Those who ate [of the loaves] were five thousand men.

[45]Then he made his disciples get into the boat[p] and precede him to the other side toward Bethsaida,* while he dismissed the crowd. [46]And when he had taken leave of them, he went off to the mountain to pray. [47]When it was evening, the boat was far out on the sea and he was alone on shore. [48]Then he saw that they were tossed about while rowing, for the wind was against them. About the fourth watch of the night, he came Toward them walking on the sea. He meant to pass by them. [49]But when they saw him walking on the sea, they thought it was a ghost and cried out. [50]They had all seen him and were terrified. But at once he spoke with them, "Take courage, it is I, do not be afraid!" [51]He got into the boat with them and the wind died down. They were [completely] astounded. [52]They had not understood the incident of the loaves. On the contrary, their hearts were hardened.[q]

The multiplication of the loaves is the only NT miracle story recorded in multiple versions in all four gospels. In Mark, its existence in two different versions may point to a meaning applied to both Jewish and Gentile settings, thus indicating Jesus' ministry to both audiences. For John, Jesus' personal ministry and the overabundance of food highlight Jesus as the "bread of life." In all the versions, however, the eucharistic symbolism is unmistakable. Scholars believe the story may have originated with one tale of a miraculous feeding, which was preserved in numerous versions. The chart highlights some similarities and differences in details.

7 [1]Now when the Pharisees with some scribes who had come from Jerusalem gathered around him,[a] [2]they observed that some of his disciples ate their meals with unclean, that is, unwashed, hands. [3](For the Pharisees and, in fact, all Jews, do not eat without carefully washing their hands,* keeping the tradition of the elders. [4]And on coming from the marketplace they do not eat without purifying themselves. And there are many other things that they have traditionally observed, the purification of cups and jugs and kettles [and beds].) [5]So the Pharisees and scribes questioned him, “Why do your disciples not follow the tradition of the elders* but instead eat a meal with unclean hands?” [6]He responded, “Well did Isaiah prophesy about you hypocrites, as it is written:[b]

She came and fell at his feet. 26 The woman was a Greek, a Syrophoenician by birth, and she begged him to drive the demon out of her daughter.[i] 27 He said to her, "Let the children be fed first.* For it is not right to take the food of the children and throw it to the dogs." 28 She replied and said to him, "Lord, even the dogs under the table eat the children's scraps." 29 Then he said to her, "For saying this, you may go. The demon has gone out of your daughter." 30 When the woman went home, she found the child lying in bed and the demon gone.

The Healing of a Deaf Man

Mt 15:29-31

[31][j]Again he left the district of Tyre and went by way of Sidon to the Sea of Galilee, into the district of the Decapolis. [32]And people brought to him a deaf man who had a speech impediment and begged him to lay his hand on him. [33]He took him off by himself away from the crowd. He put his finger into the man’s ears and, spitting, touched his tongue; [34]then he looked up to heaven and groaned, and said to him, “Ephphatha!” (that is, “Be opened!”) [35]And [immediately] the man’s ears were opened, his speech impediment was removed, and he spoke plainly. [36]*He ordered them not to tell anyone. But the more he ordered them not to, the more they proclaimed it. [37]They were exceedingly astonished and they said, “He has done all things well. He makes the deaf hear and [the] mute speak.”[k]

The Decapolis was a Gentile district of ten towns. The title is a collective one; the NT does not list the towns themselves (cf. Mk 5:20; Mt 4:25), but they included the cities of Damascus, Scythopolis, Gadara, Gerasa, Hippos, Dion, Pella, Philadelphia, Raphana, and Canatha in the region of southern Syria and northern Jordan. These Hellenistic cities had an economic alliance that fostered their common association.

The Feeding of the Four Thousand*

8 [1]In those days when there again was a great crowd without anything to eat,[a] he summoned the disciples and said, [2]“My heart is moved with pity for the crowd, because they have been with me now for three days and have nothing to eat. [3]If I send them away hungry to their homes, they will collapse on the way, and some of them have come a great distance.” [4]His disciples answered him, “Where can anyone get enough bread to satisfy them here in this deserted place?” [5]Still he asked them, “How many loaves do you have?” “Seven,” they replied. [6]*He ordered the crowd to sit down on the ground. Then, taking the seven loaves he gave thanks, broke them, and gave them to his disciples to distribute, and they distributed them to the crowd. [7]They also had a few fish. He said the blessing over them and ordered them distributed also. [8]They ate and were satisfied. They picked up the fragments left over—seven baskets. [9]There were about four thousand people.

The Syrophoenician Woman, A Questioning Presence

A parent might do all kinds of things, stoop to all sorts of indignities, to save a child. When this Canaanite woman approaches Jesus, every generation can hear her desperation and recognize that she is literally begging for his attention to her daughter’s condition. But she is a woman, and she is not a Jew, and so the scene surprisingly exposes a prejudice within this Jewish man of the time.

Jesus not only refuses to help her but uses insulting language to make his point. Brilliantly the woman turns his metaphor around and reminds him that even dogs are entitled to scraps from the table. She turns an insult into an opportunity, and the mission of Jesus is opened wider than expected.

The Syrophoenician woman stands in the gospel as a kind of question mark. We might hear her asking whether our communities and families are more like those seated at table or more like those begging for scraps. And then her presence asks us to become sensitive to needs that draw us beyond familiar boundaries. She might also ask whether we are willing to make fools of ourselves to obtain what we need, or to speak out for what others need.

The Blind Man of Bethsaida*

[g] 7:33; Jn 9:6

[22]When they arrived at Bethsaida, they brought to him a blind man and begged him to touch him. [23]He took the blind man by the hand and led him outside the village. Putting spittle on his eyes he laid his hands on him and asked, “Do you see anything?”[g] [24]Looking up he replied, “I see people looking like trees and walking.” [25]Then he laid hands on his eyes a second time and he saw clearly; his sight was restored and he could see everything distinctly. [26]Then he sent him home and said, “Do not even go into the village.”

The section between Mark 8:22 and 10:52 is a large narrative devoted to the theme of discipleship. It is framed by two stories of blind men whose faith contrasts with that of the disciples (8:22-26; 10:46-52). Whereas they learn to “see,” Jesus’ disciples remain “blind” to Jesus’ true mission as the suffering Son of Man, the Messiah.

Peter’s Confession About Jesus*

Mt 16:13-20; Lk 9:18-21

27Now Jesus and his disciples set out for the villages of Caesarea Philippi.[h] Along the way he asked his disciples, “Who do people say that I am?” 28They said in reply, “John the Baptist, others Elijah, still others one of the prophets.” 29And he asked them, “But who do you say that I am?” Peter said to him in reply, “You are the Messiah.” 30Then he warned them not to tell anyone about him.

The First Prediction of the Passion

31*i*He began to teach them that the Son of Man* must suffer greatly and be rejected by the elders, the chief priests, and the scribes, and be killed, and rise after three days. 32He spoke this openly. Then Peter took him aside and began to rebuke him. 33At this he turned around and, looking at his disciples, rebuked Peter and said, “Get behind me, Satan. You are thinking not as God does, but as human beings do.”

[37]What could one give in exchange for his life? [38]Whoever is ashamed of me and of my words in this faithless and sinful generation, the Son of Man will be ashamed of when he comes in his Father’s glory with the holy angels.”[l]

Mt 17:1-13; Lk 9:28-36

[2]After six days Jesus took Peter, James, and John and led them up a high mountain apart by themselves.[b] And he was transfigured before them, [3]and his clothes became dazzling white, such as no fuller on earth could bleach them. [4]Then Elijah appeared to them along with Moses, and they were conversing with Jesus. [5]Then Peter said to Jesus in reply, “Rabbi, it is good that we are here! Let us make three tents: one for you, one for Moses, and one for Elijah.” [6]He hardly knew what to say, they were so terrified. [7]Then a cloud came, casting a shadow over them; then from the cloud came a voice, “This is my beloved Son. Listen to him.” [8]Suddenly, looking around, they no longer saw anyone but Jesus alone with them.

1 Kgs 19:2-10

[9]As they were coming down from the mountain, he charged them not to relate what they had seen to anyone, except when the Son of Man had risen from the dead.[c] [10]So they kept the matter to themselves, questioning what rising from the dead meant. [11][d]Then they asked him, "Why do the scribes say that Elijah must come first?" [12]He told them, "Elijah will indeed come first and restore all things, yet how is it written regarding the Son of Man that he must suffer greatly and be treated with contempt? [13]But I tell you that Elijah has come and they did to him whatever they pleased, as it is written of him."[e]

The Healing of a Boy with a Demon*

14When they came to the disciples,[f] they saw a large crowd around them and scribes arguing with them. 15Immediately on seeing him, the whole crowd was utterly amazed. They ran up to him and greeted him. 16He asked them, “What are you arguing about with them?” 17Someone from the crowd answered him, “Teacher, I have brought to you my son possessed by a mute spirit. 18Wherever it seizes him, it throws him down; he foams at the mouth, grinds his teeth, and becomes rigid. I asked your disciples to drive it out, but they were unable to do so.” 19He said to them in reply, “O faithless generation, how long will I be with you? How long will I endure you? Bring him to me.” 20They brought the boy to him. And when he saw him, the spirit immediately threw the boy into convulsions. As he fell to the ground, he began to roll around and foam at the mouth. 21Then he questioned his father, “How long has this been happening to him?” He replied, “Since childhood. 22It has often thrown him into fire and into water to kill him. But if you can do anything, have compassion on us and help us.” 23Jesus said to him, “‘If you can!’ Everything is possible to one who has faith.” 24Then the boy’s father cried out, “I do believe, help my unbelief!” 25Jesus, on seeing a crowd rapidly gathering, rebuked the unclean spirit and said to it, “Mute and deaf spirit, I command you: come out of him and never enter him again!” 26Shouting and throwing the boy into convulsions, it came out. He became like a corpse, which caused many to say, “He is dead!” 27But Jesus took him by the hand, raised him, and he stood up. 28When he entered the house, his disciples asked him in private, “Why could we not drive it out?” 29*He said to them, “This kind can only come out through prayer.”

An exorcism is a type of miracle story that relates the driving out of a demon from someone who is possessed (cf. also Mk 1:23-26, 34; 5:1-13). Jesus’ reputation for being an exorcist caused some to accuse him of being allied to demons or to the devil (Beelzebul), which Jesus denied (Mk 3:22-27 and par.).

30[g]They left from there and began a journey through Galilee, but he did not wish anyone to know about it.[h] 31He was teaching his disciples and telling them, “The Son of Man is to be handed over to men and they will kill him, and three days after his death he will rise.” 32But they did not understand the saying, and they were afraid to question him.

10 1He set out from there and went into the district of Judea [and] across the Jordan. Again crowds gathered around him and, as was his custom, he again taught them. 2*The Pharisees approached and asked, "Is it lawful for a husband to divorce his wife?" They were testing him.[a] 3He said to them in reply, "What did Moses command you?" 4They replied, "Moses permitted him to write a bill of divorce and dismiss her."[b] 5But Jesus told them, "Because of the hardness of your hearts he wrote you this commandment. 6But from the beginning of creation, 'God made them male and female.[c] 7For this reason a man shall leave his father and mother [and be joined to his wife],[d] 8and the two shall become one flesh.' So they are no longer two but one flesh. 9Therefore what God has joined together, no human being must separate." 10In the house the disciples again questioned him about this. 11[e]He said to them, "Whoever divorces his wife and marries another commits adultery against her; 12and if she divorces her husband and marries another, she commits adultery."

Go, sell what you have, and give to [the] poor and you will have treasure in heaven; then come, follow me.” 22At that statement his face fell, and he went away sad, for he had many possessions.

Mt 19:30; Lk 13:30

23*Jesus looked around and said to his disciples, “How hard it is for those who have wealth to enter the kingdom of God!”[k] 24The disciples were amazed at his words. So Jesus again said to them in reply, “Children, how hard it is to enter the kingdom of God! 25It is easier for a camel to pass through [the] eye of [a] needle than for one who is rich to enter the kingdom of God.” 26They were exceedingly astonished and said among themselves, “Then who can be saved?” 27Jesus looked at them and said, “For human beings it is impossible, but not for God. All things are possible for God.” 28Peter began to say to him, “We have given up everything and followed you.” 29Jesus said, “Amen, I say to you, there is no one who has given up house or brothers or sisters or mother or father or children or lands for my sake and for the sake of the gospel 30who will not receive a hundred times more now in this present age: houses and brothers and sisters and mothers and children and lands, with persecutions, and eternal life in the age to come. 31But many that are first will be last, and [the] last will be first.”[l]

The Third Prediction of the Passion

[32][m]They were on the way, going up to Jerusalem, and Jesus went ahead of them. They were amazed, and those who followed were afraid. Taking the Twelve aside again, he began to tell them what was going to happen to him. [33]“Behold, we are going up to Jerusalem, and the Son of Man will be handed over to the chief priests and the scribes, and they will condemn him to death and hand him over to the Gentiles [34]who will mock him, spit upon him, scourge him, and put him to death, but after three days he will rise.”

Jesus made it very clear to his disciples that their importance arises not out of their greatness but out of their service; and their service must flow out of their humility, their willingness to stand beside rather than lord it over someone.

Ambition of James and John

[35] [n]Then James and John, the sons of Zebedee, came to him and said to him, “Teacher, we want you to do for us whatever we ask of you.” [36]He replied, “What do you wish [me] to do for you?” [37]They answered him, “Grant that in your glory we may sit one at your right and the other at your left.” [38]*[o]Jesus said to them, “You do not know what you are asking. Can you drink the cup that I drink or be baptized with the baptism with which I am baptized?” [39]They said to him, “We can.” Jesus said to them, “The cup that I drink, you will drink, and with the baptism with which I am baptized, you will be baptized; [40]but to sit at my right or at my left is not mine to give but is for those for whom it has been prepared.” [41]When the ten heard this, they became indignant at James and John. [42]*Jesus summoned them and said to them,[p] “You know that those who are recognized as rulers over the Gentiles lord it over them, and their great ones make their authority over them felt. [43]But it shall not be so among you. Rather, whoever wishes to be great among you will be your servant; [44]whoever wishes to be first among you will be the slave of all. [45]For the Son of Man did not come to be served but to serve and to give his life as a ransom for many.”

[46]They came to Jericho.[q] And as he was leaving Jericho with his disciples and a sizable crowd, Bartimaeus, a blind man, the son of Timaeus, sat by the roadside begging. [47]On hearing that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to cry out and say, “Jesus, son of David, have pity on me.” [48]And many rebuked him, telling him to be silent. But he kept calling out all the more, “Son of David, have pity on me.” [49]Jesus stopped and said, “Call him.” So they called the blind man, saying to him, “Take courage; get up, he is calling you.” [50]He threw aside his cloak, sprang up, and came to Jesus. [51]Jesus said to him in reply, “What do you want me to do for you?” The blind man replied to him, “Master, I want to see.” [52]Jesus told him, “Go your way; your faith has saved you.” Immediately he received his sight and followed him on the way.

The Entry into Jerusalem*

Mt 21:1-9; Lk 19:29-38; Jn 12:12-15

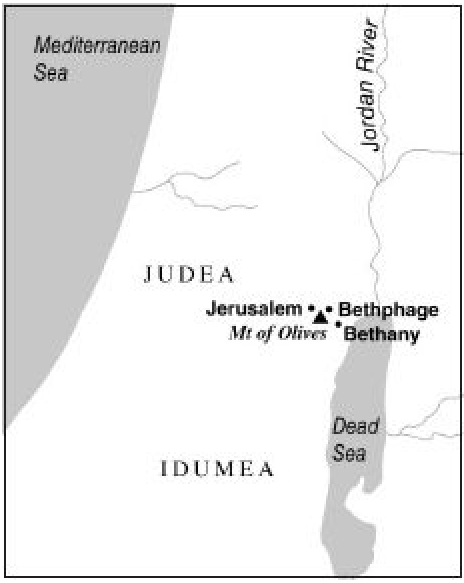
2 Sm 7:16; Ps 118:26

11 [1]When they drew near to Jerusalem,[a] to Bethphage and Bethany at the Mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples [2]and said to them, "Go into the village opposite you, and immediately on entering it, you will find a colt tethered on which no one has ever sat. Untie it and bring it here. [3]If anyone should say to you, 'Why are you doing this?' reply, 'The Master has need of it and will send it back here at once.'" [4]So they went off and found a colt tethered at a gate outside on the street, and they untied it. [5]Some of the bystanders said to them, "What are you doing, untying the colt?" [6]They answered them just as Jesus had told them to, and they permitted them to do it. [7]So they brought the colt to Jesus and put their cloaks over it. And he sat on it. [8]Many people spread their cloaks on the road, and others spread leafy branches that they had cut from the fields. [9]Those preceding him as well as those following kept crying out:[b]



Bethphage, Bethany, Mount of Olives

“Hosanna!
Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord!
10 Blessed is the kingdom of our father David that is to come!
Hosanna in the highest!”

The church has incorporated these verses of praise (11:10) into the liturgy at the end of the preface, immediately before the beginning of the eucharistic prayer. They provide a fitting hymn to Jesus as triumphant Messiah.

Mt 21:10, 17

Jesus Curses a Fig Tree*

Mt 21:18-20; Lk 13:6-9

12The next day as they were leaving Bethany he was hungry.[d] 13Seeing from a distance a fig tree in leaf, he went over to see if he could find anything on it. When he reached it he found nothing but leaves; it was not the time for figs. 14And he said to it in reply, "May no one ever eat of your fruit again!" And his disciples heard it.

Cleansing of the Temple*

Mt 21:12-13; Lk 19:45-46; Jn 2:14-16

[15]They came to Jerusalem,[e] and on entering the temple area he began to drive out those selling and buying there. He overturned the tables of the money changers and the seats of those who were selling doves. [16]He did not permit anyone to carry anything through the temple area. [17]Then he taught them saying, "Is it not written:

'My house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples'?

The Withered Fig Tree

Mt 21:20-22

j

Mt 7:7; Jn 11:22; 14:13

Mt 6:14; 18:35

[20][h]Early in the morning, as they were walking along, they saw the fig tree withered to its roots. [21]Peter remembered and said to him, “Rabbi, look! The fig tree that you cursed has withered.” [22]Jesus said to them in reply, “Have faith in God. [23]Amen, I say to you, whoever says to this mountain, ‘Be lifted up and thrown into the sea,’ and does not doubt in his heart but believes that what he says will happen, it shall be done for him.[i] [24]Therefore I tell you, all that you ask for in prayer, believe that you will receive it and it shall be yours.[j] [25]When you stand to pray, forgive anyone against whom you have a grievance, so that your heavenly Father may in turn forgive you your transgressions.”[k] [26]*

Could it be that sometimes our prayer is not as effective because we come to prayer with an unforgiving spirit? When you begin to pray, cleanse your heart. Make of your heart a pure container of receptive love. Embellish it with forgiveness.

The Authority of Jesus Questioned*

[27]They returned once more to Jerusalem.[l] As he was walking in the temple area, the chief priests, the scribes, and the elders approached him [28]and said to him, “By what authority are you doing these things? Or who gave you this authority to do them?” [29]Jesus said to them, “I shall ask you one question. Answer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do these things. [30]Was John’s baptism of heavenly or of human origin? Answer me.” [31]They discussed this among themselves and said, “If we say, ‘Of heavenly origin,’ he will say, ‘[Then] why did you not believe him?’ [32]But shall we say, ‘Of human origin’?”—they feared the crowd, for they all thought John really was a prophet. [33]So they said to Jesus in reply, “We do not know.” Then Jesus said to them, “Neither shall I tell you by what authority I do these things.”

In Jesus the world is reconciled with God; in Jesus all people are reconciled and forgiven: “Because the walls of hostility between God and humankind were broken down in the life and death of the true, perfect servant, union and well-being between God and the world were finally fully possible” (The Challenge of Peace 51; see also Eph 2:13-22 and Gal 3:28). This central Christian truth is the basis for the Christian forgiveness of one another (see Mt 6:14-15; Lk 6:37; 11:4; 17:3-4).

Is 5:1-7; Jer 2:21

Ps 118:22-23; Is 28:16

12 [1]He began to speak to them in parables.[a] “A man planted a vineyard, put a hedge around it, dug a wine press, and built a tower. Then he leased it to tenant farmers and left on a journey.[b] [2]At the proper time he sent a servant to the tenants to obtain from them some of the produce of the vineyard. [3]But they seized him, beat him, and sent him away empty-handed. [4]Again he sent them another servant. And that one they beat over the head and treated shamefully. [5]He sent yet another whom they killed. So, too, many others; some they beat, others they killed. [6]He had one other to send, a beloved son. He sent him to them last of all, thinking, ‘They will respect my son.’ [7]But those tenants said to one another, ‘This is the heir. Come, let us kill him, and the inheritance will be ours.’ [8]So they seized him and killed him, and threw him out of the vineyard. [9]What [then] will the owner of the vineyard do? He will come, put the tenants to death, and give the vineyard to others. [10]Have you not read this scripture passage:[c]

> ‘The stone that the builders rejected >   has become the cornerstone;
> [11]by the Lord has this been done, >   and it is wonderful in our eyes’?”

[12]They were seeking to arrest him, but they feared the crowd, for they realized that he had addressed the parable to them. So they left him and went away.

The NT quotes the words of Psalm 118:22-23 several times in reference to Jesus as the “rejected stone” who paradoxically becomes the cornerstone (cf. Mt 21:42; Lk 20:17; Acts 4:11; 1 Pt 2:7).

13*They sent some Pharisees[d] and Herodians to him to ensnare him[e] in his speech.* 14They came and said to him, “Teacher, we know that you are a truthful man and that you are not concerned with anyone’s opinion. You do not regard a person’s status but teach the way of God in accordance with the truth. Is it lawful to pay the census tax to Caesar or not? Should we pay or should we not pay?” 15Knowing their hypocrisy he said to them, “Why are you testing me? Bring me a denarius to look at.” 16They brought one to him and he said to them, “Whose image and inscription is this?” They replied to him, “Caesar’s.” 17So Jesus said to them, “Repay to Caesar what belongs to Caesar and to God what belongs to God.” They were utterly amazed at him.[f]

How easy it is to overlook, and even reject, wondrous treasures that have been sent for our healing. We suffer from poor eyesight. We must learn to see with the heart. How sad it would be to send something or someone away that was intended to rise up and bless us.

The Question About the Resurrection*

18Some Sadducees, who say there is no resurrection, came to him and put this question to him, 19saying, “Teacher, Moses wrote for us, ‘If someone’s brother dies, leaving a wife but no child, his brother must take the wife and raise up descendants for his brother.’[g] 20Now there were seven brothers. The first married a woman and died, leaving no descendants. 21So the second married her and died, leaving no descendants, and the third likewise. 22And the seven left no descendants. Last of all the woman also died. 23At the resurrection [when they arise] whose wife will she be? For all seven had been married to her.” 24Jesus said to them, “Are you not misled because you do not know the scriptures or the power of God? 25When they rise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but they are like the angels in heaven. 26As for the dead being raised, have you not read in the Book of Moses, in the passage about the bush, how God told him, ‘I am the God of Abraham, [the] God of Isaac, and [the] God of Jacob’?[h] 27He is not God of the dead but of the living. You are greatly misled.”

[28]One of the scribes,[i] when he came forward and heard them disputing and saw how well he had answered them, asked him, "Which is the first of all the commandments?" [29]Jesus replied, "The first is this: 'Hear, O Israel! The Lord our God is Lord alone! [30]You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind, and with all your strength.'[j] [31]The second is this: 'You shall love your neighbor as yourself.' There is no other commandment greater than these."[k] [32]The scribe said to him, "Well said, teacher. You are right in saying, 'He is One and there is no other than he.' [33]And 'to love him with all your heart, with all your understanding, with all your strength, and to love your neighbor as yourself' is worth more than all burnt offerings and sacrifices."[l] [34]And when Jesus saw that [he] answered with understanding, he said to him, "You are not far from the kingdom of God." And no one dared to ask him any more questions.[m]

Mt 22:41-45; Lk 20:41-44

[35]As Jesus was teaching in the temple area he said,n “How do the scribes claim that the Messiah is the son of David? [36]David himself, inspired by the holy Spirit, said:

‘The Lord said to my lord,

until I place your enemies under your feet.”’o

[37]David himself calls him ‘lord’; so how is he his son?” [The] great crowd heard this with delight.

Denunciation of the Scribes*

38In the course of his teaching he said,p “Beware of the scribes, who like to go around in long robes and accept greetings in the marketplaces, 39seats of honor in synagogues, and places of honor at banquets. 40They devour the houses of widows and, as a pretext, recite lengthy prayers. They will receive a very severe condemnation.”

The Generous Widow

This well-known story of the widow who gave more than she could afford has often been used in praise of generosity. After all, those who gave large sums are not the object of praise; their gifts were from their surplus. But the widow gave “from her poverty.”

The story of the widow, however, occurs right in the middle of high criticism being leveled against the scribes and Pharisees. Jesus has lambasted the leaders of his faith tradition for “devouring the houses of widows” (Mk 12:40) and now tells the story of a widow who gave her all. Could it be that the story is meant to illustrate just what he has criticized? Giving to the temple collection was a religious requirement; using the temple collection for the needy was the intention. Instead, the temple leaders are accused of spending the funds on their own desires for long robes and banquets.

Widows were entirely dependent on male relatives or others in the community to provide for their needs. To give from one’s needs could be seen indeed as generosity, but this was more likely meant to illustrate something about the abuse of position and power that the leading class possessed.

The widow’s generosity can serve as a beautiful reminder to trust in God, even for life’s essentials. But on another level, the widow reminds us of the responsibilities of leadership and the danger of abusing one’s power.

The Poor Widow's Contribution*

[41]He sat down opposite the treasury and observed how the crowd put money into the treasury.[q] Many rich people put in large sums. [42]A poor widow also came and put in two small coins worth a few cents. [43]Calling his disciples to himself, he said to them, "Amen, I say to you, this poor widow put in more than all the other contributors to the treasury. [44]For they have all contributed from their surplus wealth, but she, from her poverty, has contributed all she had, her whole livelihood."

The Destruction of the Temple Foretold*

13 [1]As he was making his way out of the temple area one of his disciples said to him, “Look, teacher, what stones and what buildings!”[a] [2]Jesus said to him, “Do you see these great buildings? There will not be one stone left upon another that will not be thrown down.”

The Signs of the End

Eph 5:6; 2 Thes 2:3

3 *As he was sitting on the Mount of Olives opposite the temple area, Peter, James, John, and Andrew asked him privately,[b] 4 "Tell us, when will this happen, and what sign will there be when all these things are about to come to an end?" 5 Jesus began to say to them, "See that no one deceives you.[c] 6 Many will come in my name saying, 'I am he,' and they will deceive many. 7 When you hear of wars and reports of wars do not be alarmed; such things must happen, but it will not yet be the end. 8 Nation will rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom. There will be earthquakes from place to place and there will be famines. These are the beginnings of the labor pains.

9[d]“Watch out for yourselves. They will hand you over to the courts. You will be beaten in synagogues. You will be arraigned before governors and kings because of me, as a witness before them. 10But the gospel must first be preached to all nations.* 11When they lead you away and hand you over, do not worry beforehand about what you are to say.[e] But say whatever will be given to you at that hour. For it will not be you who are speaking but the holy Spirit. 12Brother will hand over brother to death, and the father his child; children will rise up against parents and have them put to death. 13You will be hated by all because of my name. But the one who perseveres to the end will be saved.

Look, there he is!’ do not believe it. 22False messiahs and false prophets will arise and will perform signs and wonders in order to mislead, if that were possible, the elect. 23Be watchful! I have told it all to you beforehand.

The desolating abomination refers back to the OT event of the defiling of the temple by Antiochus Epiphanes IV, the Seleucid king in 167 B.C. (Dn 9:27; cf. 11:31; 12:11; 1 Mc 1:54; 6:7). Here it refers to a similar dramatic sacrilege in the future, a bad omen of the destruction that will befall Jerusalem.

[32]“But of that day or hour, no one knows, neither the angels in heaven, nor the Son, but only the Father. [33][n]Be watchful! Be alert! You do not know when the time will come. [34]It is like a man traveling abroad. He leaves home and places his servants in charge, each with his work, and orders the gatekeeper to be on the watch.[o] [35]Watch, therefore; you do not know when the lord of the house is coming, whether in the evening, or at midnight, or at cockcrow, or in the morning. [36]May he not come suddenly and find you sleeping. [37]What I say to you, I say to all: ‘Watch!’”

Jews and Romans reckoned time in different categories. Whereas the Jewish day began at sundown (see Gn 1:5), the Roman day began at sunrise. The Romans divided the day and night into two periods of twelve hours each, subdivided into three-hour segments. The length of “hours,” however, varied between summer and winter seasons to ensure uniformity. The Jewish day generally had three periods (Ps 55:18; cf. Neh 9:3, which lists a fourth), while the Roman day had four (first, third, sixth, ninth hours). The Jewish night was divided into three “watches” while the Roman night was divided into four, which are mentioned in this passage: evening, midnight, cockcrow, and early morning.

Mt 26:2-5; Lk 22:1-2; Jn 11:45-53

14 [1] The Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread were to take place in two days' time.[a] So the chief priests and the scribes were seeking a way to arrest him by treachery and put him to death. [2] They said, "Not during the festival, for fear that there may be a riot among the people."

Mt 26:6-13; Jn 12:1-8

[3]When he was in Bethany reclining at table in the house of Simon the leper,[b] a woman came with an alabaster jar of perfumed oil, costly genuine spikenard. She broke the alabaster jar and poured it on his head. [4]There were some who were indignant. “Why has there been this waste of perfumed oil? [5]It could have been sold for more than three hundred days’ wages and the money given to the poor.” They were infuriated with her. [6]Jesus said, “Let her alone. Why do you make trouble for her? She has done a good thing for me. [7]The poor you will always have with you, and whenever you wish you can do good to them, but you will not always have me. [8]She has done what she could. She has anticipated anointing my body for burial. [9]Amen, I say to you, wherever the gospel is proclaimed to the whole world, what she has done will be told in memory of her.”

The Betrayal by Judas

[10]*c*Then Judas Iscariot, one of the Twelve, went off to the chief priests to hand him over to them. [11]When they heard him they were pleased and promised to pay him money. Then he looked for an opportunity to hand him over.

Preparations for the Passover

12 *d*On the first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread, when they sacrificed the Passover lamb,* his disciples said to him, “Where do you want us to go and prepare for you to eat the Passover?” 13 He sent two of his disciples and said to them, “Go into the city and a man will meet you, carrying a jar of water.* Follow him. 14 Wherever he enters, say to the master of the house, ‘The Teacher says, “Where is my guest room where I may eat the Passover with my disciples?”’ 15 Then he will show you a large upper room furnished and ready. Make the preparations for us there.” 16 The disciples then went off, entered the city, and found it just as he had told them; and they prepared the Passover.

17 [e]When it was evening, he came with the Twelve. 18 And as they reclined at table and were eating, Jesus said, “Amen, I say to you, one of you will betray me, one who is eating with me.” 19 They began to be distressed and to say to him, one by one, “Surely it is not I?” 20 He said to them, “One of the Twelve, the one who dips with me into the dish. 21 For the Son of Man indeed goes, as it is written of him, but woe to that man by whom the Son of Man is betrayed. It would be better for that man if he had never been born.”

28But after I have been raised up, I shall go before you to Galilee.” 29Peter said to him, “Even though all should have their faith shaken, mine will not be.” 30Then Jesus said to him, “Amen, I say to you, this very night before the cock crows twice you will deny me three times.” 31But he vehemently replied, “Even though I should have to die with you, I will not deny you.” And they all spoke similarly.

Remain here and keep watch.” 35He advanced a little and fell to the ground and prayed that if it were possible the hour might pass by him; 36he said, “Abba, Father,* all things are possible to you. Take this cup away from me, but not what I will but what you will.” 37When he returned he found them asleep. He said to Peter, “Simon, are you asleep? Could you not keep watch for one hour? 38*Watch and pray that you may not undergo the test.[k] The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak.” 39Withdrawing again, he prayed, saying the same thing. 40Then he returned once more and found them asleep, for they could not keep their eyes open and did not know what to answer him. 41He returned a third time and said to them, “Are you still sleeping and taking your rest? It is enough. The hour has come. Behold, the Son of Man is to be handed over to sinners. 42Get up, let us go. See, my betrayer is at hand.”

The Betrayal and Arrest of Jesus

I

Mt 26:47-56; Lk 22:47-53; Jn 18:3-11

[43]*i*Then, while he was still speaking, Judas, one of the Twelve, arrived, accompanied by a crowd with swords and clubs who had come from the chief priests, the scribes, and the elders. [44]His betrayer had arranged a signal with them, saying, “The man I shall kiss is the one; arrest him and lead him away securely.” [45]He came and immediately went over to him and said, “Rabbi.” And he kissed him. [46]At this they laid hands on him and arrested him. [47]One of the bystanders drew his sword, struck the high priest’s servant, and cut off his ear. [48]Jesus said to them in reply, “Have you come out as against a robber, with swords and clubs, to seize me? [49]Day after day I was with you teaching in the temple area, yet you did not arrest me; but that the scriptures may be fulfilled.” [50]And they all left him and fled. [51]Now a young man followed him wearing nothing but a linen cloth about his body. They seized him, [52]but he left the cloth behind and ran off naked.

[53]*[m]They led Jesus away to the high priest, and all the chief priests and the elders and the scribes came together. [54]Peter followed him at a distance into the high priest's courtyard and was seated with the guards, warming himself at the fire. [55]The chief priests and the entire Sanhedrin kept trying to obtain testimony against Jesus in order to put him to death, but they found none. [56]Many gave false witness against him, but their testimony did not agree. [57]*Some took the stand and testified falsely against him, alleging, [58]"We heard him say, 'I will destroy this temple made with hands and within three days I will build another not made with hands.'"[n] [59]Even so their testimony did not agree. [60]The high priest rose before the assembly and questioned Jesus, saying, "Have you no answer? What are these men testifying against you?" [61]*But he was silent and answered nothing. Again the high priest asked him and said to him, "Are you the Messiah, the son of the Blessed One?" [62]Then Jesus answered, "I am; and 'you will see the Son of Man

  and coming with the clouds of heaven.'"[o]

An Unnamed Follower

The unnamed young follower of Jesus who appears in this climactic scene is not an accidental figure. In such a compact gospel as that of Mark, there is little room for incidentals.

But what does he bring to the story? What does he represent to the reader?

Those present at the arrest of Jesus included not only those followers we have come to know by name but also some whose identities are never known. Jesus touched many who apparently followed him without fanfare. It happened then and it happens now.

What are we to make of the simple linen cloth worn by this man? Is this a literary technique included only to give drama to the story, or is it intended to prefigure the linen cloth that will wrap Jesus in death? Does he leave it behind in personal terror or does he leave it behind in anticipation of Jesus' eventual need for it?

And what are we to make of the young man running off? The scene is somewhat reminiscent of the rich man who went away sad when told that to inherit eternal life he is to sell all his possessions (Mk 10:17-22). Is this young follower who literally left everything behind as he departed an intentional "counter-reminder" of that rich man whose fate we never know? Is the young man at least to be praised for staying on the scene longer than the named disciples of Jesus who fled immediately?

Discipleship requires everything of us: following without recognition or fanfare, being present with Jesus and his followers even in the dark hours, simplicity of life, and the willingness to stay the course rather than flee the unexpected.

63 At that the high priest tore his garments and said, "What further need have we of witnesses? 64 You have heard the blasphemy. What do you think?" They all condemned him as deserving to die. 65 Some began to spit on him. They blindfolded him and struck him and said to him, "Prophesy!" And the guards greeted him with blows.[p]

[66][q]While Peter was below in the courtyard, one of the high priest’s maids came along. [67]Seeing Peter warming himself, she looked intently at him and said, “You too were with the Nazarene, Jesus.” [68]*But he denied it saying, “I neither know nor understand what you are talking about.” So he went out into the outer court. [Then the cock crowed.] [69]The maid saw him and began again to say to the bystanders, “This man is one of them.” [70]Once again he denied it. A little later the bystanders said to Peter once more, “Surely you are one of them; for you too are a Galilean.” [71]He began to curse and to swear, “I do not know this man about whom you are talking.” [72]And immediately a cock crowed a second time. Then Peter remembered the word that Jesus had said to him, “Before the cock crows twice you will deny me three times.” He broke down and wept.[r]

Pontius Pilate

There are two ways to evaluate the figure of Pilate. One is from the perspective of the gospels, which portray him in relatively benign terms. The gospels generally show a man caught in the middle, who recognized Jesus’ innocence but felt pressured by the Jewish authorities to convict him of political intrigue.

The other perspective is from sources outside the NT, especially the Jewish writers Philo and Josephus. These sources portray a man much more cruel and ineffectual. Since the gospels may well have had apologetic interests in mind, so as not to offend the Roman authorities, their portrait of Pilate may be softened. Luke, however, records one instance, otherwise unknown in any source, that is consistent with a harsh ruler (Lk 13:1).

Pilate was appointed prefect of Judea in A.D. 26 or 27. As the governor of this Roman province, his primary duty was to protect Roman interests and to maintain order. He had command over a number of troops and also held reserved powers for capital punishment. Philo and Josephus assert that Pilate regularly clashed with his Jewish subjects (see NAB footnote on Lk 13:1). On one occasion he confiscated funds from the temple in Jerusalem to be used for construction of an aqueduct. On another occasion he introduced Roman military standards into Jerusalem, a strict violation of the Jewish prohibition of idols in the holy city. Pilate also harshly subdued a number of rebellious Samaritans at Mount Gerizim, killing many of them. This last incident proved to be disastrous. By A.D. 37, Pilate’s rule had become so troublesome that he was recalled to Rome and removed from office.

Whatever the final assessment of the man, Pilate's role in the passion and death of Jesus must be acknowledged. The passion narratives of the gospels clearly acknowledge Pilate's condemnation of Jesus to crucifixion, a Roman form of execution often used for political criminals. Matthew's story of the intervention of Pilate's wife, proclaiming Jesus' innocence because of a dream (27:19), fits with Matthew's story of how God ultimately directed the fate of Jesus, even while he suffered wrongly at the hands of wicked people. It does not compensate for Pilate's final decision. His action of "washing his hands" of guilt has become a standard gesture of assuming no responsibility for the consequences of one's decisions.

Paradoxically, among Ethiopic and Coptic Christians, Pilate's role in condemning Jesus to death earned him sainthood, because he fulfilled God's plan of salvation history by having Jesus die for sinful humanity. Sadly, the Christian tendency to lessen Pilate's responsibility has been accompanied by increased emphasis on Jewish responsibility for the death of Jesus, something not justified by the historical evidence.

In 1961 an important archaeological reference to Pilate was unearthed in Caesarea Maritima that confirmed Pilate's governorship of Judea. The "Pilate stone," as it is called, notes that Pilate was "prefect" (a military term, as compared with the secular term "procurator") of Judea. See further explanation at John 18:33.

15 [1][a]As soon as morning came,[b] the chief priests with the elders and the scribes, that is, the whole Sanhedrin, held a council.* They bound Jesus, led him away, and handed him over to Pilate. [2]Pilate questioned him, “Are you the king of the Jews?”* He said to him in reply, “You say so.” [3]The chief priests accused him of many things. [4]Again Pilate questioned him, “Have you no answer? See how many things they accuse you of.” [5]Jesus gave him no further answer, so that Pilate was amazed.

The Sentence of Death*

[6]Now on the occasion of the feast he used to release to them one prisoner whom they requested.[c] [7]A man called Barabbas* was then in prison along with the rebels who had committed murder in a rebellion. [8]The crowd came forward and began to ask him to do for them as he was accustomed. [9]Pilate answered, “Do you want me to release to you the king of the Jews?” [10]For he knew that it was out of envy that the chief priests had handed him over. [11]But the chief priests stirred up the crowd to have him release Barabbas for them instead. [12]Pilate again said to them in reply, “Then what [do you want] me to do with [the man you call] the king of the Jews?” [13]*They shouted again, “Crucify him.” [14]Pilate said to them, “Why? What evil has he done?” They only shouted the louder, “Crucify him.” [15]*So Pilate, wishing to satisfy the crowd, released Barabbas to them and, after he had Jesus scourged, handed him over to be crucified.

Mockery by the Soldiers

16*[d]The soldiers led him away inside the palace, that is, the praetorium, and assembled the whole cohort. 17They clothed him in purple and, weaving a crown of thorns, placed it on him. 18They began to salute him with, “Hail, King of the Jews!” 19and kept striking his head with a reed and spitting upon him. They knelt before him in homage. 20And when they had mocked him, they stripped him of the purple cloak, dressed him in his own clothes, and led him out to crucify him.

[26]The inscription of the charge against him read, "The King of the Jews." [27]With him they crucified two revolutionaries, one on his right and one on his left.[h] [[28]] [29]*Those passing by reviled him, shaking their heads and saying,[i] "Aha! You who would destroy the temple and rebuild it in three days, [30]save yourself by coming down from the cross." [31]Likewise the chief priests, with the scribes, mocked him among themselves and said, "He saved others; he cannot save himself. [32]Let the Messiah, the King of Israel, come down now from the cross that we may see and believe." Those who were crucified with him also kept abusing him.[j]

Archaeologists have identified the site of the Church of the Holy Sepulcher in the heart of the Old City of Jerusalem as the most likely location of Golgatha. Since ancient times Christians have revered the site as the place of Jesus' burial, despite some scholarly proposals that locate Jesus' tomb elsewhere. In Jesus' day, Golgatha was a quarry outside the city walls.

33At noon darkness came over the whole land until three in the afternoon. 34And at three o’clock Jesus cried out in a loud voice, “Eloi, Eloi, lema sabachthani?”* which is translated, “My God, my God, why have you forsaken me?”[k] 35*Some of the bystanders who heard it said, “Look, he is calling Elijah.” 36One of them ran, soaked a sponge with wine, put it on a reed, and gave it to him to drink, saying, “Wait, let us see if Elijah comes to take him down.” 37Jesus gave a loud cry and breathed his last. 38*The veil of the sanctuary was torn in two from top to bottom. 39*[l]When the centurion who stood facing him saw how he breathed his last he said, “Truly this man was the Son of God!” 40*There were also women looking on from a distance.[m] Among them were Mary Magdalene, Mary the mother of the younger James and of Joses, and Salome. 41These women had followed him when he was in Galilee and ministered to him. There were also many other women who had come up with him to Jerusalem.

Jesus, I can hardly imagine the abandonment you must have felt on the cross. As I look at our war-torn countries around the world I see many whose loved ones have been tragically killed or maimed. I hear them echo your cry of abandonment. Reveal to us how to reach out to those who feel forsaken by God.

The Burial of Jesus

[42] *n*When it was already evening, since it was the day of preparation, the day before the sabbath, [43] Joseph of Arimathea,* a distinguished member of the council, who was himself awaiting the kingdom of God, came and courageously went to Pilate and asked for the body of Jesus. [44] Pilate was amazed that he was already dead. He summoned the centurion and asked him if Jesus had already died. [45] And when he learned of it from the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph. [46] Having bought a linen cloth, he took him down, wrapped him in the linen cloth and laid him in a tomb that had been hewn out of the rock. Then he rolled a stone against the entrance to the tomb. [47] Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of Joses watched where he was laid.

Faithful Women Followers

That the gospels make mention of women followers of Jesus, some of them by name, is just one more indication of the barriers that Jesus overcame as he proclaimed the kingdom of God. Class, race, culture, and gender were seemingly unimportant among the followers of Jesus. We hear of tax collectors, sinners, a member of the Sanhedrin, single women and groups of women, young and old men, the blind and lame, and the hale and hearty—an unheard of combination in any social institution of the time.

The faithfulness of the women is noted or described on more than one occasion. They are with Jesus at his crucifixion when by most accounts his disciples have fled (here, and cf. Mt 27:55-56; Lk 23:48-49; Jn 19:25). Earlier, women are known to have traveled with Jesus and the Twelve and even used their resources to provide for their needs (cf. Lk 8:1-3). Finally, women are among the first to witness the reality of the risen Jesus.

Their faithfulness placed them near Jesus in all circumstances and challenges us to find ourselves with him too.

16 [1]When the sabbath was over,[a] Mary Magdalene, Mary, the mother of James, and Salome bought spices so that they might go and anoint him.[b] [2]Very early when the sun had risen, on the first day of the week, they came to the tomb. [3]They were saying to one another, “Who will roll back the stone for us from the entrance to the tomb?” [4]When they looked up, they saw that the stone had been rolled back; it was very large. [5]On entering the tomb they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a white robe, and they were utterly amazed.[c] [6]He said to them, “Do not be amazed! You seek Jesus of Nazareth, the crucified. He has been raised; he is not here. Behold, the place where they laid him. [7]But go and tell his disciples and Peter, ‘He is going before you to Galilee; there you will see him, as he told you.’”[d] [8]Then they went out and fled from the tomb, seized with trembling and bewilderment. They said nothing to anyone, for they were afraid.

An Interactive Ending?

Scholars have long debated whether Mark originally ended at 16:8. The existence of several alternative endings indicates that the problem is an ancient one. On the one hand, the verse seems an odd way to end a gospel. Why conclude on a negative note that the women said nothing of their experience? On the other hand, the alternative endings show signs of being formed from other NT materials that were clearly not part of the original Gospel of Mark. While no solution is totally adequate, there is a possible explanation for concluding the gospel with v. 8. It invites Christian readers, who know well the message of the resurrection, to take up the story of Jesus and his disciples in their own lives.

12[g]After this he appeared in another form to two of them walking along on their way to the country. 13They returned and told the others; but they did not believe them either.

14 [h][But] later, as the eleven were at table, he appeared to them and rebuked them for their unbelief and hardness of heart because they had not believed those who saw him after he had been raised. 15 [i]He said to them, "Go into the whole world and proclaim the gospel to every creature. 16 Whoever believes and is baptized will be saved; whoever does not believe will be condemned. 17 These signs will accompany those who believe: in my name they will drive out demons, they will speak new languages. 18 They will pick up serpents [with their hands], and if they drink any deadly thing, it will not harm them. They will lay hands on the sick, and they will recover."[j]

The Shorter Ending

[And they reported all the instructions briefly to Peter’s companions. Afterwards Jesus himself, through them, sent forth from east to west the sacred and imperishable proclamation of eternal salvation. Amen.]

1:1-13 The prologue of the Gospel according to Mark begins with the title (1:1) followed by three events preparatory to Jesus’ preaching: (1) the appearance in the Judean wilderness of John, baptizer, preacher of repentance, and precursor of Jesus (1:2-8); (2) the baptism of Jesus, at which a voice from heaven acknowledges Jesus to be God’s Son, and the holy Spirit descends on him (1:9-11); (3) the temptation of Jesus by Satan (1:12-13).

1:1 The gospel of Jesus Christ [the Son of God]: the “good news” of salvation in and through Jesus, crucified and risen, acknowledged by the Christian community as Messiah (8:29; 14:61-62) and Son of God (1:11; 9:7; 15:39), although some important manuscripts here omit the Son of God.

1:2-3 Although Mark attributes the prophecy to Isaiah, the text is a combination of Malachi 3:1; Isaiah 40:3; Exodus 23:20; cf. Matthew 11:10; Luke 7:27. John’s ministry is seen as God’s prelude to the saving mission of his Son. The way of the Lord: this prophecy of Deutero-Isaiah concerning the end of the Babylonian exile is here applied to the coming of Jesus; John the Baptist is to prepare the way for him.

1:6 Clothed in camel’s hair … waist: the Baptist’s garb recalls that of Elijah in 2 Kings 1:8. Jesus speaks of the Baptist as Elijah who has already come (9:11-13; Mt 17:10-12; cf. Mal 3:23-24; Lk 1:17).

1:8-9 Through the life-giving baptism with the holy Spirit (1:8), Jesus will create a new people of God. But first he identifies himself with the people of Israel in submitting to John’s baptism of repentance and in bearing on their behalf the burden of God’s decisive judgment (1:9; cf. 1:4). As in the desert of Sinai, so here in the wilderness of Judea, Israel’s sonship with God is to be renewed.

1:10-11 He saw the heavens … and the Spirit … upon him: indicating divine intervention in fulfillment of promise. Here the descent of the Spirit on Jesus is meant, anointing him for his ministry; cf. Isaiah 11:2; 42:1; 61:1; 63:9. A voice … with you I am well pleased: God’s acknowledgment of Jesus as his unique Son, the object of his love. His approval of Jesus is the assurance that Jesus will fulfill his messianic mission of salvation.

1:12-13 The same Spirit who descended on Jesus in his baptism now drives him into the desert for forty days. The result is radical confrontation and temptation by Satan who attempts to frustrate the work of God. The presence of wild beasts may indicate the horror and danger of the desert regarded as the abode of demons or may reflect the paradise motif of harmony among all creatures; cf. Isaiah 11:6-9. The presence of ministering angels to sustain Jesus recalls the angel who guided the Israelites in the desert in the first Exodus (Ex 14:19; 23:20) and the angel who supplied nourishment to Elijah in the wilderness (1 Kgs 19:5-7). The combined forces of good and evil were present to Jesus in the desert. His sustained obedience brings forth the new Israel of God there where Israel’s rebellion had brought death and alienation.

1:14-15 After John had been arrested: in the plan of God, Jesus was not to proclaim the good news of salvation prior to the termination of the Baptist's active mission. Galilee: in the Marcan account, scene of the major part of Jesus' public ministry before his arrest and condemnation. The gospel of God: not only the good news from God but about God at work in Jesus Christ. This is the time of fulfillment: i.e., of God's promises. The kingdom of God … Repent: see the note on Matthew 3:2.

1:16-20 These verses narrate the call of the first Disciples. See the notes on Matthew 4:18-22 and 4:20.

1:21-45 The account of a single day's ministry of Jesus on a sabbath in and outside the synagogue of Capernaum (1:21-31) combines teaching and miracles of exorcism and healing. Mention is not made of the content of the teaching but of the effect of astonishment and alarm on the people. Jesus' teaching with authority, making an absolute claim on the hearer, was in the best tradition of the ancient prophets, not of the scribes. The narrative continues with events that evening (1:32-34; see the notes on Mt 8:14-17) and the next day (1:35-39). The cleansing in Mark 1:40-45 stands as an isolated story.

1:23 An unclean spirit: so called because of the spirit's resistance to the holiness of God. The spirit knows and fears the power of Jesus to destroy his influence; cf. Mark 1:32, 34; 3:11; 6:13.

1:24-25 The Holy One of God: not a confession but an attempt to ward off Jesus' power, reflecting the notion that use of the precise name of an opposing spirit would guarantee mastery over him. Jesus silenced the cry of the unclean spirit and drove him out of the man.

1:24 What have you to do with us?: see the note on John 2:4.

1:40 A leper: for the various forms of skin disease, see Leviticus 13:1-50 and the note on Leviticus 13:2-4. There are only two instances in the Old Testament in which God is shown to have cured a leper (Nm 12:10-15; 2 Kgs 5:1-14). The law of Moses provided for the ritual purification of a leper. In curing the leper, Jesus assumes that the priests will reinstate the cured man into the religious community. See also the note on Luke 5:14.

2:1–3:6 This section relates a series of conflicts between Jesus and the scribes and Pharisees in which the growing opposition of the latter leads to their plot to put Jesus to death (3:6).

2:1-2 He was at home: to the crowds that gathered in and outside the house Jesus preached the word, i.e., the gospel concerning the nearness of the kingdom and the necessity of repentance and faith (1:14).

2:5 It was the faith of the paralytic and those who carried him that moved Jesus to heal the sick man. Accounts of other miracles of Jesus reveal more and more his emphasis on faith as the requisite for exercising his healing powers (5:34; 9:23-24; 10:52).

2:6 Scribes: trained in oral interpretation of the written law; in Mark's gospel, adversaries of Jesus, with one exception (12:28, 34).

2:7 He is blaspheming: an accusation made here and repeated during the trial of Jesus (14:60-64).

2:10 But that you may know that the Son of Man … on earth: although Mark 2:8-9 are addressed to the scribes, the sudden interruption of thought and structure in Mark 2:10 seems not addressed to them nor to the paralytic. Moreover, the early public use of the designation "Son of Man" to unbelieving scribes is most unlikely. The most probable explanation is that Mark's insertion of Mark 2:10 is a commentary addressed to Christians for whom he recalls this miracle and who already accept in faith that Jesus is Messiah and Son of God.

2:13 He taught them: see the note on Mark 1:21-45.

2:14 As he passed by: see the note on Mark 1:16-20. Levi, son of Alphaeus: see the note on Matthew 9:9. Customs post: such tax collectors paid a fixed sum for the right to collect customs duties within their districts. Since whatever they could collect above this amount constituted their profit, the abuse of extortion was widespread among them. Hence, Jewish customs officials were regarded as sinners (2:16), outcasts of society, and disgraced along with their families. He got up and followed him: i.e., became a disciple of Jesus.

2:15 In his house: cf. Mark 2:1; Matthew 9:10. Luke 5:29 clearly calls it Levi's house.

2:16-17 This and the following conflict stories reflect a similar pattern: a statement of fact, a question of protest, and a reply by Jesus.

2:17 Do not need a physician: this maxim of Jesus with its implied irony was uttered to silence his adversaries who objected that he ate with tax collectors and sinners (2:16). Because the scribes and Pharisees were self-righteous, they were not capable of responding to Jesus' call to repentance and faith in the gospel.

2:18-22 This conflict over the question of fasting has the same pattern as Mark 2:16-17; see the notes on Matthew 9:15; 9:16-17.

2:19 Can the wedding guests fast?: the bridal metaphor expresses a new relationship of love between God and his people in the person and mission of Jesus to his disciples. It is the inauguration of the new and joyful messianic time of fulfillment and the passing of the old. Any attempt at assimilating the Pharisaic practice of fasting, or of extending the preparatory discipline of John's disciples beyond the arrival of the bridegroom, would be as futile as sewing a piece of unshrunken cloth on an old cloak or pouring new wine into old wineskins with the resulting destruction of both cloth and wine (2:21-22). Fasting is rendered superfluous during the earthly ministry of Jesus; cf. Mark 2:20.

2:23-28 This conflict regarding the sabbath follows the same pattern as in Mark 2:18-22.

2:25-26 Have you never read what David did?: Jesus defends the action of his disciples on the basis of 1 Samuel 21:2-7 in which an exception is made to the regulation of Leviticus 24:9 because of the extreme hunger of David and his men. According to 1 Samuel, the priest who gave the bread to David was Ahimelech, father of Abiathar.

2:27 The sabbath was made for man: a reaffirmation of the divine intent of the sabbath to benefit Israel as contrasted with the restrictive Pharisaic tradition added to the law.

2:28 The Son of Man is lord even of the sabbath: Mark's comment on the theological meaning of the incident is to benefit his Christian readers; see the note on Mark 2:10.

3:1-5 Here Jesus is again depicted in conflict with his adversaries over the question of sabbath-day observance. His opponents were already ill disposed toward him because they regarded Jesus as a violator of the sabbath. Jesus' question Is it lawful to do good on the sabbath rather than to do evil? places the matter in the broader theological context outside the casuistry of the scribes. The answer is obvious. Jesus heals the man with the withered hand in the sight of all and reduces his opponents to silence; cf. John 5:17-18.

3:6 In reporting the plot of the Pharisees and Herodians to put Jesus to death after this series of conflicts in Galilee, Mark uses a pattern that recurs in his account of later controversies in Jerusalem (11:17-18; 12:13-17). The help of the Herodians, supporters of Herod Antipas, tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, is needed to take action against Jesus. Both series of conflicts point to their gravity and to the impending passion of Jesus.

3:7-19 This overview of the Galilean ministry manifests the power of Jesus to draw people to himself through his teaching and deeds of power. The crowds of Jews from many regions surround Jesus (3:7-12). This phenomenon prepares the way for creating a new people of Israel. The choice and mission of the Twelve is the prelude (3:13-19).

3:13 He went up the mountain: here and elsewhere the mountain is associated with solemn moments and acts in the mission and self-revelation of Jesus (6:46; 9:2-8; 13:3). Jesus acts with authority as he summoned those whom he wanted and they came to him.

3:14-15 He appointed twelve [whom he also named apostles] that they might be with him: literally, "he made," i.e., instituted them as apostles to extend his messianic mission through them (6:7-13). See the notes on Matthew 10:1 and 10:2-4.

3:16 Simon, whom he named Peter: Mark indicates that Simon's name was changed on this occasion. Peter is first in all lists of the apostles (Mt 10:2; Lk 6:14; Acts 1:13; cf. 1 Cor 15:5-8).

3:20-35 Within the narrative of the coming of Jesus' relatives (3:20-21) is inserted the account of the unbelieving scribes from Jerusalem who attributed Jesus' power over demons to Beelzebul (3:22-30); see the note on Mark 5:21-43. There were those even among the relatives of Jesus who disbelieved and regarded Jesus as out of his mind (3:21). Against this background, Jesus is informed of the arrival of his mother and brothers [and sisters] (3:32). He responds by showing that not family ties but doing God's will (Mk 3:35) is decisive in the kingdom; cf. the note on Matthew 12:46-50.

3:20 He came home: cf. Mark 2:1-2 and see the note on Mark 2:15.

3:22 By Beelzebul: see the note on Matthew 10:25. Two accusations are leveled against Jesus: (1) that he is possessed by an unclean spirit and (2) by the prince of demons he drives out demons. Jesus answers the second charge by a parable (3:24-27) and responds to the first charge in Mark 3:28-29.

3:29 Whoever blasphemes against the holy Spirit: this sin is called an everlasting sin because it attributes to Satan, who is the power of evil, what is actually the work of the holy Spirit, namely, victory over the demons.

3:32 Your brothers: see the note on Mark 6:3.

4:1-34 In parables (Mk 4:2): see the note on Matthew 13:3. The use of parables is typical of Jesus' enigmatic method of teaching the crowds (4:2-9, 12) as compared with the interpretation of the parables he gives to his disciples (4:10-25, 33-34) to each group according to its capacity to understand (4:9-11). The key feature of the parable at hand is the sowing of the seed (Mk 4:3), representing the breakthrough of the kingdom of God into the world. The various types of soil refer to the diversity of response accorded the word of God (4:4-7). The climax of the parable is the harvest of thirty, sixty, and a hundredfold, indicating the consummation of the kingdom (4:8). Thus both the present and the future action of God, from the initiation to the fulfillment of the kingdom, is presented through this and other parables (4:26-29, 30-32).

4:1 By the sea: the shore of the Sea of Galilee or a boat near the shore (2:13; 3:7-8) is the place where Mark depicts Jesus teaching the crowds. By contrast the mountain is the scene of Jesus at prayer (6:46) or in the process of forming his disciples (3:13; 9:2).

4:3-8 See the note on Matthew 13:3-8.

4:11-12 These verses are to be viewed against their background in Mark 3:6, 22 concerning the unbelief and opposition Jesus encountered in his ministry. It is against this background that the distinction in Jesus' method becomes clear of presenting the kingdom to the disbelieving crowd in one manner and to the disciples in another. To the former it is presented in parables and the truth remains hidden; for the latter the parable is interpreted and the mystery is partially revealed because of their faith; see the notes on Matthew 13:11 and 13:13.

4:13-20 See the note on Matthew 13:18-23.

4:26-29 Only Mark records the parable of the seed's growth. Sower and harvester are the same. The emphasis is on the power of the seed to grow of itself without human intervention (4:27). Mysteriously it produces blade and ear and full grain (4:28). Thus the kingdom of God initiated by Jesus in proclaiming the word develops quietly yet powerfully until it is fully established by him at the final judgment (4:29); cf. Revelation 14:15.

4:32 The universality of the kingdom of God is indicated here; cf. Ezekiel 17:23; 31:6; Daniel 4:17-19.

4:35–5:43 After the chapter on parables, Mark narrates four miracle stories: Mark 4:35-41; 5:1-20; and two joined together in Mark 5:21-43. See also the notes on Matthew 8:23-34 and 9:8-26.

4:39 Quiet! Be still!: as in the case of silencing a demon (1:25), Jesus rebukes the wind and subdues the turbulence of the sea by a mere word; see the note on Matthew 8:26.

4:41 Jesus is here depicted as exercising power over wind and sea. In the Christian community this event was seen as a sign of Jesus' saving presence amid persecutions that threatened its existence.

5:1 The territory of the Gerasenes: the reference is to pagan territory; cf. Isaiah 65:1. Another reading is "Gadarenes"; see the note on Matthew 8:28.

5:2-6 The man was an outcast from society, dominated by unclean spirits (5:8, 13), living among the tombs. The prostration before Jesus (5:6) indicates Jesus' power over evil spirits.

5:7 What have you to do with me?: cf. Mark 1:24 and see the note on John 2:4.

5:9 Legion is my name: the demons were numerous and the condition of the possessed man was extremely serious; cf. Matthew 12:45.

5:11 Herd of swine: see the note on Matthew 8:30.

5:19 Go home: Jesus did not accept the man's request to remain with him as a disciple (Mk 5:18), yet invited him to announce to his own people what the Lord had done for him, i.e., proclaim the gospel message to his pagan family; cf. Mark 1:14, 39; 3:14; 13:10.

5:21-43 The story of the raising to life of Jairus's daughter is divided into two parts: Mark 5:21-24; 5:35-43. Between these two separated parts the account of the cure of the hemorrhage victim (5:25-34) is interposed. This technique of intercalating or sandwiching one story within another occurs several times in Mark 3:19b-21; 3:22-30; 3:31-35; 6:6b-13; 6:14-29; 6:30; 11:12-14; 11:15-19; 11:20-25; 14:53; 14:54; 14:55-65; 14:66-73.

5:23 Lay your hands on her: this act for the purpose of healing is frequent in Mark 6:5; 7:32-35; 8:23-25; 16:18 and is also found in Matthew 9:18; Luke 4:40; 13:13; Acts 9:17; 28:8.

5:28 Both in the case of Jairus and his daughter (5:23) and in the case of the hemorrhage victim, the inner conviction that physical contact (5:30) accompanied by faith in Jesus' saving power could effect a cure was rewarded.

5:35 The faith of Jairus was put to a twofold test: (1) that his daughter might be cured and, now that she had died, (2) that she might be restored to life. His faith contrasts with the lack of faith of the crowd.

5:39 Not dead but asleep: the New Testament often refers to death as sleep (Mt 27:52; Jn 11:11; 1 Cor 15:6; 1 Thes 4:13-15); see the note on Matthew 9:24.

5:41 Arise: the Greek verb egeirein is the verb generally used to express resurrection from death (6:14, 16; Mt 11:5; Lk 7:14) and Jesus' own resurrection (16:6; Mt 28:6; Lk 24:6).

6:1 His native place: the Greek word patris here refers to Nazareth (cf. 1:9; Lk 4:16, 23-24) though it can also mean native land.

6:2-6 See the note on Matthew 13:54-58.

6:3 Is he not the carpenter?: no other gospel calls Jesus a carpenter. Some witnesses have "the carpenter's son," as in Matthew 13:55. Son of Mary: contrary to Jewish custom, which calls a man the son of his father, this expression may reflect Mark's own faith that God is the Father of Jesus (1:1, 11; 8:38; 13:32; 14:36). The brother of James … Simon: in Semitic usage, the terms "brother," "sister" are applied not only to children of the same parents, but to nephews, nieces, cousins, half-brothers, and half-sisters; cf. Genesis 14:16; 29:15; Leviticus 10:4. While one cannot suppose that the meaning of a Greek word should be sought in the first place from Semitic usage, the Septuagint often translates the Hebrew ʾāḥ by the Greek word adelphos, "brother," as in the cited passages, a fact that may argue for a similar breadth of meaning in some New Testament passages. For instance, there is no doubt that in v. 17, "brother" is used of Philip, who was actually the half-brother of Herod Antipas. On the other hand, Mark may have understood the terms literally; see also Matthew 3:31-32; 12:46; 13:55-56; Luke 8:19; John 7:3, 5. The question of meaning here would not have arisen but for the faith of the church in Mary's perpetual virginity.

6:4 A prophet is not without honor except … in his own house: a saying that finds parallels in other literatures, especially Jewish and Greek, but without reference to a prophet. Comparing himself to previous Hebrew prophets whom the people rejected, Jesus intimates his own eventual rejection by the nation especially in view of the dishonor his own relatives had shown him (3:21) and now his townspeople as well.

6:5 He was not able to perform any mighty deed there: according to Mark, Jesus' power could not take effect because of a person's lack of faith.

6:7-13 The preparation for the mission of the Twelve is seen in the call (1) of the first disciples to be fishers of men (1:16-20), (2) then of the Twelve set apart to be with Jesus and to receive authority to preach and expel demons (3:13-19). Now they are given the specific mission to exercise that authority in word and power as representatives of Jesus during the time of their formation.

6:8-9 In Mark the use of a walking stick (6:8) and sandals (6:9) is permitted, but not in Matthew 10:10 nor in Luke 10:4. Mark does not mention any prohibition to visit pagan territory and to enter Samaritan towns. These differences indicate a certain adaptation to conditions in and outside of Palestine and suggest in Mark's account a later activity in the church. For the rest, Jesus required of his apostles a total dependence on God for food and shelter; cf. Mark 6:35-44; 8:1-9.

6:10-11 Remaining in the same house as a guest (6:10) rather than moving to another offering greater comfort avoided any impression of seeking advantage for oneself and prevented dishonor to one's host. Shaking the dust off one's feet served as testimony against those who rejected the call to repentance.

6:13 Anointed with oil … cured them: a common medicinal remedy, but seen here as a vehicle of divine power for healing.

6:14-16 The various opinions about Jesus anticipate the theme of his identity that reaches its climax in Mark 8:27-30.

6:14 King Herod: see the note on Matthew 14:1.

6:17-29 Similarities are to be noted between Mark's account of the imprisonment and death of John the Baptist in this pericope, and that of the passion of Jesus (15:1-47). Herod and Pilate, each in turn, acknowledges the holiness of life of one over whom he unjustly exercises the power of condemnation and death (6:26-27; 15:9-10, 14-15). The hatred of Herodias toward John parallels that of the Jewish leaders toward Jesus. After the deaths of John and of Jesus, well-disposed persons request the bodies of the victims of Herod and of Pilate in turn to give them respectful burial (6:29; 15:45-46).

6:19 Herodias: see the note on Matthew 14:3.

6:30 Apostles: here, and in some manuscripts at Mark 3:14, Mark calls apostles (i.e., those sent forth) the Twelve whom Jesus sends as his emissaries, empowering them to preach, to expel demons, and to cure the sick (6:13). Only after Pentecost is the title used in the technical sense.

6:31-34 The withdrawal of Jesus with his disciples to a desert place to rest attracts a great number of people to follow them. Toward this people of the new exodus Jesus is moved with pity; he satisfies their spiritual hunger by teaching them many things, thus gradually showing himself the faithful shepherd of a new Israel; cf. Numbers 27:17; Ezekiel 34:15.

6:35-44 See the note on Matthew 14:13-21. Compare this section with Mark 8:1-9. The various accounts of the multiplication of loaves and fishes, two each in Mark and in Matthew and one each in Luke and in John, indicate the wide interest of the early church in their eucharistic gatherings; see, e.g., Mark 6:41; 8:6; 14:22; and recall also the sign of bread in Exodus 16; Deuteronomy 8:3-16; Psalms 78:24-25; 105:40; Wisdom 16:20-21.

6:40 The people … in rows by hundreds and by fifties: reminiscent of the groupings of Israelites encamped in the desert (Ex 18:21-25) and of the wilderness tradition of the prophets depicting the transformation of the wasteland into pastures where the true shepherd feeds his flock (Ez 34:25-26) and makes his people beneficiaries of messianic grace.

6:41 On the language of this verse as eucharistic (cf. 14:22), see the notes on Matthew 14:19, 20. Jesus observed the Jewish table ritual of blessing God before partaking of food.

6:45-52 See the note on Matthew 14:22-33.

6:45 To the other side toward Bethsaida: a village at the northeastern shore of the Sea of Galilee.

6:46 He went off to the mountain to pray: see Mark 1:35-38. In John 6:15 Jesus withdrew to evade any involvement in the false messianic hopes of the multitude.

6:48 Walking on the sea: see the notes on Matthew 14:22-33 and on John 6:19.

6:50 It is I, do not be afraid!: literally, "I am." This may reflect the divine revelatory formula of Exodus 3:14; Isaiah 41:4, 10, 14; 43:1-3, 10, 13. Mark implies the hidden identity of Jesus as Son of God.

6:52 They had not understood … the loaves: the revelatory character of this sign and that of the walking on the sea completely escaped the disciples. Their hearts were hardened: in Mark 3:5-6 hardness of heart was attributed to those who did not accept Jesus and plotted his death. Here the same disposition prevents the disciples from comprehending Jesus' self-revelation through signs; cf. Mark 8:17.

7:1-23 See the note on Matthew 15:1-20. Against the Pharisees' narrow, legalistic, and external practices of piety in matters of purification (7:2-5), external worship (7:6-7), and observance of commandments, Jesus sets in opposition the true moral intent of the divine law (7:8-13). But he goes beyond contrasting the law and Pharisaic interpretation of it. The parable of Mark 7:14-15 in effect sets aside the law itself in respect to clean and unclean food. He thereby opens the way for unity between Jew and Gentile in the kingdom of God, intimated by Jesus' departure for pagan territory beyond Galilee. For similar contrast see Mark 2:1–3:6; 3:20-35; 6:1-6.

7:5 Tradition of the elders: the body of detailed, unwritten, human laws regarded by the scribes and Pharisees to have the same binding force as that of the Mosaic law; cf. Galatians 1:14.

7:11 Qorban: a formula for a gift to God, dedicating the offering to the temple, so that the giver might continue to use it for himself but not give it to others, even needy parents.

7:16 Mark 7:16, "Anyone who has ears to hear ought to hear," is omitted because it is lacking in some of the best Greek manuscripts and was probably transferred here by scribes from Mark 4:9, 23.

7:17 Away from the crowd … the parable: in this context of privacy the term parable refers to something hidden, about to be revealed to the disciples; cf. Mark 4:10–11, 34. Jesus sets the Mosaic food laws in the context of the kingdom of God where they are abrogated, and he declares moral defilement the only cause of uncleanness.

7:19 (Thus he declared all foods clean): if this bold declaration goes back to Jesus, its force was not realized among Jewish Christians in the early church; cf. Acts 10:1–11:18.

7:24-37 The withdrawal of Jesus to the district of Tyre may have been for a respite (7:24), but he soon moved onward to Sidon and, by way of the Sea of Galilee, to the Decapolis. These districts provided a Gentile setting for the extension of his ministry of healing because the people there acknowledged his power (7:29, 37). The actions attributed to Jesus (7:33-35) were also used by healers of the time.

7:27-28 The figure of a household in which children at table are fed first and then their leftover food is given to the dogs under the table is used effectively to acknowledge the prior claim of the Jews to the ministry of Jesus; however, Jesus accedes to the Gentile woman’s plea for the cure of her afflicted daughter because of her faith.

7:36 The more they proclaimed it: the same verb proclaim attributed here to the crowd in relation to the miracles of Jesus is elsewhere used in Mark for the preaching of the gospel on the part of Jesus, of his disciples, and of the Christian community (1:14; 13:10; 14:9). Implied in the action of the crowd is a recognition of the salvific mission of Jesus; see the note on Matthew 11:5-6.

8:1-10 The two accounts of the multiplication of loaves and fishes (8:1-10; 6:31-44) have eucharistic significance. Their similarity of structure and themes but dissimilarity of detail are considered by many to refer to a single event that, however, developed in two distinct traditions, one Jewish Christian and the other Gentile Christian, since Jesus in Mark’s presentation (7:24-37) has extended his saving mission to the Gentiles.

8:6 See the note on Mark 6:41.

8:11-12 The objection of the Pharisees that Jesus’ miracles are unsatisfactory for proving the arrival of God’s kingdom is comparable to the request of the crowd for a sign in John 6:30-31. Jesus’ response shows that a sign originating in human demand will not be provided; cf. Numbers 14:11, 22.

8:15 The leaven of the Pharisees … of Herod: the corruptive action of leaven (1 Cor 5:6-8; Gal 5:9) was an apt symbol of the evil dispositions both of the Pharisees (8:11-13; 7:5-13) and of Herod (6:14-29) toward Jesus. The disciples of Jesus are warned against sharing such rebellious attitudes toward Jesus; cf. Mark 8:17, 21.

8:22-26 Jesus’ actions and the gradual cure of the blind man probably have the same purpose as in the case of the deaf man (7:31-37). Some commentators regard the cure as an intended symbol of the gradual enlightenment of the disciples concerning Jesus’ messiahship.

8:27-30 This episode is the turning point in Mark’s account of Jesus in his public ministry. Popular opinions concur in regarding him as a prophet. The disciples by contrast believe him to be the Messiah. Jesus acknowledges this identification but prohibits them from making his messianic office known to avoid confusing it with ambiguous contemporary ideas on the nature of that office. See further the notes on Matthew 16:13-20.

8:31 Son of Man: an enigmatic title. It is used in Daniel 7:13-14 as a symbol of “the saints of the Most High,” the faithful Israelites who receive the everlasting kingdom from the Ancient One (God). They are represented by a human figure that contrasts with the various beasts who represent the previous kingdoms of the earth. In the Jewish apocryphal books of 1 Enoch and 4 Ezra the “Son of Man” is not, as in Daniel, a group, but a unique figure of extraordinary spiritual endowments, who will be revealed as the one through whom the everlasting kingdom decreed by God will be established. It is possible though doubtful that this individualization of the Son of Man figure had been made in Jesus’ time, and therefore his use of the title in that sense is questionable. Of itself, this expression means simply a human being, or, indefinitely, someone, and there are evidences of this use in pre-Christian times. Its use in the New Testament is probably due to Jesus’ speaking of himself in that way, “a human being,” and the later church’s taking this in the sense of the Jewish apocrypha and applying it to him with that meaning. Rejected by the elders, the chief priests, and the scribes: the supreme council called the Sanhedrin was made up of seventy-one members of these three groups and presided over by the high priest. It exercised authority over the Jews in religious matters. See the note on Matthew 8:20.

8:34-35 This utterance of Jesus challenges all believers to authentic discipleship and total commitment to himself through self-renunciation and acceptance of the cross of suffering, even to the sacrifice of life itself. Whoever wishes to save his life will lose it … will save it: an expression of the ambivalence of life and its contrasting destiny. Life seen as mere self-centered earthly existence and lived in denial of Christ ends in destruction, but when lived in loyalty to Christ, despite earthly death, it arrives at fullness of life.

8:35 For my sake and that of the gospel: Mark here, as at Mark 10:29 equates Jesus with the gospel.

9:1 There are some standing … come in power: understood by some to refer to the establishment by God's power of his kingdom on earth in and through the church; more likely, as understood by others, a reference to the imminent parousia.

9:2-8 Mark and Matthew 17:1 place the transfiguration of Jesus six days after the first prediction of his passion and death and his instruction to the disciples on the doctrine of the cross; Luke 9:28 has "about eight days." Thus the transfiguration counterbalances the prediction of the passion by affording certain of the disciples insight into the divine glory that Jesus possessed. His glory will overcome his death and that of his disciples; cf. 2 Corinthians 3:18; 2 Peter 1:16-19. The heavenly voice (9:7) prepares the disciples to understand that in the divine plan Jesus must die ignominiously before his messianic glory is made manifest; cf. Luke 24:25-27. See further the note on Matthew 17:1-8.

9:5 Moses and Elijah represent, respectively, law and prophecy in the Old Testament and are linked to Mount Sinai; cf. Exodus 19:16–20:17; 1 Kings 19:2, 8-14. They now appear with Jesus as witnesses to the fulfillment of the law and the prophets taking place in the person of Jesus as he appears in glory.

9:7 A cloud came, casting a shadow over them: even the disciples enter into the mystery of his glorification. In the Old Testament the cloud covered the meeting tent, indicating the Lord's presence in the midst of his people (Ex 40:34-35) and came to rest upon the temple in Jerusalem at the time of its dedication (1 Kgs 8:10).

9:9-13 At the transfiguration of Jesus his disciples had seen Elijah. They were perplexed because, according to the rabbinical interpretation of Malachi 3:23-24, Elijah was to come first. Jesus' response shows that Elijah has come, in the person of John the Baptist, to prepare for the day of the Lord. Jesus must suffer greatly and be treated with contempt (9:12) like the Baptist (9:13); cf. Mark 6:17-29.

9:14-29 The disciples' failure to effect a cure seems to reflect unfavorably on Jesus (9:14-18, 22). In response Jesus exposes their lack of trust in God (Mk 9:19) and scores their lack of prayer (Mk 9:29), i.e., of conscious reliance on God's power when acting in Jesus' name. For Matthew, see the note on Matthew 17:14-20. Luke 9:37-43 centers attention on Jesus' sovereign power.

9:29 This kind can only come out through prayer: a variant reading adds "and through fasting."

9:33-37 Mark probably intends this incident and the sayings that follow as commentary on the disciples' lack of understanding (9:32). Their role in Jesus' work is one of service, especially to the poor and lowly. Children were the symbol Jesus used for the aˇnāwîm, the poor in spirit, the lowly in the Christian community.

9:38-41 Jesus warns against jealousy and intolerance toward others, such as exorcists who do not follow us. The saying in Mark 9:40 is a broad principle of the divine tolerance. Even the smallest courtesies shown to those who teach in Jesus' name do not go unrewarded.

9:43, 45, 47 Gehenna: see the note on Matthew 5:22.

9:44, 46 These verses, lacking in some important early manuscripts, are here omitted as scribal additions. They simply repeat Mark 9:48, itself a modified citation of Isaiah 66:24.

9:49 Everyone will be salted with fire: so the better manuscripts. Some add "every sacrifice will be salted with salt." The purifying and preservative use of salt in food (Lv 2:13) and the refinement effected through fire refer here to comparable effects in the spiritual life of the disciples of Jesus.

10:2-9 In the dialogue between Jesus and the Pharisees on the subject of divorce, Jesus declares that the law of Moses permitted divorce (Dt 24:1) only because of the hardness of your hearts (10:4-5). In citing Genesis 1:27 and 2:24 Jesus proclaims permanence to be the divine intent from the beginning concerning human marriage (10:6-8). He reaffirms this with the declaration that what God has joined together, no human being must separate (10:9). See further the notes on Matthew 5:31-32; 19:3-9.

10:15 Whoever does not accept the kingdom of God like a child: i.e., in total dependence upon and obedience to the gospel; cf. Matthew 18:3-4.

10:18 Why do you call me good?: Jesus repudiates the term "good" for himself and directs it to God, the source of all goodness who alone can grant the gift of eternal life; cf. Matthew 19:16-17.

10:23-27 In the Old Testament wealth and material goods are considered a sign of God's favor (Jb 1:10; Ps 128:1-2; Is 3:10). The words of Jesus in Mark 10:23-25 provoke astonishment among the disciples because of their apparent contradiction of the Old Testament concept (10:24, 26). Since wealth, power, and merit generate false security, Jesus rejects them utterly as a claim to enter the kingdom. Achievement of salvation is beyond human capability and depends solely on the goodness of God who offers it as a gift (10:27).

10:38-40 Can you drink the cup … I am baptized?: the metaphor of drinking the cup is used in the Old Testament to refer to acceptance of the destiny assigned by God; see the note on Psalm 11:6. In Jesus' case, this involves divine judgment on sin that Jesus the innocent one is to expiate on behalf of the guilty (14:24; Is 53:5). His baptism is to be his crucifixion and death for the salvation of the human race; cf. Luke 12:50. The request of James and John for a share in the glory (10:35-37) must of necessity involve a share in Jesus' sufferings, the endurance of tribulation and suffering for the gospel (10:39). The authority of assigning places of honor in the kingdom is reserved to God (10:40).

10:42-45 Whatever authority is to be exercised by the disciples must, like that of Jesus, be rendered as service to others (10:45) rather than for personal aggrandizement (10:42-44). The service of Jesus is his passion and death for the sins of the human race (10:45); cf. Mark 14:24; Isaiah 53:11-12; Matthew 26:28; Luke 22:19-20.

11:1-11 In Mark's account Jesus takes the initiative in ordering the preparation for his entry into Jerusalem (11:1-6) even as he later orders the preparation of his last Passover supper (14:12-16). In Mark 11:9-10 the greeting Jesus receives stops short of proclaiming him Messiah. He is greeted rather as the prophet of the coming messianic kingdom. Contrast Matthew 21:9.

11:12-14 Jesus' search for fruit on the fig tree recalls the prophets' earlier use of this image to designate Israel; cf. Jeremiah 8:13; 29:17; Joel 1:7; Hosea 9:10, 16.

Cursing the fig tree is a parable in action representing Jesus' judgment (11:20) on barren Israel and the fate of Jerusalem for failing to receive his teaching; cf. Isaiah 34:4; Hosea 2:14; Luke 13:6-9.

11:15-19 See the note on Matthew 21:12-17.

11:26 This verse, which reads, "But if you do not forgive, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your transgressions," is omitted in the best manuscripts. It was probably added by copyists under the influence of Matthew 6:15.

11:27-33 The mounting hostility toward Jesus came from the chief priests, the scribes, and the elders (11:27); the Herodians and the Pharisees (12:13); and the Sadducees (12:18). By their rejection of God's messengers, John the Baptist and Jesus, they incurred the divine judgment implied in Mark 11:27-33 and confirmed in the parable of the vineyard tenants (12:1-12).

12:1-12 The vineyard denotes Israel (Is 5:1-7). The tenant farmers are the religious leaders of Israel. God is the owner of the vineyard. His servants are his messengers, the prophets. The beloved son is Jesus (1:11; 9:7; Mt 3:17; 17:5; Lk 3:22; 9:35). The punishment of the tenants refers to the religious leaders, and the transfer of the vineyard to others refers to the people of the new Israel.

12:13-34 In the ensuing conflicts (cf. also 2:1–3:6) Jesus vanquishes his adversaries by his responses to their questions and reduces them to silence (12:34).

12:13-17 See the note on Matthew 22:15-22.

12:18-27 See the note on Matthew 22:23-33.

12:28-34 See the note on Matthew 22:34-40.

12:35-37 Jesus questions the claim of the scribes about the Davidic descent of the Messiah, not to deny it (Mt 1:1; Acts 2:20, 34; Rom 1:3; 2 Tm 2:8) but to imply that he is more than this. His superiority derives from his transcendent origin, to which David himself attested when he spoke of the Messiah with the name "Lord" (Ps 110:1). See also the note on Matthew 22:41-46.

13:1-2 The reconstructed temple with its precincts, begun under Herod the Great ca. 20 B.C., was completed only some seven years before it was destroyed by fire in A.D. 70 at the hands of the Romans; cf. Jeremiah 26:18; Matthew 24:1-2. For the dating of the reconstruction of the temple, see further the note on John 2:20.

13:3-37 Jesus' prediction of the destruction of the temple (13:2) provoked questions that the four named disciples put to him in private regarding the time and the sign when all these things are about to come to an end (13:3-4). The response to their questions was Jesus' eschatological discourse prior to his imminent death. It contained instruction and consolation exhorting the disciples and the church to faith and obedience through the trials that would confront them (13:5-13). The sign is the presence of the desolating abomination (13:14; see Dn 9:27), i.e., of the Roman power profaning the temple. Flight from Jerusalem is urged rather than defense of the city through misguided messianic hope (13:14-23). Intervention will occur only after destruction (13:24-27), which will happen before the end of the first Christian generation (13:28-31). No one but the Father knows the precise time, or that of the parousia (13:32); hence the necessity of constant vigilance (13:33-37). Luke sets the parousia at a later date, after "the time of the Gentiles" (Lk 21:24). See also the notes on Matthew 24:1–25:46.

13:10 The gospel … to all nations: the period of the Christian mission.

13:14 The participle standing is masculine, in contrast to the neuter at Matthew 24:15.

13:26 Son of Man … with great power and glory: Jesus cites this text from Daniel 7:13 in his response to the high priest, Are you the Messiah? (14:61). In Exodus 34:5; Leviticus 16:2; and Numbers 11:25 the clouds indicate the presence of the divinity. Thus in his role of Son of Man, Jesus is a heavenly being who will come in power and glory.

14:1–16:8 In the movement of Mark's gospel the cross is depicted as Jesus' way to glory in accordance with the divine will. Thus the passion narrative is seen as the climax of Jesus' ministry.

14:1 The Passover and the Feast of Unleavened Bread: the connection between the two festivals is reflected in Exodus 12:3-20; 34:18; Leviticus 23:4-8; Numbers 9:2-14; 28:16-17; Deuteronomy 16:1-8. The Passover commemorated the redemption from slavery and the departure of the Israelites from Egypt by night. It began at sundown after the Passover lamb was sacrificed in the temple in the afternoon of the fourteenth day of the month of Nisan. With the Passover supper on the same evening was associated the eating of unleavened bread. The latter was continued through Nisan 21, a reminder of the affliction of the Israelites and of the haste surrounding their departure. Praise and thanks to God for his goodness in the past were combined at this dual festival with the hope of future salvation. The chief priests … to death: the intent to put Jesus to death was plotted for a long time but delayed for fear of the crowd (3:6; 11:18; 12:12).

14:3-9 At Bethany on the Mount of Olives, a few miles from Jerusalem, in the house of Simon the leper, Jesus defends a woman's loving action of anointing his head with perfumed oil in view of his impending death and burial as a criminal, in which case his body would not be anointed. See further the note on John 12:7. He assures the woman of the remembrance of her deed in the worldwide preaching of the good news.

14:12 The first day of the Feast of Unleavened Bread … the Passover lamb: a less precise designation of the day for sacrificing the Passover lamb as evidenced by some rabbinical literature. For a more exact designation, see the note on Mark 14:1. It was actually Nisan 14.

14:13 A man … carrying a jar of water: perhaps a prearranged signal, for only women ordinarily carried water in jars. The Greek word used here, however, implies simply a person and not necessarily a male.

14:18 One of you will betray me, one who is eating with me: contrasts the intimacy of table fellowship at the Passover meal with the treachery of the traitor; cf. Psalm 41:10.

14:21 The Son of Man indeed goes, as it is written of him: a reference to Psalm 41:10 cited by Jesus concerning Judas at the Last Supper; cf. John 13:18-19.

14:22-24 The actions and words of Jesus express within the framework of the Passover meal and the transition to a new covenant the sacrifice of himself through the offering of his body and blood in anticipation of his passion and death. His blood of the covenant both alludes to the ancient rite of Exodus 24:4-8 and indicates the new community that the sacrifice of Jesus will bring into being (Mt 26:26-28; Lk 22:19-20; 1 Cor 11:23-25).

14:24 Which will be shed: see the note on Matthew 26:27-28. For many: the Greek preposition hyper is a different one from that at Matthew 26:28 but the same as that found at Luke 22:19, 20 and 1 Corinthians 11:24. The sense of both words is vicarious, and it is difficult in Hellenistic Greek to distinguish between them. For many in the sense of "all," see the note on Matthew 20:28.

14:26 After singing a hymn: Psalms 114–118, thanksgiving songs concluding the Passover meal.

14:27-31 Jesus predicted that the Twelve would waver in their faith, even abandon him, despite their protestations to the contrary. Yet he reassured them that after his resurrection he would regather them in Galilee (16:7; cf. Mt 26:32; 28:7, 10, 16; Jn 21), where he first summoned them to be his followers as he began to preach the good news (1:14-20).

14:32-34 The disciples who had witnessed the raising to life of the daughter of Jairus (5:37) and the transfiguration of their Master (9:2) were now invited to witness his degradation and agony and to watch and pray with him.

14:36 Abba, Father: an Aramaic term, here also translated by Mark, Jesus' special way of addressing God with filial intimacy. The word 'abb' seems not to have been used in earlier or contemporaneous Jewish sources to address God without some qualifier. Cf. Romans 8:15 and Galatians 4:6 for other occurrences of the Aramaic word in the Greek New Testament. Not what I will but what you will: note the complete obedient surrender of the human will of Jesus to the divine will of the Father; cf. John 4:34; 8:29; Romans 5:19; Philippians 2:8; Hebrews 5:8.

14:38 The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak: the spirit is drawn to what is good yet found in conflict with the flesh, inclined to sin; cf. Psalm 51:7, 12. Everyone is faced with this struggle, the full force of which Jesus accepted on our behalf and, through his bitter passion and death, achieved the victory.

14:53 They led Jesus away … came together: Mark presents a formal assembly of the whole Sanhedrin (chief priests, elders, and scribes) at night, leading to the condemnation of Jesus (14:64), in contrast to Luke 22:66, 71 where Jesus is condemned in a daytime meeting of the council; see also John 18:13, 19-24.

14:57-58 See the notes on Matthew 26:60-61 and John 2:19.

14:61-62 The Blessed One: a surrogate for the divine name, which Jews did not pronounce. I am: indicates Jesus' acknowledgment that he is the Messiah and Son of God; cf. Mark 1:1. Contrast Matthew 26:64 and Luke 22:67-70, in which Jesus leaves his interrogators to answer their own question. You will see the Son of Man … with the clouds of heaven: an allusion to Daniel 7:13 and Psalm 110:1, portending the enthronement of Jesus as judge in the transcendent glory of God's kingdom. The Power: another surrogate for the name of God.

14:68 [Then the cock crowed]: found in most manuscripts, perhaps in view of Mark 14:30 and 72, but omitted in others.

15:1 Held a council: the verb here, poieō, can mean either "convene a council" or "take counsel." This reading is preferred to a variant "reached a decision" (cf. 3:6), which Mark 14:64 describes as having happened at the night trial; see the note on Matthew 27:1-2. Handed him over to Pilate: lacking authority to execute their sentence of condemnation (14:64), the Sanhedrin had recourse to Pilate to have Jesus tried and put to death (15:15); cf. John 18:31.

15:2 The king of the Jews: in the accounts of the evangelists a certain irony surrounds the use of this title as an accusation against Jesus (see the note on 15:26). While Pilate uses this term (15:2, 9, 12), he is aware of the evil motivation of the chief priests who handed Jesus over for trial and condemnation (15:10; Lk 23:14-16, 20; Mt 27:18, 24; Jn 18:38; 19:4, 6, 12).

15:6-15 See the note on Matthew 27:15-26.

15:7 Barabbas: see the note on Matthew 27:16-17.

15:13 Crucify him: see the note on Matthew 27:22.

15:15 See the note on Matthew 27:26.

15:16 Praetorium: see the note on Matthew 27:27.

15:21 They pressed into service … Simon, a Cyrenian: a condemned person was constrained to bear his own instrument of torture, at least the crossbeam. The precise naming of Simon and his sons is probably due to their being known among early Christian believers to whom Mark addressed his gospel. See also the notes on Matthew 27:32; Luke 23:26-32.

15:24 See the notes on Matthew 27:35 and John 19:23-25a.

15:25 It was nine o'clock in the morning: literally, "the third hour," thus between 9 a.m. and 12 noon. Cf. Mark 15:33, 34, 42 for Mark's chronological sequence, which may reflect liturgical or catechetical considerations rather than the precise historical sequence of events; contrast the different chronologies in the other gospels, especially John 19:14.

15:26 The inscription … the King of the Jews: the political reason for the death penalty falsely charged by the enemies of Jesus. See further the notes on Matthew 27:37 and John 19:19.

15:28 This verse, "And the scripture was fulfilled that says, 'And he was counted among the wicked,'" is omitted in the earliest and best manuscripts. It contains a citation from Isaiah 53:12 and was probably introduced from Luke 22:37.

15:29 See the note on Matthew 27:39-40.

15:34 An Aramaic rendering of Psalm 22:2. See also the note on Matthew 27:46.

15:35 Elijah: a verbal link with Eloi (15:34). See the note on Mark 9:9-13; cf. Malachi 3:23-24. See also the note on Matthew 27:47.

15:38 See the note on Matthew 27:51-53.

15:39 The closing portion of Mark's gospel returns to the theme of its beginning in the Gentile centurion's climactic declaration of belief that Jesus was the Son of God. It indicates the fulfillment of the good news announced in the prologue (1:1) and may be regarded as the firstfruit of the passion and death of Jesus.

15:40-41 See the note on Matthew 27:55-56.

16:1-8 The purpose of this narrative is to show that the tomb is empty and that Jesus has been raised (16:6) and is going before you to Galilee (16:7) in fulfillment of Mark 14:28. The women find the tomb empty, and an angel stationed there announces to them what has happened. They are told to proclaim the news to Peter and the disciples in order to prepare them for a reunion with him. Mark's composition of the gospel ends at Mark 16:8 with the women telling no one, because they were afraid. This abrupt termination causes some to believe that the original ending of this gospel may have been lost. See the following note.

16:9-20 This passage, termed the Longer Ending to the Marcan gospel by comparison with a much briefer conclusion found in some less important manuscripts, has traditionally been accepted as a canonical part of the gospel and was defined as such by the Council of Trent. Early citations of it by the Fathers indicate that it was composed by the second century, although vocabulary and style indicate that it was written by someone other than Mark. It is a general resume of the material concerning the appearances of the risen Jesus, reflecting, in particular, traditions found in Luke 24 and John 20.

The Shorter Ending: Found after Mark 16:8 before the Longer Ending in four seventh-to-ninth-century Greek manuscripts as well as in one Old Latin version, where it appears alone without the Longer Ending.

The Freer Logion: Found after Mk 16:14 in a fourth-fifth century manuscript preserved in the Freer Gallery of Art, Washington, DC, this ending was known to Jerome in the fourth century. It reads: “And they excused themselves, saying, ‘This age of lawlessness and unbelief is under Satan, who does not allow the truth and power of God to prevail over the unclean things dominated by the spirits [or, does not allow the unclean things dominated by the spirits to grasp the truth and power of God]. Therefore reveal your righteousness now.’ They spoke to Christ. And Christ responded to them, ‘The limit of the years of Satan’s power is completed, but other terrible things draw near. And for those who sinned I was handed over to death, that they might return to the truth and no longer sin, in order that they might inherit the spiritual and incorruptible heavenly glory of righteousness. But …. ’”

Luke

The Gospel According to

The Gospel according to Luke is the first part of a two-volume work that continues the biblical history of God's dealings with humanity found in the Old Testament, showing how God's promises to Israel have been fulfilled in Jesus and how the salvation promised to Israel and accomplished by Jesus has been extended to the Gentiles. The stated purpose of the two volumes is to provide Theophilus and others like him with certainty—assurance—about earlier instruction they have received (1:4). To accomplish his purpose, Luke shows that the preaching and teaching of the representatives of the early church are grounded in the preaching and teaching of Jesus, who during his historical ministry (Acts 1:21-22) prepared his specially chosen followers and commissioned them to be witnesses to his resurrection and to all else that he did (Acts 10:37-42). This continuity between the historical ministry of Jesus and the ministry of the apostles is Luke's way of guaranteeing the fidelity of the church's teaching to the teaching of Jesus.

Luke's story of Jesus and the church is dominated by a historical perspective. This history is first of all salvation history. God's divine plan for human salvation was accomplished during the period of Jesus, who through the events of his life (22:22) fulfilled the Old Testament prophecies (4:21; 18:31; 22:37; 24:26-27, 44), and this salvation is now extended to all humanity in the period of the church (Acts 4:12). This salvation history, moreover, is a part of human history. Luke relates the story of Jesus and the church to events in contemporary Palestinian (1:5; 3:1-2; Acts 4:6) and Roman (2:1-2; 3:1; Acts 11:28; 18:2, 12) history for, as Paul says in Acts 26:26, "this was not done in a corner." Finally, Luke relates the story of Jesus and the church to contemporaneous church history. Luke is concerned with presenting Christianity as a legitimate form of worship in the Roman world, a religion that is capable of meeting the spiritual needs of a world empire like that of Rome. To this end, Luke depicts the Roman governor Pilate declaring Jesus innocent of any wrongdoing three times (Lk 23:4, 14, 22). At the same time Luke argues in Acts that Christianity is the logical development and proper fulfillment of Judaism and is therefore deserving of the same toleration and freedom traditionally accorded Judaism by Rome (Acts 13:16-41; 23:6-9; 24:10-21; 26:2-23).

SUMMARY

Luke tells the story of Jesus of Nazareth as a mighty prophet and Savior of the world in fulfillment of OT expectations. He begins with Jesus' virginal conception and birth, and follows Jesus through his public ministry to his passion, death, resurrection, and ascension into heaven—all under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

Author: Unknown, but ancient tradition calls him "Luke" and identifies him as a companion of Paul (Col 4:14; 2 Tm 4:11; Phlm 24).

Date: After A.D. 70 and perhaps between A.D. 80–90.

Content: Virginal conception of Jesus; the Sermon on the Plain; Peter's confession of faith; the transfiguration; the passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus; resurrection appearances in and around Jerusalem; the ascension of Jesus.

Main Characters: Holy Spirit, Mary the mother of Jesus, Jesus of Nazareth, John the Baptist, Peter, James and John (the sons of Zebedee), some Jewish leaders opposed to Jesus, Judas Iscariot, Pontius Pilate.

The prominence given to the period of the church in the story has important consequences for Luke's interpretation of the teachings of Jesus. By presenting the time of the church as a distinct phase of salvation history, Luke accordingly shifts the early Christian emphasis away from the expectation of an imminent parousia to the day-to-day concerns of the Christian community in the world. He does this in the gospel by regularly emphasizing the words "each day" (9:23; cf. Mk 8:34; 11:3; 16:19; 19:47) in the sayings of Jesus. Although Luke still believes the parousia to be a reality that will come unexpectedly (12:38, 45-46), he is more concerned with presenting the words and deeds of Jesus as guides for the conduct of Christian disciples in the interim period between the ascension and the parousia and with presenting Jesus himself as the model of Christian life and piety.

Throughout the gospel, Luke calls upon the Christian disciple to identify with the master Jesus, who is caring and tender toward the poor and lowly, the outcast, the sinner, and the afflicted, toward all those who recognize their dependence on God (4:18; 6:20-23; 7:36-50; 14:12-14; 15:1-32; 16:19-31; 18:9-14; 19:1-10; 21:1-4), but who is severe toward the proud and self-righteous, and particularly toward those who place their material wealth before the service of God and his people (6:24-26; 12:13-21; 16:13-15, 19-31; 18:9-14, 15-25; cf. 1:50-53). No gospel writer is more concerned than Luke with the mercy and compassion of Jesus (7:41-43; 10:29-37; 13:6-9; 15:11-32). No gospel writer is more concerned with the role of the Spirit in the life of Jesus and the Christian disciple (1:35, 41; 2:25-27; 4:1, 14, 18; 10:21; 11:13; 24:49), with the importance of prayer (3:21; 5:16; 6:12; 9:28; 11:1-13; 18:1-8), or with Jesus' concern for women (7:11-17, 36-50; 8:2-3; 10:38-42). While Jesus calls all humanity to repent (5:32; 10:13; 11:32; 13:1-5; 15:7-10; 16:30; 17:3-4; 24:47), he is particularly demanding of those who would be his disciples. Of them he demands absolute and total detachment from family and material possessions (9:57-62; 12:32-34; 14:25-35). To all who respond in faith and repentance to the word Jesus preaches, he brings salvation (2:30-32; 3:6; 7:50; 8:48, 50; 17:19; 19:9) and peace (2:14; 7:50; 8:48; 19:38, 42) and life (10:25-28; 18:26-30).

Early Christian tradition, from the late second century on, identifies the author of this gospel and of the Acts of the Apostles as Luke, a Syrian from Antioch, who is mentioned in the New Testament in Colossians 4:14, Philemon 1:24 and 2 Timothy 4:11. The prologue of the gospel makes it clear that Luke is not part of the first generation of Christian disciples but is himself dependent upon the traditions he received from those who were eyewitnesses and ministers of the word (1:2). His two-volume work marks him as someone who was highly literate both in the Old Testament traditions according to the Greek versions and in Hellenistic Greek writings.

Among the likely sources for the composition of this gospel (1:3) were the Gospel of Mark, a written collection of sayings of Jesus known also to the author of the Gospel of Matthew (Q; see Introduction to Matthew), and other special traditions that were used by Luke alone among the gospel writers. Some hold that Luke used Mark only as a complementary source for rounding out the material he took from other traditions. Because of its dependence on the Gospel of Mark and because details in Luke's Gospel (13:35a; 19:43-44; 21:20; 23:28-31) imply that the author was acquainted with the destruction of the city of Jerusalem by the Romans in A.D. 70, the Gospel of Luke is dated by most scholars after that date; many propose A.D. 80–90 as the time of composition.

Luke's consistent substitution of Greek names for the Aramaic or Hebrew names occurring in his sources (e.g., Lk 23:33; Mk 15:22; Lk 18:41; Mk 10:51), his omission from the gospel of specifically Jewish Christian concerns found in his sources (e.g., Mk 7:1-23), his interest in Gentile Christians (2:30-32; 3:6, 38; 4:16-30; 13:28-30; 14:15-24; 17:11-19; 24:47-48), and his incomplete knowledge of Palestinian geography, customs, and practices are among the characteristics of this gospel that suggest that Luke was a non-Palestinian writing to a non-Palestinian audience that was largely made up of Gentile Christians.

The principal divisions of the Gospel according to Luke are the following:

I. The Prologue (1:1-4)
II. The Infancy Narrative (1:5–2:52)
III. The Preparation for the Public Ministry (3:1–4:13)
IV. The Ministry in Galilee (4:14–9:50)
V. The Journey to Jerusalem: Luke's Travel Narrative (9:51–19:27)
VI. The Teaching Ministry in Jerusalem (19:28–21:38)
VII. The Passion Narrative (22:1–23:56)
VIII. The Resurrection Narrative (24:1-53)

[5]In the days of Herod, King of Judea,* there was a priest named Zechariah of the priestly division of Abijah; his wife was from the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth.[c] [6]Both were righteous in the eyes of God, observing all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blamelessly. [7]But they had no child,* because Elizabeth was barren and both were advanced in years.[d] [8]Once when he was serving as priest in his division's turn before God, [9]according to the practice of the priestly service, he was chosen by lot to enter the sanctuary of the Lord to burn incense.[e] [10]Then, when the whole assembly of the people was praying outside at the hour of the incense offering, [11]the angel of the Lord appeared to him, standing at the right of the altar of incense. [12]Zechariah was troubled by what he saw, and fear came upon him. [13]But the angel said to him, "Do not be afraid,* Zechariah, because your prayer has been heard. Your wife Elizabeth will bear you a son, and you shall name him John.[f] [14]And you will have joy and gladness, and many will rejoice at his birth, [15]for he will be great in the sight of [the] Lord. He will drink neither wine nor strong drink.* He will be filled with the holy Spirit even from his mother's womb,[g] [16]and he will turn many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God. [17]He will go before him in the spirit and power of Elijah* to turn the hearts of fathers toward children and the disobedient to the understanding of the righteous, to prepare a people fit for the Lord."[h] [18]Then Zechariah said to the angel, "How shall I know this? For I am an old man, and my wife is advanced in years." [19]And the angel said to him in reply, "I am Gabriel,* who stand before God. I was sent to speak to you and to announce to you this good news.[i] [20]But now you will be speechless and unable to talk* until the day these things take place, because you did not believe my words, which will be fulfilled at their proper time."[j]

Luke has been a favorite gospel for many different people with diverse interests. Over time, Luke has thus earned numerous nicknames that describe certain thematic emphases found in the book, for example, "the Gospel of …" —you fill in the blank: "prayer," "social justice," "women," "God's mercy," "reconciliation," "joy," "festive dining," "salvation," "universalism," "healing," or perhaps another title of your own liking. Luke has an extremely broad appeal as a "favorite" among the canonical gospels.

Zechariah and Elizabeth, Righteous in the Eyes of God

In the ancient world, children were a gift from God, a way for the family name to be carried on, and a necessity for family financial security. Childlessness was often seen as divine punishment.

But Zechariah and Elizabeth are not childless because of their spiritual state—in fact, they are called "righteous in the eyes of God." They are in good company with Joseph, John the Baptist, Simeon, Joseph of Arimathea, Cornelius, and Jesus himself. In fact, in the NT Elizabeth is the only woman to be called righteous.

Righteousness can mean a number of things, among them innocence, moral conduct, justice or just judgment, and especially in the case of Jesus ("the Righteous One"; cf. Acts 3:14; 7:52; Jas 5:6; 1 Jn 2:1-2) all this is accompanied by victory and triumph.

The parents of John the Baptist were elderly and surely the subject of much whispering in their childless state. When pregnant past their prime, they must have caused even more gossip. But in the eyes of God they are righteous, and the triumph they experience comes in the form of a son who will one day follow in his mother's footsteps and reveal the identity of Jesus (Lk 1:42-43; 3:4-6, 16).

[21]Meanwhile the people were waiting for Zechariah and were amazed that he stayed so long in the sanctuary. [22]But when he came out, he was unable to speak to them, and they realized that he had seen a vision in the sanctuary. He was gesturing to them but remained mute. [23]Then, when his days of ministry were completed, he went home. [24]After this time his wife Elizabeth conceived, and she went into seclusion for five months, saying, [25]“So has the Lord done for me at a time when he has seen fit to take away my disgrace before others.”[k]

The angel Gabriel is an OT figure (Dn 8:16; 9:21-27) who is one of the heavenly messengers God uses to reveal special messages to human beings. In Daniel, his presence evokes terror; in this passage his message to Mary is likely interpreted as unsettling, although she accepts it with grace.

The Lord is with you."[m] [29]But she was greatly troubled at what was said and pondered what sort of greeting this might be. Therefore the child to be born will be called holy, the Son of God.[q] [36]And behold, Elizabeth, your relative, has also conceived* a son in her old age, and this is the sixth month for her who was called barren; [37]for nothing will be impossible for God."[r] [38]Mary said, "Behold, I am the handmaid of the Lord. May it be done to me according to your word." Then the angel departed from her.

Surprisingly, the NT records very little about the details of Mary’s background and life. The primary focus is on her relationship to her son Jesus. That her parents were named Joachim and Anna comes from a later apocryphal gospel (Protoevangelium of James, second century A.D.). We do not know when she was born or under what circumstances, but the church honors her above all other women for being the mother of Jesus, God’s only begotten Son. Whereas the gospels hint that she was from a poor family in Nazareth, the apocryphal story asserts that she was born of wealthy parents in Jerusalem who served in the temple.

Of the gospels, Luke gives the most attention to Mary. Artists throughout history have portrayed poignant scenes from Luke’s infancy narrative (chs. 1–2) such as the annunciation and the visitation. Mary takes center stage throughout the story as it unfolds and her destiny to be the mother of Jesus is revealed. Mary expresses her response to God’s mysterious will in the Canticle of Mary (Lk 1:46-55). Filled with OT imagery, it shows that Mary acquiesces totally to God’s will, even without understanding it fully.

All of the gospels feature Mary in some fashion, but John never names her. He refers to her only as “the mother of Jesus.” Yet she figures prominently in John at the foot of the cross, where she becomes an icon of the church, entrusted to the care of the unnamed Beloved Disciple (Jn 19:26-27).

Matthew’s story of Jesus’ miraculous conception (chs. 1–2) emphasizes Joseph’s role as the foster father of Jesus, whose Davidic lineage confirms that Jesus is the fulfillment of messianic expectations. In Matthew, Mary is seen primarily in a subservient role, humbly accepting God’s will, guided and protected by her betrothed’s actions.

Mark does not include an infancy narrative, but Mary is located among Jesus’ relatives. Jesus is called “son of Mary” (Mk 6:3), but she herself may be numbered among those relatives who think, because of his unusual ministry, he is “out of his mind” (Mk 3:21)!

Acts portrays Mary as a member of the early Christian community (1:14), but Paul makes almost no reference to her, except through the acknowledgment that Jesus was “born of a woman” (Gal 4:4).

The church’s understanding of Mary’s significance grew over time, beyond the testimony of the Bible, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and expressed through official church teachings. Most important, the church honors Mary for her role in salvation history. By saying “yes” to God’s mysterious will, she enabled salvation to enter the world through the birth of her son.

The Roman Catholic Church has bestowed on Mary many honorific titles (Mother of God, Mother of the Church, the New Eve, Queen of Heaven, Star of the Sea, etc.) and has also proclaimed doctrines about her immaculate conception (1854) and assumption into heaven (1950). She is also identified with the unnamed woman “clothed with the sun” of the book of Revelation (12:1-18), an uncertain but ancient interpretation. After the Second Vatican Council, ecumenical dialogues promoted discussion among Roman Catholics and Protestants about Mary’s significance, which led to a proliferation of books on Mary.

25Now there was a man in Jerusalem whose name was Simeon. This man was righteous and devout, awaiting the consolation of Israel,* and the holy Spirit was upon him. 26It had been revealed to him by the holy Spirit that he should not see death before he had seen the Messiah of the Lord. 27He came in the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus to perform the custom of the law in regard to him, 28he took him into his arms and blessed God, saying:

29“Now, Master, you may let your servant go in peace, according to your word,

j

The church uses the Canticle of Simeon at night prayer in the Liturgy of the Hours. It expresses a profound satisfaction at having witnessed God’s saving action in Jesus Christ; thus we can retire in peace.

[33]The child’s father and mother were amazed at what was said about him; [34]and Simeon blessed them and said to Mary his mother, “Behold, this child is destined for the fall and rise of many in Israel, and to be a sign that will be contradicted[l] [35](and you yourself a sword will pierce)* so that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed.” [36]There was also a prophetess, Anna, the daughter of Phanuel, of the tribe of Asher. She was advanced in years, having lived seven years with her husband after her marriage, [37]and then as a widow until she was eighty-four. She never left the temple, but worshiped night and day with fasting and prayer. [38]And coming forward at that very time, she gave thanks to God and spoke about the child to all who were awaiting the redemption of Jerusalem.[m]

Simeon and Anna and the Value in Waiting

If you have ever been promised something for which you had to wait a very long time, you might be able to appreciate the tenacity of Simeon and Anna. Schooled in the faithfulness of God throughout the history of their people, they anticipated God's action in some profound way.

It is not just their waiting that leads them to recognize that the child Jesus is the beginning of promises fulfilled. It is what they did with their waiting. Simeon is a man of prayer who experiences the Spirit and finds in the temple the sign he has been told to expect. Anna is a prophetess, in the long tradition of Israel's prophets, who reads the signs of the times and speaks for God. She spends her time at the temple in prayer and fasting.

Both Simeon and Anna illustrate that waiting involves action and contemplative listening. They go to the place where their faith finds its home and they are people of prayer. They were not simply in the right place at the right time; they were in the right space spiritually and recognized the time of God's action.

Your father and I have been looking for you with great anxiety.” 49And he said to them, “Why were you looking for me? Did you not know that I must be in my Father’s house?”* 50But they did not understand what he said to them. 51He went down with them and came to Nazareth, and was obedient to them; and his mother kept all these things in her heart.[q] 52And Jesus advanced [in] wisdom and age and favor before God and man.[r]

Both Luke and Matthew include genealogies in their infancy narratives. They vary in ways that likely reveal the theological interests of each evangelist, respectively.

Matthew’s Genealogy (1:1-17)	Luke’s Genealogy (3:23-38)
Placed at the beginning of the gospel; alludes to a new “beginning” of salvation history in Jesus out of Israel’s history	Placed between Jesus’ baptism and temptation by the devil to emphasize Jesus as God’s Son
Begins with Abraham, father of faith, and then structured in rough chronological order around three groups of fourteen kings each, with David as the central figure, emphasizing Jesus’ Davidic heritage and the fulfillment of the Abrahamic covenant of becoming a “father of many nations”	Structured in reverse chronological order around significant figures (not kings) in Israel’s history and concluding with Adam, “son of God,” emphasizing the universalism of salvation achieved in Jesus, savior of all humankind
Interjects four female figures in the list (Tamar, Rahab, Ruth, the wife of Uriah the Hittite), perhaps emphasizing God’s ability to write salvation history in extraordinary ways (all bore sons in unusual circumstances), thus prefiguring Mary’s role as the bearer of Jesus, Emmanuel	Absence of women
Heightened role of Joseph in the infancy narrative as foster father and protector of Jesus	Heightened role of Mary in the infancy narrative as hearer and doer of God’s word

IV: THE MINISTRY IN GALILEE

The Beginning of the Galilean Ministry

j

Mt 4:12-17; Mk 1:14-15

k

5:15; Mt 3:16

14 [j]Jesus returned to Galilee in the power of the Spirit, and news of him spread* throughout the whole region.[k] 15 He taught in their synagogues and was praised by all.

l

The Rejection at Nazareth*[l]

16He came to Nazareth, where he had grown up, and went according to his custom* into the synagogue on the sabbath day. He stood up to read 17and was handed a scroll of the prophet Isaiah. He unrolled the scroll and found the passage where it was written:

18“The Spirit of the Lord is upon me,* because he has anointed me

m

Is 61:1-2; 58:6

to bring glad tidings to the poor.[m]
He has sent me to proclaim liberty to captives and recovery of sight to the blind, to let the oppressed go free,
19and to proclaim a year acceptable to the Lord.”

The same Spirit that fell upon Jesus surrounds us each day. Are we aware of this Presence? God never hides the Spirit, and we, like Jesus, have been set apart to speak for the downtrodden. Pick up the Scriptures and read from the passage that Jesus read (Is 61). What sentiments arise in you as you read?

20Rolling up the scroll, he handed it back to the attendant and sat down, and the eyes of all in the synagogue looked intently at him. 21He said to them, “Today this scripture passage is fulfilled in your hearing.”* 22And all spoke highly of him and were amazed at the gracious words that came from his mouth. They also asked, “Isn’t this the son of Joseph?”[n] 23He said to them, “Surely you will quote me this proverb, ‘Physician, cure yourself,’ and say, ‘Do here in your native place the things that we heard were done in Capernaum.’”* [24]And he said, “Amen, I say to you, no prophet is accepted in his own native place. [25]*Indeed, I tell you, there were many widows in Israel in the days of Elijah when the sky was closed for three and a half years and a severe famine spread over the entire land.[o] [26]*It was to none of these that Elijah was sent, but only to a widow in Zarephath[p] in the land of Sidon. [27]Again, there were many lepers in Israel during the time of Elisha the prophet; yet not one of them was cleansed, but only Naaman the Syrian.”[q] [28]When the people in the synagogue heard this, they were all filled with fury. [29]They rose up, drove him out of the town, and led him to the brow of the hill on which their town had been built, to hurl him down headlong. [30]But he passed through the midst of them and went away.

What have you to do with us, Jesus of Nazareth? Have you come to destroy us?* I know who you are—the Holy One of God!"[v] [35] Jesus rebuked him and said, "Be quiet! Come out of him!" Then the demon threw the man down in front of them and came out of him without doing him any harm. [36] They were all amazed and said to one another, "What is there about his word? For with authority and power he commands the unclean spirits, and they come out." [37] And news of him spread everywhere in the surrounding region.

[4][c]After he had finished speaking, he said to Simon, “Put out into deep water and lower your nets for a catch.” [5]Simon said in reply, “Master, we have worked hard all night and have caught nothing, but at your command I will lower the nets.” [6]When they had done this, they caught a great number of fish and their nets were tearing. [7]They signaled to their partners in the other boat to come to help them. They came and filled both boats so that they were in danger of sinking. [8]When Simon Peter saw this, he fell at the knees of Jesus and said, “Depart from me, Lord, for I am a sinful man.” [9]For astonishment at the catch of fish they had made seized him and all those with him, [10]and likewise James and John, the sons of Zebedee, who were partners of Simon. [19]But not finding a way to bring him in because of the crowd, they went up on the roof and lowered him on the stretcher through the tiles* into the middle in front of Jesus. [20]When he saw their faith, he said, “As for you, your sins are forgiven.”* [21]Then the scribes* and Pharisees began to ask themselves, “Who is this who speaks blasphemies? Who but God alone can forgive sins?”[j] [22]Jesus knew their thoughts and said to them in reply, “What are you thinking in your hearts?[k] [23]Which is easier, to say, ‘Your sins are forgiven,’ or to say, ‘Rise and walk’? [24]*[l]But that you may know that the Son of Man has authority on earth to forgive sins”—he said to the man who was paralyzed, “I say to you, rise, pick up your stretcher, and go home.” [25]He stood up immediately before them, picked up what he had been lying on, and went home, glorifying God. [35]But the days will come, and when the bridegroom is taken away from them, then they will fast in those days.” [36]*And he also told them a parable. “No one tears a piece from a new cloak to patch an old one. Otherwise, he will tear the new and the piece from it will not match the old cloak. [37]Likewise, no one pours new wine into old wineskins. Otherwise, the new wine will burst the skins, and it will be spilled, and the skins will be ruined. [38]Rather, new wine must be poured into fresh wineskins. Jas 4:4

The Beatitudes in Luke differ from those in Matthew. Matthew has eight beatitudes poetically structured in the third person and one in the second person. In Luke, there are only four beatitudes accompanied by four woes, all in the second person. Both sets are well structured and written in parallel fashion but with different emphases. Many scholars believe Luke's version to be more original, but each has been shaped by the theological outlook of the respective evangelist. Matthew's are more spiritualized, while Luke's are concrete and emphasize the present time.

Matthew 5:3-12	Luke 6:20-26
Blessed are the poor in spirit …	Blessed are you … poor …
Blessed are the mourners …	Blessed are you … now hungry …
Blessed are the comforted …	Blessed are you … now weeping …
Blessed are the meek …	Blessed are you … hated and insulted …
Blessed are they who hunger and thirst for righteousness …	Woe to you … rich …
Blessed are the merciful …	Woe to you … now filled …
Blessed are the clean of heart …	Woe to you … now laughing …
Blessed are the peacemakers …	Woe to you … when all speak well of you … for so they treated the false prophets …
Blessed are you … when persecuted … for so they persecuted the prophets …

The Beatitudes are understood as the heart of Jesus' message. In Jesus, the poor and hungry are clearly situated among the citizens of God's city and reign. Matthew includes the peacemakers and those who thirst for justice to the membership list. As a result, we can only conclude along with Justice in the World: "Action on behalf of justice and participation in the transformation of the world fully appear to us as a constitutive dimension of the preaching of the Gospel, or, in other words, of the church's mission for the redemption of the human race and its liberation from every oppressive situation" (6).

For people do not pick figs from thornbushes, nor do they gather grapes from brambles. 45A good person out of the store of goodness in his heart produces good, but an evil person out of a store of evil produces evil; for from the fullness of the heart the mouth speaks.

7 [1]When he had finished all his words to the people, he entered Capernaum. [2]A centurion* there had a slave who was ill and about to die, and he was valuable to him. [3]When he heard about Jesus, he sent elders of the Jews to him, asking him to come and save the life of his slave. [4]They approached Jesus and strongly urged him to come, saying, "He deserves to have you do this for him, [5]for he loves our nation and he built the synagogue for us." [6]And Jesus went with them, but when he was only a short distance from the house, the centurion sent friends to tell him, "Lord, do not trouble yourself, for I am not worthy to have you enter under my roof.* [7]Therefore, I did not consider myself worthy to come to you; but say the word and let my servant be healed. [8]For I too am a person subject to authority, with soldiers subject to me. And I say to one, 'Go,' and he goes; and to another, 'Come here,' and he comes; and to my slave, 'Do this,' and he does it." [9]When Jesus heard this he was amazed at him and, turning, said to the crowd following him, "I tell you, not even in Israel have I found such faith." [10]When the messengers returned to the house, they found the slave in good health.

A large crowd from the city was with her.[c] 13When the Lord saw her, he was moved with pity for her and said to her, “Do not weep.” 14He stepped forward and touched the coffin; at this the bearers halted, and he said, “Young man, I tell you, arise!” 15The dead man sat up and began to speak, and Jesus gave him to his mother.[d] 16Fear seized them all, and they glorified God, exclaiming, “A great prophet has arisen in our midst,” and “God has visited his people.”[e] 17This report about him spread through the whole of Judea and in all the surrounding region.

Then she wiped them with her hair, kissed them, and anointed them with the ointment. 39When the Pharisee who had invited him saw this he said to himself, "If this man were a prophet, he would know who and what sort of woman this is who is touching him, that she is a sinner." 40Jesus said to him in reply, "Simon, I have something to say to you." "Tell me, teacher," he said. 41"Two people were in debt to a certain creditor; one owed five hundred days' wages* and the other owed fifty. 42Since they were unable to repay the debt, he forgave it for both. Which of them will love him more?" 43Simon said in reply, "The one, I suppose, whose larger debt was forgiven." He said to him, "You have judged rightly." 44Then he turned to the woman and said to Simon, "Do you see this woman? When I entered your house, you did not give me water for my feet, but she has bathed them with her tears and wiped them with her hair. 45You did not give me a kiss, but she has not ceased kissing my feet since the time I entered. 46You did not anoint my head with oil, but she anointed my feet with ointment. 47So I tell you, her many sins have been forgiven; hence, she has shown great love.* But the one to whom little is forgiven, loves little." 48He said to her, "Your sins are forgiven."[r] 49The others at table said to themselves, "Who is this who even forgives sins?"[s] 50But he said to the woman, "Your faith has saved you; go in peace."

And as he sowed, some seed fell on the path and was trampled, and the birds of the sky ate it up. 6Some seed fell on rocky ground, and when it grew, it withered for lack of moisture. 7Some seed fell among thorns, and the thorns grew with it and choked it. 8And some seed fell on good soil, and when it grew, it produced fruit a hundredfold.” After saying this, he called out, “Whoever has ears to hear ought to hear.”[d]

11 [g]“This is the meaning of the parable. The seed is the word of God.[h] 12 Those on the path are the ones who have heard, but the devil comes and takes away the word from their hearts that they may not believe and be saved. 13 Those on rocky ground are the ones who, when they hear, receive the word with joy, but they have no root; they believe only for a time and fall away in time of trial. 14 As for the seed that fell among thorns, they are the ones who have heard, but as they go along, they are choked by the anxieties and riches and pleasures of life, and they fail to produce mature fruit. 15 But as for the seed that fell on rich soil, they are the ones who, when they have heard the word, embrace it with a generous and good heart, and bear fruit through perseverance.

26Then they sailed to the territory of the Gerasenes,* which is opposite Galilee. 27When he came ashore a man from the town who was possessed by demons met him. For a long time he had not worn clothes; he did not live in a house, but lived among the tombs. 28[q]When he saw Jesus, he cried out and fell down before him; in a loud voice he shouted, “What have you to do with me, Jesus, son of the Most High God? I beg you, do not torment me!” 29For he had ordered the unclean spirit to come out of the man. (It had taken hold of him many times, and he used to be bound with chains and shackles as a restraint, but he would break his bonds and be driven by the demon into deserted places.) 30Then Jesus asked him, “What is your name?”* He replied, “Legion,” because many demons had entered him. 31And they pleaded with him not to order them to depart to the abyss.*

32A herd of many swine was feeding there on the hillside, and they pleaded with him to allow them to enter those swine; and he let them. 33The demons came out of the man and entered the swine, and the herd rushed down the steep bank into the lake and was drowned. 34When the swineherds saw what had happened, they ran away and reported the incident in the town and throughout the countryside. 35People came out to see what had happened and, when they approached Jesus, they discovered the man from whom the demons had come out sitting at his feet.* He was clothed and in his right mind, and they were seized with fear. 36Those who witnessed it told them how the possessed man had been saved. 37The entire population of the region of the Gerasenes asked Jesus to leave them because they were seized with great fear. So he got into a boat and returned. 38The man from whom the demons had come out begged to remain with him, but he sent him away, saying, 39“Return home and recount what God has done for you.” The man went off and proclaimed throughout the whole town what Jesus had done for him.

He fell at the feet of Jesus and begged him to come to his house, 42because he had an only daughter,* about twelve years old, and she was dying. As he went, the crowds almost crushed him. 43And a woman afflicted with hemorrhages for twelve years,* who [had spent her whole livelihood on doctors and] was unable to be cured by anyone, 44came up behind him and touched the tassel on his cloak. Immediately her bleeding stopped. 45Jesus then asked, “Who touched me?” While all were denying it, Peter said, “Master, the crowds are pushing and pressing in upon you.” 46But Jesus said, “Someone has touched me; for I know that power has gone out from me.”s 47When the woman realized that she had not escaped notice, she came forward trembling. Falling down before him, she explained in the presence of all the people why she had touched him and how she had been healed immediately. 48He said to her, “Daughter, your faith has saved you; go in peace.”t

He then directed that she should be given something to eat. 56Her parents were astounded, and he instructed them to tell no one what had happened.

He received them and spoke to them about the kingdom of God, and he healed those who needed to be cured. 12As the day was drawing to a close, the Twelve approached him and said, “Dismiss the crowd so that they can go to the surrounding villages and farms and find lodging and provisions; for we are in a deserted place here.” 13[h]He said to them, “Give them some food yourselves.” They replied, “Five loaves and two fish are all we have, unless we ourselves go and buy food for all these people.” 14Now the men there numbered about five thousand. Then he said to his disciples, “Have them sit down in groups of [about] fifty.” 15They did so and made them all sit down. 16Then taking* the five loaves and the two fish, and looking up to heaven, he said the blessing over them, broke them, and gave them to the disciples to set before the crowd.[i] 17They all ate and were satisfied. Bring your son here.” 42As he was coming forward, the demon threw him to the ground in a convulsion; but Jesus rebuked the unclean spirit, healed the boy, and returned him to his father. 43And all were astonished by the majesty of God.

51 When the days for his being taken up were fulfilled, he resolutely determined to journey to Jerusalem,[a] 52 *and he sent messengers ahead of him.[b] On the way they entered a Samaritan village to prepare for his reception there, 53 but they would not welcome him because the destination of his journey was Jerusalem. 54 When the disciples James and John saw this they asked, “Lord, do you want us to call down fire from heaven to consume them?”[c] 55 Jesus turned and rebuked them, 56 and they journeyed to another village.

[57][d]As they were proceeding on their journey someone said to him, “I will follow you wherever you go.” [58]Jesus answered him, “Foxes have dens and birds of the sky have nests, but the Son of Man has nowhere to rest his head.” [59]And to another he said, “Follow me.” But he replied, “[Lord,] let me go first and bury my father.” [60]But he answered him, “Let the dead bury their dead.* But you, go and proclaim the kingdom of God.” [61][e]And another said, “I will follow you, Lord, but first let me say farewell to my family at home.” [62][To him] Jesus said, “No one who sets a hand to the plow and looks to what was left behind is fit for the kingdom of God.”

Only Luke has a travel narrative, extending from 9:51 to 19:28, in which Jesus prophetically sets out for Jerusalem to embrace his fate. Along the way he performs his ministry of preaching, teaching, and healing.

Samaritans and Jews were bitter enemies because of a complex history. Although ethnically and religiously related, Jews considered Samaritans illegitimate “cousins” (cf. Jn 9:4). Samaria had been the capital of the northern kingdom (Israel) destroyed by the Assyrians in 721 B.C. As part of the destruction, the Assyrians imported pagan foreigners who eventually intermarried with the remnant Jews in that area, consequently tainting the bloodlines. Ever since, the Jews rejected Samaritans as fellow Jews. Over time, the Samaritans wrote their own Pentateuch (Torah) and established a separate temple on Mount Gerizim. For Jesus to use a “good Samaritan” as a model of a neighbor was religiously a bold move. See comment, “The Assyrian Captivity and Its Consequences” (at Hos 10).

10 [1]After this the Lord appointed seventy[-two]* others whom he sent ahead of him in pairs to every town and place he intended to visit.[a] [2]He said to them, “The harvest is abundant but the laborers are few; so ask the master of the harvest to send out laborers for his harvest.[b] [3]Go on your way; behold, I am sending you like lambs among wolves.[c] [4]Carry no money bag,[d] no sack, no sandals;[e] and greet no one along the way. [5]Into whatever house you enter, first say, ‘Peace to this household.’ [6]If a peaceful person* lives there, your peace will rest on him; but if not, it will return to you. [7]Stay in the same house and eat and drink what is offered to you, for the laborer deserves his payment. Do not move about from one house to another.[f] [8]Whatever town you enter and they welcome you, eat what is set before you,[g] [9]cure the sick in it and say to them, ‘The kingdom of God is at hand for you.’[h] [10]Whatever town you enter and they do not receive you, go out into the streets and say,[i] [11]‘The dust of your town that clings to our feet, even that we shake off against you.’ Yet know this: the kingdom of God is at hand.[j] 12 I tell you, it will be more tolerable for Sodom on that day than for that town.[k]

You will go down to the netherworld.’ [16]Whoever listens to you listens to me. Whoever rejects you rejects me. And whoever rejects me rejects the one who sent me.”[o]

Only Luke narrates the sending out of the seventy [-two] disciples, clearly a symbolic number. It is likely connected to Moses’ choice of seventy elders to share his work with the community (Nm 11:16-17) or to the number of countries supposed to inhabit the earth, according to the OT (Gn 10).

The Parable of the Good Samaritan

29But because he wished to justify himself, he said to Jesus, “And who is my neighbor?” 30Jesus replied, “A man fell victim to robbers as he went down from Jerusalem to Jericho. They stripped and beat him and went off leaving him half-dead. 31*A priest happened to be going down that road, but when he saw him, he passed by on the opposite side. 32Likewise a Levite came to the place, and when he saw him, he passed by on the opposite side. 33But a Samaritan traveler who came upon him was moved with compassion at the sight. 34He approached the victim, poured oil and wine over his wounds and bandaged them. Then he lifted him up on his own animal, took him to an inn and cared for him. 35The next day he took out two silver coins and gave them to the innkeeper with the instruction, ‘Take care of him. If you spend more than what I have given you, I shall repay you on my way back.’ 36Which of these three, in your opinion, was neighbor to the robbers’ victim?” 37He answered, “The one who treated him with mercy.” Jesus said to him, “Go and do likewise.”

See the chart on the different persons named Mary (at Mt 13:55).

The Good Samaritan becomes a model for becoming neighbor of those in need: “Today, there is an inescapable duty to make ourselves the neighbor of every individual, without exception, and to take positive steps to help a neighbor whom we encounter, whether that neighbor be an elderly person abandoned by everyone, a foreign worker who suffers the injustice of being despised, a refugee, an illegitimate child wrongly suffering for a sin of which the child is innocent, or a starving human being who awakens our conscience by calling to mind the words of Christ: ‘As you did it to one of the least of these my brothers or sisters, you did it to me’ (Mt 25:40)” (GS 27).

38[a]As they continued their journey he entered a village where a woman whose name was Martha welcomed him. 39*She had a sister named Mary [who] sat beside the Lord at his feet listening to him speak. 40Martha, burdened with much serving, came to him and said, “Lord, do you not care that my sister has left me by myself to do the serving? Tell her to help me.” 41The Lord said to her in reply, “Martha, Martha, you are anxious and worried about many things. 42*There is need of only one thing. Mary has chosen the better part and it will not be taken from her.”

The Lord's Prayer[a]

11 [1]He was praying in a certain place, and when he had finished, one of his disciples said to him, "Lord, teach us to pray just as John taught his disciples." [2]*He said to them, "When you pray, say:

Father, hallowed be your name,

[3]Give us each day our daily bread*
[4]and forgive us our sins for we ourselves forgive everyone in debt to us, and do not subject us to the final test."

Further Teachings on Prayer[b]

[5]And he said to them, “Suppose one of you has a friend to whom he goes at midnight and says, ‘Friend, lend me three loaves of bread, [6]for a friend of mine has arrived at my house from a journey and I have nothing to offer him,’ [7]and he says in reply from within, ‘Do not bother me; the door has already been locked and my children and I are already in bed. I cannot get up to give you anything.’ [8]I tell you, if he does not get up to give him the loaves because of their friendship, he will get up to give him whatever he needs because of his persistence.

[11]What father among you would hand his son a snake when he asks for a fish? [12]Or hand him a scorpion when he asks for an egg? [13]If you then, who are wicked, know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will the Father in heaven give the holy Spirit* to those who ask him?”

[43]Blessed is that servant whom his master on arrival finds doing so. [44]Truly, I say to you, he will put him in charge of all his property. [45]But if that servant says to himself, ‘My master is delayed in coming,’* and begins to beat the menservants and the maidservants, to eat and drink and get drunk, [46]then that servant’s master will come on an unexpected day and at an unknown hour and will punish him severely and assign him a place with the unfaithful. [47]That servant who knew his master’s will but did not make preparations nor act in accord with his will shall be beaten severely;[t] [48]and the servant who was ignorant of his master’s will but acted in a way deserving of a severe beating shall be beaten only lightly. Much will be required of the person entrusted with much, and still more will be demanded of the person entrusted with more.

Come on those days to be cured, not on the sabbath day.” 15*The Lord said to him in reply, “Hypocrites! Does not each one of you on the sabbath untie his ox or his ass from the manger and lead it out for watering?[e] 16*This daughter of Abraham, whom Satan has bound for eighteen years now, ought she not to have been set free on the sabbath day from this bondage?”[f] 17When he said this, all his adversaries were humiliated; and the whole crowd rejoiced at all the splendid deeds done by him.

7[f]He told a parable to those who had been invited, noticing how they were choosing the places of honor at the table. 8[g]"When you are invited by someone to a wedding banquet, do not recline at table in the place of honor. A more distinguished guest than you may have been invited by him, 9and the host who invited both of you may approach you and say, 'Give your place to this man,' and then you would proceed with embarrassment to take the lowest place. 10Rather, when you are invited, go and take the lowest place so that when the host comes to you he may say, 'My friend, move up to a higher position.' Then you will enjoy the esteem of your companions at the table. 11For everyone who exalts himself will be humbled, but the one who humbles himself will be exalted."[h] 12Then he said to the host who invited him, "When you hold a lunch or a dinner, do not invite your friends or your brothers or your relatives or your wealthy neighbors, in case they may invite you back and you have repayment.[i] 13Rather, when you hold a banquet, invite the poor, the crippled, the lame, the blind; 14blessed indeed will you be because of their inability to repay you. The first said to him, ‘I have purchased a field and must go to examine it; I ask you, consider me excused.’ [19]And another said, ‘I have purchased five yoke of oxen and am on my way to evaluate them; I ask you, consider me excused.’ [20]And another said, ‘I have just married a woman, and therefore I cannot come.’ [21]The servant went and reported this to his master. Then the master of the house in a rage commanded his servant, ‘Go out quickly into the streets and alleys of the town and bring in here the poor and the crippled, the blind and the lame.’ [22]The servant reported, ‘Sir, your orders have been carried out and still there is room.’ [23]The master then ordered the servant, ‘Go out to the highways and hedgerows and make people come in that my home may be filled. [4][c]“What man among you having a hundred sheep and losing one of them would not leave the ninety-nine in the desert and go after the lost one[d] until he finds it?[e] [5]And when he does find it, he sets it on his shoulders with great joy [6]and, upon his arrival home, he calls together his friends and neighbors and says to them, ‘Rejoice with me because I have found my lost sheep.’ [7]I tell you, in just the same way there will be more joy in heaven over one sinner who repents than over ninety-nine righteous people who have no need of repentance.[f]

[11]Then he said, “A man had two sons, [12]and the younger son said to his father, ‘Father, give me the share of your estate that should come to me.’ So the father divided the property between them. [13]After a few days, the younger son collected all his belongings and set off to a distant country where he squandered his inheritance on a life of dissipation.[g] [14]When he had freely spent everything, a severe famine struck that country, and he found himself in dire need. [15]So he hired himself out to one of the local citizens who sent him to his farm to tend the swine. [16]And he longed to eat his fill of the pods on which the swine fed, but nobody gave him any. [17]Coming to his senses he thought, ‘How many of my father’s hired workers have more than enough food to eat, but here am I, dying from hunger. [18]I shall get up and go to my father and I shall say to him, “Father, I have sinned against heaven and against you. [19]I no longer deserve to be called your son; treat me as you would treat one of your hired workers.”’ [20]So he got up and went back to his father. While he was still a long way off, his father caught sight of him, and was filled with compassion. He ran to his son, embraced him and kissed him. [21]His son said to him, ‘Father, I have sinned against heaven and against you; I no longer deserve to be called your son.’ [22]But his father ordered his servants, ‘Quickly bring the finest robe and put it on him; put a ring on his finger and sandals on his feet. [23]Take the fattened calf and slaughter it. Then let us celebrate with a feast, [24]because this son of mine was dead, and has come to life again; he was lost, and has been found.’ Then the celebration began. [25]Now the older son had been out in the field and, on his way back, as he neared the house, he heard the sound of music and dancing. [26]He called one of the servants and asked what this might mean. [27]The servant said to him, ‘Your brother has returned and your father has slaughtered the fattened calf because he has him back safe and sound.’ [28]He became angry, and when he refused to enter the house, his father came out and pleaded with him. [29]He said to his father in reply, ‘Look, all these years I served you and not once did I disobey your orders; yet you never gave me even a young goat to feast on with my friends. [30]But when your son returns who swallowed up your property with prostitutes, for him you slaughter the fattened calf.’ [31]He said to him, ‘My son, you are here with me always; everything I have is yours. [32]But now we must celebrate and rejoice, because your brother was dead and has come to life again; he was lost and has been found.’”

16 [1]Then he also said to his disciples, “A rich man had a steward who was reported to him for squandering his property. [2]He summoned him and said, ‘What is this I hear about you? Prepare a full account of your stewardship, because you can no longer be my steward.’ [3]The steward said to himself, ‘What shall I do, now that my master is taking the position of steward away from me? I am not strong enough to dig and I am ashamed to beg. [4]I know what I shall do so that, when I am removed from the stewardship, they may welcome me into their homes.’ [5]He called in his master’s debtors one by one. To the first he said, ‘How much do you owe my master?’ [6]He replied, ‘One hundred measures of olive oil.’ He said to him, ‘Here is your promissory note. Sit down and quickly write one for fifty.’ [7]Then to another he said, ‘And you, how much do you owe?’ He replied, ‘One hundred kors of wheat.’ He said to him, ‘Here is your promissory note; write one for eighty.’ [8]And the master commended that dishonest steward for acting prudently.

6:24-25

[19]“There was a rich man* who dressed in purple garments and fine linen and dined sumptuously each day. [20]And lying at his door was a poor man named Lazarus, covered with sores,[i] [21]who would gladly have eaten his fill of the scraps that fell from the rich man’s table. Dogs even used to come and lick his sores. [22]When the poor man died, he was carried away by angels to the bosom of Abraham. The rich man also died and was buried, [23]and from the netherworld,* where he was in torment, he raised his eyes and saw Abraham far off and Lazarus at his side. [24]And he cried out, ‘Father Abraham, have pity on me. Send Lazarus to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool my tongue, for I am suffering torment in these flames.’ [25]Abraham replied, ‘My child, remember that you received what was good during your lifetime while Lazarus likewise received what was bad; but now he is comforted here, whereas you are tormented.[j] [26]Moreover, between us and you a great chasm is established to prevent anyone from crossing who might wish to go from our side to yours or from your side to ours.’ [27]He said, ‘Then I beg you, father, send him to my father’s house, [28]for I have five brothers, so that he may warn them, lest they too come to this place of torment.’ [29]But Abraham replied, ‘They have Moses and the prophets. Let them listen to them.’ [30]*He said, ‘Oh no, father Abraham, but if someone from the dead goes to them, they will repent.’ [31]Then Abraham said, ‘If they will not listen to Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded if someone should rise from the dead.’”[k]

The “rich man” of the parable stands in contrast to the reverence for all human beings taught by the Second Vatican Council. According to Gaudium et Spes “everybody should look upon his or her neighbor (without any exception) as another self, bearing in mind especially their neighbor’s life and the means needed for a dignified way of life (27).” Catholic social teaching recognizes that the way societies are organized often makes it hard to treat one’s neighbor with dignity and respect. Consequently believers are challenged to change laws, policies, procedures, and social attitudes, to promote the dignity and respect of every human being.

[3]Be on your guard!* If your brother sins, rebuke him; and if he repents, forgive him.[b] [4]And if he wrongs you seven times in one day and returns to you seven times saying, ‘I am sorry,’ you should forgive him.”[c]

[11]As he continued his journey to Jerusalem,[e] he traveled through Samaria and Galilee.* [12]As he was entering a village, ten lepers met [him]. They stood at a distance from him [13]and raised their voice, saying, "Jesus, Master! Have pity on us!"[f] [14]And when he saw them, he said, "Go show yourselves to the priests."* As they were going they were cleansed.[g] [15]And one of them, realizing he had been healed, returned, glorifying God in a loud voice; [16]and he fell at the feet of Jesus and thanked him. He was a Samaritan. [17]Jesus said in reply, "Ten were cleansed, were they not? Where are the other nine? [18]Has none but this foreigner returned to give thanks to God?" [19]Then he said to him, "Stand up and go; your faith has saved you."[h]

The Grateful Samaritan

The story of the Good Samaritan is so much a part of our culture that we talk about "being a Good Samaritan" and we pass "Good Samaritan laws" to protect those who help others in an emergency. Maybe we can begin to bring another Samaritan into our consciousness—the grateful Samaritan.

When Jesus was met by ten lepers as he was passing through Samaria, we are told the lepers stood at a distance and "raised their voice … 'Jesus, Master! Have pity on us!'" Collectively they asked for attention and mercy. Collectively they were cleansed. However, only one of them, a Samaritan, returned to thank Jesus. Why?

First, the Samaritan leper realized he had been healed. Perhaps we can think about times when we suddenly felt stronger after a bout of the flu, or one day realized that some sadness had lifted. Gratitude begins when we become aware of what is happening in our lives and how we are being changed.

Second, the leper knew that his healing was not his own doing. If we fail to recognize that God is the source of our healing, cleansing, new spirit, or success, then we may miss the gift of felt gratitude. Gratitude is the natural response to a God who makes us whole.

Finally, the leper knew that he was shunned not only because of a skin condition but because he was a Samaritan. When Jesus took notice of him, it changed his perception of himself as an outsider. Gratitude flowed from his sense of worth and dignity as a person, restored to him by Jesus’ acceptance.

In every age let this be your comfort: the kingdom of God is among you. The work of God goes on in your midst every day. There are always faithful disciples of the Word who have invited God’s Spirit into their hearts. Make yourself aware of all the good that is going on in our world. We have only to lift the veil that prevents us from seeing the kingdom of God trying to break through.

22Then he said to his disciples, “The days will come when you will long to see one of the days of the Son of Man, but you will not see it. 23There will be those who will say to you, ‘Look, there he is,’ [or] ‘Look, here he is.’ Do not go off, do not run in pursuit.[k] 24For just as lightning flashes and lights up the sky from one side to the other, so will the Son of Man be [in his day].[l] 25But first he must suffer greatly and be rejected by this generation.[m] 26As it was in the days of Noah,[n] so it will be in the days of the Son of Man; 27they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage up to the day that Noah entered the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. 28[o]Similarly, as it was in the days of Lot: they were eating, drinking, buying, selling, planting, building; 29on the day when Lot left Sodom, fire and brimstone rained from the sky to destroy them all. 30So it will be on the day the Son of Man is revealed. 31[p]On that day, a person who is on the housetop and whose belongings are in the house must not go down to get them, and likewise a person in the field must not return to what was left behind.[q] 32Remember the wife of Lot. 33Whoever seeks to preserve his life will lose it, but whoever loses it will save it.[r] 34 I tell you, on that night there will be two people in one bed; one will be taken, the other left. 35 [s]And there will be two women grinding meal together; one will be taken, the other left.” [36]* 37 They said to him in reply, “Where, Lord?” He said to them, “Where the body is, there also the vultures will gather.”[t]

Jesus’ death as a convicted criminal included the forgiveness of those involved in his execution. In death, Jesus made apparent—one more time—the mission to embody the love and reconciliation of God. The resurrection of Jesus gave God’s own verdict, namely, that life, love, and peace are stronger than the forces of death, hatred, and violence. In light of this, Jesus’ gives the gifts of peace, forgiveness, and reconciliation to the disciples who then possess the task of continuing the work that Jesus began. See The Challenge of Peace 49–51.

18 [1]Then he told them a parable about the necessity for them to pray always without becoming weary.[a] He said, [2]"There was a judge in a certain town who neither feared God nor respected any human being. [3]And a widow in that town used to come to him and say, 'Render a just decision for me against my adversary.' [4]For a long time the judge was unwilling, but eventually he thought, 'While it is true that I neither fear God nor respect any human being, [5][b]because this widow keeps bothering me I shall deliver a just decision for her lest she finally come and strike me.'" [6]The Lord said, "Pay attention to what the dishonest judge says. [7]Will not God then secure the rights of his chosen ones who call out to him day and night? Will he be slow to answer them? [8]I tell you, he will see to it that justice is done for them speedily. But when the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on earth?"

[4]So he ran ahead and climbed a sycamore tree in order to see Jesus, who was about to pass that way. [5]When he reached the place, Jesus looked up and said to him, “Zacchaeus, come down quickly, for today I must stay at your house.” [6]And he came down quickly and received him with joy. [7]When they all saw this, they began to grumble, saying, “He has gone to stay at the house of a sinner.”[a] [8]But Zacchaeus stood there and said to the Lord, “Behold, half of my possessions, Lord, I shall give to the poor, and if I have extorted anything from anyone I shall repay it four times over.”[b] [9]*And Jesus said to him, “Today salvation[c] has come to this house because this man too is a descendant of Abraham. You have been faithful in this very small matter; take charge of ten cities.’[g] 18Then the second came and reported, ‘Your gold coin, sir, has earned five more.’ 19And to this servant too he said, ‘You, take charge of five cities.’ 20Then the other servant came and said, ‘Sir, here is your gold coin; I kept it stored away in a handkerchief, 21for I was afraid of you, because you are a demanding person; you take up what you did not lay down and you harvest what you did not plant.’ 22He said to him, ‘With your own words I shall condemn you, you wicked servant. You knew I was a demanding person, taking up what I did not lay down and harvesting what I did not plant; 23why did you not put my money in a bank? Then on my return I would have collected it with interest.’ 24And to those standing by he said, ‘Take the gold coin from him and give it to the servant who has ten.’ 25But they said to him, ‘Sir, he has ten gold coins.’ 26‘I tell you, to everyone who has, more will be given, but from the one who has not, even what he has will be taken away.[h] 27Now as for those enemies of mine who did not want me as their king, bring them here and slay them before me.’”

Blind Beggar at Jericho, Turning Needs to Abundance

Showing great courage in the face of rebuke, a blind man courageously answered Jesus' question, "What do you want me to do for you?" What does this man teach us today?

- To follow our curiosity, to ask what is going on around us
- To boldly proclaim who Jesus is in our lives
- To ask for help when we need it
- To persist in the face of misunderstanding
- To state our needs to the Lord directly and honestly
- That faith can save us in the very routine of our lives
- That restored sight is available to anyone who asks, whether the blindness is physical or spiritual

Parallel stories are found in Matthew 20:29-34 (the healing of two blind men) and Mark 10:46-52 (where the blind man is identified as Bartimaeus). In each account, the persons healed follow Jesus. Luke's version is unique in that the healed blind man glorifies God, which in turn causes others to praise God. Once a beggar, the man is now a generous giver to the God who heals and saves. His need has led to a great abundance.

28After he had said this, he proceeded on his journey up to Jerusalem. 29As he drew near to Bethphage and Bethany at the place called the Mount of Olives, he sent two of his disciples.[j] 30He said, “Go into the village opposite you, and as you enter it you will find a colt tethered on which no one has ever sat. Untie it and bring it here.[k] 31And if anyone should ask you, ‘Why are you untying it?’ you will answer, ‘The Master has need of it.’” 32So those who had been sent went off and found everything just as he had told them.[l] 33And as they were untying the colt, its owners said to them, “Why are you untying this colt?” 34They answered, “The Master has need of it.” 35[m]So they brought it to Jesus, threw their cloaks over the colt, and helped Jesus to mount. 36As he rode along, the people were spreading their cloaks on the road; 37and now as he was approaching the slope of the Mount of Olives, the whole multitude of his disciples began to praise God aloud with joy for all the mighty deeds they had seen. 38They proclaimed:

For all seven had been married to her.” 34Jesus said to them, “The children of this age marry and are given in marriage; 35but those who are deemed worthy to attain to the coming age and to the resurrection of the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage. 36They can no longer die, for they are like angels; and they are the children of God because they are the ones who will rise.* 37That the dead will rise even Moses made known in the passage about the bush, when he called ‘Lord’ the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob;[r] 38and he is not God of the dead, but of the living, for to him all are alive.”[s] 39Some of the scribes said in reply, “Teacher, you have answered well.” 40And they no longer dared to ask him anything.[t]

34“Beware that your hearts do not become drowsy from carousing and drunkenness and the anxieties of daily life, and that day catch you by surprise[a] 35like a trap. For that day will assault everyone who lives on the face of the earth. 36Be vigilant at all times and pray that you have the strength to escape the tribulations that are imminent and to stand before the Son of Man.”[b]

Acts 1:17

22 [1][a]Now the feast of Unleavened Bread, called the Passover,* was drawing near, [2][b]and the chief priests and the scribes were seeking a way to put him to death, for they were afraid of the people. [3][c]Then Satan entered into Judas,* the one surnamed Iscariot, who was counted among the Twelve,[d] [4]and he went to the chief priests and temple guards to discuss a plan for handing him over to them. [5]They were pleased and agreed to pay him money. [6]He accepted their offer and sought a favorable opportunity to hand him over to them in the absence of a crowd.

7When the day of the feast of Unleavened Bread arrived, the day for sacrificing the Passover lamb,[f] 8he sent out Peter and John, instructing them, “Go and make preparations for us to eat the Passover.” 9They asked him, “Where do you want us to make the preparations?” 10And he answered them, “When you go into the city, a man will meet you carrying a jar of water.* Follow him into the house that he enters 11and say to the master of the house, ‘The teacher says to you, “Where is the guest room where I may eat the Passover with my disciples?”’ 12He will show you a large upper room that is furnished. Make the preparations there.” 13Then they went off and found everything exactly as he had told them, and there they prepared the Passover.[g]

[15]He said to them, “I have eagerly desired to eat this Passover* with you before I suffer, [16]for, I tell you, I shall not eat it [again] until there is fulfillment in the kingdom of God.”[i] [17]Then he took a cup,* gave thanks, and said, “Take this and share it among yourselves; [18]for I tell you [that] from this time on I shall not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God comes.” [19]*[j]Then he took the bread, said the blessing, broke it, and gave it to them, saying, “This is my body, which will be given for you; do this in memory of me.” [20]And likewise the cup after they had eaten, saying, “This cup is the new covenant in my blood, which will be shed for you.[k]

The Betrayal Foretold

21 l“And yet behold, the hand of the one who is to betray me is with me on the table; 22for the Son of Man indeed goes as it has been determined; but woe to that man by whom he is betrayed.” 23And they began to debate among themselves who among them would do such a deed.

Rather, let the greatest among you be as the youngest, and the leader as the servant.[o] 27For who is greater: the one seated at table or the one who serves? Is it not the one seated at table? View of Jerusalem from the Garden of Gethsemane

What is commonly called “the agony in the garden” is actually portrayed thus only in Luke’s version. Luke calls the “garden” the Mount of Olives and uses the Greek word agonia (“anguish, intense struggle”) to evoke the kind of preparation that athletes undergo before an athletic contest. Luke emphasizes the intensity by describing sweat “like drops of blood,” but these lines (22:43-44) are missing from the oldest and best manuscripts. Nonetheless, Christian theology and art have interpreted Jesus’ time of prayer on the Mount of Olives as an ultimate test of his willingness to accept his Father’s will.

Get up and pray that you may not undergo the test.”[c]

[48]Jesus said to him, “Judas, are you betraying the Son of Man with a kiss?” [49]His disciples realized what was about to happen, and they asked, “Lord, shall we strike with a sword?”[e] [50]And one of them struck the high priest’s servant and cut off his right ear.[f] [51]*But Jesus said in reply, “Stop, no more of this!” Then he touched the servant’s ear and healed him. [52]And Jesus said to the chief priests and temple guards and elders who had come for him, “Have you come out as against a robber, with swords and clubs?[g] [53]Day after day I was with you in the temple area, and you did not seize me; but this is your hour, the time for the power of darkness.”[h]

[13]Pilate then summoned the chief priests, the rulers, and the people [14]and said to them, "You brought this man to me and accused him of inciting the people to revolt. I have conducted my investigation in your presence and have not found this man guilty of the charges you have brought against him,[j] [15]nor did Herod, for he sent him back to us. [18]But all together they shouted out, “Away with this man! Release Barabbas to us.” [19](Now Barabbas had been imprisoned for a rebellion that had taken place in the city and for murder.) [20]Again Pilate addressed them, still wishing to release Jesus, [21]but they continued their shouting, “Crucify him! Crucify him!” [22]Pilate addressed them a third time, “What evil has this man done? I found him guilty of no capital crime. Therefore I shall have him flogged and then release him.”

[23]With loud shouts, however, they persisted in calling for his crucifixion, and their voices prevailed. [24]The verdict of Pilate was that their demand should be granted. 13Now that very day two of them were going to a village seven miles* from Jerusalem called Emmaus,[i] 14and they were conversing about all the things that had occurred. 15And it happened that while they were conversing and debating, Jesus himself drew near and walked with them, 16*[j]but their eyes were prevented from recognizing him. 17He asked them, “What are you discussing as you walk along?” They stopped, looking downcast. 18One of them, named Cleopas, said to him in reply, “Are you the only visitor to Jerusalem who does not know of the things that have taken place there in these days?” 19And he replied to them, “What sort of things?” They said to him, “The things that happened to Jesus the Nazarene, who was a prophet mighty in deed and word before God and all the people,[k] 20how our chief priests and rulers both handed him over to a sentence of death and crucified him. 21[l]But we were hoping that he would be the one to redeem Israel; and besides all this, it is now the third day since this took place. 22[m]Some women from our group, however, have astounded us: they were at the tomb early in the morning 23and did not find his body; they came back and reported that they had indeed seen a vision of angels who announced that he was alive. 24[n]Then some of those with us went to the tomb and found things just as the women had described, but him they did not see.” [25][o]And he said to them, “Oh, how foolish you are! How slow of heart to believe all that the prophets spoke! [26]Was it not necessary that the Messiah should suffer* these things and enter into his glory?” [27]Then beginning with Moses and all the prophets, he interpreted to them what referred to him in all the scriptures.[p] [28]As they approached the village to which they were going, he gave the impression that he was going on farther. [29]But they urged him, “Stay with us, for it is nearly evening and the day is almost over.” So he went in to stay with them. [30]And it happened that, while he was with them at table, he took bread, said the blessing, broke it, and gave it to them. [31]With that their eyes were opened and they recognized him, but he vanished from their sight. [32]Then they said to each other, “Were not our hearts burning [within us] while he spoke to us on the way and opened the scriptures to us?” [33]So they set out at once and returned to Jerusalem where they found gathered together the eleven and those with them [34]who were saying, “The Lord has truly been raised and has appeared to Simon!”[q] [35]Then the two recounted what had taken place on the way and how he was made known to them in the breaking of the bread.

Lessons while Traveling

In one of the most beloved passages of Scripture we hear of disciples of Jesus who gradually shed their disappointment and fear to embrace the risen Lord. What happened to them as they traveled away from Jerusalem, no doubt intending to escape their dashed dreams and any possible dangers as followers of an executed criminal?

We know they talked. They told stories to each other, and to someone they believed to be a stranger traveling their direction. Their stories were a way of trying to make sense of what had happened, of trying to recover the meaning they felt in the presence of Jesus.

We know they attempted to put the facts in order. They retraced Jesus’ ministry, his betrayal and gruesome death, and finally the report that Jesus’ body was missing from the grave. Maybe they were searching for something they had missed or maybe they just wanted the stranger to know the facts before making a judgment.

We know they listened to their fellow traveler. They didn’t argue with him when he expressed dismay and called them foolish, but in their listening they began to gain clarity.

We know they offered hospitality. Hospitality was a cardinal virtue in the ancient world and still is throughout the Middle East. Their generosity was a spontaneous and natural response to the relationship that had grown between them as they traveled.

We know they saw with new eyes, and in the breaking of the bread recognized Jesus in their midst.

Who knows what they learned as they traveled back to Jerusalem with lighter feet and the urgent message, “The Lord has truly been raised!”

36*While they were still speaking about this,[r] he stood in their midst and said to them, “Peace be with you.”[s] 37But they were startled and terrified and thought that they were seeing a ghost.[t] 38Then he said to them, “Why are you troubled? And why do questions arise in your hearts? 39*Look at my hands and my feet, that it is I myself. Touch me and see, because a ghost does not have flesh and bones as you can see I have.” 40[u]And as he said this, he showed them his hands and his feet. 41While they were still incredulous for joy and were amazed, he asked them, “Have you anything here to eat?” 42They gave him a piece of baked fish;[v] 43he took it and ate it in front of them.

44He said to them, “These are my words that I spoke to you while I was still with you, that everything written about me in the law of Moses and in the prophets and psalms must be fulfilled.”[w] 45Then he opened their minds to understand the scriptures.[x] 46*And he said to them,[y] “Thus it is written that the Messiah would suffer and rise from the dead on the third day [47]and that repentance, for the forgiveness of sins, would be preached in his name to all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem.[z] [48]You are witnesses of these things.[a] [49]And [behold] I am sending the promise of my Father[*] upon you; but stay in the city until you are clothed with power from on high.”[b]

Mk 16:19; Acts 1:9-11

[50][c]Then he led them [out] as far as Bethany, raised his hands, and blessed them. [51]As he blessed them he parted from them and was taken up to heaven. [52]They did him homage and then returned to Jerusalem with great joy,[d] [53]and they were continually in the temple praising God.*

Luke’s story of the ascension appears twice, here at the end of the gospel, and again at the beginning of Acts (1:6-12), although it is meant to be seen as one event. It provides continuity between the story of Jesus in the gospel and the story of the church in Acts. The ascension is Jesus’ return to heaven in glory; it completes his “exodus” to the Father (Lk 9:31). He then sends the Holy Spirit, “the promise of the Father” (Lk 24:49; Acts 1:4), to accompany the church on its missionary journey.

1:1-4 The Gospel according to Luke is the only one of the synoptic gospels to begin with a literary prologue. Making use of a formal, literary construction and vocabulary, the author writes the prologue in imitation of Hellenistic Greek writers and, in so doing, relates his story about Jesus to contemporaneous Greek and Roman literature. Luke is not only interested in the words and deeds of Jesus, but also in the larger context of the birth, ministry, death, and resurrection of Jesus as the fulfillment of the promises of God in the Old Testament. As a second- or third-generation Christian, Luke acknowledges his debt to earlier eyewitnesses and ministers of the word, but claims that his contribution to this developing tradition is a complete and accurate account, told in an orderly manner, and intended to provide Theophilus (“friend of God,” literally) and other readers with certainty about earlier teachings they have received.

1:5–2:52 Like the Gospel according to Matthew, this gospel opens with an infancy narrative, a collection of stories about the birth and childhood of Jesus. The narrative uses early Christian traditions about the birth of Jesus, traditions about the birth and circumcision of John the Baptist, and canticles such as the Magnificat (1:46-55) and Benedictus (1:67-79), composed of phrases drawn from the Greek Old Testament. It is largely, however, the composition of Luke who writes in imitation of Old Testament birth stories, combining historical and legendary details, literary ornamentation and interpretation of scripture, to answer in advance the question, “Who is Jesus Christ?” The focus of the narrative, therefore, is primarily christological. In this section Luke announces many of the themes that will become prominent in the rest of the gospel: the centrality of Jerusalem and the temple, the journey motif, the universality of salvation, joy and peace, concern for the lowly, the importance of women, the presentation of Jesus as savior, Spirit-guided revelation and prophecy, and the fulfillment of Old Testament promises. The account presents parallel scenes (diptychs) of angelic announcements of the birth of John the Baptist and of Jesus, and of the birth, circumcision, and presentation of John and Jesus. In this parallelism, the ascendency of Jesus over John is stressed: John is prophet of the Most High (1:76); Jesus is Son of the Most High (1:32). John is great in the sight of the Lord (1:15); Jesus will be Great (a LXX attribute, used absolutely, of God) (1:32). John will go before the Lord (1:16-17); Jesus will be Lord (1:43; 2:11).

1:5 In the days of Herod, King of Judea: Luke relates the story of salvation history to events in contemporary world history. Here and in Luke 3:1-2 he connects his narrative with events in Palestinian history; in Luke 2:1-2 and Luke 3:1, he casts the Jesus story in the light of events of Roman history. Herod the Great, the son of the Idumean Antipater, was declared "King of Judea" by the Roman Senate in 40 B.C., but became the undisputed ruler of Palestine only in 37 B.C. He continued as king until his death in 4 B.C. Priestly division of Abijah: a reference to the eighth of the twenty-four divisions of priests who, for a week at a time, twice a year, served in the Jerusalem temple.

1:7 They had no child: though childlessness was looked upon in contemporaneous Judaism as a curse or punishment for sin, it is intended here to present Elizabeth in a situation similar to that of some of the great mothers of important Old Testament figures: Sarah (Gn 15:3; 16:1); Rebekah (Gn 25:21); Rachel (Gn 29:31; 30:1); the mother of Samson and wife of Manoah (Jgs 13:2-3); Hannah (1 Sm 1:2).

1:13 Do not be afraid: a stereotyped Old Testament phrase spoken to reassure the recipient of a heavenly vision (Gn 15:1; Jos 1:9; Dn 10:12, 19 and elsewhere in Lk 1:30; 2:10). You shall name him John: the name means "Yahweh has shown favor," an indication of John's role in salvation history.

1:15 He will drink neither wine nor strong drink: like Samson (Jgs 13:4-5) and Samuel (1 Sm 1:11 LXX and 4QSam$_a$), John is to be consecrated by Nazirite vow and set apart for the Lord's service.

1:17 He will go before him in the spirit and power of Elijah: John is to be the messenger sent before Yahweh, as described in Malachi 3:1-2. He is cast, moreover, in the role of the Old Testament fiery reformer, the prophet Elijah, who according to Malachi 3:23 (Lk 4:5) is sent before "the great and terrible day of the Lord comes."

1:19 I am Gabriel: "the angel of the Lord" is identified as Gabriel, the angel who in Daniel 9:20-25 announces the seventy weeks of years and the coming of an anointed one, a prince. By alluding to Old Testament themes in Luke 1:17, 19, such as the coming of the day of the Lord and the dawning of the messianic era, Luke is presenting his interpretation of the significance of the births of John and Jesus.

1:20 You will be speechless and unable to talk: Zechariah's becoming mute is the sign given in response to his question in v. 18. When Mary asks a similar question in Luke 1:34, unlike Zechariah who was punished for his doubt, she, in spite of her doubt, is praised and reassured (1:35-37).

1:26-38 The announcement to Mary of the birth of Jesus is parallel to the announcement to Zechariah of the birth of John. In both the angel Gabriel appears to the parent who is troubled by the vision (1:11-12, 26-29) and then told by the angel not to fear (1:13, 30). After the announcement is made (1:14-17, 31-33) the parent objects (1:18, 34) and a sign is given to confirm the announcement (1:20, 36). The particular focus of the announcement of the birth of Jesus is on his identity as Son of David (1:32-33) and Son of God (1:32, 35).

1:32 Son of the Most High: cf. Luke 1:76 where John is described as "prophet of the Most High." "Most High" is a title for God commonly used by Luke (1:35, 76; 6:35; 8:28; Acts 7:48; 16:17).

1:34 Mary's questioning response is a denial of sexual relations and is used by Luke to lead to the angel's declaration about the Spirit's role in the conception of this child (1:35). According to Luke, the virginal conception of Jesus takes place through the holy Spirit, the power of God, and therefore Jesus has a unique relationship to Yahweh: he is Son of God.

1:36-37 The sign given to Mary in confirmation of the angel's announcement to her is the pregnancy of her aged relative Elizabeth. If a woman past the childbearing age could become pregnant, why, the angel implies, should there be doubt about Mary's pregnancy, for nothing will be impossible for God.

1:43 Even before his birth, Jesus is identified in Luke as the Lord.

1:45 Blessed are you who believed: Luke portrays Mary as a believer whose faith stands in contrast to the disbelief of Zechariah (1:20). Mary's role as believer in the infancy narrative should be seen in connection with the explicit mention of her presence among "those who believed" after the resurrection at the beginning of the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 1:14).

1:46-55 Although Mary is praised for being the mother of the Lord and because of her belief, she reacts as the servant in a psalm of praise, the Magnificat. Because there is no specific connection of the canticle to the context of Mary's pregnancy and her visit to Elizabeth, the Magnificat (with the possible exception of v. 48) may have been a Jewish Christian hymn that Luke found appropriate at this point in his story. Even if not composed by Luke, it fits in well with themes found elsewhere in Luke: joy and exultation in the Lord; the lowly being singled out for God's favor; the reversal of human fortunes; the fulfillment of Old Testament promises. The loose connection between the hymn and the context is further seen in the fact that a few Old Latin manuscripts identify the speaker of the hymn as Elizabeth, even though the overwhelming textual evidence makes Mary the speaker.

1:57-66 The birth and circumcision of John above all emphasize John's incorporation into the people of Israel by the sign of the covenant (Gn 17:1-12). The narrative of John's circumcision also prepares the way for the subsequent description of the circumcision of Jesus in Luke 2:21. At the beginning of his two-volume work Luke shows those who play crucial roles in the inauguration of Christianity to be wholly a part of the people of Israel. At the end of the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 21:20; 22:3; 23:6-9; 24:14-16; 26:2-8, 22-23) he will argue that Christianity is the direct descendant of Pharisaic Judaism.

1:59 The practice of Palestinian Judaism at this time was to name the child at birth; moreover, though naming a male child after the father is not completely unknown, the usual practice was to name the child after the grandfather (see 1:61). The naming of the child John and Zechariah's recovery from his loss of speech should be understood as fulfilling the angel's announcement to Zechariah in Luke 1:13, 20.

1:68-79 Like the canticle of Mary (1:46-55) the canticle of Zechariah is only loosely connected with its context. Apart from Luke 1:76-77, the hymn in speaking of a horn for our salvation (1:69) and the daybreak from on high (1:78) applies more closely to Jesus and his work than to John. Again like Mary's canticle, it is largely composed of phrases taken from the Greek Old Testament and may have been a Jewish Christian hymn of praise that Luke adapted to fit the present context by inserting Luke 1:76-77 to give Zechariah's reply to the question asked in Luke 1:66.

1:69 A horn for our salvation: the horn is a common Old Testament figure for strength (Pss 18:3; 75:5-6; 89:18; 112:9; 148:14). This description is applied to God in Psalm 18:3 and is here transferred to Jesus. The connection of the phrase with the house of David gives the title messianic overtones and may indicate an allusion to a phrase in Hannah's song of praise (1 Sm 2:10), "the horn of his anointed."

1:76 You will go before the Lord: here the Lord is most likely a reference to Jesus (contrast 1:15-17 where Yahweh is meant) and John is presented as the precursor of Jesus.

1:78 The daybreak from on high: three times in the LXX (Jer 23:5; Zec 3:8; 6:12), the Greek word used here for daybreak translates the Hebrew word for "scion, branch," an Old Testament messianic title.

2:1-2 Although universal registrations of Roman citizens are attested in 28 B.C., 8 B.C., and A.D. 14 and enrollments in individual provinces of those who are not Roman citizens are also attested, such a universal census of the Roman world under Caesar Augustus is unknown outside the New Testament. Moreover, there are notorious historical problems connected with Luke's dating the census when Quirinius was governor of Syria, and the various attempts to resolve the difficulties have proved unsuccessful. P. Sulpicius Quirinius became legate of the province of Syria in A.D. 6–7 when Judea was annexed to the province of Syria. At that time, a provincial census of Judea was taken up. If Quirinius had been legate of Syria previously, it would have to have been before 10 B.C. because the various legates of Syria from 10 B.C. to 4 B.C. (the death of Herod) are known, and such a dating for an earlier census under Quirinius would create additional problems for dating the beginning of Jesus' ministry (3:1, 23). A previous legateship after 4 B.C. (and before A.D. 6) would not fit with the dating of Jesus' birth in the days of Herod (1:5; Mt 2:1). Luke may simply be combining Jesus' birth in Bethlehem with his vague recollection of a census under Quirinius (see also Acts 5:37) to underline the significance of this birth for the whole Roman world: through this child born in Bethlehem peace and salvation come to the empire.

2:1 Caesar Augustus: the reign of the Roman emperor Caesar Augustus is usually dated from 27 B.C. to his death in A.D. 14. According to Greek inscriptions, Augustus was regarded in the Roman Empire as "savior" and "god," and he was credited with establishing a time of peace, the pax Augusta, throughout the Roman world during his long reign. It is not by chance that Luke relates the birth of Jesus to the time of Caesar Augustus: the real savior (2:11) and peace-bearer (2:14; see also 19:38) is the child born in Bethlehem. The great emperor is simply God's agent (like the Persian king Cyrus in Is 44:28–45:1) who provides the occasion for God's purposes to be accomplished. The whole world: that is, the whole Roman world: Rome, Italy, and the Roman provinces.

2:7 Firstborn son: the description of Jesus as firstborn son does not necessarily mean that Mary had other sons. It is a legal description indicating that Jesus possessed the rights and privileges of the firstborn son (Gn 27; Ex 13:2; Nm 3:12-13; 18:15-16; Dt 21:15-17). See the notes on Matthew 1:25; Mark 6:3. Wrapped him in swaddling clothes: there may be an allusion here to the birth of another descendant of David, his son Solomon, who though a great king was wrapped in swaddling clothes like any other infant (Wis 7:4-6). Laid him in a manger: a feeding trough for animals. A possible allusion to Isaiah 1:3 LXX.

2:8-20 The announcement of Jesus' birth to the shepherds is in keeping with Luke's theme that the lowly are singled out as the recipients of God's favors and blessings (see also 1:48, 52).

2:11 The basic message of the infancy narrative is contained in the angel's announcement: this child is savior, Messiah, and Lord. Luke is the only synoptic gospel writer to use the title savior for Jesus (2:11; Acts 5:31; 13:23; see also Lk 1:69; 19:9; Acts 4:12). As savior, Jesus is looked upon by Luke as the one who rescues humanity from sin and delivers humanity from the condition of alienation from God. The title christos, "Christ," is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew māšîaḥ, "Messiah," "anointed one." Among certain groups in first-century Palestinian Judaism, the title was applied to an expected royal leader from the line of David who would restore the kingdom to Israel (see Acts 1:6). The political overtones of the title are played down in Luke and instead the Messiah of the Lord (2:26) or the Lord's anointed is the one who now brings salvation to all humanity, Jew and Gentile (2:29-32). Lord is the most frequently used title for Jesus in Luke and Acts. In the New Testament it is also applied to Yahweh, as it is in the Old Testament. When used of Jesus it points to his transcendence and dominion over humanity.

2:14 On earth peace to those on whom his favor rests: the peace that results from the Christ event is for those whom God has favored with his grace. This reading is found in the oldest representatives of the Western and Alexandrian text traditions and is the preferred one; the Byzantine text tradition, on the other hand, reads: "on earth peace, good will toward men." The peace of which Luke's gospel speaks (2:14; 7:50; 8:48; 10:5-6; 19:38, 42; 24:36) is more than the absence of war of the pax Augusta; it also includes the security and well-being characteristic of peace in the Old Testament.

2:21 Just as John before him had been incorporated into the people of Israel through his circumcision, so too this child (see the note on 1:57-66).

2:22-40 The presentation of Jesus in the temple depicts the parents of Jesus as devout Jews, faithful observers of the law of the Lord (2:23-24, 39), i.e., the law of Moses. In this respect, they are described in a fashion similar to the parents of John (1:6) and Simeon (2:25) and Anna (2:36-37).

2:22 Their purification: syntactically, their must refer to Mary and Joseph, even though the Mosaic law never mentions the purification of the husband. Recognizing the problem, some Western scribes have altered the text to read "his purification," understanding the presentation of Jesus in the temple as a form of purification; the Vulgate version has a Latin form that could be either "his" or "her." According to the Mosaic law (Lv 12:2-8), the woman who gives birth to a boy is unable for forty days to touch anything sacred or to enter the temple area by reason of her legal impurity. At the end of this period she is required to offer a year-old lamb as a burnt offering and a turtledove or young pigeon as an expiation of sin. The woman who could not afford a lamb offered instead two turtledoves or two young pigeons, as Mary does here. They took him up to Jerusalem to present him to the Lord: as the firstborn son (2:7) Jesus was consecrated to the Lord as the law required (Ex 13:2, 12), but there was no requirement that this be done at the temple. The concept of a presentation at the temple is probably derived from 1 Samuel 1:24-28, where Hannah offers the child Samuel for sanctuary services. The law further stipulated (Nm 3:47-48) that the firstborn son should be redeemed by the parents through their payment of five shekels to a member of a priestly family. About this legal requirement Luke is silent.

2:25 Awaiting the consolation of Israel: Simeon here and later Anna who speak about the child to all who were awaiting the redemption of Jerusalem represent the hopes and expectations of faithful and devout Jews who at this time were looking forward to the restoration of God's rule in Israel. The birth of Jesus brings these hopes to fulfillment.

2:35 (And you yourself a sword will pierce): Mary herself will not be untouched by the various reactions to the role of Jesus (Lk 2:34). Her blessedness as mother of the Lord will be challenged by her son who describes true blessedness as “hearing the word of God and observing it” (11:27-28 and 8:20-21).

2:41-52 This story’s concern with an incident from Jesus’ youth is unique in the canonical gospel tradition. It presents Jesus in the role of the faithful Jewish boy, raised in the traditions of Israel, and fulfilling all that the law requires. With this episode, the infancy narrative ends just as it began, in the setting of the Jerusalem temple.

2:49 I must be in my Father’s house: this phrase can also be translated, “I must be about my Father’s work.” In either translation, Jesus refers to God as his Father. His divine sonship, and his obedience to his heavenly Father’s will, take precedence over his ties to his family.

3:1-20 Although Luke is indebted in this section to his sources, the Gospel of Mark and a collection of sayings of John the Baptist, he has clearly marked this introduction to the ministry of Jesus with his own individual style. Just as the gospel began with a long periodic sentence (1:1-4), so too this section (3:1-2). He casts the call of John the Baptist in the form of an Old Testament prophetic call (3:2) and extends the quotation from Isaiah found in Mark 1:3 (Is 40:3) by the addition of Isaiah 40:4-5 in Luke 3:5-6. In doing so, he presents his theme of the universality of salvation, which he has announced earlier in the words of Simeon (2:30-32). Moreover, in describing the expectation of the people (3:15), Luke is characterizing the time of John’s preaching in the same way as he had earlier described the situation of other devout Israelites in the infancy narrative (2:25-26, 37-38). In Luke 3:7-18 Luke presents the preaching of John the Baptist who urges the crowds to reform in view of the coming wrath (3:7, 9: eschatological preaching), and who offers the crowds certain standards for reforming social conduct (3:10-14: ethical preaching), and who announces to the crowds the coming of one mightier than he (3:15-18: messianic preaching).

3:1 Tiberius Caesar: Tiberius succeeded Augustus as emperor in A.D. 14 and reigned until A.D. 37. The fifteenth year of his reign, depending on the method of calculating his first regnal year, would have fallen between A.D. 27 and 29. Pontius Pilate: prefect of Judea from A.D. 26 to 36. The Jewish historian Josephus describes him as a greedy and ruthless prefect who had little regard for the local Jewish population and their religious practices (see 13:1). Herod: i.e., Herod Antipas, the son of Herod the Great. He ruled over Galilee and Perea from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39. His official title tetrarch means literally, “ruler of a quarter,” but came to designate any subordinate prince. Philip: also a son of Herod the Great, tetrarch of the territory to the north and east of the Sea of Galilee from 4 B.C. to A.D. 34. Only two small areas of this territory are mentioned by Luke. Lysanias: nothing is known about this Lysanias who is said here to have been tetrarch of Abilene, a territory northwest of Damascus.

3:2 During the high priesthood of Annas and Caiaphas: after situating the call of John the Baptist in terms of the civil rulers of the period, Luke now mentions the religious leadership of Palestine (see the note on 1:5). Annas had been high priest A.D. 6–15. After being deposed by the Romans in A.D. 15 he was succeeded by various members of his family and eventually by his son-in-law, Caiaphas, who was high priest A.D. 18–36. Luke refers to Annas as high priest at this time (but see Jn 18:13, 19), possibly because of the continuing influence of Annas or because the title continued to be used for the ex-high priest. The word of God came to John: Luke is alone among the New Testament writers in associating the preaching of John with a call from God. Luke is thereby identifying John with the prophets whose ministries began with similar calls. In Luke 7:26 John will be described as “more than a prophet"; he is also the precursor of Jesus (7:27), a transitional figure inaugurating the period of the fulfillment of prophecy and promise.

3:4 The Essenes from Qumran used the same passage to explain why their community was in the desert studying and observing the law and the prophets (1QS 8:12-15).

3:16 He will baptize you with the holy Spirit and fire: in contrast to John's baptism with water, Jesus is said to baptize with the holy Spirit and with fire. From the point of view of the early Christian community, the Spirit and fire must have been understood in the light of the fire symbolism of the pouring out of the Spirit at Pentecost (Acts 2:1-4); but as part of John's preaching, the Spirit and fire should be related to their purifying and refining characteristics (Ez 36:25-27; Mal 3:2-3). See the note on Matthew 3:11.

3:17 Winnowing fan: see the note on Matthew 3:12.

3:19-20 Luke separates the ministry of John the Baptist from that of Jesus by reporting the imprisonment of John before the baptism of Jesus (3:21-22). Luke uses this literary device to serve his understanding of the periods of salvation history. With John the Baptist, the time of promise, the period of Israel, comes to an end; with the baptism of Jesus and the descent of the Spirit upon him, the time of fulfillment, the period of Jesus, begins. In his second volume, the Acts of the Apostles, Luke will introduce the third epoch in salvation history, the period of the church.

3:21-22 This episode in Luke focuses on the heavenly message identifying Jesus as Son and, through the allusion to Isaiah 42:1, as Servant of Yahweh. The relationship of Jesus to the Father has already been announced in the infancy narrative (1:32, 35; 2:49); it occurs here at the beginning of Jesus' Galilean ministry and will reappear in Luke 9:35 before another major section of Luke's gospel, the travel narrative (9:51–19:27). Elsewhere in Luke's writings (4:18; Acts 10:38), this incident will be interpreted as a type of anointing of Jesus.

3:21 Was praying: Luke regularly presents Jesus at prayer at important points in his ministry: here at his baptism; at the choice of the Twelve (6:12); before Peter's confession (9:18); at the transfiguration (9:28); when he teaches his disciples to pray (11:1); at the Last Supper (22:32); on the Mount of Olives (22:41); on the cross (23:46).

3:22 You are my beloved Son; with you I am well pleased: this is the best attested reading in the Greek manuscripts. The Western reading, "You are my Son, this day I have begotten you," is derived from Psalm 2:7.

3:23-38 Whereas Matthew 1:2 begins the genealogy of Jesus with Abraham to emphasize Jesus' bonds with the people of Israel, Luke's universalism leads him to trace the descent of Jesus beyond Israel to Adam and beyond that to God (3:38) to stress again Jesus' divine sonship.

3:31 The son of Nathan, the son of David: in keeping with Jesus' prophetic role in Luke and Acts (e.g., 7:16, 39; 9:8; 13:33; 24:19; Acts 3:22-23; 7:37) Luke traces Jesus' Davidic ancestry through the prophet Nathan (see 2 Sm 7:2) rather than through King Solomon, as Matthew 1:6-7.

4:1-13 See the note on Matthew 4:1-11.

4:1 Filled with the holy Spirit: as a result of the descent of the Spirit upon him at his baptism (3:21-22), Jesus is now equipped to overcome the devil. Just as the Spirit is prominent at this early stage of Jesus' ministry (4:1, 14, 18), so too it will be at the beginning of the period of the church in Acts (Acts 1:4; 2:4, 17).

4:2 For forty days: the mention of forty days recalls the forty years of the wilderness wanderings of the Israelites during the Exodus (Dt 8:2).

4:9 To Jerusalem: the Lucan order of the temptations concludes on the parapet of the temple in Jerusalem, the city of destiny in Luke-Acts. It is in Jerusalem that Jesus will ultimately face his destiny (9:51; 13:33).

4:13 For a time: the devil's opportune time will occur before the passion and death of Jesus (22:3, 31-32, 53).

4:14 News of him spread: a Lucan theme; see Luke 4:37; 5:15; 7:17.

4:16-30 Luke has transposed to the beginning of Jesus' ministry an incident from his Marcan source, which situated it near the end of the Galilean ministry (Mk 6:1-6a). In doing so, Luke turns the initial admiration (4:22) and subsequent rejection of Jesus (4:28-29) into a foreshadowing of the whole future ministry of Jesus. Moreover, the rejection of Jesus in his own hometown hints at the greater rejection of him by Israel (Acts 13:46).

4:16 According to his custom: Jesus' practice of regularly attending synagogue is carried on by the early Christians' practice of meeting in the temple (Acts 2:46; 3:1; 5:12).

4:18 The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me: see the note on Luke 3:21-22. As this incident develops, Jesus is portrayed as a prophet whose ministry is compared to that of the prophets Elijah and Elisha. Prophetic anointings are known in first-century Palestinian Judaism from the Qumran literature that speaks of prophets as God's anointed ones. To bring glad tidings to the poor: more than any other gospel writer Luke is concerned with Jesus' attitude toward the economically and socially poor (see 6:20, 24; 12:16-21; 14:12-14; 16:19-26; 19:8). At times, the poor in Luke's gospel are associated with the downtrodden, the oppressed and afflicted, the forgotten and the neglected (4:18; 6:20-22; 7:22; 14:12-14), and it is they who accept Jesus' message of salvation.

4:21 Today this scripture passage is fulfilled in your hearing: this sermon inaugurates the time of fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy. Luke presents the ministry of Jesus as fulfilling Old Testament hopes and expectations (7:22); for Luke, even Jesus' suffering, death, and resurrection are done in fulfillment of the scriptures (24:25-27, 44-46; Acts 3:18).

4:23 The things that we heard were done in Capernaum: Luke's source for this incident reveals an awareness of an earlier ministry of Jesus in Capernaum that Luke has not yet made use of because of his transposition of this Nazareth episode to the beginning of Jesus' Galilean ministry. It is possible that by use of the future tense you will quote me …, Jesus is being portrayed as a prophet.

4:25-26 The references to Elijah and Elisha serve several purposes in this episode: they emphasize Luke's portrait of Jesus as a prophet like Elijah and Elisha; they help to explain why the initial admiration of the people turns to rejection; and they provide the scriptural justification for the future Christian mission to the Gentiles.

4:26 A widow in Zarephath in the land of Sidon: like Naaman the Syrian in Luke 4:27, a non-Israelite becomes the object of the prophet's ministry.

4:31-44 The next several incidents in Jesus' ministry take place in Capernaum and are based on Luke's source, Mark 1:21-39. To the previous portrait of Jesus as prophet (4:16-30) they now add a presentation of him as teacher (4:31-32), exorcist (4:32-37, 41), healer (4:38-40), and proclaimer of God's kingdom (4:43).

4:34 What have you to do with us?: see the note on John 2:4. Have you come to destroy us?: the question reflects the current belief that before the day of the Lord control over humanity would be wrested from the evil spirits, evil destroyed, and God's authority over humanity reestablished. The synoptic gospel tradition presents Jesus carrying out this task.

4:38 The house of Simon: because of Luke's arrangement of material, the reader has not yet been introduced to Simon (cf. Mk 1:16-18, 29-31). Situated as it is before the call of Simon (5:1-11), it helps the reader to understand Simon's eagerness to do what Jesus says (5:5) and to follow him (5:11).

4:41 They knew that he was the Messiah: that is, the Christ (see the note on 2:11).

4:42 They tried to prevent him from leaving them: the reaction of these strangers in Capernaum is presented in contrast to the reactions of those in his hometown who rejected him (4:28-30).

4:44 In the synagogues of Judea: instead of Judea, which is the best reading of the manuscript tradition, the Byzantine text tradition and other manuscripts read "Galilee," a reading that harmonizes Luke with Matthew 4:23 and Mark 1:39. Up to this point Luke has spoken only of a ministry of Jesus in Galilee. Luke may be using Judea to refer to the land of Israel, the territory of the Jews, and not to a specific portion of it.

5:1-11 This incident has been transposed from his source, Mark 1:16-20, which places it immediately after Jesus makes his appearance in Galilee. By this transposition Luke uses this example of Simon's acceptance of Jesus to counter the earlier rejection of him by his hometown people, and since several incidents dealing with Jesus' power and authority have already been narrated, Luke creates a plausible context for the acceptance of Jesus by Simon and his partners. Many commentators have noted the similarity between the wondrous catch of fish reported here (4:4-9) and the post-resurrectional appearance of Jesus in John 21:1-11. There are traces in Luke's story that the post-resurrectional context is the original one: in Luke 4:8 Simon addresses Jesus as Lord (a post-resurrectional title for Jesus—see 24:34; Acts 2:36—that has been read back into the historical ministry of Jesus) and recognizes himself as a sinner (an appropriate recognition for one who has denied knowing Jesus—22:54-62). As used by Luke, the incident looks forward to Peter's leadership in Luke-Acts (6:14; 9:20; 22:31-32; 24:34; Acts 1:15; 2:14-40; 10:11-18; 15:7-12) and symbolizes the future success of Peter as fisherman (Acts 2:41).

5:11 They left everything: in Mark 1:16-20 and Matthew 4:18-22 the fishermen who follow Jesus leave their nets and their father; in Luke, they leave everything (see also 5:28; 12:33; 14:33; 18:22), an indication of Luke's theme of complete detachment from material possessions.

5:12 Full of leprosy: see the note on Mark 1:40.

5:14 Show yourself to the priest … what Moses prescribed: this is a reference to Leviticus 14:2-9 that gives detailed instructions for the purification of one who had been a victim of leprosy and thereby excluded from contact with others (see Lv 13:45-46, 49; Nm 5:2-3). That will be proof for them: see the note on Matthew 8:4.

5:17–6:11 From his Marcan source, Luke now introduces a series of controversies with Pharisees: controversy over Jesus' power to forgive sins (5:17-26); controversy over his eating and drinking with tax collectors and sinners (5:27-32); controversy over not fasting (5:33-36); and finally two episodes narrating controversies over observance of the sabbath (5:1-11).

5:17 Pharisees: see the note on Matthew 3:7.

5:19 Through the tiles: Luke has adapted the story found in Mark to his non-

Palestinian audience by changing “opened up the roof” (Mk 2:4, a reference to Palestinian straw and clay roofs) to through the tiles, a detail that reflects the Hellenistic Greco-Roman house with tiled roof.

5:20 As for you, your sins are forgiven: literally, “O man, your sins are forgiven you.” The connection between the forgiveness of sins and the cure of the paralytic reflects the belief of first-century Palestine (based on the Old Testament: Ex 20:5; Dt 5:9) that sickness and infirmity are the result of sin, one’s own or that of one’s ancestors (see also 13:2; Jn 5:14; 9:2).

5:21 The scribes: see the note on Mark 2:6.

5:24 See the notes on Matthew 9:6 and Mark 2:10.

5:28 Leaving everything behind: see the note on Luke 5:11.

5:34-35 See the notes on Matthew 9:15 and Mark 2:19.

5:34 Wedding guests: literally, “sons of the bridal chamber.”

5:36-39 See the notes on Matthew 9:16-17 and Mark 2:19.

5:39 The old is good: this saying is meant to be ironic and offers an explanation for the rejection by some of the new wine that Jesus offers: satisfaction with old forms will prevent one from sampling the new.

6:1-11 The two episodes recounted here deal with gathering grain and healing, both of which were forbidden on the sabbath. In his defense of his disciples’ conduct and his own charitable deed, Jesus argues that satisfying human needs such as hunger and performing works of mercy take precedence even over the sacred sabbath rest. See also the notes on Matthew 12:1-14 and Mark 2:25-26.

6:4 The bread of offering: see the note on Matthew 12:5-6.

6:12-16 See the notes on Matthew 10:1–11:1 and Mark 3:14-15.

6:12 Spent the night in prayer: see the note on Luke 3:21.

6:13 He chose Twelve: the identification of this group as the Twelve is a part of early Christian tradition (see 1 Cor 15:5), and in Matthew and Luke, the Twelve are associated with the twelve tribes of Israel (22:29-30; Mt 19:28). After the fall of Judas from his position among the Twelve, the need is felt on the part of the early community to reconstitute this group before the Christian mission begins at Pentecost (Acts 1:15-26). From Luke’s perspective, they are an important group who because of their association with Jesus from the time of his baptism to his ascension (Acts 1:21-22) provide the continuity between the historical Jesus and the church of Luke’s day and who as the original eyewitnesses guarantee the fidelity of the church’s beliefs and practices to the teachings of Jesus (1:1-4). Whom he also named apostles: only Luke among the gospel writers attributes to Jesus the bestowal of the name apostles upon the Twelve. See the note on Matthew 10:2-4. “Apostle” becomes a technical term in early Christianity for a missionary sent out to preach the word of God. Although Luke seems to want to restrict the title to the Twelve (only in Acts 4:4, 14 are Paul and Barnabas termed apostles), other places in the New Testament show an awareness that the term was more widely applied (1 Cor 15:5-7; Gal 1:19; 1 Cor 1:1; 9:1; Rom 16:7).

6:14 Simon, whom he named Peter: see the note on Mark 3:16.

6:15 Simon who was called a Zealot: the Zealots were the instigators of the First Revolt of Palestinian Jews against Rome in A.D. 66–70. Because the existence of the Zealots as a distinct group during the lifetime of Jesus is the subject of debate, the meaning of the identification of Simon as a Zealot is unclear.

6:16 Judas Iscariot: the name Iscariot may mean “man from Kerioth.”

6:17 The coastal region of Tyre and Sidon: not only Jews from Judea and Jerusalem, but even Gentiles from outside Palestine come to hear Jesus (see 2:31-32; 3:6; 4:24-27).

6:20-49 Luke’s “Sermon on the Plain” is the counterpart to Matthew’s “Sermon on the Mount” (Mt 5:1–7:27). It is addressed to the disciples of Jesus, and, like the sermon in Matthew, it begins with beatitudes (6:20-22) and ends with the parable of the two houses (6:46-49). Almost all the words of Jesus reported by Luke are found in Matthew’s version, but because Matthew includes sayings that were related to specifically Jewish Christian problems (e.g., Mt 5:17-20; 6:1-8, 16-18) that Luke did not find appropriate for his predominantly Gentile Christian audience, the “Sermon on the Mount” is considerably longer. Luke’s sermon may be outlined as follows: an introduction consisting of blessings and woes (6:20-26); the love of one’s enemies (6:27-36); the demands of loving one’s neighbor (6:37-42); good deeds as proof of one’s goodness (6:43-45); a parable illustrating the result of listening to and acting on the words of Jesus (6:46-49). At the core of the sermon is Jesus’ teaching on the love of one’s enemies (6:27-36) that has as its source of motivation God’s graciousness and compassion for all humanity (6:35-36) and Jesus’ teaching on the love of one’s neighbor (6:37-42) that is characterized by forgiveness and generosity.

6:20-26 The introductory portion of the sermon consists of blessings and woes that address the real economic and social conditions of humanity (the poor—the rich; the hungry—the satisfied; those grieving—those laughing; the outcast—the socially acceptable). By contrast, Matthew emphasizes the religious and spiritual values of disciples in the kingdom inaugurated by Jesus (“poor in spirit,” Mt 5:3; “hunger and thirst for righteousness,” Mt 5:6). In the sermon, blessed extols the fortunate condition of persons who are favored with the blessings of God; the woes, addressed as they are to the disciples of Jesus, threaten God’s profound displeasure on those so blinded by their present fortunate situation that they do not recognize and appreciate the real values of God’s kingdom. In all the blessings and woes, the present condition of the persons addressed will be reversed in the future.

6:47-49 See the note on Matthew 7:24-27.

7:1–8:3 The episodes in this section present a series of reactions to the Galilean ministry of Jesus and reflect some of Luke’s particular interests: the faith of a Gentile (7:1-10); the prophet Jesus’ concern for a widowed mother (7:11-17); the ministry of Jesus directed to the afflicted and unfortunate of Isaiah 61:1 (7:18-23); the relation between John and Jesus and their role in God’s plan for salvation (7:24-35); a forgiven sinner’s manifestation of love (7:36-50); the association of women with the ministry of Jesus (8:1-3).

7:1-10 This story about the faith of the centurion, a Gentile who cherishes the Jewish nation (7:5), prepares for the story in Acts of the conversion by Peter of the Roman centurion Cornelius who is similarly described as one who is generous to the Jewish nation (Acts 10:2). See also Acts 10:34-35 in the speech of Peter: “God shows no partiality … whoever fears him and acts righteously is acceptable to him.” See also the notes on Matthew 8:5-13 and John 4:43-54.

7:2 A centurion: see the note on Matthew 8:5.

7:6 I am not worthy to have you enter under my roof: to enter the house of a Gentile was considered unclean for a Jew; cf. Acts 10:28.

7:11-17 In the previous incident Jesus' power was displayed for a Gentile whose servant was dying; in this episode it is displayed toward a widowed mother whose only son has already died. Jesus' power over death prepares for his reply to John's disciples in Luke 7:22: "the dead are raised." This resuscitation in alluding to the prophet Elijah's resurrection of the only son of a widow of Zarephath (1 Kgs 17:8-24) leads to the reaction of the crowd: "A great prophet has arisen in our midst" (7:16).

7:18-23 In answer to John's question, Are you the one who is to come?—a probable reference to the return of the fiery prophet of reform, Elijah, "before the day of the Lord comes, the great and terrible day" (Mal 3:23)—Jesus responds that his role is rather to bring the blessings spoken of in Isaiah 61:1 to the oppressed and neglected of society (7:22; cf. 4:18).

7:23 Blessed is the one who takes no offense at me: this beatitude is pronounced on the person who recognizes Jesus' true identity in spite of previous expectations of what "the one who is to come" would be like.

7:24-30 In his testimony to John, Jesus reveals his understanding of the relationship between them: John is the precursor of Jesus (7:27); John is the messenger spoken of in Malachi 3:1 who in Malachi 3:23 is identified as Elijah. Taken with the previous episode, it can be seen that Jesus identifies John as precisely the person John envisioned Jesus to be: the Elijah who prepares the way for the coming of the day of the Lord.

7:31-35 See the note on Matthew 11:16-19.

7:36-50 In this story of the pardoning of the sinful woman Luke presents two different reactions to the ministry of Jesus. A Pharisee, suspecting Jesus to be a prophet, invites Jesus to a festive banquet in his house, but the Pharisee's self-righteousness leads to little forgiveness by God and consequently little love shown toward Jesus. The sinful woman, on the other hand, manifests a faith in God (7:50) that has led her to seek forgiveness for her sins, and because so much was forgiven, she now overwhelms Jesus with her display of love; cf. the similar contrast in attitudes in Luke 18:9-14. The whole episode is a powerful lesson on the relation between forgiveness and love.

7:36 Reclined at table: the normal posture of guests at a banquet. Other oriental banquet customs alluded to in this story include the reception by the host with a kiss (7:45), washing the feet of the guests (7:44), and the anointing of the guests' heads (7:46).

7:41 Days' wages: one denarius is the normal daily wage of a laborer.

7:47 Her many sins have been forgiven; hence, she has shown great love: literally, "her many sins have been forgiven, seeing that she has loved much." That the woman's sins have been forgiven is attested by the great love she shows toward Jesus. Her love is the consequence of her forgiveness. This is also the meaning demanded by the parable in Luke 7:41-43.

8:1-3 Luke presents Jesus as an itinerant preacher traveling in the company of the Twelve and of the Galilean women who are sustaining them out of their means. These Galilean women will later accompany Jesus on his journey to Jerusalem and become witnesses to his death (23:49) and resurrection (24:9-11, where Mary Magdalene and Joanna are specifically mentioned; cf. also Acts 1:14). The association of women with the ministry of Jesus is most unusual in the light of the attitude of first-century Palestinian Judaism toward women. The more common attitude is expressed in John 4:27, and early rabbinic documents caution against speaking with women in public.

8:4-21 The focus in this section is on how one should hear the word of God and act on it. It includes the parable of the sower and its explanation (8:4-15), a collection of sayings on how one should act on the word that is heard (8:16-18), and the identification of the mother and brothers of Jesus as the ones who hear the word and act on it (8:19-21). See also the notes on Matthew 13:1-53 and Mark 4:1-34.

8:4-8 See the note on Matthew 13:3-8.

8:11-15 On the interpretation of the parable of the sower, see the note on Matthew 13:18-23.

8:16-18 These sayings continue the theme of responding to the word of God. Those who hear the word must become a light to others (8:16); even the mysteries of the kingdom that have been made known to the disciples (8:9-10) must come to light (8:17); a generous and persevering response to the word of God leads to a still more perfect response to the word.

8:19 His brothers: see the note on Mark 6:3.

8:21 The family of Jesus is not constituted by physical relationship with him but by obedience to the word of God. In this, Luke agrees with the Marcan parallel (Mk 3:31-35), although by omitting Mark 3:33 and especially Mark 3:20-21 Luke has softened the Marcan picture of Jesus' natural family. Probably he did this because Mary has already been presented in Luke 1:38 as the obedient handmaid of the Lord who fulfills the requirement for belonging to the eschatological family of Jesus; cf. also Luke 11:27-28.

8:22-56 This section records four miracles of Jesus that manifest his power and authority: (1) the calming of a storm on the lake (8:22-25); (2) the exorcism of a demoniac (8:26-39); (3) the cure of a hemorrhaging woman (8:40-48); (4) the raising of Jairus's daughter to life (Lk 8:49-56). They parallel the same sequence of stories at Mark 4:35–5:43.

8:26 Gerasenes: other manuscripts read Gadarenes or Gergesenes. See also the note on Matthew 8:28. Opposite Galilee: probably Gentile territory (note the presence in the area of pigs—unclean animals to Jews) and an indication that the person who receives salvation (8:36) is a Gentile.

8:30 What is your name?: the question reflects the popular belief that knowledge of the spirit's name brought control over the spirit. Legion: to Jesus' question the demon replies with a Latin word transliterated into Greek. The Roman legion at this period consisted of 5,000 to 6,000 foot soldiers; hence the name implies a very large number of demons.

8:31 Abyss: the place of the dead (Rom 10:7) or the prison of Satan (Rev 20:3) or the subterranean "watery deep" that symbolizes the chaos before the order imposed by creation (Gn 1:2).

8:35 Sitting at his feet: the former demoniac takes the position of a disciple before the master (10:39; Acts 22:3).

8:40-56 Two interwoven miracle stories, one a healing and the other a resuscitation, present Jesus as master over sickness and death. In the Lucan account, faith in Jesus is responsible for the cure (8:48) and for the raising to life (8:50).

8:42 An only daughter: cf. the son of the widow of Nain whom Luke describes as an "only" son (7:12; see also 9:38).

8:43 Afflicted with hemorrhages for twelve years: according to the Mosaic law (Lv 15:25-30) this condition would render the woman unclean and unfit for contact with other people.

8:52 Sleeping: her death is a temporary condition; cf. John 11:11-14.

9:1-6 Armed with the power and authority that Jesus himself has been displaying in the previous episodes, the Twelve are now sent out to continue the work that Jesus has been performing throughout his Galilean ministry: (1) proclaiming the kingdom (4:43; 8:1); (2) exorcising demons (4:33-37, 41; 8:26-39) and (3) healing the sick (4:38-40; 5:12-16, 17-26; 6:6-10; 7:1-10, 17, 22; Lk 8:40-56).

9:3 Take nothing for the journey: the absolute detachment required of the disciple (14:33) leads to complete reliance on God (12:22-31).

9:5 Shake the dust from your feet: see the note on Matthew 10:14.

9:7-56 This section in which Luke gathers together incidents that focus on the identity of Jesus is introduced by a question that Herod is made to ask in this gospel: “Who then is this about whom I hear such things?” (Lk 9:9) In subsequent episodes, Luke reveals to the reader various answers to Herod’s question: Jesus is one in whom God’s power is present and who provides for the needs of God’s people (Lk 9:10-17); Peter declares Jesus to be “the Messiah of God” (Lk 9:18-21); Jesus says he is the suffering Son of Man (Lk 9:22, 43-45); Jesus is the Master to be followed, even to death (Lk 9:23-27); Jesus is God’s son, his Chosen One (Lk 9:28-36).

9:7 Herod the tetrarch: see the note on Luke 3:1.

9:9 And he kept trying to see him: this indication of Herod’s interest in Jesus prepares for Luke 13:31-33 and for 23:8-12 where Herod’s curiosity about Jesus’ power to perform miracles remains unsatisfied.

9:16 Then taking …: the actions of Jesus recall the institution of the Eucharist in Luke 22:19; see also the note on Matthew 14:19.

9:18-22 This incident is based on Mark 8:27-33, but Luke has eliminated Peter’s refusal to accept Jesus as suffering Son of Man (Mk 8:32) and the rebuke of Peter by Jesus (Mk 8:33). Elsewhere in the gospel, Luke softens the harsh portrait of Peter and the other apostles found in his Marcan source (cf. 22:39-46, which similarly lacks a rebuke of Peter that occurs in the source, Mk 14:37-38).

9:18 When Jesus was praying in solitude: see the note on Luke 3:21.

9:20 The Messiah of God: on the meaning of this title in first-century Palestinian Judaism, see the notes on Luke 2:11 and on Matthew 16:13-20 and Mark 8:27-30.

9:23 Daily: this is a Lucan addition to a saying of Jesus, removing the saying from a context that envisioned the imminent suffering and death of the disciple of Jesus (as does the saying in Mk 8:34-35) to one that focuses on the demands of daily Christian existence.

9:28-36 Situated shortly after the first announcement of the passion, death, and resurrection, this scene of Jesus’ transfiguration provides the heavenly confirmation to Jesus’ declaration that his suffering will end in glory (9:32); see also the notes on Matthew 17:1-8 and Mark 9:2-8.

9:28 Up the mountain to pray: the “mountain” is the regular place of prayer in Luke (see 6:12; 22:39-41).

9:30 Moses and Elijah: the two figures represent the Old Testament law and the prophets. At the end of this episode, the heavenly voice will identify Jesus as the one to be listened to now (9:35). See also the note on Mark 9:5.

9:31 His exodus that he was going to accomplish in Jerusalem: Luke identifies the subject of the conversation as the exodus of Jesus, a reference to the death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus that will take place in Jerusalem, the city of destiny (see 9:51). The mention of exodus, however, also calls to mind the Israelite Exodus from Egypt to the promised land.

9:32 They saw his glory: the glory that is proper to God is here attributed to Jesus (see 24:26).

9:33 Let us make three tents: in a possible allusion to the feast of Tabernacles, Peter may be likening his joy on the occasion of the transfiguration to the joyful celebration of this harvest festival.

9:34 Over them: it is not clear whether them refers to Jesus, Moses, and Elijah, or to the disciples. For the cloud casting its shadow, see the note on Mark 9:7.

9:35 Like the heavenly voice that identified Jesus at his baptism prior to his undertaking the Galilean ministry (3:22), so too here before the journey to the city of destiny is begun (9:51) the heavenly voice again identifies Jesus as Son. Listen to him: the two representatives of Israel of old depart (9:33) and Jesus is left alone (9:36) as the teacher whose words must be heeded (see also Acts 3:22).

9:36 At that time: i.e., before the resurrection.

9:37-43a See the note on Mark 9:14-29.

9:46-50 These two incidents focus on attitudes that are opposed to Christian discipleship: rivalry and intolerance of outsiders.

9:51–18:14 The Galilean ministry of Jesus finishes with the previous episode and a new section of Luke’s gospel begins, the journey to Jerusalem. This journey is based on Mark 10:1-52 but Luke uses his Marcan source only in Luke 18:15–19:27. Before that point he has inserted into his gospel a distinctive collection of sayings of Jesus and stories about him that he has drawn from Q, a collection of sayings of Jesus used also by Matthew, and from his own special traditions. All of the material collected in this section is loosely organized within the framework of a journey of Jesus to Jerusalem, the city of destiny, where his exodus (suffering, death, resurrection, ascension) is to take place (9:31), where salvation is accomplished, and from where the proclamation of God’s saving word is to go forth (24:47; Acts 1:8). Much of the material in the Lucan travel narrative is teaching for the disciples. During the course of this journey Jesus is preparing his chosen Galilean witnesses for the role they will play after his exodus (9:31): they are to be his witnesses to the people (Acts 10:39; 13:31) and thereby provide certainty to the readers of Luke’s gospel that the teachings they have received are rooted in the teachings of Jesus (1:1-4).

9:51-55 Just as the Galilean ministry began with a rejection of Jesus in his hometown, so too the travel narrative begins with the rejection of him by Samaritans. In this episode Jesus disassociates himself from the attitude expressed by his disciples that those who reject him are to be punished severely. The story alludes to 2 Kings 1:10, 12 where the prophet Elijah takes the course of action Jesus rejects, and Jesus thereby rejects the identification of himself with Elijah.

9:51 Days for his being taken up: like the reference to his exodus in Luke 9:31, this is probably a reference to all the events (suffering, death, resurrection, ascension) of his last days in Jerusalem. He resolutely determined: literally, “he set his face.”

9:52 Samaritan: Samaria was the territory between Judea and Galilee west of the Jordan river. For ethnic and religious reasons, the Samaritans and the Jews were bitterly opposed to one another (see Jn 4:9).

9:57-62 In these sayings Jesus speaks of the severity and the unconditional nature of Christian discipleship. Even family ties and filial obligations, such as burying one’s parents, cannot distract one no matter how briefly from proclaiming the kingdom of God. The first two sayings are paralleled in Matthew 8:19-22; see also the notes there.

9:60 Let the dead bury their dead: i.e., let the spiritually dead (those who do not follow) bury their physically dead. See also the note on Matthew 8:22.

10:1-12 Only the Gospel of Luke contains two episodes in which Jesus sends out his followers on a mission: the first (Luke 9:1-6) is based on the mission in Mark 6:6b-13 and recounts the sending out of the Twelve; here in Luke 10:1-12 a similar report based on Q becomes the sending out of seventy-two in this gospel. The episode continues the theme of Jesus preparing witnesses to himself and his ministry. These witnesses include not only the Twelve but also the seventy-two who may represent the Christian mission in Luke’s own day. Note that the instructions given to the Twelve and to the seventy-two are similar and that what is said to the seventy-two in Luke 10:4 is directed to the Twelve in Luke 22:35.

10:1 Seventy[-two]: important representatives of the Alexandrian and Caesarean text types read “seventy,” while other important Alexandrian texts and Western readings have “seventy-two.”

10:4 Carry no money bag … greet no one along the way: because of the urgency of the mission and the singlemindedness required of missionaries, attachment to material possessions should be avoided and even customary greetings should not distract from the fulfillment of the task.

10:5 First say, ‘Peace to this household’: see the notes on Luke 2:14 and Matthew 10:13.

10:6 A peaceful person: literally, “a son of peace.”

10:13-16 The call to repentance that is a part of the proclamation of the kingdom brings with it a severe judgment for those who hear it and reject it.

10:15 The netherworld: the underworld, the place of the dead (Acts 2:27, 31) here contrasted with heaven; see also the note on Matthew 11:23.

10:18 I have observed Satan fall like lightning: the effect of the mission of the seventy-two is characterized by the Lucan Jesus as a symbolic fall of Satan. As the kingdom of God is gradually being established, evil in all its forms is being defeated; the dominion of Satan over humanity is at an end.

10:21 Revealed them to the childlike: a restatement of the theme announced in Luke 8:10: the mysteries of the kingdom are revealed to the disciples. See also the note on Matthew 11:25-27.

10:25-37 In response to a question from a Jewish legal expert about inheriting eternal life, Jesus illustrates the superiority of love over legalism through the story of the good Samaritan. The law of love proclaimed in the “Sermon on the Plain” (6:27-36) is exemplified by one whom the legal expert would have considered ritually impure (see Jn 4:9). Moreover, the identity of the “neighbor” requested by the legal expert (10:29) turns out to be a Samaritan, the enemy of the Jew (see the note on 9:52).

10:25 Scholar of the law: an expert in the Mosaic law, and probably a member of the group elsewhere identified as the scribes (5:21).

10:31-32 Priest … Levite: those religious representatives of Judaism who would have been expected to be models of “neighbor” to the victim pass him by.

10:38-42 The story of Martha and Mary further illustrates the importance of hearing the words of the teacher and the concern with women in Luke.

10:39 Sat beside the Lord at his feet: it is remarkable for first-century Palestinian Judaism that a woman would assume the posture of a disciple at the master's feet (see also 8:35; Acts 22:3), and it reveals a characteristic attitude of Jesus toward women in this gospel (see 8:2-3).

10:42 There is need of only one thing: some ancient versions read, "there is need of few things"; another important, although probably inferior, reading found in some manuscripts is, "there is need of few things, or of one."

11:1-13 Luke presents three episodes concerned with prayer. The first (11:1-4) recounts Jesus teaching his disciples the Christian communal prayer, the "Our Father"; the second (11:5-8), the importance of persistence in prayer; the third (11:9-13), the effectiveness of prayer.

11:1-4 The Matthean form of the "Our Father" occurs in the "Sermon on the Mount" (Mt 6:9-15); the shorter Lucan version is presented while Jesus is at prayer (see the note on 3:21) and his disciples ask him to teach them to pray just as John taught his disciples to pray. In answer to their question, Jesus presents them with an example of a Christian communal prayer that stresses the fatherhood of God and acknowledges him as the one to whom the Christian disciple owes daily sustenance (11:3), forgiveness (11:4), and deliverance from the final trial (11:4). See also the notes on Matthew 6:9-13.

11:2 Your kingdom come: in place of this petition, some early church Fathers record: "May your holy Spirit come upon us and cleanse us," a petition that may reflect the use of the "Our Father" in a baptismal liturgy.

11:3-4 Daily bread: see the note on Matthew 6:11. The final test: see the note on Matthew 6:13.

11:13 The holy Spirit: this is a Lucan editorial alteration of a traditional saying of Jesus (see Mt 7:11). Luke presents the gift of the holy Spirit as the response of the Father to the prayer of the Christian disciple.

11:19 Your own people: the Greek reads "your sons." Other Jewish exorcists (see Acts 19:13-20), who recognize that the power of God is active in the exorcism, would themselves convict the accusers of Jesus. See also the note on Matthew 12:27.

11:22 One stronger: i.e., Jesus. Cf. Luke 3:16 where John the Baptist identifies Jesus as "mightier than I."

11:27-28 The beatitude in Luke 11:28 should not be interpreted as a rebuke of the mother of Jesus; see the note on Luke 8:21. Rather, it emphasizes (like 2:35) that attentiveness to God's word is more important than biological relationship to Jesus.

11:29-32 The "sign of Jonah" in Luke is the preaching of the need for repentance by a prophet who comes from afar. Cf. Matthew 12:38-42 (and see the notes there) where the "sign of Jonah" is interpreted by Jesus as his death and resurrection.

11:37-54 This denunciation of the Pharisees (11:39-44) and the scholars of the law (11:45-52) is set by Luke in the context of Jesus' dining at the home of a Pharisee. Controversies with or reprimands of Pharisees are regularly set by Luke within the context of Jesus' eating with Pharisees (see 5:29-39; 7:36-50; 14:1-24). A different compilation of similar sayings is found in Matthew 23 (see also the notes there).

11:44 Unseen graves: contact with the dead or with human bones or graves (see Nm 19:16) brought ritual impurity. Jesus presents the Pharisees as those who insidiously lead others astray through their seeming attention to the law.

11:45 Scholars of the law: see the note on Luke 10:25.

11:49 I will send to them prophets and apostles: Jesus connects the mission of the church (apostles) with the mission of the Old Testament prophets who often suffered the rebuke of their contemporaries.

11:51 From the blood of Abel to the blood of Zechariah: the murder of Abel is the first murder recounted in the Old Testament (Gn 4:8). The Zechariah mentioned here may be the Zechariah whose murder is recounted in 2 Chronicles 24:20-22, the last murder presented in the Hebrew canon of the Old Testament.

12:1 See the notes on Mark 8:15 and Matthew 16:5-12.

12:2-9 Luke presents a collection of sayings of Jesus exhorting his followers to acknowledge him and his mission fearlessly and assuring them of God’s protection even in times of persecution. They are paralleled in Matthew 10:26-33.

12:5 Gehenna: see the note on Matthew 5:22.

12:6 Two small coins: the Roman copper coin, the assarion (Latin as), was worth about one-sixteenth of a denarius (see the note on 7:41).

12:10-12 The sayings about the holy Spirit are set in the context of fearlessness in the face of persecution (12:2-9; cf. Mt 12:31-32). The holy Spirit will be presented in Luke’s second volume, the Acts of the Apostles, as the power responsible for the guidance of the Christian mission and the source of courage in the face of persecution.

12:13-34 Luke has joined together sayings contrasting those whose focus and trust in life is on material possessions, symbolized here by the rich fool of the parable (12:16-21), with those who recognize their complete dependence on God (12:21), those whose radical detachment from material possessions symbolizes their heavenly treasure (12:33-34).

12:21 Rich in what matters to God: literally, “rich for God.”

12:35-48 This collection of sayings relates to Luke’s understanding of the end time and the return of Jesus. Luke emphasizes for his readers the importance of being faithful to the instructions of Jesus in the period before the parousia.

12:45 My master is delayed in coming: this statement indicates that early Christian expectations for the imminent return of Jesus had undergone some modification. Luke cautions his readers against counting on such a delay and acting irresponsibly. Cf. the similar warning in Matthew 24:48.

12:49-53 Jesus’ proclamation of the kingdom is a refining and purifying fire. His message that meets with acceptance or rejection will be a source of conflict and dissension even within families.

12:50 Baptism: i.e., his death.

12:59 The last penny: Greek, lepton, a very small amount. Matthew 5:26 has for “the last penny” the Greek word kodrantēs (Latin quadrans, “farthing”).

13:1-5 The death of the Galileans at the hands of Pilate (13:1) and the accidental death of those on whom the tower fell (13:4) are presented by the Lucan Jesus as timely reminders of the need for all to repent, for the victims of these tragedies should not be considered outstanding sinners who were singled out for punishment.

13:1 The slaughter of the Galileans by Pilate is unknown outside Luke; but from what is known about Pilate from the Jewish historian Josephus, such a slaughter would be in keeping with the character of Pilate. Josephus reports that Pilate had disrupted a religious gathering of the Samaritans on Mt. Gerizim with a slaughter of the participants (Antiquities 18:86-87), and that on another occasion Pilate had killed many Jews who had opposed him when he appropriated money from the temple treasury to build an aqueduct in Jerusalem (Jewish War 2:175-77; Antiquities 18:60-62).

13:6-9 Following on the call to repentance in Luke 13:1-5, the parable of the barren fig tree presents a story about the continuing patience of God with those who have not yet given evidence of their repentance (see 3:8). The parable may also be alluding to the delay of the end time, when punishment will be meted out, and the importance of preparing for the end of the age because the delay will not be permanent (13:8-9).

13:10-17 The cure of the crippled woman on the sabbath and the controversy that results furnishes a parallel to an incident that will be reported by Luke in 14:1-6, the cure of the man with dropsy on the sabbath. A characteristic of Luke’s style is the juxtaposition of an incident that reveals Jesus’ concern for a man with an incident that reveals his concern for a woman; cf., e.g., Luke 7:11-17 and 8:49-56.

13:15-16 If the law as interpreted by Jewish tradition allowed for the untying of bound animals on the sabbath, how much more should this woman who has been bound by Satan’s power be freed on the sabbath from her affliction.

13:16 Whom Satan has bound: affliction and infirmity are taken as evidence of Satan’s hold on humanity. The healing ministry of Jesus reveals the gradual wresting from Satan of control over humanity and the establishment of God’s kingdom.

13:18-21 Two parables are used to illustrate the future proportions of the kingdom of God that will result from its deceptively small beginning in the preaching and healing ministry of Jesus. They are paralleled in Matthew 13:31-33 and Mark 4:30-32.

13:22-30 These sayings of Jesus follow in Luke upon the parables of the kingdom (13:18-21) and stress that great effort is required for entrance into the kingdom (13:24) and that there is an urgency to accept the present opportunity to enter because the narrow door will not remain open indefinitely (13:25). Lying behind the sayings is the rejection of Jesus and his message by his Jewish contemporaries (13:26) whose places at table in the kingdom will be taken by Gentiles from the four corners of the world (13:29). Those called last (the Gentiles) will precede those to whom the invitation to enter was first extended (the Jews). See also Luke 14:15-24.

13:32 Nothing, not even Herod’s desire to kill Jesus, stands in the way of Jesus’ role in fulfilling God’s will and in establishing the kingdom through his exorcisms and healings.

13:33 It is impossible that a prophet should die outside of Jerusalem: Jerusalem is the city of destiny and the goal of the journey of the prophet Jesus. Only when he reaches the holy city will his work be accomplished.

14:1-6 See the note on Luke 13:10-17.

14:2 Dropsy: an abnormal swelling of the body because of the retention and accumulation of fluid.

14:5 Your son or ox: this is the reading of many of the oldest and most important New Testament manuscripts. Because of the strange collocation of son and ox, some copyists have altered it to “your ass or ox,” on the model of the saying in Luke 13:15.

14:7-14 The banquet scene found only in Luke provides the opportunity for these teachings of Jesus on humility and presents a setting to display Luke’s interest in Jesus’ attitude toward the rich and the poor (see the notes on 4:18; 6:20-26; 12:13-34).

14:15-24 The parable of the great dinner is a further illustration of the rejection by Israel, God’s chosen people, of Jesus’ invitation to share in the banquet in the kingdom and the extension of the invitation to other Jews whose identification as the poor, crippled, blind, and lame (14:21) classifies them among those who recognize their need for salvation, and to Gentiles (14:23). A similar parable is found in Matthew 22:1-10.

14:25-33 This collection of sayings, most of which are peculiar to Luke, focuses on the total dedication necessary for the disciple of Jesus. No attachment to family (14:26) or possessions (14:33) can stand in the way of the total commitment demanded of the disciple. Also, acceptance of the call to be a disciple demands readiness to accept persecution and suffering (14:27) and a realistic assessment of the hardships and costs (14:28-32).

14:26 Hating his father …: cf. the similar saying in Matthew 10:37. The disciple’s family must take second place to the absolute dedication involved in following Jesus (see also 9:59-62).

14:34-35 The simile of salt follows the sayings of Jesus that demanded of the disciple total dedication and detachment from family and possessions and illustrates the condition of one who does not display this total commitment. The halfhearted disciple is like salt that cannot serve its intended purpose. See the simile of salt in Matthew 5:13 and the note there.

15:1-32 To the parable of the lost sheep (15:1-7) that Luke shares with Matthew (Mt 18:12-14), Luke adds two parables (the lost coin, 15:8-10; the prodigal son, 15:11-32) from his own special tradition to illustrate Jesus’ particular concern for the lost and God’s love for the repentant sinner.

15:8 Ten coins: literally, “ten drachmas.” A drachma was a Greek silver coin.

16:1-8a The parable of the dishonest steward has to be understood in the light of the Palestinian custom of agents acting on behalf of their masters and the usurious practices common to such agents. The dishonesty of the steward consisted in the squandering of his master’s property (16:1) and not in any subsequent graft. The master commends the dishonest steward who has forgone his own usurious commission on the business transaction by having the debtors write new notes that reflected only the real amount owed the master (i.e., minus the steward’s profit). The dishonest steward acts in this way in order to ingratiate himself with the debtors because he knows he is being dismissed from his position (16:3). The parable, then, teaches the prudent use of one’s material goods in light of an imminent crisis.

16:6 One hundred measures: literally, “one hundred baths.” A bath is a Hebrew unit of liquid measurement equivalent to eight or nine gallons.

16:7 One hundred kors: a kor is a Hebrew unit of dry measure for grain or wheat equivalent to ten or twelve bushels.

16:8b-13 Several originally independent sayings of Jesus are gathered here by Luke to form the concluding application of the parable of the dishonest steward.

16:8b-9 The first conclusion recommends the prudent use of one’s wealth (in the light of the coming of the end of the age) after the manner of the children of this world, represented in the parable by the dishonest steward.

16:9 Dishonest wealth: literally, “mammon of iniquity.” Mammon is the Greek transliteration of a Hebrew or Aramaic word that is usually explained as meaning "that in which one trusts." The characterization of this wealth as dishonest expresses a tendency of wealth to lead one to dishonesty. Eternal dwellings: or, "eternal tents," i.e., heaven.

16:10-12 The second conclusion recommends constant fidelity to those in positions of responsibility.

16:13 The third conclusion is a general statement about the incompatibility of serving God and being a slave to riches. To be dependent upon wealth is opposed to the teachings of Jesus who counseled complete dependence on the Father as one of the characteristics of the Christian disciple (12:22-39). God and mammon: see the note on Luke 16:9. Mammon is used here as if it were itself a god.

16:14-18 The two parables about the use of riches in chap. 16 are separated by several isolated sayings of Jesus on the hypocrisy of the Pharisees (16:14-15), on the law (16:16-17), and on divorce (16:18).

16:14-15 The Pharisees are here presented as examples of those who are slaves to wealth (see 16:13) and, consequently, they are unable to serve God.

16:16 John the Baptist is presented in Luke's gospel as a transitional figure between the period of Israel, the time of promise, and the period of Jesus, the time of fulfillment. With John, the fulfillment of the Old Testament promises has begun.

16:19-31 The parable of the rich man and Lazarus again illustrates Luke's concern with Jesus' attitude toward the rich and the poor. The reversal of the fates of the rich man and Lazarus (16:22-23) illustrates the teachings of Jesus in Luke's "Sermon on the Plain" (6:20-21, 24-25).

16:19 The oldest Greek manuscript of Luke dating from ca. A.D. 175–225 records the name of the rich man as an abbreviated form of "Nineveh," but there is very little textual support in other manuscripts for this reading. "Dives" of popular tradition is the Latin Vulgate's translation for "rich man."

16:23 The netherworld: see the note on Luke 10:15.

16:30-31 A foreshadowing in Luke's gospel of the rejection of the call to repentance even after Jesus' resurrection.

17:3 Be on your guard: the translation takes Luke 17:3a as the conclusion to the saying on scandal in Luke 17:1-2. It is not impossible that it should be taken as the beginning of the saying on forgiveness in Luke 17:3b-4.

17:7-10 These sayings of Jesus, peculiar to Luke, which continue his response to the apostles' request to increase their faith (17:5-6), remind them that Christian disciples can make no claim on God's graciousness; in fulfilling the exacting demands of discipleship, they are only doing their duty.

17:11-19 This incident recounting the thankfulness of the cleansed Samaritan leper is narrated only in Luke's gospel and provides an instance of Jesus holding up a non-Jew (17:18) as an example to his Jewish contemporaries (cf. 10:33 where a similar purpose is achieved in the story of the good Samaritan). Moreover, it is the faith in Jesus manifested by the foreigner that has brought him salvation (17:19; cf. the similar relationship between faith and salvation in 7:50; 8:48, 50).

17:14 See the note on Luke 5:14.

17:20-37 To the question of the Pharisees about the time of the coming of God's kingdom, Jesus replies that the kingdom is among you (17:20-21). The emphasis has thus been shifted from an imminent observable coming of the kingdom to something that is already present in Jesus' preaching and healing ministry. Luke has also appended further traditional sayings of Jesus about the unpredictable suddenness of the day of the Son of Man, and assures his readers that in spite of the delay of that day (12:45), it will bring judgment unexpectedly on those who do not continue to be vigilant.

17:21 Among you: the Greek preposition translated as among can also be translated as "within." In the light of other statements in Luke's gospel about the presence of the kingdom (see 10:9, 11; 11:20) "among" is to be preferred.

17:36 The inclusion of Luke 17:36, "There will be two men in the field; one will be taken, the other left behind," in some Western manuscripts appears to be a scribal assimilation to Matthew 24:40.

18:1-14 The particularly Lucan material in the travel narrative concludes with two parables on prayer. The first (18:1-8) teaches the disciples the need of persistent prayer so that they not fall victims to apostasy (18:8). The second (18:9-14) condemns the self-righteous, critical attitude of the Pharisee and teaches that the fundamental attitude of the Christian disciple must be the recognition of sinfulness and complete dependence on God's graciousness. The second parable recalls the story of the pardoning of the sinful woman (7:36-50) where a similar contrast is presented between the critical attitude of the Pharisee Simon and the love shown by the pardoned sinner.

18:5 Strike me: the Greek verb translated as strike means "to strike under the eye" and suggests the extreme situation to which the persistence of the widow might lead. It may, however, be used here in the much weaker sense of "to wear one out."

18:15–19:27 Luke here includes much of the material about the journey to Jerusalem found in his Marcan source (10:1-52) and adds to it the story of Zacchaeus (19:1-10) from his own particular tradition and the parable of the gold coins (minas) (19:11-27) from Q, the source common to Luke and Matthew.

18:15-17 The sayings on children furnish a contrast to the attitude of the Pharisee in the preceding episode (18:9-14) and that of the wealthy official in the following one (18:18-23) who think that they can lay claim to God's favor by their own merit. The attitude of the disciple should be marked by the receptivity and trustful dependence characteristic of the child.

18:22 Detachment from material possessions results in the total dependence on God demanded of one who would inherit eternal life. Sell all that you have: the original saying (cf. Mk 10:21) has characteristically been made more demanding by Luke's addition of "all."

18:31-33 The details included in this third announcement of Jesus' suffering and death suggest that the literary formulation of the announcement has been directed by the knowledge of the historical passion and death of Jesus.

18:31 Everything written by the prophets … will be fulfilled: this is a Lucan addition to the words of Jesus found in the Marcan source (Mk 10:32-34). Luke understands the events of Jesus' last days in Jerusalem to be the fulfillment of Old Testament prophecy, but, as is usually the case in Luke-Acts, the author does not specify which Old Testament prophets he has in mind; cf. Luke 24:25, 27, 44; Acts 3:8; 13:27; 26:22-23.

18:38 Son of David: the blind beggar identifies Jesus with a title that is related to Jesus' role as Messiah (see the note on 2:11). Through this Son of David, salvation comes to the blind man. Note the connection between salvation and house of David mentioned earlier in Zechariah's canticle (1:69). See also the note on Matthew 9:27.

19:1-10 The story of the tax collector Zacchaeus is unique to this gospel. While a rich man (19:2), Zacchaeus provides a contrast to the rich man of Luke 18:18-23 who cannot detach himself from his material possessions to become a follower of Jesus. Zacchaeus, according to Luke, exemplifies the proper attitude toward wealth: he promises to give half of his possessions to the poor (19:8) and consequently is the recipient of salvation (19:9-10).

19:9 A descendant of Abraham: literally, "a son of Abraham." The tax collector Zacchaeus, whose repentance is attested by his determination to amend his former ways, shows himself to be a true descendant of Abraham, the true heir to the promises of God in the Old Testament. Underlying Luke's depiction of Zacchaeus as a descendant of Abraham, the father of the Jews (1:73; 16:22-31), is his recognition of the central place occupied by Israel in the plan of salvation.

19:10 This verse sums up for Luke his depiction of the role of Jesus as savior in this gospel.

19:11-27 In this parable Luke has combined two originally distinct parables: (1) a parable about the conduct of faithful and productive servants (19:13, 15b-26) and (2) a parable about a rejected king (19:12, 14-15a, 27). The story about the conduct of servants occurs in another form in Matthew 25:14-20. The story about the rejected king may have originated with a contemporary historical event. After the death of Herod the Great, his son Archelaus traveled to Rome to receive the title of king. A delegation of Jews appeared in Rome before Caesar Augustus to oppose the request of Archelaus. Although not given the title of king, Archelaus was made ruler over Judea and Samaria. As the story is used by Luke, however, it furnishes a correction to the expectation of the imminent end of the age and of the establishment of the kingdom in Jerusalem (19:11). Jesus is not on his way to Jerusalem to receive the kingly power; for that, he must go away and only after returning from the distant country (a reference to the parousia) will reward and judgment take place.

19:13 Ten gold coins: literally, "ten minas." A mina was a monetary unit that in ancient Greece was the equivalent of one hundred drachmas.

19:28–21:38 With the royal entry of Jesus into Jerusalem, a new section of Luke's gospel begins, the ministry of Jesus in Jerusalem before his death and resurrection. Luke suggests that this was a lengthy ministry in Jerusalem (19:47; 20:1; 21:37-38; 22:53) and it is characterized by Jesus' daily teaching in the temple (21:37-38). For the story of the entry of Jesus into Jerusalem, see also Matthew 21:1-11; Mark 11:1-10; John 12:12-19 and the notes there.

19:38 Blessed is the king who comes in the name of the Lord: only in Luke is Jesus explicitly given the title king when he enters Jerusalem in triumph. Luke has inserted this title into the words of Psalm 118:26 that heralded the arrival of the pilgrims coming to the holy city and to the temple. Jesus is thereby acclaimed as king (see 1:32) and as the one who comes (see Mal 3:1; Lk 7:19). Peace in heaven …: the acclamation of the disciples of Jesus in Luke echoes the announcement of the angels at the birth of Jesus (2:14). The peace Jesus brings is associated with the salvation to be accomplished here in Jerusalem.

19:39 Rebuke your disciples: this command, found only in Luke, was given so that the Roman authorities would not interpret the acclamation of Jesus as king as an uprising against them; cf. Luke 23:2-3.

19:41-44 The lament for Jerusalem is found only in Luke. By not accepting Jesus (the one who mediates peace), Jerusalem will not find peace but will become the victim of devastation.

19:43-44 Luke may be describing the actual disaster that befell Jerusalem in A.D.

70 when it was destroyed by the Romans during the First Revolt.

19:45-46 Immediately upon entering the holy city, Jesus in a display of his authority enters the temple (see Mal 3:1-3) and lays claim to it after cleansing it that it might become a proper place for his teaching ministry in Jerusalem (19:47; 20:1; 21:37; 22:53). See Matthew 21:12-17; Mark 11:15-19; John 2:13-17 and the notes there.

20:1-47 The Jerusalem religious leaders or their representatives, in an attempt to incriminate Jesus with the Romans and to discredit him with the people, pose a number of questions to him (about his authority, Lk 20:2; about payment of taxes, Luke 20:22; about the resurrection, 20:28-33).

20:9-19 This parable about an absentee landlord and a tenant farmers' revolt reflects the social and economic conditions of rural Palestine in the first century. The synoptic gospel writers use the parable to describe how the rejection of the landlord's son becomes the occasion for the vineyard to be taken away from those to whom it was entrusted (the religious leadership of Judaism that rejects the teaching and preaching of Jesus; 20:19).

20:15 They threw him out of the vineyard and killed him: cf. Mark 12:8. Luke has altered his Marcan source and reports that the murder of the son takes place outside the vineyard to reflect the tradition of Jesus' death outside the walls of the city of Jerusalem (see Heb 13:12).

20:20 The governor: i.e., Pontius Pilate, the Roman administrator responsible for the collection of taxes and maintenance of order in Palestine.

20:22 Through their question the agents of the Jerusalem religious leadership hope to force Jesus to take sides on one of the sensitive political issues of first-century Palestine. The issue of nonpayment of taxes to Rome becomes one of the focal points of the First Jewish Revolt (A.D. 66–70) that resulted in the Roman destruction of Jerusalem and the temple. See also the note on Matthew 22:15-22.

20:27 Sadducees: see the note on Matthew 3:7.

20:28-33 The Sadducees' question, based on the law of levirate marriage recorded in Deuteronomy 25:5-10, ridicules the idea of the resurrection. Jesus rejects their naive understanding of the resurrection (20:35-36) and then argues on behalf of the resurrection of the dead on the basis of the written law (20:37-38) that the Sadducees accept. See also the notes on Matthew 22:23-33.

20:36 Because they are the ones who will rise: literally, "being sons of the resurrection."

20:41-44 After successfully answering the three questions of his opponents, Jesus now asks them a question. Their inability to respond implies that they have forfeited their position and authority as the religious leaders of the people because they do not understand the scriptures. This series of controversies between the religious leadership of Jerusalem and Jesus reveals Jesus as the authoritative teacher whose words are to be listened to (see 9:35). See also the notes on Matthew 22:41-46.

21:1-4 The widow is another example of the poor ones in this gospel whose detachment from material possessions and dependence on God leads to their blessedness (6:20). Her simple offering provides a striking contrast to the pride and pretentiousness of the scribes denounced in the preceding section (20:45-47). The story is taken from Mark 12:41-44.

21:5-36 Jesus' eschatological discourse in Luke is inspired by Mark 13, but Luke has made some significant alterations to the words of Jesus found there. Luke maintains, though in a modified form, the belief in the early expectation of the end of the age (see 21:27, 28, 31, 32, 36), but, by focusing attention throughout the gospel on the importance of the day-to-day following of Jesus and by reinterpreting the meaning of some of the signs of the end from Mark 13, he has come to terms with what seemed to the early Christian community to be a delay of the parousia. Mark, for example, described the desecration of the Jerusalem temple by the Romans (Mk 13:14) as the apocalyptic symbol (see Dn 9:27; 12:11) accompanying the end of the age and the coming of the Son of Man. Luke (21:20-24), however, removes the apocalyptic setting and separates the historical destruction of Jerusalem from the signs of the coming of the Son of Man by a period that he refers to as "the times of the Gentiles" (21:24). See also the notes on Matthew 24:1-36 and Mark 13:1-37.

21:8 The time has come: in Luke, the proclamation of the imminent end of the age has itself become a false teaching.

21:12 Before all this happens …: to Luke and his community, some of the signs of the end just described (21:10-11) still lie in the future. Now in dealing with the persecution of the disciples (21:12-19) and the destruction of Jerusalem (21:20-24) Luke is pointing to eschatological signs that have already been fulfilled.

21:15 A wisdom in speaking: literally, "a mouth and wisdom."

21:20-24 The actual destruction of Jerusalem by Rome in A.D. 70 upon which Luke and his community look back provides the assurance that, just as Jesus' prediction of Jerusalem's destruction was fulfilled, so too will be his announcement of their final redemption (21:27-28).

21:24 The times of the Gentiles: a period of indeterminate length separating the destruction of Jerusalem from the cosmic signs accompanying the coming of the Son of Man.

21:26 The powers of the heavens: the heavenly bodies mentioned in Luke 21:25 and thought of as cosmic armies.

22:1–23:56a The passion narrative. Luke is still dependent upon Mark for the composition of the passion narrative but has incorporated much of his own special tradition into the narrative. Among the distinctive sections in Luke are: (1) the tradition of the institution of the Eucharist (22:15-20); (2) Jesus' farewell discourse (22:21-38); (3) the mistreatment and interrogation of Jesus (22:63-71); (4) Jesus before Herod and his second appearance before Pilate (23:6-16); (5) words addressed to the women followers on the way to the crucifixion (23:27-32); (6) words to the penitent thief (23:39-41); (7) the death of Jesus (23:46, 47b-49). Luke stresses the innocence of Jesus (23:4, 14-15, 22) who is the victim of the powers of evil (22:3, 31, 53) and who goes to his death in fulfillment of his Father's will (22:42, 46). Throughout the narrative Luke emphasizes the mercy, compassion, and healing power of Jesus (22:51; 23:43) who does not go to death lonely and deserted, but is accompanied by others who follow him on the way of the cross (23:26-31, 49).

22:1 Feast of Unleavened Bread, called the Passover: see the note on Mark 14:1.

22:3 Satan entered into Judas: see the note on Luke 4:13.

22:10 A man will meet you carrying a jar of water: see the note on Mark 14:13.

22:15 This Passover: Luke clearly identifies this last supper of Jesus with the apostles as a Passover meal that commemorated the deliverance of the Israelites from slavery in Egypt. Jesus reinterprets the significance of the Passover by setting it in the context of the kingdom of God (22:16). The "deliverance" associated with the Passover finds its new meaning in the blood that will be shed (22:20).

22:17 Because of a textual problem in Luke 22:19-20 some commentators interpret this cup as the eucharistic cup.

22:19c-20 Which will be given … do this in memory of me: these words are omitted in some important Western text manuscripts and a few Syriac manuscripts. Other ancient text types, including the oldest papyrus manuscript of Luke dating from the late second or early third century, contain the longer reading presented here. The Lucan account of the words of institution of the Eucharist bears a close resemblance to the words of institution in the Pauline tradition (see 1 Cor 11:23-26). See also the notes on Matthew 26:26-29; 26:27-28; and Mark 14:22-24.

22:24-38 The Gospel of Luke presents a brief farewell discourse of Jesus; compare the lengthy farewell discourses and prayer in John 13–17.

22:25 'Benefactors': this word occurs as a title of rulers in the Hellenistic world.

22:31-32 Jesus' prayer for Simon's faith and the commission to strengthen his brothers anticipates the post-resurrectional prominence of Peter in the first half of Acts, where he appears as the spokesman for the Christian community and the one who begins the mission to the Gentiles (Acts 10–11).

22:31 All of you: literally, "you." The translation reflects the meaning of the Greek text that uses a second person plural pronoun here.

22:36 In contrast to the ministry of the Twelve and of the seventy-two during the period of Jesus (9:3; 10:4), in the future period of the church the missionaries must be prepared for the opposition they will face in a world hostile to their preaching.

22:38 It is enough!: the farewell discourse ends abruptly with these words of Jesus spoken to the disciples when they take literally what was intended as figurative language about being prepared to face the world's hostility.

22:43-44 These verses, though very ancient, were probably not part of the original text of Luke. They are absent from the oldest papyrus manuscripts of Luke and from manuscripts of wide geographical distribution.

22:51 And healed him: only Luke recounts this healing of the injured servant.

22:61 Only Luke recounts that the Lord turned and looked at Peter. This look of Jesus leads to Peter's weeping bitterly over his denial (22:62).

22:66-71 Luke recounts one daytime trial of Jesus (22:66-71) and hints at some type of preliminary nighttime investigation (22:54-65). Mark (and Matthew who follows Mark) has transferred incidents of this day into the nighttime interrogation with the result that there appear to be two Sanhedrin trials of Jesus in Mark (and Matthew); see the note on Mark 14:53.

22:66 Sanhedrin: the word is a Hebraized form of a Greek word meaning a "council," and refers to the elders, chief priests, and scribes who met under the high priest's leadership to decide religious and legal questions that did not pertain to Rome's interests. Jewish sources are not clear on the competence of the Sanhedrin to sentence and to execute during this period.

23:1-5, 13-25 Twice Jesus is brought before Pilate in Luke's account, and each time Pilate explicitly declares Jesus innocent of any wrongdoing (23:4, 14, 22). This stress on the innocence of Jesus before the Roman authorities is also characteristic of John's gospel (Jn 18:38; 19:4, 6). Luke presents the Jerusalem Jewish leaders as the ones who force the hand of the Roman authorities (23:1-2, 5, 10, 13, 18, 21, 23-25).

23:6-12 The appearance of Jesus before Herod is found only in this gospel. Herod has been an important figure in Luke (9:7-9; 13:31-33) and has been presented as someone who has been curious about Jesus for a long time. His curiosity goes unrewarded. It is faith in Jesus, not curiosity, that is rewarded (7:50; 8:48, 50; 17:19).

23:17 This verse, "He was obliged to release one prisoner for them at the festival," is not part of the original text of Luke. It is an explanatory gloss from Mark 15:6 (also Mt 27:15) and is not found in many early and important Greek manuscripts. On its historical background, see the notes on Matthew 27:15-26.

23:26-32 An important Lucan theme throughout the gospel has been the need for the Christian disciple to follow in the footsteps of Jesus. Here this theme comes to the fore with the story of Simon of Cyrene who takes up the cross and follows Jesus (see 9:23; 14:27) and with the large crowd who likewise follow Jesus on the way of the cross. See also the note on Mark 15:21.

23:34 [Then Jesus said, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."]: this portion of Luke 23:34 does not occur in the oldest papyrus manuscript of Luke and in other early Greek manuscripts and ancient versions of wide geographical distribution.

23:39-43 This episode is recounted only in this gospel. The penitent sinner receives salvation through the crucified Jesus. Jesus' words to the penitent thief reveal Luke's understanding that the destiny of the Christian is "to be with Jesus."

23:44 Noon … three in the afternoon: literally, the sixth and ninth hours. See the note on Mark 15:25.

23:47 This man was innocent: or, "This man was righteous."

24:1-53 The resurrection narrative in Luke consists of five sections: (1) the women at the empty tomb (23:56b–24:12); (2) the appearance to the two disciples on the way to Emmaus (24:13-35); (3) the appearance to the disciples in Jerusalem (24:36-43); (4) Jesus' final instructions (24:44-49); (5) the ascension (24:50-53). In Luke, all the resurrection appearances take place in and around Jerusalem; moreover, they are all recounted as having taken place on Easter Sunday. A consistent theme throughout the narrative is that the suffering, death, and resurrection of Jesus were accomplished in fulfillment of Old Testament promises and of Jewish hopes (24:19a, 21, 26-27, 44, 46). In his second volume, Acts, Luke will argue that Christianity is the fulfillment of the hopes of Pharisaic Judaism and its logical development (see Acts 24:10-21).

24:6 He is not here, but he has been raised: this part of the verse is omitted in important representatives of the Western text tradition, but its presence in other text types and the slight difference in wording from Matthew 28:6 and Mark 16:6 argue for its retention.

24:9 The women in this gospel do not flee from the tomb and tell no one, as in Mark 16:8, but return and tell the disciples about their experience. The initial reaction to the testimony of the women is disbelief (24:11).

24:13-35 This episode focuses on the interpretation of scripture by the risen Jesus and the recognition of him in the breaking of the bread. The references to the quotations of scripture and explanation of it (24:25-27), the kerygmatic proclamation (24:34), and the liturgical gesture (24:30) suggest that the episode is primarily catechetical and liturgical rather than apologetic.

24:13 Seven miles: literally, "sixty stades." A stade was 607 feet. Some manuscripts read “160 stades” or more than eighteen miles. The exact location of Emmaus is disputed.

24:16 A consistent feature of the resurrection stories is that the risen Jesus was different and initially unrecognizable (24:37; Mk 16:12; Jn 20:14; 21:4).

24:26 That the Messiah should suffer …: Luke is the only New Testament writer to speak explicitly of a suffering Messiah (24:26, 46; Acts 3:18; 17:3; 26:23). The idea of a suffering Messiah is not found in the Old Testament or in other Jewish literature prior to the New Testament period, although the idea is hinted at in Mark 8:31-33. See the notes on Matthew 26:63 and 26:67-68.

24:36-43, 44-49 The Gospel of Luke, like each of the other gospels (Mt 28:16-20; Mk 16:14-15; Jn 20:19-23), focuses on an important appearance of Jesus to the Twelve in which they are commissioned for their future ministry. As in Luke 24:6, 12, so in 24:36, 40 there are omissions in the Western text.

24:39-42 The apologetic purpose of this story is evident in the concern with the physical details and the report that Jesus ate food.

24:46 See the note on Luke 24:26.

24:49 The promise of my Father: i.e., the gift of the holy Spirit.

24:50-53 Luke brings his story about the time of Jesus to a close with the report of the ascension. He will also begin the story of the time of the church with a recounting of the ascension. In the gospel, Luke recounts the ascension of Jesus on Easter Sunday night, thereby closely associating it with the resurrection. In Acts 1:3, 9-11 and 13:31 he historicizes the ascension by speaking of a forty-day period between the resurrection and the ascension. The Western text omits some phrases in Luke 24:51, 52 perhaps to avoid any chronological conflict with Acts 1 about the time of the ascension.

24:53 The Gospel of Luke ends as it began (1:9), in the Jerusalem temple.

The Gospel According to John

The Gospel according to John is quite different in character from the three synoptic gospels. It is highly literary and symbolic. It does not follow the same order or reproduce the same stories as the synoptic gospels. To a much greater degree, it is the product of a developed theological reflection and grows out of a different circle and tradition. It was probably written in the 90s of the first century.

The Gospel of John begins with a magnificent prologue, which states many of the major themes and motifs of the gospel, much as an overture does for a musical work. The prologue proclaims Jesus as the preexistent and incarnate Word of God who has revealed the Father to us. The rest of the first chapter forms the introduction to the gospel proper and consists of the Baptist's testimony about Jesus (there is no baptism of Jesus in this gospel—John simply points him out as the Lamb of God), followed by stories of the call of the first disciples, in which various titles predicated of Jesus in the early church are presented.

The gospel narrative contains a series of "signs"—the gospel's word for the wondrous deeds of Jesus. The author is primarily interested in the significance of these deeds, and so interprets them for the reader by various reflections, narratives, and discourses. The first sign is the transformation of water into wine at Cana (2:1-11); this represents the replacement of the Jewish ceremonial washings and symbolizes the entire creative and transforming work of Jesus. The second sign, the cure of the royal official's son (4:46-54) simply by the word of Jesus at a distance, signifies the power of Jesus' life-giving word. The same theme is further developed by other signs, probably for a total of seven. The third sign, the cure of the paralytic at the pool with five porticoes in chap. 5, continues the theme of water offering newness of life. In the preceding chapter, to the woman at the well in Samaria Jesus had offered living water springing up to eternal life, a symbol of the revelation that Jesus brings; here Jesus' life-giving word replaces the water of the pool that failed to bring life. John 6 contains two signs, the multiplication of loaves and the walking on the waters of the Sea of Galilee. These signs are connected much as the manna and the crossing of the Red Sea are in the Passover narrative and symbolize a new exodus. The multiplication of the loaves is interpreted for the reader by the discourse that follows, where the bread of life is used first as a figure for the revelation of God in Jesus and then for the Eucharist. After a series of dialogues reflecting Jesus' debates with the Jewish authorities at the Feast of Tabernacles in John 7 and 8, the sixth sign is presented in John 9, the sign of the young man born blind. This is a narrative illustration of the theme of conflict in the preceding two chapters; it proclaims the triumph of light over darkness, as Jesus is presented as the Light of the world. This is interpreted by a narrative of controversy between the Pharisees and the young man who had been given his sight by Jesus, ending with a discussion of spiritual blindness and spelling out the symbolic meaning of the cure. And finally, the seventh sign, the raising of Lazarus in chap. 11, is the climax of signs. Lazarus is presented as a token of the real life that Jesus, the Resurrection and the Life, who will now ironically be put to death because of his gift of life to Lazarus, will give to all who believe in him once he has been raised from the dead.

SUMMARY

John tells the life story of Jesus, the incarnate Word of God, from his heavenly existence to his descent into the world and his public ministry of "signs" that led to his passion, death, resurrection, and ultimate ascent to the "glory" of his heavenly Father.

Author: Unknown, but ancient tradition calls him "John" and identifies him with John, son of Zebedee, the "beloved disciple."

Date: Between A.D. 90–100.

Content: Descent of the Word made flesh; Jesus' multiple signs; wedding at Cana; various encounters between Jesus and individuals; multiple discourses by Jesus ("I AM" discourses, bread of life, vine and branches, etc.); passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus; resurrection appearances in Jerusalem and by the Sea of Galilee.

Main Characters: Jesus of Nazareth, John the Baptist, Nicodemus, Simon

Peter and the “beloved disciple,” Lazarus, Mary and Martha (siblings), the Samaritan woman, the man born blind,
Mary Magdalene, Judas Iscariot,
Caiaphas the High Priest, Pontius Pilate.

After the account of the seven signs, the “hour” of Jesus arrives, and the author passes from sign to reality, as he moves into the discourses in the upper room that interpret the meaning of the passion, death, and resurrection narratives that follow. The whole gospel of John is a progressive revelation of the glory of God’s only Son, who comes to reveal the Father and then returns in glory to the Father. The author’s purpose is clearly expressed in what must have been the original ending of the gospel at the end of John 20: “Now Jesus did many other signs in the presence of [his] disciples that are not written in this book. But these are written that you may [come to] believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the Son of God, and that through this belief you may have life in his name.”

Critical analysis makes it difficult to accept the idea that the gospel as it now stands was written by one person. John 21 seems to have been added after the gospel was completed; it exhibits a Greek style somewhat different from that of the rest of the work. The prologue (1:1-18) apparently contains an independent hymn, subsequently adapted to serve as a preface to the gospel. Within the gospel itself there are also some inconsistencies, e.g., there are two endings of Jesus’ discourse in the upper room (14:31; 18:1). To solve these problems, scholars have proposed various rearrangements that would produce a smoother order. However, most have come to the conclusion that the inconsistencies were probably produced by subsequent editing in which homogeneous materials were added to a shorter original.

Other difficulties for any theory of eyewitness authorship of the gospel in its present form are presented by its highly developed theology and by certain elements of its literary style. For instance, some of the wondrous deeds of Jesus have been worked into highly effective dramatic scenes (chap. 9); there has been a careful attempt to have these followed by discourses that explain them (chaps. 5 and 6); and the sayings of Jesus have been woven into long discourses of a quasi-poetic form resembling the speeches of personified Wisdom in the Old Testament.

The gospel contains many details about Jesus not found in the synoptic gospels, e.g., that Jesus engaged in a baptizing ministry (3:22) before he changed to one of preaching and signs; that Jesus’ public ministry lasted for several years (see the note on 2:13); that he traveled to Jerusalem for various festivals and met serious opposition long before his death (2:14-25; 5; 7–8); and that he was put to death on the day before Passover (18:28). These events are not always in chronological order because of the development and editing that took place. However, the accuracy of much of the detail of the fourth gospel constitutes a strong argument that the Johannine tradition rests upon the testimony of an eyewitness. Although tradition identified this person as John, the son of Zebedee, most modern scholars find that the evidence does not support this.

The fourth gospel is not simply history; the narrative has been organized and adapted to serve the evangelist's theological purposes as well. Among them are the opposition to the synagogue of the day and to John the Baptist's followers, who tried to exalt their master at Jesus' expense, the desire to show that Jesus was the Messiah, and the desire to convince Christians that their religious belief and practice must be rooted in Jesus. Such theological purposes have impelled the evangelist to emphasize motifs that were not so clear in the synoptic account of Jesus' ministry, e.g., the explicit emphasis on his divinity.

The polemic between synagogue and church produced bitter and harsh invective, especially regarding the hostility toward Jesus of the authorities—Pharisees and Sadducees—who are combined and referred to frequently as "the Jews" (see the note on 1:19). These opponents are even described in John 8:44 as springing from their father the devil, whose conduct they imitate in opposing God by rejecting Jesus, whom God has sent. On the other hand, the author of this gospel seems to take pains to show that women are not inferior to men in the Christian community: the woman at the well in Samaria (chap. 4) is presented as a prototype of a missionary (4:4-42), and the first witness of the resurrection is a woman (20:11-18).

The final editing of the gospel and arrangement in its present form probably dates from between A.D. 90 and 100. Traditionally, Ephesus has been favored as the place of composition, though many support a location in Syria, perhaps the city of Antioch, while some have suggested other places, including Alexandria.

The principal divisions of the Gospel according to John are the following:

I. Prologue (1:1-18)
II. The Book of Signs (1:19–12:50)
III. The Book of Glory (13:1–20:31)
IV. Epilogue: The Resurrection Appearance in Galilee (21:1-25)

John has a “high Christology” that emphasizes the divine aspects of Jesus’ identity, as compared with a “low Christology” that emphasizes the human aspects. To appreciate this gospel one must keep in mind its overall framework. John proposes that Jesus preexisted with God the Father who sent him down to earth for a time to testify to the truth and to bring people to faith. Then, in his passion, death, and resurrection, Jesus returned to his heavenly existence and glory. This descending-ascending movement is unique in the NT. One must also remember that Christian faith, as expressed in the Creeds, demands that the human and divine aspects of Jesus’ identity are equal. Jesus Christ is fully God and fully human. One aspect cannot overshadow the other without leading to a heretical stance, something that has happened frequently in Christian history. John’s gospel ultimately retains a balance by emphasizing both the human and the divine qualities of Jesus.

Dualism is characteristic of John’s gospel in which opposites are contrasted to emphasize the choice that must be made to follow Jesus. John emphasizes the struggle between light and darkness, truth and falsehood, living water and still water, the descent and ascent of Christ, earthly and heavenly things, and so on. Some of this dualistic imagery is also found in the Dead Sea Scrolls, indicating that it might have been a feature of sectarian Judaism. Such dualism forces people to choose one side or the other: one lives by the light or one lives by darkness (cf. 1 Thes 5:4-8). There is no mediocrity with Jesus.

 and the world came to be through him,

Are you Elijah?”* And he said, “I am not.” “Are you the Prophet?” He answered, “No.”[p] [22]So they said to him, “Who are you, so we can give an answer to those who sent us? What do you have to say for yourself?” [23]He said:

[25]They asked him, “Why then do you baptize if you are not the Messiah or Elijah or the Prophet?”[r] [26]John answered them, “I baptize with water;* but there is one among you whom you do not recognize,[s] [27]the one who is coming after me, whose sandal strap I am not worthy to untie.” [28]This happened in Bethany across the Jordan,* where John was baptizing.

John’s acclamation, “Behold the Lamb of God …” is used at every Eucharist when the priest presents the consecrated host, the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ, to the assembly. It evokes an assent of faith in the one who saves the world from sin.

[35]The next day John was there again with two of his disciples, [36]and as he watched Jesus walk by, he said, “Behold, the Lamb of God.”* [37]The two disciples* heard what he said and followed Jesus. [38]Jesus turned and saw them following him and said to them, “What are you looking for?” They said to him, “Rabbi” (which translated means Teacher), “where are you staying?” [39]He said to them, “Come, and you will see.” So they went and saw where he was staying, and they stayed with him that day. It was about four in the afternoon.* [40]Andrew, the brother of Simon Peter, was one of the two who heard John and followed Jesus. [41]He first found his own brother Simon and told him, “We have found the Messiah”* (which is translated Anointed).[z] [42]Then he brought him to Jesus. Jesus looked at him and said, “You are Simon the son of John;* you will be called Cephas” (which is translated Peter).[a]

[43]The next day he* decided to go to Galilee, and he found Philip. And Jesus said to him, “Follow me.” [44]Now Philip was from Bethsaida, the town of Andrew and Peter. [45]Philip found Nathanael and told him, “We have found the one about whom Moses wrote in the law, and also the prophets, Jesus son of Joseph, from Nazareth.”[b] [46]But Nathanael said to him, “Can anything good come from Nazareth?” Philip said to him, “Come and see.” [47]Jesus saw Nathanael coming toward him and said of him, “Here is a true Israelite.* There is no duplicity in him.” [48][c]Nathanael said to him, “How do you know me?” Jesus answered and said to him, “Before Philip called you, I saw you under the fig tree.” [49]Nathanael answered him, “Rabbi, you are the Son of God; you are the King of Israel.”[d] [50]Jesus answered and said to him, “Do you believe because I told you that I saw you under the fig tree?* You will see greater things than this.” [51]And he said to him, “Amen, amen,* I say to you, you will see the sky opened and the angels of God ascending and descending on the Son of Man.”[e]

2 1*On the third day there was a wedding* in Cana* in Galilee, and the mother of Jesus was there.[a] 2Jesus and his disciples were also invited to the wedding. 3When the wine ran short, the mother of Jesus said to him, “They have no wine.” 4*[And] Jesus said to her, “Woman, how does your concern affect me? My hour has not yet come.”[b] 5His mother said to the servers, “Do whatever he tells you.”[c] 6*Now there were six stone water jars there for Jewish ceremonial washings,[d] each holding twenty to thirty gallons. 7Jesus told them, “Fill the jars with water.” So they filled them to the brim. 8Then he told them, “Draw some out now and take it to the headwaiter.”* So they took it. 9And when the headwaiter tasted the water that had become wine, without knowing where it came from (although the servers who had drawn the water knew), the headwaiter called the bridegroom 10and said to him, “Everyone serves good wine first, and then when people have drunk freely, an inferior one; but you have kept the good wine until now.” 11Jesus did this as the beginning of his signs* in Cana in Galilee and so revealed his glory, and his disciples began to believe in him.[e]

The expression “Amen, amen” is unique to John’s gospel. It is a characteristic way in which the Johannine Jesus solemnly teaches or proclaims something. The Hebrew word Amen normally was used to conclude prayers. The Synoptic Gospels portray Jesus using it once at the beginning of solemn statements (Mt 5:18; Mk 8:12; Lk 12:37), an apparent characteristic of his teaching style. Only John records the double expression.

John is the only NT book to use “the Jews” as a generic term for the opponents of Jesus. This is a delicate point, since some parts of the NT have wrongly been used throughout history to justify anti-Semitic actions against all Jews on the alleged role they had in crucifying Jesus. John, however, does not use the term “Jews” in that fashion. Rather, he uses the expression to represent a small group of Jewish leaders, mostly allied to the temple, who opposed Jesus and felt threatened by him. Nothing in the NT can rightly justify condemning the Jews as a people or a race for actions taken against Jesus.

12*After this, he and his mother, [his] brothers, and his disciples went down to Capernaum and stayed there only a few days.*

3 1[a]Now there was a Pharisee named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews.* 2He came to Jesus at night and said to him, “Rabbi, we know that you are a teacher who has come from God, for no one can do these signs that you are doing unless God is with him.”[b] 3Jesus answered and said to him, “Amen, amen, I say to you, no one can see the kingdom of God without being born* from above.” 4Nicodemus said to him, “How can a person once grown old be born again? Surely he cannot reenter his mother’s womb and be born again, can he?”[c] 5Jesus answered, “Amen, amen, I say to you, no one can enter the kingdom of God without being born of water and Spirit.[d] 6What is born of flesh is flesh and what is born of spirit is spirit.[e] 7Do not be amazed that I told you, ‘You must be born from above.’ 8The wind* blows where it wills, and you can hear the sound it makes, but you do not know where it comes from or where it goes; so it is with everyone who is born of the Spirit.”[f] [9]Nicodemus answered and said to him, “How can this happen?” [10]Jesus answered and said to him, “You are the teacher of Israel and you do not understand this? [11]Amen, amen, I say to you, we speak of what we know and we testify to what we have seen, but you people do not accept our testimony.[g] [12]If I tell you about earthly things and you do not believe, how will you believe if I tell you about heavenly things?[h] [13]No one has gone up to heaven except the one who has come down from heaven, the Son of Man.[i] [14]And just as Moses lifted up* the serpent in the desert, so must the Son of Man be lifted up,[j] [15]*so that everyone who believes in him may have eternal life.”

Samaria in relation to Judea

Gn 33:18-19; 48:22; Jos 24:32

[4]He had to* pass through Samaria. [5]So he came to a town of Samaria called Sychar,* near the plot of land that Jacob had given to his son Joseph.[a] [6]Jacob's well was there. Jesus, tired from his journey, sat down there at the well. It was about noon.

[7]A woman of Samaria came to draw water. Jesus said to her, "Give me a drink." [8]His disciples had gone into the town to buy food. [9]*The Samaritan woman said to him, "How can you, a Jew, ask me, a Samaritan woman, for a drink?"[b] (For Jews use nothing in common with Samaritans.) [10]Jesus answered and said to her,[c] "If you knew the gift of God and who is saying to you, 'Give me a drink,' you would have asked him and he would have given you living water." [11][The woman] said to him, "Sir, you do not even have a bucket and the well is deep; where then can you get this living water? [12]Are you greater than our father Jacob, who gave us this well and drank from it himself with his children and his flocks?"[d] [13]Jesus answered and said to her, "Everyone who drinks this water will be thirsty again; [14]but whoever drinks the water I shall give will never thirst; the water I shall give will become in him a spring of water welling up to eternal life."[e] [15]The woman said to him, "Sir, give me this water, so that I may not be thirsty or have to keep coming here to draw water."

nor in Jerusalem. [22]You people worship what you do not understand; we worship what we understand, because salvation is from the Jews.[i] [23]But the hour is coming, and is now here, when true worshipers will worship the Father in Spirit and truth;* and indeed the Father seeks such people to worship him. [24]God is Spirit, and those who worship him must worship in Spirit and truth."[j] [25]The woman said to him, "I know that the Messiah is coming,[k] the one called the Anointed; when he comes, he will tell us everything." [27]At that moment his disciples returned, and were amazed that he was talking with a woman, but still no one said, "What are you looking for?" or "Why are you talking with her?" [28]The woman left her water jar and went into the town and said to the people, [29]"Come see a man who told me everything I have done. Could he possibly be the Messiah?" [30]They went out of the town and came to him. [31]Meanwhile, the disciples urged him, "Rabbi, eat." [32]But he said to them, "I have food to eat of which you do not know." [33]So the disciples said to one another, "Could someone have brought him something to eat?" [34]Jesus said to them, "My food is to do the will of the one who sent me and to finish his work.[m] [35]Do you not say, 'In four months* the harvest will be here'? I tell you, look up and see the fields ripe for the harvest.[n] [36]The reaper is already* receiving his payment and gathering crops for eternal life, so that the sower and reaper can rejoice together.[o] [37]For here the saying is verified that 'One sows and another reaps.'[p] [38]I sent you to reap what you have not worked for; others have done the work, and you are sharing the fruits of their work."

The church uses three lengthy stories in John as the centerpiece of the Lenten regimen of preparing catechumens for baptism and reception into the church. These are: the Samaritan woman (4:1-42), the man born blind (9:1-41), and the raising of Lazarus (11:1-44). The themes in these simple but profound stories directly relate to the gift of faith in baptism. The church uses these readings from Year A on the second, third, and fourth Sundays of Lent even during the other liturgical years if there are catechumens being prepared for baptism. The three readings correspond to the three scrutinies.

[39]Many of the Samaritans of that town began to believe in him because of the word of the woman* who testified, “He told me everything I have done.” [40]When the Samaritans came to him, they invited him to stay with them; and he stayed there two days. [41]Many more began to believe in him because of his word, [42]and they said to the woman, “We no longer believe because of your word; for we have heard for ourselves, and we know that this is truly the savior of the world.”[q]

43*After the two days, he left there for Galilee. 44*[r]For Jesus himself testified that a prophet has no honor in his native place. 45When he came into Galilee, the Galileans welcomed him, since they had seen all he had done in Jerusalem at the feast; for they themselves had gone to the feast.

[48]Jesus said to him, “Unless you people see signs and wonders, you will not believe.”[t] [49]The royal official said to him, “Sir, come down before my child dies.” [50]Jesus said to him, “You may go; your son will live.” The man believed what Jesus said to him and left.[u] [51]While he was on his way back, his slaves met him and told him that his boy would live. [52]He asked them when he began to recover. They told him, “The fever left him yesterday, about one in the afternoon.” [53]The father realized that just at that time Jesus had said to him, “Your son will live,” and he and his whole household came to believe. [54][Now] this was the second sign Jesus did when he came to Galilee from Judea.[v]

Now that day was a sabbath. 19*Jesus answered and said to them, “Amen, amen, I say to you, a son cannot do anything on his own, but only what he sees his father doing;[k] for what he does, his son will do also. 20For the Father loves his Son and shows him everything that he himself does, and he will show him greater works than these, so that you may be amazed.[l] 21For just as the Father raises the dead and gives life,* so also does the Son give life to whomever he wishes.[m] 22Nor does the Father judge anyone, but he has given all judgment* to his Son,[n] 23so that all may honor the Son just as they honor the Father. Whoever does not honor the Son does not honor the Father who sent him. 24Amen, amen, I say to you, whoever hears my word and believes in the one who sent me has eternal life and will not come to condemnation, but has passed from death to life.[o] 25Amen, amen, I say to you, the hour is coming and is now here when the dead will hear the voice of the Son of God, and those who hear will live.[p] 26For just as the Father has life in himself, so also he gave to his Son the possession of life in himself.[q] 27And he gave him power to exercise judgment, because he is the Son of Man.[r] 28*Do not be amazed at this, because the hour is coming in which all who are in the tombs will hear his voice[s] 29and will come out, those who have done good deeds to the resurrection of life, but those who have done wicked deeds to the resurrection of condemnation.[t]

6 1[a]After this, Jesus went across the Sea of Galilee [of Tiberias].* 2A large crowd followed him, because they saw the signs he was performing on the sick. 3Jesus went up on the mountain, and there he sat down with his disciples. 4The Jewish feast of Passover was near.[b] 5*When Jesus raised his eyes and saw that a large crowd was coming to him, he said to Philip,[c] "Where can we buy enough food for them to eat?" 6*He said this to test him, because he himself knew what he was going to do. 7Philip answered him, "Two hundred days' wages* worth of food would not be enough for each of them to have a little [bit]."[d] 8One of his disciples, Andrew, the brother of Simon Peter, said to him, 9"There is a boy here who has five barley loaves* and two fish; but what good are these for so many?"[e] 10Jesus said, "Have the people recline." Now there was a great deal of grass* in that place. So the men reclined, about five thousand in number.[f] 11Then Jesus took the loaves, gave thanks, and distributed them to those who were reclining, and also as much of the fish as they wanted.[g] 12When they had had their fill, he said to his disciples, "Gather the fragments left over, so that nothing will be wasted." 13So they collected them, and filled twelve wicker baskets* with fragments from the five barley loaves that had been more than they could eat. 14When the people saw the sign he had done, they said, "This is truly the Prophet,* the one who is to come into the world."[h] 15Since Jesus knew that they were going to come and carry him off to make him king, he withdrew again to the mountain alone.[i]

16[j]When it was evening, his disciples went down to the sea, 17embarked in a boat, and went across the sea to Capernaum. It had already grown dark, and Jesus had not yet come to them. 18The sea was stirred up because a strong wind was blowing. 19When they had rowed about three or four miles, they saw Jesus walking on the sea* and coming near the boat, and they began to be afraid.[k] 20But he said to them, “It is I.* Do not be afraid.” 21They wanted to take him into the boat, but the boat immediately arrived at the shore to which they were heading.

For on him the Father, God, has set his seal.”l 28So they said to him, “What can we do to accomplish the works of God?” 29Jesus answered and said to them, “This is the work of God, that you believe in the one he sent.” 30So they said to him, “What sign can you do, that we may see and believe in you? The Words of Eternal Life*

60Then many of his disciples who were listening said, “This saying is hard; who can accept it?” 61Since Jesus knew that his disciples were murmuring about this, he said to them, “Does this shock you? 62What if you were to see the Son of Man ascending to where he was before?* 63It is the spirit that gives life, while the flesh* is of no avail. The words I have spoken to you are spirit and life. 64But there are some of you who do not believe.” Jesus knew from the beginning the ones who would not believe and the one who would betray him.[c] 65And he said, “For this reason I have told you that no one can come to me unless it is granted him by my Father.”

You have the words of eternal life. 69We have come to believe and are convinced that you are the Holy One of God.”[d] 70Jesus answered them, “Did I not choose you twelve? Yet is not one of you a devil?” 71He was referring to Judas, son of Simon the Iscariot; it was he who would betray him, one of the Twelve.[e]

If you do these things, manifest yourself to the world.”[c] 5For his brothers did not believe in him. 6*So Jesus said to them, “My time is not yet here, but the time is always right for you. 7The world cannot hate you, but it hates me, because I testify to it that its works are evil.[d] 8You go up to the feast. I am not going up* to this feast, because my time has not yet been fulfilled.” 9After he had said this, he stayed on in Galilee.

Some said, “He is a good man,” [while] others said, “No; on the contrary, he misleads the crowd.” 13Still, no one spoke openly about him because they were afraid of the Jews.[e]

But the one who sent me is true, and what I heard from him I tell the world.”[r] 27They did not realize that he was speaking to them of the Father. 28So Jesus said [to them], “When you lift up the Son of Man, then you will realize that I AM, and that I do nothing on my own, but I say only what the Father taught me.[s] 29The one who sent me is with me. He has not left me alone, because I always do what is pleasing to him.” 30Because he spoke this way, many came to believe in him.

The expression “I AM” is of special importance in John’s gospel. It is a way of translating the Hebrew name for God (YHWH), which means something like “I am who I am” or “I am who will be present.” Four times in John, Jesus uses this expression without any qualifiers. It is a bald statement of identification with God. At other times, the expression is accompanied by images that describe aspects of Jesus’ special mission from the Father. See “Names of God” (at Ex 3:14).

I AM Sayings in John’s Gospel

8:24	For if you do not believe that I AM, you will die in your sins.
8:28	When you lift up the Son of Man, you will realize that I AM.

8:58	Amen, amen, I say to you, before Abraham came to be, I AM.
13:19	So that when it [fulfillment of Scripture] happens you may believe that I AM.
6:35	I am the bread of life.
6:51	I am the living bread that came down from heaven.
8:12	I am the light of the world (cf. 9:5).
10:7	I am the gate of the sheep (cf. 10:9).
10:11	I am the good shepherd (cf. 10:14).
11:25	I am the resurrection and the life.
14:6	I am the way and the truth and the life.
15:5	I am the vine, you are the branches (cf. 15:1).

[39]*They answered and said to him, “Our father is Abraham.” Jesus said to them,[x] “If you were Abraham’s children, you would be doing the works of Abraham. [40]But now you are trying to kill me, a man who has told you the truth that I heard from God; Abraham did not do this. [41]You are doing the works of your father!” [So] they said to him, “We are not illegitimate. We have one Father, God.”[y] [42]Jesus said to them, “If God were your Father, you would love me, for I came from God and am here; I did not come on my own, but he sent me.[z] [43]Why do you not understand what I am saying? Because you cannot bear to hear my word. [44]You belong to your father the devil and you willingly carry out your father’s desires. He was a murderer from the beginning and does not stand in truth, because there is no truth in him. When he tells a lie, he speaks in character, because he is a liar and the father of lies.[a] [45]But because I speak the truth, you do not believe me. [46]Can any of you charge me with sin? If I am telling the truth, why do you not believe me?[b] [47]Whoever belongs to God hears the words of God; for this reason you do not listen, because you do not belong to God.”[c]

[48]The Jews answered and said to him, “Are we not right in saying that you are a Samaritan* and are possessed?” [49]Jesus answered, “I am not possessed; I honor my Father, but you dishonor me. [50]I do not seek my own glory; there is one who seeks it and he is the one who judges.[d] [51]Amen, amen, I say to you, whoever keeps my word will never see death.”[e] [52][So] the Jews said to him, “Now we are sure that you are possessed. Abraham died, as did the prophets, yet you say, ‘Whoever keeps my word will never taste death.’ [53]Are you greater than our father Abraham,* who died? Or the prophets, who died? Who do you make yourself out to be?”[f] 54Jesus answered, “If I glorify myself, my glory is worth nothing; but it is my Father who glorifies me, of whom you say, ‘He is our God.’ 55You do not know him, but I know him. And if I should say that I do not know him, I would be like you a liar. 9 [1]*As he passed by he saw a man blind from birth.[a] [2]His disciples asked him, “Rabbi, who sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?”[b] [3]Jesus answered, “Neither he nor his parents sinned; it is so that the works of God might be made visible through him.[c] [4]We have to do the works of the one who sent me while it is day. Night is coming when no one can work.[d] [5]While I am in the world, I am the light of the world.”[e] [6]When he had said this, he spat on the ground and made clay with the saliva, and smeared the clay on his eyes,[f] [7]and said to him, “Go wash in the Pool of Siloam” (which means Sent). So he went and washed, and came back able to see.[g]

[8]His neighbors and those who had seen him earlier as a beggar said, “Isn’t this the one who used to sit and beg?” [9]Some said, “It is,” but others said, “No, he just looks like him.” He said, “I am.” [10]So they said to him, “[So] how were your eyes opened?” [11]He replied, “The man called Jesus made clay and anointed my eyes and told me, ‘Go to Siloam and wash.’ So I went there and washed and was able to see.” [12]And they said to him, “Where is he?” He said, “I don’t know.”

[13]They brought the one who was once blind to the Pharisees. [14]Now Jesus had made clay* and opened his eyes on a sabbath.[h] [15]So then the Pharisees also asked him how he was able to see. He said to them, “He put clay on my eyes, and I washed, and now I can see.” [16]So some of the Pharisees said, “This man is not from God, because he does not keep the sabbath.” [But] others said, “How can a sinful man do such signs?” And there was a division among them.[i] [17]So they said to the blind man again, “What do you have to say about him, since he opened your eyes?” He said, “He is a prophet.”[j]

[18]Now the Jews did not believe that he had been blind and gained his sight until they summoned the parents of the one who had gained his sight. [19]They asked them, “Is this your son, who you say was born blind? How does he now see?” [20]His parents answered and said, “We know that this is our son and that he was born blind. [21]We do not know how he sees now, nor do we know who opened his eyes. Ask him, he is of age; he can speak for himself.” [22]*[k]His parents said this because they were afraid of the Jews, for the Jews had already agreed that if anyone acknowledged him as the Messiah, he would be expelled from the synagogue. [23]For this reason his parents said, “He is of age; question him.”[l]

[24]So a second time they called the man who had been blind and said to him, “Give God the praise!* We know that this man is a sinner.”[m] [25]He replied, “If he is a sinner, I do not know. One thing I do know is that I was blind and now I see.” [26]So they said to him, “What did he do to you? How did he open your eyes?” [27]He answered them, “I told you already and you did not listen. Why do you want to hear it again? Do you want to become his disciples, too?” [28]They ridiculed him and said, “You are that man’s disciple; we are disciples of Moses! [29]We know that God spoke to Moses, but we do not know where this one is from.”[n] [30]The man answered and said to them, “This is what is so amazing, that you do not know where he is from, yet he opened my eyes. [31]We know that God does not listen to sinners, but if one is devout and does his will, he listens to him.[o] [32]*It is unheard of that anyone ever opened the eyes of a person born blind. [33]If this man were not from God, he would not be able to do anything.”[p] [34]They answered and said to him, “You were born totally in sin, and are you trying to teach us?” Then they threw him out.

11 [1]Now a man was ill, Lazarus from Bethany,[a] the village of Mary and her sister Martha. [2]Mary was the one who had anointed the Lord with perfumed oil and dried his feet with her hair; it was her brother Lazarus who was ill. [3]So the sisters sent word to him, saying, “Master, the one you love is ill.” [4]When Jesus heard this he said, “This illness is not to end in death,* but is for the glory of God, that the Son of God may be glorified through it.”[b] [5]Now Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus. [6]So when he heard that he was ill, he remained for two days in the place where he was. [7]Then after this he said to his disciples, “Let us go back to Judea.” [8]The disciples said to him, “Rabbi, the Jews were just trying to stone you, and you want to go back there?”[c] [9]Jesus answered, “Are there not twelve hours in a day? If one walks during the day,[d] he does not stumble, because he sees the light of this world.[e] [10]But if one walks at night, he stumbles, because the light is not in him.”* [11]He said this, and then told them, “Our friend Lazarus is asleep, but I am going to awaken him.” [12]So the disciples said to him, “Master, if he is asleep, he will be saved.” [13]But Jesus was talking about his death, while they thought that he meant ordinary sleep.[f] [14]So then Jesus said to them clearly, “Lazarus has died. [15]And I am glad for you that I was not there, that you may believe. Let us go to him.” [16]So Thomas, called Didymus,* said to his fellow disciples, “Let us also go to die with him.”[g]

[17]When Jesus arrived, he found that Lazarus had already been in the tomb for four days. [18]Now Bethany was near Jerusalem, only about two miles* away. [19]And many of the Jews had come to Martha and Mary to comfort them about their brother.[h] [20]When Martha heard that Jesus was coming, she went to meet him; but Mary sat at home. [21]Martha said to Jesus, “Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died.[i] [22][But] even now I know that whatever you ask of God, God will give you.” [23]Jesus said to her, “Your brother will rise.” [24]Martha said to him, “I know he will rise, in the resurrection on the last day.”[j] [25]Jesus told her, “I am the resurrection and the life; whoever believes in me, even if he dies, will live,[k] [26]and everyone who lives and believes in me will never die. Do you believe this?” [27]*[l]She said to him, “Yes, Lord. I have come to believe that you are the Messiah, the Son of God, the one who is coming into the world.”

[28]When she had said this, she went and called her sister Mary secretly, saying, “The teacher is here and is asking for you.” [29]As soon as she heard this, she rose quickly and went to him. [30]For Jesus had not yet come into the village, but was still where Martha had met him. [31]So when the Jews who were with her in the house comforting her saw Mary get up quickly and go out, they followed her, presuming that she was going to the tomb to weep there. [32]When Mary came to where Jesus was and saw him, she fell at his feet and said to him, “Lord, if you had been here, my brother would not have died.” [33]When Jesus saw her weeping and the Jews who had come with her weeping, he became perturbed* and deeply troubled, [34]and said, “Where have you laid him?” They said to him, “Sir, come and see.” [35]And Jesus wept.[m] [36]So the Jews said, “See how he loved him.” [37]But some of them said, “Could not the one who opened the eyes of the blind man have done something so that this man would not have died?”

[38]So Jesus, perturbed again, came to the tomb. It was a cave, and a stone lay across it. [39]Jesus said, “Take away the stone.” Martha, the dead man’s sister, said to him, “Lord, by now there will be a stench; he has been dead for four days.” [40]Jesus said to her, “Did I not tell you that if you believe you will see the glory of God?” [41]So they took away the stone. And Jesus raised his eyes and said, “Father,* I thank you for hearing me. [42]I know that you always hear me; but because of the crowd here I have said this, that they may believe that you sent me.”[n] [43]And when he had said this, he cried out in a loud voice,* “Lazarus, come out!” [44]The dead man came out, tied hand and foot with burial bands, and his face was wrapped in a cloth. So Jesus said to them, “Untie him and let him go.”

45Now many of the Jews who had come to Mary and seen what he had done began to believe in him.[o] 46But some of them went to the Pharisees and told them what Jesus had done. 47So the chief priests and the Pharisees convened the Sanhedrin and said, “What are we going to do? This man is performing many signs.[p] 48If we leave him alone, all will believe in him, and the Romans will come* and take away both our land and our nation.” 49[q]But one of them, Caiaphas, who was high priest that year,* said to them, “You know nothing, 50nor do you consider that it is better for you that one man should die instead of the people, so that the whole nation may not perish.” 51He did not say this on his own, but since he was high priest for that year, he prophesied that Jesus was going to die for the nation, 52and not only for the nation, but also to gather into one the dispersed children of God.* 53So from that day on they planned to kill him.[r]

54So Jesus no longer walked about in public among the Jews, but he left for the region near the desert, to a town called Ephraim,* and there he remained with his disciples.

Eph 5:8

27“I am troubled* now. Yet what should I say? ‘Father, save me from this hour’? But it was for this purpose that I came to this hour.[u] 28Father, glorify your name.” Then a voice came from heaven, “I have glorified it and will glorify it again.”[v] 29The crowd there heard it and said it was thunder; but others said, “An angel has spoken to him.”[w] 30Jesus answered and said, “This voice did not come for my sake but for yours.[x] 31Now is the time of judgment on this world; now the ruler of this world* will be driven out.[y] 32And when I am lifted up from the earth, I will draw everyone to myself.”[z] 33He said this indicating the kind of death he would die. 34[a]So the crowd answered him, “We have heard from the law that the Messiah remains forever.* Then how can you say that the Son of Man must be lifted up? Who is this Son of Man?” 35[b]Jesus said to them, “The light will be among you only a little while. Walk while you have the light, so that darkness may not overcome you. Whoever walks in the dark does not know where he is going. 36While you have the light, believe in the light, so that you may become children of the light.”[c]

The seed falls into the ground, surrenders its seed-form, and new life emerges. Each day we make choices about what needs to die in the ground of our own beings so that our daily living might be enriched. Some day we will be asked to hand over the breath of life that is on loan to us from God. In our moment of letting go we will be breathed back into God. Meditate today on the fruit of dying.

Unbelief and Belief Among the Jews

Dt 29:2-4; Mk 4:11-12; Rom 9–11

After he had said this, Jesus left and hid from them. 37*[d]Although he had performed so many signs in their presence they did not believe in him, 38*in order that the word which Isaiah the prophet spoke might be fulfilled:

e

Is 53:1; Rom 10:16

“Lord, who has believed our preaching, to whom has the might of the Lord been revealed?”[e]

39For this reason they could not believe, because again Isaiah said:

f

Is 6:9-10; Mt 13:13-15; Mk 4:12

40“He blinded their eyes and hardened their heart, so that they might not see with their eyes and understand with their heart and be converted, and I would heal them.”[f]

41Isaiah said this because he saw his glory* and spoke about him.[g] 42Nevertheless, many, even among the authorities, believed in him, but because of the Pharisees they did not acknowledge it openly in order not to be expelled from the synagogue.[h] 43For they preferred human praise to the glory of God.[i]

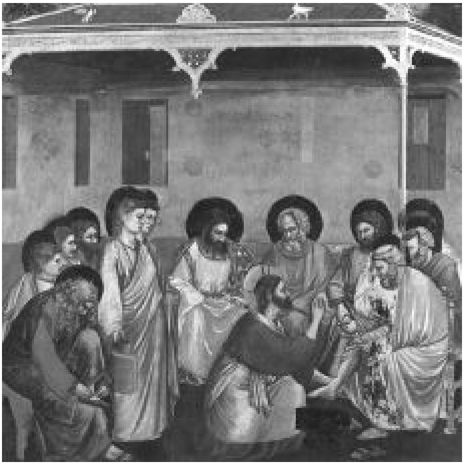
13 [1]Before the feast of Passover,* Jesus knew that his hour had come to pass from this world to the Father. He loved his own in the world and he loved them to the end.[a] [2]The devil had already induced* Judas, son of Simon the Iscariot, to hand him over. So, during supper,[b] [3]fully aware that the Father had put everything into his power and that he had come from God and was returning to God,[c] [4]he rose from supper and took off his outer garments. He took a towel and tied it around his waist. [5]Then he poured water into a basin and began to wash the disciples' feet[d] and dry them with the towel around his waist. [6]He came to Simon Peter, who said to him, "Master, are you going to wash my feet?" [7]Jesus answered and said to him, "What I am doing, you do not understand now, but you will understand later." [8]Peter said to him, "You will never wash my feet." Jesus answered him, "Unless I wash you, you will have no inheritance with me."[e] [9]Simon Peter said to him, "Master, then not only my feet, but my hands and head as well." [10]Jesus said to him, "Whoever has bathed has no need except to have his feet washed, for he is clean all over; so you are clean, but not all."[f] [11]For he knew who would betray him; for this reason, he said, "Not all of you are clean."[g]



Washing of the feet

Jesus’ washing the feet of his disciples is a profound action proclaimed and (almost always) ritualized every Holy Thursday during the Mass of the Lord’s Supper to emphasize the nature of true service, ministry to others.

[13]You call me ‘teacher’ and ‘master,’ and rightly so, for indeed I am.[h] [14]If I, therefore, the master and teacher, have washed your feet, you ought to wash one another’s feet. [15]I have given you a model to follow, so that as I have done for you, you should also do.[i] [16]Amen, amen, I say to you, no slave is greater than his master nor any messenger* greater than the one who sent him.[j] [17]If you understand this, blessed are you if you do it. [18]I am not speaking of all of you. I know those whom I have chosen. But so that the scripture might be fulfilled, ‘The one who ate my food has raised his heel against me.'[k] [19]From now on I am telling you before it happens, so that when it happens you may believe that I AM. [20]Amen, amen, I say to you, whoever receives the one I send receives me, and whoever receives me receives the one who sent me."[l]

[21]When he had said this, Jesus was deeply troubled and testified, "Amen, amen, I say to you, one of you will betray me." [22]The disciples looked at one another, at a loss as to whom he meant. [23]One of his disciples, the one whom Jesus loved,* was reclining at Jesus' side.[n] [24]So Simon Peter nodded to him to find out whom he meant. [25]He leaned back against Jesus' chest and said to him, "Master, who is it?"[o] [26]Jesus answered, "It is the one to whom I hand the morsel* after I have dipped it." So he dipped the morsel and [took it and] handed it to Judas, son of Simon the Iscariot. [27]After he took the morsel, Satan entered him. So Jesus said to him, "What you are going to do, do quickly."[p] [28][Now] none of those reclining at table realized why he said this to him. [29]Some thought that since Judas kept the money bag, Jesus had told him, "Buy what we need for the feast," or to give something to the poor.[q] [30]So he took the morsel and left at once. And it was night.

[31]When he had left, Jesus said, “Now is the Son of Man glorified, and God is glorified in him. [32][If God is glorified in him,] God will also glorify him in himself, and he will glorify him at once.[r] [33]My children, I will be with you only a little while longer. You will look for me, and as I told the Jews, ‘Where I go you cannot come,’ so now I say it to you.[s] [34]I give you a new commandment:* love one another. As I have loved you, so you also should love one another.[t] [35]This is how all will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another.”

Why does Jesus say he is giving us a new commandment of love when the old commandment also asked us to love? In this new command to love, is Jesus equating our love for one another with our love for God? If so, others will know we love God not just because we keep the rules but, rather, by the way we treat one another.

But you know it, because it remains with you, and will be in you.[l] [18]I will not leave you orphans; I will come to you.* [19]In a little while the world will no longer see me, but you will see me, because I live and you will live.[m] [20]On that day you will realize that I am in my Father and you are in me and I in you.[n] [21]Whoever has my commandments and observes them is the one who loves me. And whoever loves me will be loved by my Father, and I will love him and reveal myself to him.”[o] [22]Judas, not the Iscariot,* said to him, “Master, [then] what happened that you will reveal yourself to us and not to the world?”[p] [23]Jesus answered and said to him, “Whoever loves me will keep my word, and my Father will love him, and we will come to him and make our dwelling with him.[q] [24]Whoever does not love me does not keep my words; yet the word you hear is not mine but that of the Father who sent me.

You are the way to the Father. You are the path I explore when I want to know the truth. You are the life I breathe with every breath. You are my way, my truth, my life.

The Paraclete is John’s unique expression for the Holy Spirit. The Greek term parakletos is a masculine form. Here it means an advocate or counselor, in the sense of one who speaks on someone’s behalf. Thus, the Holy Spirit is really a second advocate or counselor, since the word also applies to Jesus (14:16). The Paraclete abides with Jesus’ followers and guides them in a variety of ways:

Passage	Duties of the Paraclete
14:15-17	He is “another Advocate” and the “Spirit of truth”; he will remain with believers always; the world will reject him (as it rejected Jesus)
14:26	He teaches and reminds the disciples of all Jesus said
15:26	The Father will send him to testify on behalf of Jesus
16:7-14	He will come only when Jesus leaves; he will convict the world; he will guide believers in the truth, will speak only what he hears, will declare things to come, and will glorify Jesus

Bring your fruitful branches to God for a blessing. They are blossoming because they have remained connected to the Source of Life. Both your barren and your fruitful branches can befriend you. [6]“I revealed your name* to those whom you gave me out of the world. They belonged to you, and you gave them to me, and they have kept your word. [7]Now they know that everything you gave me is from you, 8because the words you gave to me I have given to them, and they accepted them and truly understood that I came from you, and they have believed that you sent me. 9I pray for them. I do not pray for the world but for the ones you have given me, because they are yours,[e] 10and everything of mine is yours and everything of yours is mine, and I have been glorified in them.[f] 11And now I will no longer be in the world, but they are in the world, while I am coming to you. Holy Father, keep them in your name that you have given me, so that they may be one just as we are. 12When I was with them I protected them in your name that you gave me, and I guarded them, and none of them was lost except the son of destruction, in order that the scripture might be fulfilled.[g] 13But now I am coming to you. I speak this in the world so that they may share my joy completely.[h] 14I gave them your word, and the world hated them, because they do not belong to the world any more than I belong to the world.[i] 15*I do not ask that you take them out of the world[j] but that you keep them from the evil one. 16They do not belong to the world any more than I belong to the world. 17Consecrate them in the truth. Your word is truth.[k] 18As you sent me into the world, so I sent them into the world.[l] 19And I consecrate myself for them, so that they also may be consecrated in truth.

[3]So Judas got a band of soldiers* and guards from the chief priests and the Pharisees and went there with lanterns, torches, and weapons.[b] [4]Jesus, knowing everything that was going to happen to him, went out and said to them, “Whom are you looking for?” [5]They answered him, “Jesus the Nazorean.”* He said to them, “I AM.” Judas his betrayer was also with them. [6]When he said to them, “I AM,” they turned away and fell to the ground. [7]So he again asked them, “Whom are you looking for?” They said, “Jesus the Nazorean.” [8]Jesus answered, “I told you that I AM. So if you are looking for me, let these men go.” [9][c]This was to fulfill what he had said, “I have not lost any of those you gave me.” [10]Then Simon Peter, who had a sword, drew it, struck the high priest’s slave, and cut off his right ear. The slave’s name was Malchus. [11]Jesus said to Peter, “Put your sword into its scabbard. Shall I not drink the cup* that the Father gave me?”[d]

Peter’s First Denial[h]

[15]Simon Peter and another disciple[*] followed Jesus. Now the other disciple was known to the high priest, and he entered the courtyard of the high priest with Jesus. [16]But Peter stood at the gate outside. So the other disciple, the acquaintance of the high priest, went out and spoke to the gatekeeper and brought Peter in. [17]Then the maid who was the gatekeeper said to Peter, “You are not one of this man’s disciples, are you?” He said, “I am not.” [18]Now the slaves and the guards were standing around a charcoal fire that they had made, because it was cold, and were warming themselves. Peter was also standing there keeping warm.

They know what I said.” 22When he had said this, one of the temple guards standing there struck Jesus and said, “Is this the way you answer the high priest?”[k] 23Jesus answered him, “If I have spoken wrongly, testify to the wrong; but if I have spoken rightly, why do you strike me?” 24Then Annas sent him bound to Caiaphas* the high priest.[l]

Peter Denies Jesus Again[m]

[25]Now Simon Peter was standing there keeping warm. And they said to him, “You are not one of his disciples, are you?” He denied it and said, “I am not.” [26]One of the slaves of the high priest, a relative of the one whose ear Peter had cut off, said, “Didn’t I see you in the garden with him?” [27]Again Peter denied it. And immediately the cock crowed.*

28[n]Then they brought Jesus from Caiaphas to the praetorium.* It was morning. And they themselves did not enter the praetorium, in order not to be defiled so that they could eat the Passover. 29So Pilate came out to them and said, "What charge do you bring [against] this man?" 30They answered and said to him, "If he were not a criminal, we would not have handed him over to you." 31At this, Pilate said to them, "Take him yourselves, and judge him according to your law." The Jews answered him, "We do not have the right to execute anyone,"* 32*in order that the word of Jesus might be fulfilled that he said indicating the kind of death[o] he would die. 33So Pilate went back into the praetorium and summoned Jesus and said to him, "Are you the King of the Jews?" 34Jesus answered, "Do you say this on your own or have others told you about me?" 35Pilate answered, "I am not a Jew, am I? Your own nation and the chief priests handed you over to me. What have you done?"[p] 36Jesus answered, "My kingdom does not belong to this world. If my kingdom did belong to this world, my attendants [would] be fighting to keep me from being handed over to the Jews. But as it is, my kingdom is not here."[q] 37So Pilate said to him, "Then you are a king?" Jesus answered, "You say I am a king.* For this I was born and for this I came into the world, to testify to the truth. Everyone who belongs to the truth listens to my voice."[r] 38Pilate said to him, "What is truth?"[s]

On the praetorium, see the NAB footnote (at Mt 27:27).

When he had said this, he again went out to the Jews and said to them, “I find no guilt in him. [39]But you have a custom that I release one prisoner to you at Passover.* Do you want me to release to you the King of the Jews?” [40]They cried out again, “Not this one but Barabbas!”* Now Barabbas was a revolutionary.

In 1961 archaeologists discovered a unique fragmentary limestone inscription that mentions Pontius Pilate. The block was used by ancient construction workers for a secondary project, thus marring the original inscription. The words are the remnant of a dedication given to the Emperor Tiberius Caesar from Pilate, who was then prefect of the Roman province of Judea. The fragmentary lines still visible (in Latin capital letters) read:

……S TIBERIEVM = (Temple?) Tiberieum

……NTIVS PILATVS = (Po)ntius Pilate

……ECTVS IUDAE = (Pr)efect of Judea

[1][][a]Then Pilate took Jesus and had him scourged. [2]And the soldiers wove a crown out of thorns and placed it on his head, and clothed him in a purple cloak, [3]and they came to him and said, “Hail, King of the Jews!” And they struck him repeatedly. [4]Once more Pilate went out and said to them, “Look, I am bringing him out to you, so that you may know that I find no guilt in him.”[b] [5]So Jesus came out, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple cloak. And he said to them, “Behold, the man!”[c] [6]When the chief priests and the guards saw him they cried out, “Crucify him, crucify him!” Pilate said to them, “Take him yourselves and crucify him. I find no guilt in him.”[d] [7][]The Jews answered,[e] “We have a law, and according to that law he ought to die, because he made himself the Son of God.” [8]Now when Pilate heard this statement, he became even more afraid, [9]and went back into the praetorium and said to Jesus, “Where are you from?” Jesus did not answer him.[f] [10]So Pilate said to him, “Do you not speak to me? Do you not know that I have power to release you and I have power to crucify you?” [11]Jesus answered [him], “You would have no power over me if it had not been given to you from above. For this reason the one who handed me over to you has the greater sin.”[g] [12]Consequently, Pilate tried to release him; but the Jews cried out, “If you release him, you are not a Friend of Caesar.[*] Everyone who makes himself a king opposes Caesar.”[h]

[13]When Pilate heard these words he brought Jesus out and seated him[] on the judge’s bench in the place called Stone Pavement, in Hebrew, Gabbatha. [14]It was preparation day for Passover, and it was about noon.[] And he said to the Jews, “Behold, your king!” [15]They cried out, “Take him away, take him away! Crucify him!” Pilate said to them, “Shall I crucify your king?” The chief priests answered, “We have no king but Caesar.” [16]Then he handed him over to them to be crucified.*

[18]There they crucified him, and with him two others, one on either side, with Jesus in the middle. [19]*Pilate also had an inscription written and put on the cross. It read, "Jesus the Nazorean, the King of the Jews." [20]Now many of the Jews read this inscription, because the place where Jesus was crucified was near the city; and it was written in Hebrew, Latin, and Greek. [21]So the chief priests of the Jews said to Pilate, "Do not write 'The King of the Jews,' but that he said, 'I am the King of the Jews.'"j [22]Pilate answered, "What I have written, I have written."

John’s gospel never reveals the identity of the Beloved Disciple. Ancient tradition identifies him with John, son of Zebedee, and presumed author of the gospel. Regardless of the accuracy of this identification, the “one whom Jesus loved” was an important authority in the Johannine community and the source of authentic witness for the gospel. He also provides a model for the readers, since he is the one who regularly comes to faith and understanding prior to the other disciples of Jesus, including Peter.

So he came and took his body. 39Nicodemus, the one who had first come to him at night, also came bringing a mixture of myrrh and aloes weighing about one hundred pounds.[x] 40They took the body of Jesus and bound it with burial cloths along with the spices, according to the Jewish burial custom. 41Now in the place where he had been crucified there was a garden, and in the garden a new tomb, in which no one had yet been buried. 42So they laid Jesus there because of the Jewish preparation day; for the tomb was close by.

[13]And they said to her, “Woman, why are you weeping?” She said to them, “They have taken my Lord, and I don’t know where they laid him.” [14]When she had said this, she turned around and saw Jesus there, but did not know it was Jesus.[g] [15]Jesus said to her, “Woman, why are you weeping? Whom are you looking for?”[h] She thought it was the gardener and said to him, “Sir, if you carried him away, tell me where you laid him, and I will take him.” [16]Jesus said to her, “Mary!” She turned and said to him in Hebrew, “Rabbouni,”* which means Teacher. [17]Jesus said to her, “Stop holding on to me,* for I have not yet ascended to the Father. But go to my brothers and tell them, ‘I am going to my Father and your Father, to my God and your God.’”[i] [18]Mary of Magdala went and announced to the disciples, “I have seen the Lord,” and what he told her.

Mary Magdalene

Mary of Magdala, the proper form of her name (Jn 19:25; 20:1), is one of the most prominent women in the NT. She is exclusively identified with the death and resurrection of Jesus in both the synoptic and Johannine traditions of the gospels.

Little is actually known of her history. Magdala was a fishing town on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee. Luke refers to Mary as the woman out of whom Jesus drove seven demons (Jn 8:2; also Mk 16:9, a later ending to Mark’s gospel). She has been erroneously identified with the anonymous woman who anointed Jesus before his death (Mk 14:3-9; Mt 26:6-13), or the sinful woman who anointed Jesus in Simon the Pharisee’s house (Lk 7:36-50), or with the woman caught in adultery (Jn 8:3-11; a passage that is likely misplaced). Nothing in the NT, however, actually makes these identifications securely. There is no evidence that she was a prostitute. Most likely, she was a wealthy woman of independent means who became an important follower of Jesus (see Lk 8:3).

More important, the NT testifies to Mary's presence during the death and burial of Jesus (Mk 15:40, 47; Mt 27:56, 61). She is part of the group of faithful women who witnessed Jesus being placed in the tomb and who went out early on Easter morning, ostensibly to anoint the body of Jesus (Mk 16:1; Mt 28:1; Lk 24:1, 10). Indeed, she is often listed first among the women, perhaps hinting at her prominence. A secondary ending to Mark's gospel states explicitly that Mary Magdalene is the first to receive an appearance of the risen Lord (Mk 16:9-10), an extraordinary claim given the cultural limitations of women in first-century Jewish society. Women generally did not count as reliable witnesses. Thus, to name her the first witness to the risen Jesus is a bold move and most likely is rooted in the earliest Christian memory of the resurrection.

John's gospel bolsters this assertion. John recounts Mary's encounter with the risen Lord on Easter morning (Jn 20:11-18). It is a most poignant scene in which Mary, at first, does not recognize the Lord; she thinks he is the gardener who may have displaced the body of Jesus for some reason. Only when Jesus tenderly speaks her name "Mary" does she recognize him, in fulfillment of the model shepherd who calls each sheep by name (Jn 10:3). Remarkably, John also testifies to Mary's subsequent announcement of her encounter with the risen Jesus (Jn 20:18), prefiguring the evangelism of all the disciples. This action earned her the designation of "the apostle to the apostles."

Mary's alleged checkered past, dating from at least the time of Gregory the Great (sixth century A.D.), has made her an intriguing figure in history. Her story led to many bizarre tales, especially about a possible sexual or marital relationship with Jesus. This has been exploited in many stories, books, and films throughout history, but there is no evidence whatsoever for these tales, inside or outside of the NT. Most likely, such stories arose to discredit early Christian claims for the resurrection of Jesus.

Jesus came, although the doors were locked, and stood in their midst and said, “Peace be with you.”[p] [27]Then he said to Thomas, “Put your finger here and see my hands, and bring your hand and put it into my side, and do not be unbelieving, but believe.” [28]*[q]Thomas answered and said to him, “My Lord and my God!” [29]*Jesus said to him, “Have you come to believe because you have seen me?[r] Blessed are those who have not seen and have believed.”

“Peace be with you” is a profound greeting by the risen Lord to his disciples. The church has incorporated the greeting in the Mass when those assembled turn to one another and extend a sincere wish for shalom—the deep well-being and blessing that comes with life in Jesus. Bishops also use this greeting at the beginning of their Masses to extend Christ’s deep gift of well-being to the assembly.

“My Lord and my God”: Thomas’ words express the most profound assent of faith that can be given to Jesus as God’s Son and Savior of the world. Traditionally, Catholics were urged to say this exclamatory prayer whenever the consecrated host was elevated at Mass for the assembly to reverence.

21 [1]After this, Jesus revealed himself again to his disciples at the Sea of Tiberias. He revealed himself in this way.[a] [2]Together were Simon Peter, Thomas called Didymus, Nathanael from Cana in Galilee, Zebedee's sons, and two others of his disciples. [3]Simon Peter said to them, "I am going fishing." They said to him, "We also will come with you." So they went out and got into the boat, but that night they caught nothing.[b] [4]When it was already dawn, Jesus was standing on the shore; but the disciples did not realize that it was Jesus.[c] [5]Jesus said to them, "Children, have you caught anything to eat?" They answered him, "No."[d] [6]So he said to them, "Cast the net over the right side of the boat and you will find something." So they cast it, and were not able to pull it in because of the number of fish. [7]So the disciple whom Jesus loved said to Peter, "It is the Lord." When Simon Peter heard that it was the Lord, he tucked in his garment, for he was lightly clad, and jumped into the sea. [8]The other disciples came in the boat, for they were not far from shore, only about a hundred yards, dragging the net with the fish. [9][e]When they climbed out on shore, they saw a charcoal fire with fish on it and bread. [10]Jesus said to them, "Bring some of the fish you just caught." [11]So Simon Peter went over and dragged the net ashore full of one hundred fifty-three* large fish. Even though there were so many, the net was not torn.[f] [12]Jesus said to them, “Come, have breakfast.” And none of the disciples dared to ask him,* “Who are you?” because they realized it was the Lord. [13]Jesus came over and took the bread and gave it to them, and in like manner the fish.[g] [14]*This was now the third time[h] Jesus was revealed to his disciples after being raised from the dead.

To reaffirm a love for someone you once betrayed is a bittersweet joy, a tender heartache. Become Peter for a day. Try to feel both the angst and the love that Peter must have experienced with Jesus’ searing question, “Do you love me?” In his follow-up command, “feed my sheep,” Jesus implies that if you love him your automatic response will be to care for others.

15 When they had finished breakfast, Jesus said to Simon Peter,* "Simon, son of John, do you love me more than these?"* He said to him, "Yes, Lord, you know that I love you." He said to him, "Feed my lambs." 16 He then said to him a second time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?" He said to him, "Yes, Lord, you know that I love you." He said to him, "Tend my sheep." 17 He said to him the third time, "Simon, son of John, do you love me?" Peter was distressed that he had said to him a third time, "Do you love me?" and he said to him, "Lord, you know everything; you know that I love you." [Jesus] said to him, "Feed my sheep.[i] 18 *Amen, amen, I say to you,[j] when you were younger, you used to dress yourself and go where you wanted; but when you grow old, you will stretch out your hands, and someone else will dress you and lead you where you do not want to go." 19 He said this signifying by what kind of death he would glorify God. And when he had said this, he said to him, "Follow me."[k]

[20]Peter turned and saw the disciple following whom Jesus loved, the one who had also reclined upon his chest during the supper and had said, “Master, who is the one who will betray you?”[l] [21]When Peter saw him, he said to Jesus, “Lord, what about him?” [22]Jesus said to him, “What if I want him to remain until I come?* What concern is it of yours? You follow me.”[m] [23]*So the word spread among the brothers that that disciple would not die. But Jesus had not told him that he would not die, just “What if I want him to remain until I come? [What concern is it of yours?]”

[24]It is this disciple who testifies to these things and has written them,* and we know that his testimony is true.[n] [25]There are also many other things that Jesus did, but if these were to be described individually, I do not think the whole world would contain the books that would be written.[o]

1:1-18 The prologue states the main themes of the gospel: life, light, truth, the world, testimony, and the preexistence of Jesus Christ, the incarnate Logos, who reveals God the Father. In origin, it was probably an early Christian hymn. Its closest parallel is in other christological hymns, Colossians 1:15-20 and Philippians 2:6-11. Its core (1:1-5, 10-11, 14) is poetic in structure, with short phrases linked by "staircase parallelism," in which the last word of one phrase becomes the first word of the next. Prose inserts (at least 1:6-8, 15) deal with John the Baptist.

1:1 In the beginning: also the first words of the Old Testament (Gn 1:1). Was: this verb is used three times with different meanings in this verse: existence, relationship, and predication. The Word (Greek logos): this term combines God's dynamic, creative word (Genesis), personified preexistent Wisdom as the instrument of God's creative activity (Proverbs), and the ultimate intelligibility of reality (Hellenistic philosophy). With God: the Greek preposition here connotes communication with another. Was God: lack of a definite article with "God" in Greek signifies predication rather than identification.

1:3 What came to be: while the oldest manuscripts have no punctuation here, the corrector of Bodmer Papyrus P75, some manuscripts, and the Ante-Nicene Fathers take this phrase with what follows, as staircase parallelism. Connection with John 1:3 reflects fourth-century anti-Arianism.

1:5 The ethical dualism of light and darkness is paralleled in intertestamental literature and in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Overcome: "comprehend" is another possible translation, but cf. John 12:35; Wisdom 7:29-30.

1:6 John was sent just as Jesus was "sent" (4:34) in divine mission. Other references to John the Baptist in this gospel emphasize the differences between them and John's subordinate role.

1:7 Testimony: the testimony theme of John is introduced, which portrays Jesus as if on trial throughout his ministry. All testify to Jesus: John the Baptist, the Samaritan woman, scripture, his works, the crowds, the Spirit, and his disciples.

1:11 What was his own … his own people: first a neuter, literally, "his own property/possession" (probably = Israel), then a masculine, "his own people" (the Israelites).

1:13 Believers in Jesus become children of God not through any of the three natural causes mentioned but through God who is the immediate cause of the new spiritual life. Were born: the Greek verb can mean "begotten" (by a male) or "born" (from a female or of parents). The variant "he who was begotten," asserting Jesus' virginal conception, is weakly attested in Old Latin and Syriac versions.

1:14 Flesh: the whole person, used probably against docetic tendencies (cf. 1 Jn 4:2; 2 Jn 7). Made his dwelling: literally, "pitched his tent/tabernacle." Cf. the tabernacle or tent of meeting that was the place of God's presence among his people (Ex 25:8-9). The incarnate Word is the new mode of God's presence among his people. The Greek verb has the same consonants as the Aramaic word for God's presence (Shekinah). Glory: God's visible manifestation of majesty in power, which once filled the tabernacle (Ex 40:34) and the temple (1 Kgs 8:10-11, 27), is now centered in Jesus. Only Son: Greek, monogenēs, but see the note on John 1:18. Grace and truth: these words may represent two Old Testament terms describing Yahweh in covenant relationship with Israel (cf. Ex 34:6), thus God's "love" and "fidelity." The Word shares Yahweh's covenant qualities.

1:15 This verse, interrupting John 1:14, 16 seems drawn from John 1:30.

1:16 Grace in place of grace: replacement of the Old Covenant with the New (cf. 1:17). Other possible translations are "grace upon grace" (accumulation) and "grace for grace" (correspondence).

1:18 The only Son, God: while the vast majority of later textual witnesses have another reading, "the Son, the only one" or "the only Son," the translation above follows the best and earliest manuscripts, monogenēs theos, but takes the first term to mean not just "Only One" but to include a filial relationship with the Father, as at Luke 9:38 ("only child") or Hebrews 11:17 ("only son") and as translated at John 1:14. The Logos is thus "only Son" and God but not Father/God.

1:19-51 The testimony of John the Baptist about the Messiah and Jesus' self-revelation to the first disciples. This section constitutes the introduction to the gospel proper and is connected with the prose inserts in the prologue. It develops the major theme of testimony in four scenes: John's negative testimony about himself; his positive testimony about Jesus; the revelation of Jesus to Andrew and Peter; the revelation of Jesus to Philip and Nathanael.

1:19 The Jews: throughout most of the gospel, the "Jews" does not refer to the Jewish people as such but to the hostile authorities, both Pharisees and Sadducees, particularly in Jerusalem, who refuse to believe in Jesus. The usage reflects the atmosphere, at the end of the first century, of polemics between church and synagogue, or possibly it refers to Jews as representative of a hostile world (1:10-11).

1:20 Messiah: the anointed agent of Yahweh, usually considered to be of Davidic descent. See further the note on John 1:41.

1:21 Elijah: the Baptist did not claim to be Elijah returned to earth (cf. Mal 3:23; Mt 11:14). The Prophet: probably the prophet like Moses (Dt 18:15; cf. Acts 3:22).

1:23 This is a repunctuation and reinterpretation (as in the synoptic gospels and Septuagint) of the Hebrew text of Isaiah 40:3 which reads, "A voice cries out: In the desert prepare the way of the LORD."

1:24 Some Pharisees: other translations, such as "Now they had been sent from the Pharisees," misunderstand the grammatical construction. This is a different group from that in John 1:19; the priests and Levites would have been Sadducees, not Pharisees.

1:26 I baptize with water: the synoptics add "but he will baptize you with the holy Spirit" (Mk 1:8) or "… holy Spirit and fire" (Mt 3:11; Lk 3:16). John's emphasis is on purification and preparation for a better baptism.

1:28 Bethany across the Jordan: site unknown. Another reading is “Bethabara.”

1:29 The Lamb of God: the background for this title may be the victorious apocalyptic lamb who would destroy evil in the world (Rev 5–7; 17:14); the paschal lamb, whose blood saved Israel (Ex 12); and/or the suffering servant led like a lamb to the slaughter as a sin-offering (Is 53:7, 10).

1:30 He existed before me: possibly as Elijah (to come, 1:27); for the evangelist and his audience, Jesus’ preexistence would be implied (see the note on 1:1).

1:31 I did not know him: this gospel shows no knowledge of the tradition (Lk 1) about the kinship of Jesus and John the Baptist. The reason why I came baptizing with water: in this gospel, John’s baptism is not connected with forgiveness of sins; its purpose is revelatory, that Jesus may be made known to Israel.

1:32 Like a dove: a symbol of the new creation (Gn 8:8) or the community of Israel (Hos 11:11). Remain: the first use of a favorite verb in John, emphasizing the permanency of the relationship between Father and Son (as here) and between the Son and the Christian. Jesus is the permanent bearer of the Spirit.

1:34 The Son of God: this reading is supported by good Greek manuscripts, including the Chester Beatty and Bodmer Papyri and the Vatican Codex, but is suspect because it harmonizes this passage with the synoptic version: “This is my beloved Son” (Mt 3:17; Mk 1:11; Lk 3:22). The poorly attested alternate reading, “God’s chosen One,” is probably a reference to the Servant of Yahweh (Is 42:1).

1:36 John the Baptist’s testimony makes his disciples’ following of Jesus plausible.

1:37 The two disciples: Andrew (1:40) and, traditionally, John, son of Zebedee (see the note on 13:23).

1:39 Four in the afternoon: literally, the tenth hour, from sunrise, in the Roman calculation of time. Some suggest that the next day, beginning at sunset, was the sabbath; they would have stayed with Jesus to avoid travel on it.

1:41 Messiah: the Hebrew word māšîah, “anointed one” (see the note on Lk 2:11), appears in Greek as the transliterated messias only here and in John 4:25. Elsewhere the Greek translation christos is used.

1:42 Simon, the son of John: in Matthew 16:17, Simon is called Bariōna, “son of Jonah,” a different tradition for the name of Simon’s father. Cephas: in Aramaic = the Rock; cf. Matthew 16:18. Neither the Greek equivalent Petros nor, with one isolated exception, Kephas is attested as a personal name before Christian times.

1:43 He: grammatically, could be Peter, but logically is probably Jesus.

1:47 A true Israelite. There is no duplicity in him: Jacob was the first to bear the name “Israel” (Gn 32:29), but Jacob was a man of duplicity (Gn 27:35-36).

1:48 Under the fig tree: a symbol of messianic peace (cf. Mi 4:4; Zec 3:10).

1:49 Son of God: this title is used in the Old Testament, among other ways, as a title of adoption for the Davidic king (2 Sm 7:14; Pss 2:7; 89:27), and thus here, with King of Israel, in a messianic sense. For the evangelist, Son of God also points to Jesus’ divinity (cf. 20:28).

1:50 Possibly a statement: “You [singular] believe because I saw you under the fig tree.”

1:51 The double “Amen” is characteristic of John. You is plural in Greek. The allusion is to Jacob’s ladder (Gn 28:12).

2:1–6:71 Signs revealing Jesus as the Messiah to all Israel. “Sign” (sēmeion) is John’s symbolic term for Jesus’ wondrous deeds (see Introduction). The Old Testament background lies in the Exodus story (cf. Dt 11:3; 29:2). John is interested primarily in what the sēmeia signify: God’s intervention in human history in a new way through Jesus.

2:1-11 The first sign. This story of replacement of Jewish ceremonial washings (2:6) presents the initial revelation about Jesus at the outset of his ministry. He manifests his glory; the disciples believe. There is no synoptic parallel.

2:1 Cana: unknown from the Old Testament. The mother of Jesus: she is never named in John.

2:4 This verse may seek to show that Jesus did not work miracles to help his family and friends, as in the apocryphal gospels. Woman: a normal, polite form of address, but unattested in reference to one’s mother. Cf. also John 19:26. How does your concern affect me?: literally, “What is this to me and to you?”—a Hebrew expression of either hostility (Jgs 11:12; 2 Chr 35:21; 1 Kgs 17:18) or denial of common interest (Hos 14:9; 2 Kgs 3:13). Cf. Mark 1:24; 5:7, used by demons to Jesus. My hour has not yet come: the translation as a question (“Has not my hour now come?”), while preferable grammatically and supported by Greek Fathers, seems unlikely from a comparison with John 7:6, 30. The “hour” is that of Jesus’ passion, death, resurrection, and ascension (13:1).

2:6 Twenty to thirty gallons: literally, “two or three measures”; the Attic liquid measure contained 39.39 liters. The vast quantity recalls prophecies of abundance in the last days; cf. Amos 9:13-14; Hosea 14:7; Jeremiah 31:12.

2:8 Headwaiter: used of the official who managed a banquet, but there is no evidence of such a functionary in Palestine. Perhaps here a friend of the family acted as master of ceremonies; cf. Sirach 32:1.

2:11 The beginning of his signs: the first of seven (see Introduction).

2:12–3:21 The next three episodes take place in Jerusalem. Only the first is paralleled in the synoptic gospels.

2:12 This transitional verse may be a harmonization with the synoptic tradition in Luke 4:31 and Matthew 4:13. There are many textual variants. John depicts no extended ministry in Capernaum as do the synoptics.

2:13-22 This episode indicates the post-resurrectional replacement of the temple by the person of Jesus.

2:13 Passover: this is the first Passover mentioned in John; a second is mentioned in John 6:4; a third in John 13:1. Taken literally, they point to a ministry of at least two years.

2:14-22 The other gospels place the cleansing of the temple in the last days of Jesus’ life (Matthew, on the day Jesus entered Jerusalem; Mark, on the next day). The order of events in the gospel narratives is often determined by theological motives rather than by chronological data.

2:14 Oxen, sheep, and doves: intended for sacrifice. The doves were the offerings of the poor (Lv 5:7). Money-changers: for a temple tax paid by every male Jew more than nineteen years of age, with a half-shekel coin (Ex 30:11-16), in Tyrian currency. See the note on Matthew 17:24.

2:17 Psalm 69:10, changed to future tense to apply to Jesus.

2:19 This saying about the destruction of the temple occurs in various forms (Mt 24:2; 27:40; Mk 13:2; 15:29; Lk 21:6; cf. Acts 6:14). Matthew 26:61 has: “I can destroy the temple of God …”; see the note there. In Mark 14:58, there is a metaphorical contrast with a new temple: “I will destroy this temple made with hands and within three days I will build another not made with hands.” Here it is symbolic of Jesus’ resurrection and the resulting community (see 2:21 and Rev 21:2). In three days: an Old Testament expression for a short, indefinite period of time; cf. Hosea 6:2.

2:20 Forty-six years: based on references in Josephus (Jewish Wars 1:401; Antiquities 15:380), possibly the spring of A.D. 28. Cf. the note on Luke 3:1.

3:1-21 Jesus instructs Nicodemus on the necessity of a new birth from above. This scene in Jerusalem at Passover exemplifies the faith engendered by signs (2:23). It continues the self-manifestation of Jesus in Jerusalem begun in John 2. This is the first of the Johannine discourses, shifting from dialogue to monologue (3:11-15) to reflection of the evangelist (3:16-21). The shift from singular through John 3:10 to plural in John 3:11 may reflect the early church’s controversy with the Jews.

3:1 A ruler of the Jews: most likely a member of the Jewish council, the Sanhedrin; see the note on Mark 8:31.

3:3 Born: see the note on John 1:13. From above: the Greek adverb anōthen means both “from above” and “again.” Jesus means “from above” (see 3:31) but Nicodemus misunderstands it as “again.” This misunderstanding serves as a springboard for further instruction.

3:8 Wind: the Greek word pneuma (as well as the Hebrew rûah) means both “wind” and “spirit.” In the play on the double meaning, “wind” is primary.

3:14 Lifted up: in Numbers 21:9, Moses simply “mounted” a serpent upon a pole. John here substitutes a verb implying glorification. Jesus, exalted to glory at his cross and resurrection, represents healing for all.

3:15 Eternal life: used here for the first time in John, this term stresses quality of life rather than duration.

3:16 Gave: as a gift in the incarnation, and also “over to death” in the crucifixion; cf. Romans 8:32.

3:17-19 Condemn: the Greek root means both judgment and condemnation. Jesus’ purpose is to save, but his coming provokes judgment; some condemn themselves by turning from the light.

3:19 Judgment is not only future but is partially realized here and now.

3:22-26 Jesus’ ministry in Judea is only loosely connected with John 2:13–3:21; cf. John 1:19-36. Perhaps John the Baptist’s further testimony was transposed here to give meaning to “water” in John 3:5. Jesus is depicted as baptizing (3:22); contrast John 4:2.

3:23 Aenon near Salim: site uncertain, either in the upper Jordan valley or in Samaria.

3:24 A remark probably intended to avoid objections based on a chronology like that of the synoptics (Mt 4:12; Mk 1:14).

3:25 A Jew: some think Jesus is meant. Many manuscripts read “Jews.”

3:29 The best man: literally, “the friend of the groom,” the shoshben of Jewish tradition, who arranged the wedding. Competition between him and the groom would be unthinkable.

3:31-36 It is uncertain whether these are words by the Baptist, Jesus, or the evangelist. They are reflections on the two preceding scenes.

3:34 His gift: of God or to Jesus, perhaps both. This verse echoes John 3:5, 8.

4:1-42 Jesus in Samaria. The self-revelation of Jesus continues with his second discourse, on his mission to “half-Jews.” It continues the theme of replacement, here with regard to cult (4:21). Water (4:7-15) serves as a symbol (as at Cana and in the Nicodemus episode).

4:2 An editorial refinement of John 3:22, perhaps directed against followers of John the Baptist who claimed that Jesus imitated him.

4:4 He had to: a theological necessity; geographically, Jews often bypassed Samaria by taking a route across the Jordan.

4:5 Sychar: Jerome identifies this with Shechem, a reading found in Syriac manuscripts.

4:9 Samaritan women were regarded by Jews as ritually impure, and therefore Jews were forbidden to drink from any vessel they had handled.

4:10 Living water: the water of life, i.e., the revelation that Jesus brings; the woman thinks of “flowing water,” so much more desirable than stagnant well water. On John’s device of such misunderstanding, cf. the note on John 3:3.

4:11 Sir: the Greek kyrios means “master” or “lord,” as a respectful mode of address for a human being or a deity; cf. John 4:19. It is also the word used in the Septuagint for the Hebrew ʾ*aˇdônai*, substituted for the tetragrammaton YHWH.

4:20 This mountain: Gerizim, on which a temple was erected in the fourth century B.C. by Samaritans to rival Mount Zion in Jerusalem; cf. Deuteronomy 27:4 (Mount Ebal = the Jews’ term for Gerizim).

4:23 In Spirit and truth: not a reference to an interior worship within one’s own spirit. The Spirit is the spirit given by God that reveals truth and enables one to worship God appropriately (14:16-17). Cf. “born of water and Spirit” (3:5).

4:25 The expectations of the Samaritans are expressed here in Jewish terminology. They did not expect a messianic king of the house of David but a prophet like Moses (Dt 18:15).

4:26 I am he: it could also be translated “I am,” an Old Testament self-designation of Yahweh (Is 43:3, etc.); cf. John 6:20; 8:24, 28, 58; 13:19; 18:5-6, 8. See the note on Mark 6:50.

4:27 Talking with a woman: a religious and social restriction that Jesus is pictured treating as unimportant.

4:35 ‘In four months …’: probably a proverb; cf. Matthew 9:37-38.

4:36 Already: this word may go with the preceding verse rather than with John 4:36.

4:39 The woman is presented as a missionary, described in virtually the same words as the disciples are in Jesus’ prayer (17:20).

4:43-54 Jesus’ arrival in Cana in Galilee; the second sign. This section introduces another theme, that of the life-giving word of Jesus. It is explicitly linked to the first sign (2:11). The royal official believes (4:50). The natural life given his son is a sign of eternal life.

4:44 Probably a reminiscence of a tradition as in Mark 6:4. Cf. Gospel of Thomas 31: “No prophet is acceptable in his village, no physician heals those who know him.”

4:46-54 The story of the cure of the royal official’s son may be a third version of the cure of the centurion's son (Mt 8:5-13) or servant (Lk 7:1-10). Cf. also Matthew 15:21-28; Mark 7:24-30.

5:1-47 The self-revelation of Jesus continues in Jerusalem at a feast. The third sign (cf. 2:11; 4:54) is performed, the cure of a paralytic by Jesus' life-giving word. The water of the pool fails to bring life; Jesus' word does.

5:1 The reference in John 5:45-46 to Moses suggests that the feast was Pentecost. The connection of that feast with the giving of the law to Moses on Sinai, attested in later Judaism, may already have been made in the first century. The feast could also be Passover (cf. 6:4). John stresses that the day was a sabbath (5:9).

5:2 There is no noun with Sheep. "Gate" is supplied on the grounds that there must have been a gate in the NE wall of the temple area where animals for sacrifice were brought in; cf. Nehemiah 3:1, 32; 12:39. Hebrew: more precisely, Aramaic. Bethesda: preferred to variants "Be(th)zatha" and "Bethsaida"; bêt-ʾešdatayīn is given as the name of a double pool northeast of the temple area in the Qumran Copper Roll. Five porticoes: a pool excavated in Jerusalem actually has five porticoes.

5:3 The Caesarean and Western recensions, followed by the Vulgate, add "waiting for the movement of the water." Apparently an intermittent spring in the pool bubbled up occasionally (see 5:7). This turbulence was believed to cure.

5:4 Toward the end of the second century in the West and among the fourth-century Greek Fathers, an additional verse was known: "For [from time to time] an angel of the Lord used to come down into the pool; and the water was stirred up, so the first one to get in [after the stirring of the water] was healed of whatever disease afflicted him." The angel was a popular explanation of the turbulence and the healing powers attributed to it. This verse is missing from all early Greek manuscripts and the earliest versions, including the original Vulgate. Its vocabulary is markedly non-Johannine.

5:14 While the cure of the paralytic in Mark 2:1-12 is associated with the forgiveness of sins, Jesus never drew a one-to-one connection between sin and suffering (cf. 9:3; Lk 12:1-5), as did Ezekiel 18:20.

5:17 Sabbath observance (Jn 5:10) was based on God's resting on the seventh day (cf. Gn 2:2-3; Ex 20:11). Philo and some rabbis insisted that God's providence remains active on the sabbath, keeping all things in existence, giving life in birth and taking it away in death. Other rabbis taught that God rested from creating, but not from judging (= ruling, governing). Jesus here claims the same authority to work as the Father, and, in the discourse that follows, the same divine prerogatives: power over life and death (5:21, 24-26) and judgment (5:22, 27).

5:19 This proverb or parable is taken from apprenticeship in a trade: the activity of a son is modeled on that of his father. Jesus' dependence on the Father is justification for doing what the Father does.

5:21 Gives life: in the Old Testament, a divine prerogative (Dt 32:39; 1 Sm 2:6; 2 Kgs 5:7; Tb 13:2; Is 26:19; Dn 12:2).

5:22 Judgment: another divine prerogative, often expressed as acquittal or condemnation (Dt 32:36; Ps 43:1).

5:28-29 While John 5:19-27 present realized eschatology, John 5:28-29 are future eschatology; cf. Daniel 12:2.

5:32 Another: likely the Father, who in four different ways gives testimony to Jesus, as indicated in the verse groupings John 5:33-34, 36, 37-38, 39-40.

5:35 Lamp: cf. Psalm 132:17—"I will place a lamp for my anointed (= David)," and possibly the description of Elijah in Sirach 48:1. But only for a while, indicating the temporary and subordinate nature of John's mission.

5:39 You search: this may be an imperative: "Search the scriptures, because you think that you have eternal life through them."

5:41 Praise: the same Greek word means "praise" or "honor" (from others) and "glory" (from God). There is a play on this in John 5:44.

6:1-15 This story of the multiplication of the loaves is the fourth sign (cf. the note on 5:1-47). It is the only miracle story found in all four gospels (occurring twice in Mark and Matthew). See the notes on Matthew 14:13-21; 15:32-39. John differs on the roles of Philip and Andrew, the proximity of Passover (6:4), and the allusion to Elisha (see 6:9). The story here symbolizes the food that is really available through Jesus. It connotes a new exodus and has eucharistic overtones.

6:1 [Of Tiberias]: the awkward apposition represents a later name of the Sea of Galilee. It was probably originally a marginal gloss.

6:5 Jesus takes the initiative (in the synoptics, the disciples do), possibly pictured as (cf. 6:14) the new Moses (cf. Nm 11:13).

6:6 Probably the evangelist's comment; in this gospel Jesus is never portrayed as ignorant of anything.

6:7 Days' wages: literally, "denarii"; a Roman denarius is a day's wage in Matthew 20:2.

6:9 Barley loaves: the food of the poor. There seems an allusion to the story of Elisha multiplying the barley bread in 2 Kings 4:42-44.

6:10 Grass: implies springtime, and therefore Passover. Five thousand: so Mark 6:39, 44 and parallels.

6:13 Baskets: the word describes the typically Palestinian wicker basket, as in Mark 6:43 and parallels.

6:14 The Prophet: probably the prophet like Moses (see the note on 1:21). The one who is to come into the world: probably Elijah; cf. Malachi 3:1, 23.

6:16-21 The fifth sign is a nature miracle, portraying Jesus sharing Yahweh's power. Cf. the parallel stories following the multiplication of the loaves in Mark 6:45-52 and Matthew 14:22-33.

6:19 Walking on the sea: although the Greek (cf. 6:16) could mean "on the seashore" or "by the sea" (cf. 21:1), the parallels, especially Matthew 14:25, make clear that Jesus walked upon the water. John may allude to Job 9:8: God "treads upon the crests of the sea."

6:20 It is I: literally, "I am." See also the notes on John 4:26 and Mark 6:50.

6:22-71 Discourse on the bread of life; replacement of the manna. John 6:22-34 serve as an introduction, John 6:35-59 constitute the discourse proper, John 6:60-71 portray the reaction of the disciples and Peter's confession.

6:23 Possibly a later interpolation, to explain how the crowd got to Capernaum.

6:27 The food that endures for eternal life: cf. John 4:14, on water "springing up to eternal life."

6:31 Bread from heaven: cf. Exodus 16:4, 15, 32-34 and the notes there; Psalm 78:24. The manna, thought to have been hidden by Jeremiah (2 Mc 2:5-8), was expected to reappear miraculously at Passover, in the last days.

6:35-59 Up to John 6:50, “bread of life” is a figure for God’s revelation in Jesus; in John 6:51-58, the eucharistic theme comes to the fore. There may thus be a break between John 6:50 and 51.

6:43 Murmuring: the word may reflect the Greek of Exodus 16:2, 7-8.

6:54-58 Eats: the verb used in these verses is not the classical Greek verb used of human eating, but that of animal eating: “munch,” “gnaw.” This may be part of John’s emphasis on the reality of the flesh and blood of Jesus (cf. 6:55), but the same verb eventually became the ordinary verb in Greek meaning “eat.”

6:60-71 These verses refer more to themes of John 6:35-50 than to those of John 6:51-58 and seem to be addressed to members of the Johannine community who found it difficult to accept the high christology reflected in the bread of life discourse.

6:62 This unfinished conditional sentence is obscure. Probably there is a reference to John 6:49-51. Jesus claims to be the bread that comes down from heaven (6:50); this claim provokes incredulity (6:60); and so Jesus is pictured as asking what his disciples will say when he goes up to heaven.

6:63 Spirit … flesh: probably not a reference to the eucharistic body of Jesus but to the supernatural and the natural, as in John 3:6. Spirit and life: all Jesus said about the bread of life is the revelation of the Spirit.

7-8 These chapters contain events about the feast of Tabernacles (Sukkoth, Ingathering: Ex 23:16; Tents, Booths: Dt 16:13-16), with its symbols of booths (originally built to shelter harvesters), rain (water from Siloam poured on the temple altar), and lights (illumination of the four torches in the Court of the Women). They continue the theme of the replacement of feasts (Passover, 2:13; 6:4; Hanukkah, 10:22; Pentecost, 5:1), here accomplished by Jesus as the Living Water. These chapters comprise seven miscellaneous controversies and dialogues. There is a literary inclusion with Jesus in hiding in John 7:4, 10; 8:59. There are frequent references to attempts on his life: John 7:1, 13, 19, 25, 30, 32, 44; 8:37, 40, 59.

7:3 Brothers: these relatives (cf. 2:12 and see the note on Mk 6:3) are never portrayed as disciples until after the resurrection (Acts 1:14). Matthew 13:55 and Mark 6:3 give the names of four of them. Jesus has already performed works/signs in Judea; cf. John 2:23; 3:2; 4:45; 5:8.

7:6 Time: the Greek word means “opportune time,” here a synonym for Jesus’ “hour” (see the note on 2:4), his death and resurrection. In the wordplay, any time is suitable for Jesus’ brothers, because they are not dependent on God’s will.

7:8 I am not going up: an early attested reading “not yet” seems a correction, since Jesus in the story does go up to the feast. “Go up,” in a play on words, refers not only to going up to Jerusalem but also to exaltation at the cross, resurrection, and ascension; cf. John 3:14; 6:62; 20:17.

7:14-31 Jesus teaches in the temple; debate with the Jews.

7:15 Without having studied: literally, “How does he know letters without having learned?” Children were taught to read and write by means of the scriptures. But here more than Jesus’ literacy is being discussed; the people are wondering how he can teach like a rabbi. Rabbis were trained by other rabbis and traditionally quoted their teachers.

7:17 To do his will: presumably a reference back to the “work” of John 6:29: belief in the one whom God has sent.

7:20 You are possessed: literally, “You have a demon.” The insane were thought to be possessed by a demoniacal spirit.

7:21 One work: the cure of the paralytic (5:1-9) because of the reference to the sabbath (7:22; 5:9-10).

7:26 The authorities: the members of the Sanhedrin (same term as 3:1).

7:32-36 Jesus announces his approaching departure (cf. also 8:21; 12:36; 13:33) and complete control over his destiny.

7:35 Dispersion: or "diaspora": Jews living outside Palestine. Greeks: probably refers to the Gentiles in the Mediterranean area; cf. John 12:20.

7:37-39 Promise of living water through the Spirit.

7:38 Living water: not an exact quotation from any Old Testament passage; in the gospel context the gift of the Spirit is meant; cf. John 3:5. From within him: either Jesus or the believer; if Jesus, it continues the Jesus-Moses motif (water from the rock, Ex 17:6; Nm 20:11) as well as Jesus as the new temple (cf. Ez 47:1). Grammatically, it goes better with the believer.

7:39 No Spirit yet: Codex Vaticanus and early Latin, Syriac, and Coptic versions add "given." In this gospel, the sending of the Spirit cannot take place until Jesus' glorification through his death, resurrection, and ascension; cf. John 20:22.

7:40-53 Discussion of the Davidic lineage of the Messiah.

7:53–8:11 The story of the woman caught in adultery is a later insertion here, missing from all early Greek manuscripts. A Western text-type insertion, attested mainly in Old Latin translations, it is found in different places in different manuscripts: here, or after John 7:36, or at the end of this gospel, or after Luke 21:38, or at the end of that gospel. There are many non-Johannine features in the language, and there are also many doubtful readings within the passage. The style and motifs are similar to those of Luke, and it fits better with the general situation at the end of Luke 21, but it was probably inserted here because of the allusion to Jeremiah 17:13 (cf. the note on 8:6) and the statement, "I do not judge anyone," in John 8:15. The Catholic Church accepts this passage as canonical scripture.

8:1 Mount of Olives: not mentioned elsewhere in the gospel tradition outside of passion week.

8:5 Leviticus 20:10 and Deuteronomy 22:22 mention only death, but Deuteronomy 22:23-24 prescribes stoning for a betrothed virgin.

8:6 Cf. Jeremiah 17:13 (RSV): "Those who turn away from thee shall be written in the earth, for they have forsaken the LORD, the fountain of living water"; cf. John 7:38.

8:7 The first stones were to be thrown by the witnesses (Dt 17:7).

8:12-20 Jesus the light of the world. Jesus replaces the four torches of the illumination of the temple as the light of joy.

8:14 My testimony can be verified: this seems to contradict John 5:31, but the emphasis here is on Jesus' origin from the Father and his divine destiny. Where I am going: indicates Jesus' passion and glorification.

8:15 By appearances: literally, "according to the flesh." I do not judge anyone: superficial contradiction of John 5:22, 27, 30; here the emphasis is that the judgment is not by material standards.

8:17 Your law: a reflection of later controversy between church and synagogue.

8:21-30 He whose ambassador I am is with me. Jesus' origin is from God; he can reveal God.

8:21 You will die in your sin: i.e., of disbelief; cf. John 8:24. Where I am going you cannot come: except through faith in Jesus’ passion-resurrection.

8:22 The Jews suspect that he is referring to his death. Johannine irony is apparent here; Jesus’ death will not be self-inflicted but destined by God.

8:24, 28 I AM: an expression that late Jewish tradition understood as Yahweh’s own self-designation (Is 43:10); see the note on John 4:26. Jesus is here placed on a par with Yahweh.

8:25 What I told you from the beginning: this verse seems textually corrupt, with several other possible translations: “(I am) what I say to you”; “Why do I speak to you at all?” The earliest attested reading (Bodmer Papyrus P66) has (in a second hand), “I told you at the beginning what I am also telling you (now).” The answer here (cf. Prv 8:22) seems to hinge on a misunderstanding of John 8:24 “that I AM” as “what I am.”

8:31-59 Jesus’ origin (“before Abraham”) and destiny are developed; the truth will free them from sin (8:34) and death (8:51).

8:31 Those Jews who believed in him: a rough editorial suture, since in John 8:37 they are described as trying to kill Jesus.

8:33 Have never been enslaved to anyone: since, historically, the Jews were enslaved almost continuously, this verse is probably Johannine irony, about slavery to sin.

8:35 A slave … a son: an allusion to Ishmael and Isaac (Gn 16; 21), or to the release of a slave after six years (Ex 21:2; Dt 15:12).

8:38 The Father: i.e., God. It is also possible, however, to understand the second part of the verse as a sarcastic reference to descent of the Jews from the devil (8:44), “You do what you have heard from [your] father.”

8:39 The works of Abraham: Abraham believed; cf. Romans 4:11-17; James 2:21-23.

8:48 Samaritan: therefore interested in magical powers; cf. Acts 7:14-24.

8:53 Are you greater than our father Abraham?: cf. John 4:12.

8:56 He saw it: this seems a reference to the birth of Isaac (Gn 17:7; 21:6), the beginning of the fulfillment of promises about Abraham’s seed.

8:57 The evidence of the third-century Bodmer Papyrus P75 and the first hand of Codex Sinaiticus indicates that the text originally read: “How can Abraham have seen you?”

8:58 Came to be, I AM: the Greek word used for “came to be” is the one used of all creation in the prologue, while the word used for “am” is the one reserved for the Logos.

9:1–10:21 Sabbath healing of the man born blind. This sixth sign is introduced to illustrate the saying, “I am the light of the world” (8:12; 9:5). The narrative of conflict about Jesus contrasts Jesus (light) with the Jews (blindness, 9:39-41). The theme of water is reintroduced in the reference to the pool of Siloam. Ironically, Jesus is being judged by the Jews, yet the Jews are judged by the Light of the world; cf. John 3:19-21.

9:2 See the note on John 5:14, and Exodus 20:5, that parents’ sins were visited upon their children. Jesus denies such a cause and emphasizes the purpose: the infirmity was providential.

9:7 Go wash: perhaps a test of faith; cf. 2 Kings 5:10-14. The water tunnel Siloam (= Sent) is used as a symbol of Jesus, sent by his Father.

9:14 In using spittle, kneading clay, and healing, Jesus had broken the sabbath rules laid down by Jewish tradition.

9:22 This comment of the evangelist (in terms used again in 12:42 and 16:2) envisages a situation after Jesus' ministry. Rejection/excommunication from the synagogue of Jews who confessed Jesus as Messiah seems to have begun ca. A.D. 85, when the curse against the mînîm or heretics was introduced into the "Eighteen Benedictions."

9:24 Give God the praise!: an Old Testament formula of adjuration to tell the truth; cf. Joshua 7:19; 1 Samuel 6:5 LXX. Cf. John 5:41.

9:32 A person born blind: the only Old Testament cure from blindness is found in Tobit (cf. Tb 7:7; 11:7-13; 14:1-2), but Tobit was not born blind.

9:39-41 These verses spell out the symbolic meaning of the cure; the Pharisees are not the innocent blind, willing to accept the testimony of others.

10:1-21 The good shepherd discourse continues the theme of attack on the Pharisees that ends John 9. The figure is allegorical: the hired hands are the Pharisees who excommunicated the cured blind man. It serves as a commentary on John 9. For the shepherd motif, used of Yahweh in the Old Testament, cf. Exodus 34; Genesis 48:15; 49:24; Micah 7:14; Psalms 23:1-4; 80:1.

10:1 Sheepfold: a low stone wall open to the sky.

10:4 Recognize his voice: the Pharisees do not recognize Jesus, but the people of God, symbolized by the blind man, do.

10:6 Figure of speech: John uses a different word for illustrative speech than the "parable" of the synoptics, but the idea is similar.

10:7-10 In John 10:7-8, the figure is of a gate for the shepherd to come to the sheep; in John 10:9-10, the figure is of a gate for the sheep to come in and go out.

10:8 [Before me]: these words are omitted in many good early manuscripts and versions.

10:16 Other sheep: the Gentiles, possibly a reference to "God's dispersed children" of John 11:52 destined to be gathered into one, or "apostolic Christians" at odds with the community of the beloved disciple.

10:18 Power to take it up again: contrast the role of the Father as the efficient cause of the resurrection in Acts 2:24; 4:10; etc.; Romans 1:4; 4:24. Yet even here is added: This command I have received from my Father.

10:22 Feast of the Dedication: an eight-day festival of lights (Hebrew, Hanukkah) held in December, three months after the feast of Tabernacles (7:2), to celebrate the Maccabees' rededication of the altar and reconsecration of the temple in 164 B.C., after their desecration by Antiochus IV Epiphanes (Dn 8:13; 9:27; cf. 1 Mc 4:36-59; 2 Mc 1:18–2:19; 10:1-8).

10:23 Portico of Solomon: on the east side of the temple area, offering protection against the cold winds from the desert.

10:24 Keep us in suspense: literally, "How long will you take away our life?" Cf. John 11:48-50. If you are the Messiah, tell us plainly: cf. Luke 22:67. This is the climax of Jesus' encounters with the Jewish authorities. There has never yet been an open confession before them.

10:25 I told you: probably at John 8:25 which was an evasive answer.

10:29 The textual evidence for the first clause is very divided; it may also be translated: "As for the Father, what he has given me is greater than all," or "My Father is greater than all, in what he has given me."

10:30 This is justification for John 10:29; it asserts unity of power and reveals that the words and deeds of Jesus are the words and deeds of God.

10:34 This is a reference to the judges of Israel who, since they exercised the divine prerogative to judge (Dt 1:17), were called "gods"; cf. Exodus 21:6, besides Psalm 82:6, from which the quotation comes.

10:36 Consecrated: this may be a reference to the rededicated altar at the Hanukkah feast; see the note on John 10:22.

10:41 Performed no sign: this is to stress the inferior role of John the Baptist. The Transjordan topography recalls the great witness of John the Baptist to Jesus, as opposed to the hostility of the authorities in Jerusalem.

11:1-44 The raising of Lazarus, the longest continuous narrative in John outside of the passion account, is the climax of the signs. It leads directly to the decision of the Sanhedrin to kill Jesus. The theme of life predominates. Lazarus is a token of the real life that Jesus dead and raised will give to all who believe in him. Johannine irony is found in the fact that Jesus' gift of life leads to his own death. The story is not found in the synoptics, but cf. Mark 5:21 and parallels; Luke 7:11-17. There are also parallels between this story and Luke's parable of the rich man and poor Lazarus (Lk 16:19-31). In both a man named Lazarus dies; in Luke, there is a request that he return to convince his contemporaries of the need for faith and repentance, while in John, Lazarus does return and some believe but others do not.

11:4 Not to end in death: this is misunderstood by the disciples as referring to physical death, but it is meant as spiritual death.

11:10 The light is not in him: the ancients apparently did not grasp clearly the entry of light through the eye; they seem to have thought of it as being in the eye; cf. Luke 11:34; Matthew 6:23.

11:16 Called Didymus: Didymus is the Greek word for twin. Thomas is derived from the Aramaic word for twin; in an ancient Syriac version and in the Gospel of Thomas (80:11-12) his given name, Judas, is supplied.

11:18 About two miles: literally, "about fifteen stades"; a stade was 607 feet.

11:27 The titles here are a summary of titles given to Jesus earlier in the gospel.

11:33 Became perturbed: a startling phrase in Greek, literally, "He snorted in spirit," perhaps in anger at the presence of evil (death).

11:41 Father: in Aramaic, ʾabbāʾ. See the note on Mark 14:36.

11:43 Cried out in a loud voice: a dramatization of John 5:28; "the hour is coming when all who are in the tombs will hear his voice."

11:48 The Romans will come: Johannine irony; this is precisely what happened after Jesus' death.

11:49 That year: emphasizes the conjunction of the office and the year. Actually, Caiaphas was high priest A.D. 18–36. The Jews attributed a gift of prophecy, sometimes unconscious, to the high priest.

11:52 Dispersed children of God: perhaps the "other sheep" of John 10:16.

11:54 Ephraim is usually located about twelve miles northeast of Jerusalem, where the mountains descend into the Jordan valley.

11:55 Purify: prescriptions for purity were based on Exodus 19:10-11, 15; Numbers 9:6-14; 2 Chronicles 30:1-3, 15-18.

12:1-8 This is probably the same scene of anointing found in Mark 14:3-9 (see the note there) and Matthew 26:6-13. The anointing by a penitent woman in Luke 7:36-38 is different. Details from these various episodes have become interchanged.

12:3 The feet of Jesus: so Mark 14:3; but in Matthew 26:6, Mary anoints Jesus' head as a sign of regal, messianic anointing.

12:5 Days' wages: literally, "denarii." A denarius is a day's wage in Matthew 20:2; see the note on John 6:7.

12:7 Jesus' response reflects the rabbinical discussion of what was the greatest act of mercy, almsgiving or burying the dead. Those who favored proper burial of the dead thought it an essential condition for sharing in the resurrection.

12:12-19 In John, the entry into Jerusalem follows the anointing whereas in the synoptics it precedes. In John, the crowd, not the disciples, are responsible for the triumphal procession.

12:13 Palm branches: used to welcome great conquerors; cf. 1 Maccabees 13:51; 2 Maccabees 10:7. They may be related to the lûlāb, the twig bundles used at the feast of Tabernacles. Hosanna: see Psalm 118:25-26. The Hebrew word means: "(O Lord), grant salvation." He who comes in the name of the Lord: referred in Psalm 118:26 to a pilgrim entering the temple gates, but here a title for Jesus (see the notes on Mt 11:3 and Jn 6:14; 11:27). The king of Israel: perhaps from Zephaniah 3:14-15, in connection with the next quotation from Zechariah 9:9.

12:15 Daughter Zion: Jerusalem. Ass's colt: symbol of peace, as opposed to the war horse.

12:16 They had done this: the antecedent of they is ambiguous.

12:17-18 There seem to be two different crowds in these verses. There are some good witnesses to the text that have another reading for John 12:17: "Then the crowd that was with him began to testify that he had called Lazarus out of the tomb and raised him from the dead."

12:19 The whole world: the sense is that everyone is following Jesus, but John has an ironic play on world; he alludes to the universality of salvation (3:17; 4:42).

12:20-36 This announcement of glorification by death is an illustration of "the whole world" (Jn 12:19) going after him.

12:20 Greeks: not used here in a nationalistic sense. These are probably Gentile proselytes to Judaism; cf. John 7:35.

12:21-22 Philip … Andrew: the approach is made through disciples who have distinctly Greek names, suggesting that access to Jesus was mediated to the Greek world through his disciples. Philip and Andrew were from Bethsaida (1:44); Galileans were mostly bilingual. See: here seems to mean "have an interview with."

12:23 Jesus' response suggests that only after the crucifixion could the gospel encompass both Jew and Gentile.

12:24 This verse implies that through his death Jesus will be accessible to all. It remains just a grain of wheat: this saying is found in the synoptic triple and double traditions (Mk 8:35 // Mt 16:25 // Lk 9:24; Mt 10:39 // Lk 17:33). John adds the phrases (12:25) in this world and for eternal life.

12:25 His life: the Greek word psychē refers to a person's natural life. It does not mean "soul," for Hebrew anthropology did not postulate body/soul dualism in the way that is familiar to us.

12:27 I am troubled: perhaps an allusion to the Gethsemane agony scene of the synoptics.

12:31 Ruler of this world: Satan.

12:34 There is no passage in the Old Testament that states precisely that the Messiah remains forever. Perhaps the closest is Psalm 89:37.

12:37-50 These verses, on unbelief of the Jews, provide an epilogue to the Book of Signs.

12:38-41 John gives a historical explanation of the disbelief of the Jewish people, not a psychological one. The Old Testament had to be fulfilled; the disbelief that met Isaiah's message was a foreshadowing of the disbelief that Jesus encountered. In John 12:42 and also in John 3:20 we see that there is no negation of freedom.

12:41 His glory: Isaiah saw the glory of Yahweh enthroned in the heavenly temple, but in John the antecedent of his is Jesus.

13:1–19:42 The Book of Glory. There is a major break here; the word "sign" is used again only in John 20:30. In this phase of Jesus' return to the Father, the discourses (13–17) precede the traditional narrative of the passion (18–20) to interpret them for the Christian reader. This is the only extended example of esoteric teaching of disciples in John.

13:1-20 Washing of the disciples' feet. This episode occurs in John at the place of the narration of the institution of the Eucharist in the synoptics. It may be a dramatization of Luke 22:27—"I am your servant." It is presented as a "model" ("pattern") of the crucifixion. It symbolizes cleansing from sin by sacrificial death.

13:1 Before the feast of Passover: this would be Thursday evening, before the day of preparation; in the synoptics, the Last Supper is a Passover meal taking place, in John's chronology, on Friday evening. To the end: or, "completely."

13:2 Induced: literally, "The devil put into the heart that Judas should hand him over."

13:5 The act of washing another's feet was one that could not be required of the lowliest Jewish slave. It is an allusion to the humiliating death of the crucifixion.

13:10 Bathed: many have suggested that this passage is a symbolic reference to baptism. The Greek root involved is used in baptismal contexts in 1 Corinthians 6:11; Ephesians 5:26; Titus 3:5; Hebrews 10:22.

13:16 Messenger: the Greek has apostolos, the only occurrence of the term in John. It is not used in the technical sense here.

13:23 The one whom Jesus loved: also mentioned in John 19:26; 20:2; 21:7. A disciple, called "another disciple" or "the other disciple," is mentioned in John 18:15 and 20:2; in the latter reference he is identified with the disciple whom Jesus loved. There is also an unnamed disciple in John 1:35-40; see the note on John 1:37.

13:26 Morsel: probably the bitter herb dipped in salt water.

13:31–17:26 Two farewell discourses and a prayer. These seem to be Johannine compositions, including sayings of Jesus at the Last Supper and on other occasions, modeled on similar farewell discourses in Greek literature and the Old Testament (of Moses, Joshua, David).

13:31-38 Introduction: departure and return. Terms of coming and going predominate. These verses form an introduction to the last discourse of Jesus, which extends through John 14–17. In it John has collected Jesus' words to his own (13:1). There are indications that several speeches have been fused together, e.g., in John 14:31 and 17:1.

13:34 I give you a new commandment: this puts Jesus on a par with Yahweh. The commandment itself is not new; cf. Leviticus 19:18 and the note there.

14:1-31 Jesus' departure and return. This section is a dialogue marked off by a literary inclusion in John 14:1, 27: "Do not let your hearts be troubled."

14:1 You have faith: could also be imperative: "Have faith."

14:3 Come back again: a rare Johannine reference to the parousia; cf. 1 John 2:28.

14:4 The way: here, of Jesus himself; also a designation of Christianity in Acts 9:2; 19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14, 22.

14:6 The truth: in John, the divinely revealed reality of the Father manifested in the person and works of Jesus. The possession of truth confers knowledge and liberation from sin (8:32).

14:7 An alternative reading, "If you knew me, then you would have known my Father also," would be a rebuke, as in John 8:19.

14:8 Show us the Father: Philip is pictured asking for a theophany like Exodus 24:9-10; 33:18.

14:16 Another Advocate: Jesus is the first advocate (paraclete); see 1 John 2:1, where Jesus is an advocate in the sense of intercessor in heaven. The Greek term derives from legal terminology for an advocate or defense attorney, and can mean spokesman, mediator, intercessor, comforter, consoler, although no one of these terms encompasses the meaning in John. The Paraclete in John is a teacher, a witness to Jesus, and a prosecutor of the world, who represents the continued presence on earth of the Jesus who has returned to the Father.

14:17 The Spirit of truth: this term is also used at Qumran, where it is a moral force put into a person by God, as opposed to the spirit of perversity. It is more personal in John; it will teach the realities of the new order (14:26), and testify to the truth (14:6). While it has been customary to use masculine personal pronouns in English for the Advocate, the Greek word for "spirit" is neuter, and the Greek text and manuscript variants fluctuate between masculine and neuter pronouns.

14:18 I will come to you: indwelling, not parousia.

14:22 Judas, not the Iscariot: probably not the brother of Jesus in Mark 6:3 // Matthew 13:55 or the apostle named Jude in Luke 6:16, but Thomas (see the note on 11:16), although other readings have "Judas the Cananean."

14:27 Peace: the traditional Hebrew salutation sˆālôm; but Jesus' "Shalom" is a gift of salvation, connoting the bounty of messianic blessing.

14:28 The Father is greater than I: because he sent, gave, etc., and Jesus is "a man who has told you the truth that I heard from God" (8:40).

14:30 The ruler of the world: Satan; cf. John 12:31; 16:11.

15:1–16:4 Discourse on the union of Jesus with his disciples. His words become a monologue and go beyond the immediate crisis of the departure of Jesus.

15:1-17 Like John 10:1-5, this passage resembles a parable. Israel is spoken of as a vineyard at Isaiah 5:1-7; Matthew 21:33-46 and as a vine at Psalm 80:9-17; Jeremiah 2:21; Ezekiel 15:2; 17:5-10; 19:10; Hosea 10:1. The identification of the vine as the Son of Man in Psalm 80:15 and Wisdom's description of herself as a vine in Sirach 24:17 are further background for portrayal of Jesus by this figure. There may be secondary eucharistic symbolism here; cf. Mark 14:25, "the fruit of the vine."

15:2 Takes away … prunes: in Greek there is a play on two related verbs.

15:6 Branches were cut off and dried on the wall of the vineyard for later use as fuel.

15:13 For one's friends: or: "those whom one loves." In John 15:9-13a, the words for love are related to the Greek agapaō. In John 15:13b-15, the words for love are related to the Greek phileō. For John, the two roots seem synonymous and mean "to love"; cf. also John 21:15-17. The word philos is used here.

15:15 Slaves … friends: in the Old Testament, Moses (Dt 34:5), Joshua (Jos 24:29), and David (Ps 89:21) were called "servants" or "slaves of Yahweh"; only Abraham (Is 41:8; 2 Chr 20:7; cf. Jas 2:23) was called a "friend of God."

15:18–16:4 The hostile reaction of the world. There are synoptic parallels, predicting persecution, especially at Matthew 10:17-25; 24:9-10.

15:20 The word I spoke to you: a reference to John 13:16.

15:21 On account of my name: the idea of persecution for Jesus' name is frequent in the New Testament (Mt 10:22; 24:9; Acts 9:14). For John, association with Jesus' name implies union with Jesus.

15:22, 24 Jesus' words (spoken) and deeds (works) are the great motives of credibility. They have seen and hated: probably means that they have seen his works and still have hated; but the Greek can be read: "have seen both me and my Father and still have hated both me and my Father." Works … that no one else ever did: so Yahweh in Deuteronomy 4:32-33.

15:25 In their law: law is here used as a larger concept than the Pentateuch, for the reference is to Psalm 35:19 or Psalm 69:5. See the notes on John 10:34; 12:34. Their law reflects the argument of the church with the synagogue.

15:26 Whom I will send: in John 14:16, 26, the Paraclete is to be sent by the Father, at the request of Jesus. Here the Spirit comes from both Jesus and the Father in mission; there is no reference here to the eternal procession of the Spirit.

16:2 Hour: of persecution, not Jesus' "hour" (see the note on 2:4).

16:4b-33 A duplicate of John 14:1-31 on departure and return.

16:5 Not one of you asks me: the difficulty of reconciling this with Simon Peter's question in John 13:36 and Thomas's words in John 14:5 strengthens the supposition that the last discourse has been made up of several collections of Johannine material.

16:8-11 These verses illustrate the forensic character of the Paraclete's role: in the forum of the disciples' conscience he prosecutes the world. He leads believers to see (a) that the basic sin was and is refusal to believe in Jesus; (b) that, although Jesus was found guilty and apparently died in disgrace, in reality righteousness has triumphed, for Jesus has returned to his Father; (c) finally, that it is the ruler of this world, Satan, who has been condemned through Jesus' death (12:32).

16:13 Declare to you the things that are coming: not a reference to new predictions about the future, but interpretation of what has already occurred or been said.

16:25 See the note on John 10:6. Here, possibly a reference to John 15:1-16 or 16:21.

16:30 The reference is seemingly to the fact that Jesus could anticipate their question in John 16:19. The disciples naively think they have the full understanding that is the climax of "the hour" of Jesus' death, resurrection, and ascension (16:25), but the only part of the hour that is at hand for them is their share in the passion (16:32).

16:32 You will be scattered: cf. Mark 14:27 and Matthew 26:31, where both cite Zechariah 13:7 about the sheep being dispersed.

17:1-26 Climax of the last discourse(s). Since the sixteenth century, this chapter has been called the "high priestly prayer" of Jesus. He speaks as intercessor, with words addressed directly to the Father and not to the disciples, who supposedly only overhear. Yet the prayer is one of petition, for immediate (17:6-19) and future (17:20-21) disciples. Many phrases reminiscent of the Lord's Prayer occur. Although still in the world (17:13), Jesus looks on his earthly ministry as a thing of the past (17:4, 12). Whereas Jesus has up to this time stated that the disciples could follow him (13:33, 36), now he wishes them to be with him in union with the Father (17:12-14).

17:1 The action of looking up to heaven and the address Father are typical of Jesus at prayer; cf. John 11:41 and Luke 11:2.

17:2 Another possible interpretation is to treat the first line of the verse as parenthetical and the second as an appositive to the clause that ends v. 1: so that your son may glorify you (just as … all people), so that he may give eternal life ….

17:3 This verse was clearly added in the editing of the gospel as a reflection on the preceding verse; Jesus nowhere else refers to himself as Jesus Christ.

17:6 I revealed your name: perhaps the name I AM; cf. John 8:24, 28, 58; 13:19.

17:15 Note the resemblance to the petition of the Lord's Prayer, "deliver us from the evil one." Both probably refer to the devil rather than to abstract evil.

17:24 Where I am: Jesus prays for the believers ultimately to join him in heaven. Then they will not see his glory as in a mirror but clearly (2 Cor 3:18; 1 Jn 3:2).

17:26 I will make it known: through the Advocate.

18:1-14 John does not mention the agony in the garden and the kiss of Judas, nor does he identify the place as Gethsemane or the Mount of Olives.

18:1 Jesus went out: see John 14:31, where it seems he is leaving the supper room. Kidron valley: literally, "the winter-flowing Kidron"; this wadi has water only during the winter rains.

18:3 Band of soldiers: seems to refer to Roman troops, either the full cohort of 600 men (1/10 of a legion), or more likely the maniple of 200 under their tribune (18:12). In this case, John is hinting at Roman collusion in the action against Jesus before he was brought to Pilate. The lanterns and torches may be symbolic of the hour of darkness.

18:5 Nazorean: the form found in Matthew 26:71 (see the note on Mt 2:23) is here used, not Nazarene of Mark. I AM: or "I am he," but probably intended by the evangelist as an expression of divinity (cf. their appropriate response in 18:6); see the note on John 8:24. John sets the confusion of the arresting party against the background of Jesus' divine majesty.

18:9 The citation may refer to John 6:39; 10:28; or 17:12.

18:10 Only John gives the names of the two antagonists; both John and Luke mention the right ear.

18:11 The theme of the cup is found in the synoptic account of the agony (Mk 14:36 and parallels).

18:13 Annas: only John mentions an inquiry before Annas; cf. John 18:16, 19-24; see the note on Luke 3:2. It is unlikely that this nighttime interrogation before Annas is the same as the trial before Caiaphas placed by Matthew and Mark at night and by Luke in the morning.

18:15-16 Another disciple … the other disciple: see the note on John 13:23.

18:20 I have always taught … in the temple area: cf. Mark 14:49 for a similar statement.

18:24 Caiaphas: see Matthew 26:3, 57; Luke 3:2; and the notes there. John may leave room here for the trial before Caiaphas described in the synoptic gospels.

18:27 Cockcrow was the third Roman division of the night, lasting from midnight to 3 a.m.

18:28 Praetorium: see the note on Matthew 27:27. Morning: literally, "the early hour," or fourth Roman division of the night, 3 to 6 a.m. The Passover: the synoptic gospels give the impression that the Thursday night supper was the Passover meal (Mk 14:12); for John that meal is still to be eaten Friday night.

18:31 We do not have the right to execute anyone: only John gives this reason for their bringing Jesus to Pilate. Jewish sources are not clear on the competence of the Sanhedrin at this period to sentence and to execute for political crimes.

18:32 The Jewish punishment for blasphemy was stoning (Lv 24:16). In coming to the Romans to ensure that Jesus would be crucified, the Jewish authorities fulfilled his prophecy that he would be exalted (3:14; 12:32-33). There is some historical evidence, however, for Jews crucifying Jews.

18:37 You say I am a king: see Matthew 26:64 for a similar response to the high priest. It is at best a reluctant affirmative.

18:39 See the note on Matthew 27:15.

18:40 Barabbas: see the note on Matthew 27:16-17. Revolutionary: a guerrilla warrior fighting for nationalistic aims, though the term can also denote a robber. See the note on Matthew 27:38.

19:1 Luke places the mockery of Jesus at the midpoint in the trial when Jesus was sent to Herod. Mark and Matthew place the scourging and mockery at the end of the trial after the sentence of death. Scourging was an integral part of the crucifixion penalty.

19:7 Made himself the Son of God: this question was not raised in John's account of the Jewish interrogations of Jesus as it was in the synoptic account. Nevertheless, see John 5:18; 8:53; 10:36.

19:12 Friend of Caesar: a Roman honorific title bestowed upon high-ranking officials for merit.

19:13 Seated him: others translate "(Pilate) sat down." In John's thought, Jesus is the real judge of the world, and John may here be portraying him seated on the judgment bench. Stone Pavement: in Greek lithostrotos; under the fortress Antonia, one of the conjectured locations of the praetorium, a massive stone pavement has been excavated. Gabbatha (Aramaic rather than Hebrew) probably means "ridge, elevation."

19:14 Noon: Mark 15:25 has Jesus crucified "at the third hour," which means either 9 a.m. or the period from 9 to 12 noon, the time when, according to John, Jesus was sentenced to death, was the hour at which the priests began to slaughter Passover lambs in the temple; see John 1:29.

19:16 He handed him over to them to be crucified: in context this would seem to mean "handed him over to the chief priests." Luke 23:25 has a similar ambiguity.

There is a polemic tendency in the gospels to place the guilt of the crucifixion on the Jewish authorities and to exonerate the Romans from blame. But John later mentions the Roman soldiers (19:23), and it was to these soldiers that Pilate handed Jesus over.

19:17 Carrying the cross himself: a different picture from that of the synoptics, especially Luke 23:26, where Simon of Cyrene is made to carry the cross, walking behind Jesus. In John's theology, Jesus remained in complete control and master of his destiny (cf. 10:18). Place of the Skull: the Latin word for skull is Calvaria; hence "Calvary." Golgotha is actually an Aramaic rather than a Hebrew word.

19:19 The inscription differs with slightly different words in each of the four gospels. John's form is fullest and gives the equivalent of the Latin INRI = Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudaeorum. Only John mentions its polyglot character (19:20) and Pilate's role in keeping the title unchanged (19:21-22).

19:23-25a While all four gospels describe the soldiers casting lots to divide Jesus' garments (see the note on Mt 27:35), only John quotes the underlying passage from Psalm 22:19, and only John sees each line of the poetic parallelism literally carried out in two separate actions (19:23-24).

19:25 It is not clear whether four women are meant, or three (i.e., Mary the wife of Cl[e]opas [cf. Lk 24:18] is in apposition with his mother's sister) or two (his mother and his mother's sister, i.e., Mary of Cl[e]opas and Mary of Magdala). Only John mentions the mother of Jesus here. The synoptics have a group of women looking on from a distance at the cross (Mk 15:40).

19:26-27 This scene has been interpreted literally, of Jesus' concern for his mother; and symbolically, e.g., in the light of the Cana story in John 2 (the presence of the mother of Jesus, the address woman, and the mention of the hour) and of the upper room in John 13 (the presence of the beloved disciple; the hour). Now that the hour has come (19:28), Mary (a symbol of the church?) is given a role as the mother of Christians (personified by the beloved disciple); or, as a representative of those seeking salvation, she is supported by the disciple who interprets Jesus' revelation; or Jewish and Gentile Christianity (or Israel and the Christian community) are reconciled.

19:28 The scripture … fulfilled: either in the scene of John 19:25-27, or in the I thirst of John 19:28. If the latter, Psalms 22:16; 69:22 deserve consideration.

19:29 Wine: John does not mention the drugged wine, a narcotic that Jesus refused as the crucifixion began (Mk 15:23), but only this final gesture of kindness at the end (Mk 15:36). Hyssop, a small plant, is scarcely suitable for carrying a sponge (Mark mentions a reed) and may be a symbolic reference to the hyssop used to daub the blood of the paschal lamb on the doorpost of the Hebrews (Ex 12:22).

19:30 Handed over the spirit: there is a double nuance of dying (giving up the last breath or spirit) and that of passing on the holy Spirit; see John 7:39, which connects the giving of the Spirit with Jesus' glorious return to the Father, and John 20:22, where the author portrays the conferral of the Spirit.

19:34-35 John probably emphasizes these verses to show the reality of Jesus' death, against the docetic heretics. In the blood and water there may also be a symbolic reference to the Eucharist and baptism.

19:35 He knows: it is not certain from the Greek that this he is the eyewitness of the first part of the sentence. May [come to] believe: see the note on John 20:31.

19:38-42 In the first three gospels there is no anointing on Friday. In Matthew and Luke the women come to the tomb on Sunday morning precisely to anoint Jesus.

20:1-31 The risen Jesus reveals his glory and confers the Spirit. This story fulfills the basic need for testimony to the resurrection. What we have here is not a record but a series of single stories.

20:1-10 The story of the empty tomb is found in both the Matthean and the Lucan traditions; John's version seems to be a fusion of the two.

20:1 Still dark: according to Mark the sun had risen, Matthew describes it as "dawning," and Luke refers to early dawn. Mary sees the stone removed, not the empty tomb.

20:2 Mary runs away, not directed by an angel/young man as in the synoptic accounts. The plural "we" in the second part of her statement might reflect a tradition of more women going to the tomb.

20:3-10 The basic narrative is told of Peter alone in Luke 24:12, a verse missing in important manuscripts and which may be borrowed from tradition similar to John. Cf. also Luke 24:24.

20:6-8 Some special feature about the state of the burial cloths caused the beloved disciple to believe. Perhaps the details emphasized that the grave had not been robbed.

20:9 Probably a general reference to the scriptures is intended, as in Luke 24:26 and 1 Corinthians 15:4. Some individual Old Testament passages suggested are Psalm 16:10; Hosea 6:2; Jonah 2:1, 2, 11.

20:11-18 This appearance to Mary is found only in John, but cf. Matthew 28:8-10 and Mark 16:9-11.

20:16 Rabbouni: Hebrew or Aramaic for "my master."

20:17 Stop holding on to me: see Matthew 28:9, where the women take hold of his feet. I have not yet ascended: for John and many of the New Testament writers, the ascension in the theological sense of going to the Father to be glorified took place with the resurrection as one action. This scene in John dramatizes such an understanding, for by Easter night Jesus is glorified and can give the Spirit. Therefore his ascension takes place immediately after he has talked to Mary. In such a view, the ascension after forty days described in Acts 1:1-11 would be simply a termination of earthly appearances or, perhaps better, an introduction to the conferral of the Spirit upon the early church, modeled on Elisha's being able to have a (double) share in the spirit of Elijah if he saw him being taken up (same verb as ascending) into heaven (2 Kgs 2:9-12). To my Father and your Father, to my God and your God: this echoes Ruth 1:16: "Your people shall be my people, and your God my God." The Father of Jesus will now become the Father of the disciples because, once ascended, Jesus can give them the Spirit that comes from the Father and they can be reborn as God's children (3:5). That is why he calls them my brothers.

20:19-29 The appearances to the disciples, without or with Thomas (cf. 11:16; 14:5), have rough parallels in the other gospels only for John 20:19-23; cf. Luke 24:36-39; Mark 16:14-18.

20:19 The disciples: by implication from John 20:24 this means ten of the Twelve, presumably in Jerusalem. Peace be with you: although this could be an ordinary greeting, John intends here to echo John 14:27. The theme of rejoicing in John 20:20 echoes John 16:22.

20:20 Hands and … side: Luke 24:39-40 mentions "hands and feet," based on Psalm 22:17.

20:21 By means of this sending, the Eleven were made apostles, that is, "those sent” (cf. 17:18), though John does not use the noun in reference to them (see the note on 13:16). A solemn mission or “sending” is also the subject of the post-resurrection appearances to the Eleven in Matthew 28:19; Luke 24:47; Mark 16:15.

20:22 This action recalls Genesis 2:7, where God breathed on the first man and gave him life; just as Adam’s life came from God, so now the disciples’ new spiritual life comes from Jesus. Cf. also the revivification of the dry bones in Ezekiel 37. This is the author’s version of Pentecost. Cf. also the note on John 19:30.

20:23 The Council of Trent defined that this power to forgive sins is exercised in the sacrament of penance. See Matthew 16:19 and 18:18.

20:28 My Lord and my God: this forms a literary inclusion with the first verse of the gospel: “and the Word was God.”

20:29 This verse is a beatitude on future generations; faith, not sight, matters.

20:30-31 These verses are clearly a conclusion to the gospel and express its purpose. While many manuscripts read come to believe, possibly implying a missionary purpose for John’s gospel, a small number of quite early ones read “continue to believe,” suggesting that the audience consists of Christians whose faith is to be deepened by the book; cf. John 19:35.

21:1-23 There are many non-Johannine peculiarities in this chapter, some suggesting Lucan Greek style; yet this passage is closer to John than John 7:53–8:11. There are many Johannine features as well. Its closest parallels in the synoptic gospels are found in Luke 5:1-11 and Matthew 14:28-31. Perhaps the tradition was ultimately derived from John but preserved by some disciple other than the writer of the rest of the gospel. The appearances narrated seem to be independent of those in John 20. Even if a later addition, the chapter was added before publication of the gospel, for it appears in all manuscripts.

21:2 Zebedee’s sons: the only reference to James and John in this gospel (but see the note on 1:37). Perhaps the phrase was originally a gloss to identify, among the five, the two others of his disciples. The anonymity of the latter phrase is more Johannine (1:35). The total of seven may suggest the community of the disciples in its fullness.

21:3-6 This may be a variant of Luke’s account of the catch of fish; see the note on Luke 5:1-11.

21:9, 12-13 It is strange that Jesus already has fish since none have yet been brought ashore. This meal may have had eucharistic significance for early Christians since John 21:13 recalls John 6:11 which uses the vocabulary of Jesus’ action at the Last Supper; but see also the note on Matthew 14:19.

21:11 The exact number 153 is probably meant to have a symbolic meaning in relation to the apostles’ universal mission; Jerome claims that Greek zoologists catalogued 153 species of fish. Or 153 is the sum of the numbers from 1 to 17. Others invoke Ezekiel 47:10.

21:12 None … dared to ask him: is Jesus’ appearance strange to them? Cf. Luke 24:16; Mark 16:12; John 20:14. The disciples do, however, recognize Jesus before the breaking of the bread (opposed to Lk 24:35).

21:14 This verse connects John 20 and 21; cf. John 20:19, 26.

21:15-23 This section constitutes Peter’s rehabilitation and emphasizes his role in the church.

21:15-17 In these three verses there is a remarkable variety of synonyms: two different Greek verbs for love (see the note on 15:13); two verbs for feed/tend; two nouns for sheep; two verbs for know. But apparently there is no difference of meaning. The threefold confession of Peter is meant to counteract his earlier threefold denial (18:17, 25, 27). The First Vatican Council cited these verses in defining that Jesus after his resurrection gave Peter the jurisdiction of supreme shepherd and ruler over the whole flock.

21:15 More than these: probably "more than these disciples do" rather than "more than you love them" or "more than you love these things [fishing, etc.]."

21:18 Originally probably a proverb about old age, now used as a figurative reference to the crucifixion of Peter.

21:22 Until I come: a reference to the parousia.

21:23 This whole scene takes on more significance if the disciple is already dead. The death of the apostolic generation caused problems in the church because of a belief that Jesus was to have returned first. Loss of faith sometimes resulted; cf. 2 Peter 3:4.

21:24 Who … has written them: this does not necessarily mean he wrote them with his own hand. The same expression is used in John 19:22 of Pilate, who certainly would not have written the inscription himself. We know: i.e., the Christian community; cf. John 1:14, 16.

Acts

The of the Apostles

The Acts of the Apostles, the second volume of Luke's two-volume work, continues Luke's presentation of biblical history, describing how the salvation promised to Israel in the Old Testament and accomplished by Jesus has now under the guidance of the holy Spirit been extended to the Gentiles. This was accomplished through the divinely chosen representatives (10:41) whom Jesus prepared during his historical ministry (1:21-22) and commissioned after his resurrection as witnesses to all that he taught (1:8; 10:37-43; Lk 24:48). Luke's preoccupation with the Christian community as the Spirit-guided bearer of the word of salvation rules out of his book detailed histories of the activity of most of the preachers. Only the main lines of the roles of Peter and Paul serve Luke's interest.

Peter was the leading member of the Twelve (1:13, 15), a miracle worker like Jesus in the gospel (3:1-10; 5:1-11, 15; 9:32-35, 36-42), the object of divine care (5:17-21; 12:6-11), and the spokesman for the Christian community (2:14-36; 3:12-26; 4:8-12; 5:29-32; 10:34-43; 15:7-11), who, according to Luke, was largely responsible for the growth of the community in the early days (2:4; 4:4). Paul eventually joined the community at Antioch (11:25-26), which subsequently commissioned him and Barnabas to undertake the spread of the gospel to Asia Minor. This missionary venture generally failed to win the Jews of the diaspora to the gospel but enjoyed success among the Gentiles (13:14–14:27).

SUMMARY

Acts tells the story of the spread of the Gospel and the growth of the early church from its beginnings at Pentecost, after the ascension of Jesus, through the preaching of Peter, Paul, and the other disciples, all under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Acts is the second volume of the only two-volume work in the NT, Luke-Acts.

Author: Same author as Gospel of Luke; unknown, but traditionally identified as a companion of Paul (Col 4:14; 2 Tm 4:11; Phlm 24).
Date: Between A.D. 80–90.

Content: Ascension of Jesus; Pentecost; preaching of Peter; spread of the Gospel from Jerusalem to Rome (1:8); stoning of Stephen, the first martyr; conversion of Saul (Paul); Council of Jerusalem; mission journeys of Paul and his companions; Paul's captivity in Rome.
Main Characters: Holy Spirit, Peter, Stephen, Philip, Barnabas, Saul (Paul) and his companions.

Paul's refusal to impose the Mosaic law upon his Gentile converts provoked very strong objection among the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem (15:1), but both Peter and James supported his position (15:6-21). Paul's second and third missionary journeys (16:36–21:16) resulted in the same pattern of failure among the Jews generally but of some success among the Gentiles. Paul, like Peter, is presented as a miracle worker (14:8-18; 19:12; 20:7-12; 28:7-10) and the object of divine care (16:25-31).

In Acts, Luke has provided a broad survey of the church's development from the resurrection of Jesus to Paul's first Roman imprisonment, the point at which the book ends. In telling this story, Luke describes the emergence of Christianity from its origins in Judaism to its position as a religion of worldwide status and appeal. Originally a Jewish Christian community in Jerusalem, the church was placed in circumstances impelling it to include within its membership people of other cultures: the Samaritans (8:4-25), at first an occasional Gentile (8:26-30; 10:1-48), and finally the Gentiles on principle (11:20-21). Fear on the part of the Jewish people that Christianity, particularly as preached to the Gentiles, threatened their own cultural heritage caused them to be suspicious of Paul's gospel (13:42-45; 15:1-5; 28:17-24). The inability of Christian missionaries to allay this apprehension inevitably created a situation in which the gospel was preached more and more to the Gentiles. Toward the end of Paul's career, the Christian communities, with the exception of those in Palestine itself (9:31), were mainly of Gentile membership. In tracing the emergence of Christianity from Judaism, Luke is insistent upon the prominence of Israel in the divine plan of salvation (see the note on 1:26; see also 2:5-6; 3:13-15; 10:36; 13:16-41; 24:14-15) and that the extension of salvation to the Gentiles has been a part of the divine plan from the beginning (see 15:13-18; 26:22-23).

In the development of the church from a Jewish Christian origin in Jerusalem, with its roots in Jewish religious tradition, to a series of Christian communities among the Gentiles of the Roman empire, Luke perceives the action of God in history laying open the heart of all humanity to the divine message of salvation. His approach to the history of the church is motivated by his theological interests. His history of the apostolic church is the story of a Spirit-guided community and a Spirit-guided spread of the Word of God (1:8). The travels of Peter and Paul are in reality the travels of the Word of God as it spreads from Jerusalem, the city of destiny for Jesus, to Rome, the capital of the civilized world of Luke's day. Nonetheless, the historical data he utilizes are of value for the understanding of the church's early life and development and as general background to the Pauline epistles. In the interpretation of Acts, care must be exercised to determine Luke's theological aims and interests and to evaluate his historical data without either exaggerating their literal accuracy or underestimating their factual worth.

Finally, an apologetic concern is evident throughout Acts. By stressing the continuity between Judaism and Christianity (13:16-41; 23:6-9; 24:10-21; 26:2-23), Luke argues that Christianity is deserving of the same toleration accorded Judaism by Rome. Part of Paul's defense before Roman authorities is to show that Christianity is not a disturber of the peace of the Roman Empire (24:5, 12-13; 25:7-8). Moreover, when he stands before Roman authorities, he is declared innocent of any crime against the empire (18:13-15; 23:29; 25:25-27; 26:31-32). Luke tells his story with the hope that Christianity will be treated as fairly.

Concerning the date of Acts, see the Introduction to the Gospel according to Luke.

The principal divisions of the Acts of the Apostles are the following:

I. The Preparation for the Christian Mission (1:1–2:13)
II. The Mission in Jerusalem (2:14–8:3)
III. The Mission in Judea and Samaria (8:4–9:43)
IV. The Inauguration of the Gentile Mission (10:1–15:35)
V. The Mission of Paul to the Ends of the Earth (15:36–28:31)

[6]When they had gathered together they asked him, “Lord, are you at this time going* to restore the kingdom to Israel?” [7]*He answered them,[f] “It is not for you to know the times or seasons that the Father has established by his own authority. [8]*But you will receive power when the holy Spirit comes upon you,[g] and you will be my witnesses in Jerusalem, throughout Judea and Samaria, and to the ends of the earth.” [9]When he had said this, as they were looking on, he was lifted up, and a cloud took him from their sight.[h] [10]While they were looking intently at the sky as he was going, suddenly two men dressed in white garments stood beside them.[i] [11]They said, “Men of Galilee, why are you standing there looking at the sky? This Jesus who has been taken up from you into heaven will return in the same way as you have seen him going into heaven.”[j] [12][k]Then they returned to Jerusalem from the mount called Olivet, which is near Jerusalem, a sabbath day’s journey away.

From the beginning to the end of Acts, the Holy Spirit is a primary character. The Spirit is a sign of the guiding presence of God at work directing the life of the church. The Spirit emboldens the apostles at Pentecost and ensures the ultimate success of the mission of evangelization throughout the world. Later theology identified the giving of the Holy Spirit primarily with the sacrament of confirmation. Traditionally, seven “gifts” and twelve “fruits” come with reception of the Holy Spirit (cf. Is 11:2-3; Gal 5:22-23):

Gifts of the Holy Spirit	Fruits of the Holy Spirit
• Wisdom	• Charity	• Generosity

- Understanding
- Counsel
- Fortitude
- Knowledge
- Piety
- Fear of the Lord

- Joy
- Peace
- Patience
- Kindness
- Goodness

- Gentleness
- Faithfulness
- Modesty
- Self-control
- Chastity

The First Community in Jerusalem

Lk 23:49

[13]When they entered the city they went to the upper room where they were staying, Peter and John and James and Andrew, Philip and Thomas, Bartholomew and Matthew, James son of Alphaeus, Simon the Zealot, and Judas son of James. [14]All these devoted themselves with one accord to prayer, together with some women, and Mary the mother of Jesus, and his brothers.[l]

Mt 27:3-10

15During those days Peter stood up in the midst of the brothers (there was a group of about one hundred and twenty persons in the one place). He said, 16“My brothers, the scripture had to be fulfilled which the holy Spirit spoke beforehand through the mouth of David, concerning Judas, who was the guide for those who arrested Jesus.[m] 17He was numbered among us and was allotted a share in this ministry. 18[n]He bought a parcel of land with the wages of his iniquity, and falling headlong, he burst open in the middle, and all his insides spilled out.* 19This became known to everyone who lived in Jerusalem, so that the parcel of land was called in their language ‘Akeldama,’ that is, Field of Blood. 20For it is written in the Book of Psalms:

> ‘Let his encampment become desolate, > and may no one dwell in it.’

And:

21Therefore, it is necessary that one of the men who accompanied us the whole time the Lord Jesus came and went among us, 22beginning from the baptism of John until the day on which he was taken up from us, become with us a witness to his resurrection.”[p] 23So they proposed two, Joseph called Barsabbas, who was also known as Justus, and Matthias. [24]Then they prayed, “You, Lord, who know the hearts of all, show which one of these two you have chosen [25]to take the place in this apostolic ministry from which Judas turned away to go to his own place.” [26]*[q]Then they gave lots to them, and the lot fell upon Matthias, and he was counted with the eleven apostles.

5 Now there were devout Jews from every nation under heaven staying in Jerusalem. 6 At this sound, they gathered in a large crowd, but they were confused because each one heard them speaking in his own language. 7 They were astounded, and in amazement they asked, “Are not all these people who are speaking Galileans?[e] 8 Then how does each of us hear them in his own native language? 9 We are Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Judea and Cappadocia, Pontus and Asia, [10]Phrygia and Pamphylia, Egypt and the districts of Libya near Cyrene, as well as travelers from Rome, [11]both Jews and converts to Judaism, Cretans and Arabs, yet we hear them speaking in our own tongues of the mighty acts of God."[f] [12]They were all astounded and bewildered, and said to one another, "What does this mean?" [13]But others said, scoffing, "They have had too much new wine."[g]

II: THE MISSION IN JERUSALEM

Peter's Speech at Pentecost

[14][*]Then Peter stood up with the Eleven, raised his voice, and proclaimed to them, "You who are Jews, indeed all of you staying in Jerusalem. Let this be known to you, and listen to my words. [15]These people are not drunk, as you suppose, for it is only nine o'clock in the morning. [16]No, this is what was spoken through the prophet Joel:

Nearly one-third of Acts contains speeches proclaimed by the major characters (e.g., 2:14-36; 3:12-26; 4:8-12, 19-20; 5:29-32; 7:2-53; etc.). Peter's Pentecost speech provides a stellar model. There is a loose pattern to the speeches (below) that is repeated with some variation throughout Acts. The content of each speech is like a "mini-gospel" proclaimed to bring about conversions.

General Outline of the Speeches of Acts

- An appeal to be heard
- Scriptural background (OT) to the message
- Christological proclamation of the significance of Jesus of Nazareth
- Further scriptural proofs of the message
- Offer of salvation and a call for conversion and repentance

[17]'It will come to pass in the last days,' God says,
'that I will pour out a portion of my spirit upon all flesh.
Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your young men shall see visions, your old men shall dream dreams.[h]
[18]Indeed, upon my servants and my handmaids
I will pour out a portion of my spirit in those days, and they shall prophesy.
[19]And I will work wonders in the heavens above and signs on the earth below:
blood, fire, and a cloud of smoke.

22You who are Israelites, hear these words. Jesus the Nazorean was a man commended to you by God with mighty deeds, wonders, and signs, which God worked through him in your midst, as you yourselves know.[j] 23This man, delivered up by the set plan and foreknowledge of God, you killed, using lawless men to crucify him.[k] 24But God raised him up, releasing him from the throes of death, because it was impossible for him to be held by it.[l] 25For David says of him:

[37]Now when they heard this, they were cut to the heart, and they asked Peter and the other apostles, “What are we to do, my brothers?”[t] [38]Peter [said] to them, “Repent and be baptized,* every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the forgiveness of your sins; and you will receive the gift of the holy Spirit.[u] [39]For the promise is made to you and to your children and to all those far off, whomever the Lord our God will call.”[v] [40]He testified with many other arguments, and was exhorting them, “Save yourselves from this corrupt generation.”[w] [41]Those who accepted his message were baptized, and about three thousand persons were added that day.[x]

42[y]They devoted themselves to the teaching of the apostles and to the communal life, to the breaking of the bread and to the prayers.[z] 43Awe came upon everyone, and many wonders and signs were done through the apostles.[a] 44All who believed were together and had all things in common;[b] 45they would sell their property and possessions and divide them among all according to each one's need. 46Every day they devoted themselves to meeting together in the temple area and to breaking bread in their homes. They ate their meals with exultation and sincerity of heart, 47praising God and enjoying favor with all the people. And every day the Lord added to their number those who were being saved.

As described, sharing goods in common exemplifies the differing and various contributions of each person to the whole. Catholic social teaching sees in this an example of contributive justice. Pope John Paul II describes the demands of contributive justice in the contemporary era: "… there are many human needs which find no place on the market. It is a strict duty of justice and truth not to allow fundamental human needs to remain unsatisfied, and not to allow those burdened by such needs to perish. It is also necessary to help these needy people to acquire expertise, to enter the circle of exchange, and to develop their skills in order to make the best use of their capacities and resources" (Centesimus Annus, 34).

[11]As he clung to Peter and John, all the people hurried in amazement toward them in the portico called “Solomon’s Portico.”[d] [12]When Peter saw this, he addressed the people, “You Israelites, why are you amazed at this, and why do you look so intently at us as if we had made him walk by our own power or piety?[e] [13]The God of Abraham, [the God] of Isaac, and [the God] of Jacob, the God of our ancestors, has glorified* his servant Jesus whom you handed over and denied in Pilate’s presence, when he had decided to release him.[f] [14]You denied the Holy and Righteous One* and asked that a murderer be released to you.[g] [15]The author of life you put to death, but God raised him from the dead; of this we are witnesses.[h] [16]And by faith in his name, this man, whom you see and know, his name has made strong, and the faith that comes through it has given him this perfect health, in the presence of all of you. [17]Now I know, brothers, that you acted out of ignorance, just as your leaders did;[i] [18]but God has thus brought to fulfillment what he had announced beforehand through the mouth of all the prophets,* that his Messiah would suffer.[j] [19]Repent, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be wiped away,[k] [20]and that the Lord may grant you times of refreshment and send you the Messiah already appointed for you, Jesus,* [21]whom heaven must receive until the times of universal restoration* of which God spoke through the mouth of his holy prophets from of old. 5On the next day, their leaders, elders, and scribes were assembled in Jerusalem, 6with Annas the high priest, Caiaphas, John, Alexander, and all who were of the high-priestly class. 7They brought them into their presence and questioned them, “By what power or by what name have you done this?” 8Then Peter, filled with the holy Spirit, answered them, “Leaders of the people and elders:b 9If we are being examined today about a good deed done to a cripple, namely, by what means he was saved, 10then all of you and all the people of Israel should know that it was in the name of Jesus Christ the Nazorean whom you crucified, whom God raised from the dead; in his name this man stands before you healed. 11*c*He is ‘the stone rejected by you,* the builders, which has become the cornerstone.’ 12d*There is no salvation through anyone else, nor is there any other name under heaven given to the human race by which we are to be saved.”

13Observing the boldness of Peter and John and perceiving them to be uneducated, ordinary men, they were amazed, and they recognized them as the companions of Jesus. 14Then when they saw the man who had been cured standing there with them, they could say nothing in reply. 15So they ordered them to leave the Sanhedrin, and conferred with one another, saying, 16“What are we to do with these men? Everyone living in Jerusalem knows that a remarkable sign was done through them, and we cannot deny it. 17But so that it may not be spread any further among the people, let us give them a stern warning never again to speak to anyone in this name.”e

5:29-32

[18]So they called them back and ordered them not to speak or teach at all in the name of Jesus. [19]Peter and John, however, said to them in reply, “Whether it is right in the sight of God for us to obey you rather than God, you be the judges.[f] [20]It is impossible for us not to speak about what we have seen and heard.” [21]After threatening them further, they released them, finding no way to punish them, on account of the people who were all praising God for what had happened. [22]For the man on whom this sign of healing had been done was over forty years old.

Prayer of the Community

[23]After their release they went back to their own people and reported what the chief priests and elders had told them. [24]And when they heard it, they raised their voices to God with one accord and said, “Sovereign Lord, maker of heaven and earth and the sea and all that is in them, [25]you said by the holy Spirit through the mouth of our father David, your servant:

[27]Indeed they gathered in this city against your holy servant Jesus whom you anointed, Herod* and Pontius Pilate, together with the Gentiles and the peoples of Israel,[h] [28]to do what your hand and [your] will had long ago planned to take place. [29]And now, Lord, take note of their threats, and enable your servants to speak your word with all boldness, [30]as you stretch forth [your] hand to heal, and signs and wonders are done through the name of your holy servant Jesus.” [31]*As they prayed, the place where they were gathered shook, and they were all filled with the holy Spirit and continued to speak the word of God with boldness.[i]

2:44-45

32The community of believers was of one heart and mind, and no one claimed that any of his possessions was his own, but they had everything in common. 33With great power the apostles bore witness to the resurrection of the Lord Jesus, and great favor was accorded them all. 34*j*There was no needy person among them, for those who owned property or houses would sell them, bring the proceeds of the sale, 35and put them at the feet of the apostles, and they were distributed to each according to need.

9:27; 11:22, 30; 12:25; 13:15; 1 Cor 9:6; Gal 2:1, 9, 13; Col 4:10

36*k*Thus Joseph, also named by the apostles Barnabas (which is translated “son of encouragement”), a Levite, a Cypriot by birth, 37sold a piece of property that he owned, then brought the money and put it at the feet of the apostles.

Ananias and Sapphira*

Lk 22:3; Jn 13:2

5 [1]A man named Ananias, however, with his wife Sapphira, sold a piece of property. [2]He retained for himself, with his wife's knowledge, some of the purchase price, took the remainder, and put it at the feet of the apostles. [3]But Peter said, "Ananias, why has Satan filled your heart so that you lied to the holy Spirit and retained part of the price of the land?[a] [4]While it remained unsold, did it not remain yours? And when it was sold, was it not still under your control? Why did you contrive this deed? You have lied not to human beings, but to God." [5]When Ananias heard these words, he fell down and breathed his last, and great fear came upon all who heard of it. [6]The young men came and wrapped him up, then carried him out and buried him.

[7]After an interval of about three hours, his wife came in, unaware of what had happened. [8]Peter said to her, "Tell me, did you sell the land for this amount?" She answered, "Yes, for that amount." [9]Then Peter said to her, "Why did you agree to test the Spirit of the Lord? Listen, the footsteps of those who have buried your husband are at the door, and they will carry you out." [10]At once, she fell down at his feet and breathed her last. When the young men entered they found her dead, so they carried her out and buried her beside her husband. [11]And great fear came upon the whole church and upon all who heard of these things.[b]

Signs and Wonders of the Apostles*

12Many signs and wonders were done among the people at the hands of the apostles. They were all together in Solomon’s portico.[c] 13None of the others dared to join them, but the people esteemed them. 14Yet more than ever, believers in the Lord, great numbers of men and women, were added to them. 15Thus they even carried the sick out into the streets and laid them on cots and mats so that when Peter came by, at least his shadow might fall on one or another of them.[d] 16A large number of people from the towns in the vicinity of Jerusalem also gathered, bringing the sick and those disturbed by unclean spirits, and they were all cured.

[19]But during the night, the angel of the Lord opened the doors of the prison, led them out, and said,[f] [20]“Go and take your place in the temple area, and tell the people everything about this life.” [21]When they heard this, they went to the temple early in the morning and taught. When the high priest and his companions arrived, they convened the Sanhedrin, the full senate of the Israelites, and sent to the jail to have them brought in. [22]But the court officers who went did not find them in the prison, so they came back and reported, [23]“We found the jail securely locked and the guards stationed outside the doors, but when we opened them, we found no one inside.” [24]When they heard this report, the captain of the temple guard and the chief priests were at a loss about them, as to what this would come to. [25]Then someone came in and reported to them, “The men whom you put in prison are in the temple area and are teaching the people.” [26]Then the captain and the court officers went and brought them in, but without force, because they were afraid of being stoned by the people.[g]

[33]When they heard this, they became infuriated and wanted to put them to death. [34]*But a Pharisee in the Sanhedrin named Gamaliel, a teacher of the law, respected by all the people, stood up, ordered the men to be put outside for a short time,[m] [35]and said to them, “Fellow Israelites, be careful what you are about to do to these men. [36]*Some time ago, Theudas appeared, claiming to be someone important, and about four hundred men joined him, but he was killed, and all those who were loyal to him were disbanded and came to nothing. [37]After him came Judas the Galilean at the time of the census. He also drew people after him, but he too perished and all who were loyal to him were scattered. [38]So now I tell you, have nothing to do with these men, and let them go. For if this endeavor or this activity is of human origin, it will destroy itself. [39]But if it comes from God, you will not be able to destroy them; you may even find yourselves fighting against God.” They were persuaded by him.

40After recalling the apostles, they had them flogged, ordered them to stop speaking in the name of Jesus, and dismissed them.n 41So they left the presence of the Sanhedrin, rejoicing that they had been found worthy to suffer dishonor for the sake of the name.o 42And all day long, both at the temple and in their homes, they did not stop teaching and proclaiming the Messiah, Jesus.p

Rabbi Gamaliel, an Influential Teacher

Recently a homilist asked the congregation to ponder their potential to influence others by asking these questions: “Do you know who first taught Einstein math?” “What was the name of Beethoven’s piano teacher?” “Who first instructed Madame Curie in basic science?” Perhaps we could add, “Who is responsible for the early formation of St. Paul, Apostle to the Gentiles?”

Paul himself credits Gamaliel for giving him a strict education in ancestral law (Acts 22:3). But we all know that the best teachers communicate more than just the subject under study. What kind of person was Gamaliel?

When the followers of Jesus were arrested and taken before Israel’s court, its members were ready to put the disciples to death. Gamaliel appears as the voice of wisdom and reason. He recounts other movements that failed on their own, advises that the disciples be released, and then predicts that the success or failure of the new religious movement would reveal its origin.

Paul’s most influential teacher before his conversion was a person who refused to get caught up in the mob mentality or the fury of the moment. Instead, Gamaliel was willing to look first for God’s direction. The teacher’s virtue served the pupil well when Paul began to open the Gospel to the Gentiles in Antioch (Acts 11:19-26), a move that changed the face of the church forever.

6 [1]*At that time, as the number of disciples continued to grow, the Hellenists complained against the Hebrews because their widows were being neglected in the daily distribution.[a] [2]So the Twelve called together the community of the disciples and said, “It is not right for us to neglect the word of God to serve at table. [3]Brothers, select from among you seven reputable men, filled with the Spirit and wisdom, whom we shall appoint to this task, [4]whereas we shall devote ourselves to prayer and to the ministry of the word.” [5]The proposal was acceptable to the whole community, so they chose Stephen, a man filled with faith and the holy Spirit, also Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicholas of Antioch, a convert to Judaism. [6][b]They presented these men to the apostles who prayed and laid hands on them.* [7]The word of God continued to spread, and the number of the disciples in Jerusalem increased greatly; even a large group of priests were becoming obedient to the faith.[c]

The laying on of hands is an ancient Jewish gesture to appoint someone for special tasks or to have special authority. The early church adopted this gesture as well. It became a central feature in much later liturgical rituals, especially ordination ceremonies.

Stephen

Christians honor Stephen as the first martyr. He was a leader in the Jerusalem church. The Acts of the Apostles (6:1–8:2) is the sole source for his story, narrated in the context of the early Christians choosing a group of seven devout men for service.

Little is known of Stephen’s background. Acts describes him as “filled with faith and the holy Spirit,” an apt description of a devoted Christian. Apparently, the early Christian community experienced discord between its Jewish and Hellenistic members, especially regarding the neglect of the widows of the Hellenistic members of the community. Rather than distract the twelve apostles from their primary task of the ministry of the word to look after the widows more effectively, the decision was made to appoint members of the Hellenistic community to the task. Stephen and his six companions were thus chosen to serve (Greek diakonein, whence the word “deacon,” which is not actually used in the text) the widows by a daily distribution of bread.

Although the church has traditionally seen in this selection the establishment of the special ordained ministry of “deacon,” the duties of these early ministers are not the exact equivalent of later and contemporary deacons. That they were formal ministers, designated by the ritual of “laying on hands” (a sign of special choice and the bestowal of some authority), is clear. How they related to other ministers in the early church and the extent of their duties is not clear.

Around the same time a persecution arose in one of the synagogues and Stephen debated with his opponents. Although eloquent in defense of the faith, they roused further opposition against Stephen and hauled him before the Jewish authorities. Acts portrays Stephen’s trials, persecution, and death in ways that clearly echo the fate of Jesus described in the Gospel of Luke. In the end, Stephen’s enemies stone him to death, and, in direct imitation of Jesus, he forgives their senseless action (Acts 7:60; cf. Lk 23:34) and commends his soul to God (Acts 7:59; cf. Lk 23:46). His death resulted in the dispersion of the Hellenistic community and eventually led to the wider evangelical mission of the early church into the Gentile world.

Stephen’s feast is celebrated December 26th, the day after Christmas. The timing might, at first glance, seem odd, but the church specifically connects the incarnation with the necessity of suffering for the sake of the Gospel message. Following Jesus often leads to suffering and even death. For the early Christians, Stephen became a model of the perfect witness (from Greek martyr, “witness”) for the faith. Paul even admits to his own passive role in the martyrdom prior to his conversion (Acts 22:20). Many have followed in Stephen’s footsteps, giving rise to the observation that the “blood of martyrs is the seed of the church” (Tertullian, late second century A.D.).

On that day, there broke out a severe persecution* of the church in Jerusalem, and all were scattered throughout the countryside of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles.* 2 Devout men buried Stephen and made a loud lament over him. 3 Saul, meanwhile, was trying to destroy the church;* entering house after house and dragging out men and women, he handed them over for imprisonment.[b]

[4]Now those who had been scattered went about preaching the word.[c] [5]Thus Philip went down to [the] city of Samaria and proclaimed the Messiah to them.[d] [6]With one accord, the crowds paid attention to what was said by Philip when they heard it and saw the signs he was doing. [7]For unclean spirits, crying out in a loud voice, came out of many possessed people, and many paralyzed and crippled people were cured.[e] [8]There was great joy in that city.

Simon the Magician

1:3; 19:8; 28:23, 31

[9]A man named Simon used to practice magic* in the city and astounded the people of Samaria, claiming to be someone great. [10]All of them, from the least to the greatest, paid attention to him, saying, “This man is the ‘Power of God’ that is called ‘Great.’” [11]They paid attention to him because he had astounded them by his magic for a long time, [12]but once they began to believe Philip as he preached the good news about the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, men and women alike were baptized.[f] [13]Even Simon himself believed and, after being baptized, became devoted to Philip; and when he saw the signs and mighty deeds that were occurring, he was astounded.

2:4; 4:31; 10:44-47; 15:8-9; 19:2, 6

[14]Now when the apostles in Jerusalem heard that Samaria had accepted the word of God, they sent them Peter and John, [15]who went down and prayed for them, that they might receive the holy Spirit, [16]for it had not yet fallen upon any of them; they had only been baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus.* [17]Then they laid hands on them and they received the holy Spirit.[g]

[18]*When Simon saw that the Spirit was conferred by the laying on of the apostles’ hands, he offered them money [19]and said, “Give me this power too, so that anyone upon whom I lay my hands may receive the holy Spirit.” [20]But Peter said to him, “May your money perish with you, because you thought that you could buy the gift of God with money. [21]You have no share or lot in this matter, for your heart is not upright before God. [22]Repent of this wickedness of yours and pray to the Lord that, if possible, your intention may be forgiven. [23]For I see that you are filled with bitter gall and are in the bonds of iniquity.” [24]Simon said in reply, “Pray for me to the Lord, that nothing of what you have said may come upon me.” [25]So when they had testified and proclaimed the word of the Lord, they returned to Jerusalem and preached the good news to many Samaritan villages.

26 Then the angel of the Lord spoke to Philip, “Get up and head south on the road that goes down from Jerusalem to Gaza, the desert route.” 27 So he got up and set out. Now there was an Ethiopian eunuch, a court official of the Candace,* that is, the queen of the Ethiopians, in charge of her entire treasury, who had come to Jerusalem to worship,[h] 28 and was returning home. Seated in his chariot, he was reading the prophet Isaiah. 29 The Spirit said to Philip, “Go and join up with that chariot.” 30 *Philip ran up and heard him reading Isaiah the prophet and said, “Do you understand what you are reading?” 31 He replied, “How can I, unless someone instructs me?” So he invited Philip to get in and sit with him.[i] 32 This was the scripture passage he was reading:[j]

Philip and the Ethiopian, When Opportunity Knocks

At first glance, Philip appears to be the protagonist, the one who keeps the story moving. In fact, however, it is the angel of the Lord (8:26) or the Spirit of the Lord (8:29, 39) who propels Philip forward. So, why focus on Philip? Because he can model for us that great things can happen if we open the door when opportunity comes knocking.

Ethiopians were considered quite exotic in the ancient Mediterranean world. They were a dark-skinned people from a far-off land, south of Egypt. This particular Ethiopian was a royal court official, responsible for the queen’s treasury, having enough status to travel by chariot with the luxury of a driver.

It is difficult to imagine that Philip could have approached this man in his moving chariot. But Philip was given an opening when he heard the man reading aloud (a common practice in the ancient world) and recognized the words of the prophet Isaiah.

Now every good evangelist takes advantage of these kinds of opportunities, what educators might call “teachable moments.” Already open to the action of God in him, Philip ran to the chariot to open the words of the prophet and to “proclaim Jesus.”

This story of Philip reminds us that when we are responsive to God’s life in us, we too will find opportunities to witness to others about Jesus—sometimes with our words, and more often with our actions and attitudes.

“Like a sheep he was led to the slaughter, and as a lamb before its shearer is silent,
so he opened not his mouth.
33In [his] humiliation justice was denied him.
Who will tell of his posterity?
For his life is taken from the earth.”

34Then the eunuch said to Philip in reply, “I beg you, about whom is the prophet saying this? About himself, or about someone else?” 35Then Philip opened his mouth and, beginning with this scripture passage, he proclaimed Jesus to him. 36*k*As they traveled along the road they came to some water, and the eunuch said, “Look, there is water. What is to prevent my being baptized?” [37*] 38Then he ordered the chariot to stop, and Philip and the eunuch both went down into the water, and he baptized him. 39When they came out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord snatched Philip away, and the eunuch saw him no more, but continued on his way rejoicing.l 40Philip came to Azotus, and went about proclaiming the good news to all the towns until he reached Caesarea.m

10[i]There was a disciple in Damascus named Ananias, and the Lord said to him in a vision, “Ananias.” He answered, “Here I am, Lord.” 11The Lord said to him, “Get up and go to the street called Straight and ask at the house of Judas for a man from Tarsus named Saul. He is there praying,[j] 12and [in a vision] he has seen a man named Ananias come in and lay [his] hands on him, that he may regain his sight.” 13But Ananias replied, “Lord, I have heard from many sources about this man, what evil things he has done to your holy ones* in Jerusalem.[k] 14And here he has authority from the chief priests to imprison all who call upon your name.”[l] 15But the Lord said to him, “Go, for this man is a chosen instrument of mine to carry my name before Gentiles, kings, and Israelites,[m] 16and I will show him what he will have to suffer for my name.” 17So Ananias went and entered the house; laying his hands on him, he said, “Saul, my brother, the Lord has sent me, Jesus who appeared to you on the way by which you came, that you may regain your sight and be filled with the holy Spirit.” 18Immediately things like scales fell from his eyes and he regained his sight. He got up and was baptized, 19and when he had eaten, he recovered his strength.*

Saul Preaches in Damascus

He stayed some days with the disciples in Damascus, [20]and he began at once to proclaim Jesus in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God.* [21]All who heard him were astounded and said, “Is not this the man who in Jerusalem ravaged those who call upon this name, and came here expressly to take them back in chains to the chief priests?” [22]But Saul grew all the stronger and confounded [the] Jews who lived in Damascus, proving that this is the Messiah.

[28]He moved about freely with them in Jerusalem, and spoke out boldly in the name of the Lord. [29]He also spoke and debated with the Hellenists,* but they tried to kill him. Paul of Tarsus

Paul is perhaps the most fascinating personality in the NT. We cannot overestimate his impact on Christian thought. He was born “Saul,” a Diaspora Jew from Tarsus, in the Cilician mountains in Asia Minor, now modern Turkey, between A.D. 1 and 10. Paul is the Greek version of his Jewish name (Acts 13:9), for he was truly “bicultural,” at home in both the Jewish and Gentile worlds of his time.

Little is known of his early life and upbringing, although he himself provides numerous personal details in his letters (see “Paul on Paul”). Acts says that Paul was educated in Jerusalem by the great rabbi Gamaliel (22:3), which may account for his extensive knowledge of the Jewish Scriptures. Like his mentor Gamaliel, Paul belonged to the Pharisees, a party opposed to the Sadducees. Acts shows Paul using this fact to great effect to split the Sanhedrin when he is called upon to defend his message (23:6-9). Both Paul and the author of Acts acknowledge that he was a zealous Jew who persecuted the early church.

Acts goes on to describe Paul’s conversion “on the road to Damascus,” something that Paul recounts only in rather vague terms as a “revelation of Jesus Christ” (Gal 2:12). This event clearly transformed Paul dramatically. He who was one of the church’s most ardent opponents became its most articulate promoter. Although we label this moment Paul’s “conversion,” it is portrayed more properly as a prophetic “call,” such as that of Isaiah, Jeremiah, or Ezekiel (see “Call of the Prophets”). Nonetheless, it has become a primary model of conversions ever since. This divine call focused primarily on Paul as “the apostle to the Gentiles” (Acts 9:15; Rom 11:13). Most of Paul’s communities were likely a mixture of both Jews and Gentiles; but Paul’s primary mission was to the Gentile world, where he experienced his greatest success.

Paul’s primary legacy has been left in his letters, all of which predate the canonical gospels by decades (ca. A.D. 51–62). Paul never chose to write a gospel. In fact, he shows little interest in the historical details of Jesus’ life. Rather, he puts his energy fully into his missionary work and evangelical message. He traveled extensively throughout the Mediterranean region, founding many churches and preaching the Gospel. He also visited other Christian communities that he did not found (e.g., Colossae, Rome), often expanding and interpreting the message of the faith.

Paul used letters, sent usually by couriers, as a primary means of ongoing contact with these communities. The NT contains thirteen letters attributed to Paul, but other letters have been lost to history (e.g., the Letter to the Laodiceans [Col 4:16]). Paul never intended to write a systematic treatise about the Christian faith, but his letters are the source of many Christian ideas that have been developed throughout history (e.g., Jesus as the new Adam, the Trinity, Abraham as a model of faith, justification by faith, etc.).

Paul must have been an incredibly strong person. He endured many hardships, and he was willing to challenge other leading Christian authorities when he thought it was important (e.g., Peter and James, the brother of the Lord [Acts 15; Gal 2]). His letters often contained explicit directions about ethical and doctrinal matters facing his congregations. The NT does not record Paul’s death by beheading, but ancient tradition places it in Rome around the same time as Peter’s martyrdom, most likely under the persecution by the emperor Nero (early A.D. 60s).

Barnabas, Son of Encouragement

Great things don’t just happen—people of courage make them happen. Barnabas, a faithful disciple, was just such a person of courage. Consider these examples:

Saul had built his reputation by persecuting Christ’s followers—little wonder they distrusted his conversion! It was Barnabas who pleaded Saul’s case and convinced the apostles of Saul’s sincerity (Acts 9:27).

When the church in Antioch became filled with non-Jews (Acts 11:19-26), it was Barnabas who was sent to investigate. Recognizing the work of the Lord in Antioch, Barnabas encouraged them to remain faithful and brought Saul/Paul to minister there. This Antioch church coined the very term “Christian” and became the headquarters of Paul’s missionary journeys.

Barnabas and Paul journey together through Asia Minor preaching first to the Jews and then to Gentiles (Acts 13–15). They parted ways at the start of the second journey, but Barnabas continued to minister in Cyprus.

Barnabas provided the invaluable ministry of encouraging others. He spoke with conviction to encourage the apostles to trust Saul, one who would become the greatest among missionaries. Barnabas encouraged fledgling communities to remain faithful and these communities provided nourishment for countless believers. Barnabas was “the man behind the man,” the one who filled others with the courage to do great things.

The Church at Peace

31 [*]The church throughout all Judea, Galilee, and Samaria was at peace. It was being built up and walked in the fear of the Lord, and with the consolation of the holy Spirit it grew in numbers.

Peter Heals Aeneas at Lydda

[32]As Peter was passing through every region, he went down to the holy ones living in Lydda. [33]There he found a man named Aeneas, who had been confined to bed for eight years, for he was paralyzed. [34]Peter said to him, “Aeneas, Jesus Christ heals you. Get up and make your bed.” He got up at once. [35]And all the inhabitants of Lydda and Sharon saw him, and they turned to the Lord.

[36]Now in Joppa there was a disciple named Tabitha (which translated means Dorcas).* She was completely occupied with good deeds and almsgiving. [37]Now during those days she fell sick and died, so after washing her, they laid [her] out in a room upstairs. [38]Since Lydda was near Joppa, the disciples, hearing that Peter was there, sent two men to him with the request, “Please come to us without delay.” [39]So Peter got up and went with them. When he arrived, they took him to the room upstairs where all the widows came to him weeping and showing him the tunics and cloaks that Dorcas had made while she was with them. [40]Peter sent them all out and knelt down and prayed. Then he turned to her body and said, “Tabitha, rise up.” She opened her eyes, saw Peter, and sat up.[q] [41]He gave her his hand and raised her up, and when he had called the holy ones and the widows, he presented her alive. [42]This became known all over Joppa, and many came to believe in the Lord. [43]*[r]And he stayed a long time in Joppa with Simon, a tanner.

10 [1]Now in Caesarea there was a man named Cornelius, a centurion of the Cohort called the Italica, [2]devout and God-fearing along with his whole household, who used to give alms generously* to the Jewish people and pray to God constantly. [3]One afternoon about three o'clock,* he saw plainly in a vision an angel of God come in to him and say to him, "Cornelius." [4]He looked intently at him and, seized with fear, said, "What is it, sir?" He said to him, "Your prayers and almsgiving have ascended as a memorial offering before God. [5]Now send some men to Joppa and summon one Simon who is called Peter. [6]He is staying with another Simon, a tanner, who has a house by the sea."[b] [7]When the angel who spoke to him had left, he called two of his servants and a devout soldier* from his staff, [8]explained everything to them, and sent them to Joppa.

9*The next day, while they were on their way and nearing the city, Peter went up to the roof terrace to pray at about noontime.* 10He was hungry and wished to eat, and while they were making preparations he fell into a trance. 11[c]He saw heaven opened and something resembling a large sheet coming down, lowered to the ground by its four corners. 12In it were all the earth's four-legged animals and reptiles and the birds of the sky. 13A voice said to him, "Get up, Peter. Slaughter and eat." 14But Peter said, "Certainly not, sir. For never have I eaten anything profane and unclean."[d] 15The voice spoke to him again, a second time, "What God has made clean, you are not to call profane."[e] 16This happened three times, and then the object was taken up into the sky.

What is the reason for your being here?" 22They answered, "Cornelius, a centurion, an upright and God-fearing man, respected by the whole Jewish nation, was directed by a holy angel to summon you to his house and to hear what you have to say."[g] 23So he invited them in and showed them hospitality.

Gal 2:11-16

The next day he got up and went with them, and some of the brothers from Joppa went with him. [24]On the following day he entered Caesarea. Cornelius was expecting them and had called together his relatives and close friends. [25][h]When Peter entered, Cornelius met him and, falling at his feet, paid him homage. [26]Peter, however, raised him up, saying, "Get up. I myself am also a human being." [27]While he conversed with him, he went in and found many people gathered together [28][i]and said to them, "You know that it is unlawful for a Jewish man to associate with, or visit, a Gentile, but God has shown me that I should not call any person profane or unclean. [29]And that is why I came without objection when sent for. May I ask, then, why you summoned me?"

[30]Cornelius replied, "Four days ago* at this hour, three o'clock in the afternoon, I was at prayer in my house when suddenly a man in dazzling robes stood before me and said, [31]'Cornelius, your prayer has been heard and your almsgiving remembered before God. [32]Send therefore to Joppa and summon Simon, who is called Peter. He is a guest in the house of Simon, a tanner, by the sea.' [33]So I sent for you immediately, and you were kind enough to come. Now therefore we are all here in the presence of God to listen to all that you have been commanded by the Lord."

Cornelius the Bridge Builder

Imagine having a comfortable job assignment with a sizeable income on the shores of the Mediterranean, at Caesarea—a seaport rivaling the best in the world and the site of great athletic games. That was the situation of Cornelius, a Roman centurion.

In many ways, Cornelius defied the stereotypes that might have been assumed of a soldier of a foreign occupying force. The author of Acts is quick to point out that he was "devout and God-fearing" and was generous to the Jewish people. He was a person of prayer. In his prayer he was led to seek out Peter and the message he was proclaiming.

The story unfolds quickly and we see that the Spirit of God is poured out on this Roman centurion and his entire household. Imagine now what he was risking in getting involved so intimately with the people of the region and with their religion. His baptism would have set him apart from his Roman peers and his Gentile status would have set him apart from the early generation of Jews who followed Jesus.

The curiosity and persistence of Cornelius allowed him to serve as a kind of bridge between two worlds. In one world, the covenant was reserved for those obedient to Mosaic law, and, in the other, the covenant was now available to all who receive the gift of faith. Cornelius reminds us that God works in ways that are not predictable.

44 [p]While Peter was still speaking these things, the holy Spirit fell upon all who were listening to the word.* 45 The circumcised believers who had accompanied Peter were astounded that the gift of the holy Spirit should have been poured out on the Gentiles also, 46 for they could hear them speaking in tongues and glorifying God. Then Peter responded, 47 “Can anyone withhold the water for baptizing these people, who have received the holy Spirit even as we have?”[q] 48 He ordered them to be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ. 49 Then they invited him to stay for a few days.

11 1Now the apostles and the brothers who were in Judea heard that the Gentiles too had accepted the word of God. 2So when Peter went up to Jerusalem the circumcised believers confronted him, 3saying, “You entered* the house of uncircumcised people and ate with them.” 4Peter began and explained it to them step by step, saying, 5[a]“I was at prayer in the city of Joppa when in a trance I had a vision, something resembling a large sheet coming down, lowered from the sky by its four corners, and it came to me. 6Looking intently into it, I observed and saw the four-legged animals of the earth, the wild beasts, the reptiles, and the birds of the sky. 7I also heard a voice say to me, ‘Get up, Peter. These six brothers* also went with me, and we entered the man’s house. 13He related to us how he had seen [the] angel standing in his house, saying, ‘Send someone to Joppa and summon Simon, who is called Peter, 14who will speak words to you by which you and all your household will be saved.’[b] 15As I began to speak, the holy Spirit fell upon them as it had upon us at the beginning,[c] 16and I remembered the word of the Lord, how he had said, ‘John baptized with water but you will be baptized with the holy Spirit.’[d] 17If then God gave them the same gift he gave to us when we came to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, who was I to be able to hinder God?”[e] 18When they heard this, they stopped objecting and glorified God, saying, “God has then granted life-giving repentance to the Gentiles too.”

[19]Now those who had been scattered by the persecution that arose because of Stephen went as far as Phoenicia, Cyprus, and Antioch, preaching the word to no one but Jews.[f] [20]There were some Cypriots and Cyrenians among them, however, who came to Antioch and began to speak to the Greeks as well, proclaiming the Lord Jesus. [21]The hand of the Lord was with them and a great number who believed turned to the Lord. [22]The news about them reached the ears of the church in Jerusalem, and they sent Barnabas [to go] to Antioch. [23]When he arrived and saw the grace of God, he rejoiced and encouraged them all to remain faithful to the Lord in firmness of heart, [24]for he was a good man, filled with the holy Spirit and faith. And a large number of people was added to the Lord. [25]Then he went to Tarsus to look for Saul, [26]and when he had found him he brought him to Antioch. For a whole year they met with the church and taught a large number of people, and it was in Antioch that the disciples were first called Christians.*

[27]At that time some prophets came down from Jerusalem to Antioch, [28]and one of them named Agabus stood up and predicted by the Spirit that there would be a severe famine all over the world, and it happened under Claudius.[g] [29]So the disciples determined that, according to ability,[h] each should send relief to the brothers who lived in Judea. [30]*This they did, sending it to the presbyters in care of Barnabas and Saul.

Herod’s Persecution of the Christians*

Jas 5:16

12 [1]About that time King Herod laid hands upon some members of the church to harm them. [2]He had James, the brother of John,* killed by the sword, [3]*and when he saw that this was pleasing to the Jews he proceeded to arrest Peter also. (It was [the] feast of Unleavened Bread.) [4]He had him taken into custody and put in prison under the guard of four squads of four soldiers each. He intended to bring him before the people after Passover. [5]Peter thus was being kept in prison, but prayer by the church was fervently being made to God on his behalf.[a]

[6]On the very night before Herod was to bring him to trial, Peter, secured by double chains, was sleeping between two soldiers, while outside the door guards kept watch on the prison. [7]Suddenly the angel of the Lord stood by him and a light shone in the cell. He tapped Peter on the side and awakened him, saying, “Get up quickly.” The chains fell from his wrists. [8]The angel said to him, “Put on your belt and your sandals.” He did so. Then he said to him, “Put on your cloak and follow me.” [9]So he followed him out, not realizing that what was happening through the angel was real; he thought he was seeing a vision. [10]They passed the first guard, then the second, and came to the iron gate leading out to the city, which opened for them by itself. They emerged and made their way down an alley, and suddenly the angel left him. [11]Then Peter recovered his senses and said, “Now I know for certain that [the] Lord sent his angel and rescued me from the hand of Herod and from all that the Jewish people had been expecting.” [12]When he realized this, he went to the house of Mary, the mother of John who is called Mark, where there were many people gathered in prayer.[b] [13]When he knocked on the gateway door, a maid named Rhoda came to answer it. [14]She was so overjoyed when she recognized Peter’s voice that, instead of opening the gate, she ran in and announced that Peter was standing at the gate. [15]They told her, “You are out of your mind,” but she insisted that it was so. But they kept saying, “It is his angel.” [16]But Peter continued to knock, and when they opened it, they saw him and were astounded. [17]He motioned to them with his hand to be quiet and explained [to them] how the Lord had led him out of the prison, and said, “Report this to James* and the brothers.” Then he left and went to another place. [18]At daybreak there was no small commotion among the soldiers over what had become of Peter.[c] [19]Herod, after instituting a search but not finding him, ordered the guards tried and executed. Then he left Judea to spend some time in Caesarea.

Herod’s Death

[20]*He had long been very angry with the people of Tyre and Sidon, who now came to him in a body. After winning over Blastus, the king’s chamberlain, they sued for peace because their country was supplied with food from the king’s territory. [21]On an appointed day, Herod, attired in royal robes, [and] seated on the rostrum, addressed them publicly. [22]The assembled crowd cried out, “This is the voice of a god, not of a man.” [23]At once the angel of the Lord struck him down because he did not ascribe the honor to God, and he was eaten by worms and breathed his last. [24]But the word of God continued to spread and grow.[d]

Mission of Barnabas and Saul

11:29-30

[25]After Barnabas and Saul completed their relief mission, they returned to Jerusalem,* taking with them John, who is called Mark.[e]

Peter and the apostles largely dominate Acts up to this point. Then the focus shifts primarily to Paul (Saul) and his companions. In broad strokes, Acts views the ministries of Peter and Paul and their respective companions in parallel fashion, as indicated below.

Peter’s Mission in Acts (2:1–12:24)	Paul’s Mission in Acts (13:1–28:31)

13 [1]*Now there were in the church at Antioch prophets and teachers: Barnabas, Symeon who was called Niger, Lucius of Cyrene, Manaen who was a close friend of Herod the tetrarch, and Saul. [2]While they were worshiping the Lord and fasting, the holy Spirit said, “Set apart for me Barnabas and Saul for the work to which I have called them.” [3]Then, completing their fasting and prayer, they laid hands on them and sent them off.

First Mission Begins in Cyprus

4*So they, sent forth by the holy Spirit, went down to Seleucia and from there sailed to Cyprus. 5When they arrived in Salamis, they proclaimed the word of God in the Jewish synagogues. They had John* also as their assistant. 6When they had traveled through the whole island as far as Paphos, they met a magician named Bar-Jesus who was a Jewish false prophet.* 7He was with the proconsul Sergius Paulus, a man of intelligence, who had summoned Barnabas and Saul and wanted to hear the word of God. 8But Elymas the magician (for that is what his name means) opposed them in an attempt to turn the proconsul away from the faith. 9But Saul, also known as Paul,* filled with the holy Spirit, looked intently at him 10and said, “You son of the devil, you enemy of all that is right, full of every sort of deceit and fraud. Will you not stop twisting the straight paths of [the] Lord? 11Even now the hand of the Lord is upon you. You will be blind, and unable to see the sun for a time.” Immediately a dark mist fell upon him, and he went about seeking people to lead him by the hand. 12When the proconsul saw what had happened, he came to believe, for he was astonished by the teaching about the Lord.

Paul’s Arrival at Antioch in Pisidia

[13]From Paphos, Paul and his companions set sail and arrived at Perga in Pamphylia. But John left them and returned to Jerusalem.[a] [14]They continued on from Perga and reached Antioch in Pisidia. On the sabbath they entered [into] the synagogue and took their seats. [15]After the reading of the law and the prophets, the synagogue officials sent word to them, “My brothers, if one of you has a word of exhortation for the people, please speak.”

[16]So Paul got up, motioned with his hand, and said, “Fellow Israelites and you others who are God-fearing, listen. [17]The God of this people Israel chose our ancestors and exalted the people during their sojourn in the land of Egypt.[b] With uplifted arm he led them out of it [18]and for about forty years he put up with* them in the desert.[c] [19]When he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he gave them their land as an inheritance[d] [20]at the end of about four hundred and fifty years.* After these things he provided judges up to Samuel [the] prophet.[e] [21]Then they asked for a king. God gave them Saul, son of Kish, a man from the tribe of Benjamin, for forty years.[f] [22]Then he removed him and raised up David as their king; of him he testified, ‘I have found David, son of Jesse, a man after my own heart; he will carry out my every wish.’[g] [23]From this man’s descendants God, according to his promise, has brought to Israel a savior, Jesus.[h] [24]John heralded his coming by proclaiming a baptism of repentance to all the people of Israel;[i] [25]and as John was completing his course, he would say, ‘What do you suppose that I am? I am not he. Behold, one is coming after me; I am not worthy to unfasten the sandals of his feet.’[j]

The historical origins of the synagogue are obscure. Basically, the synagogue was an assembly hall used by Jews in the Diaspora to gather for reading their sacred writings and for socialization. By the time of the apostolic mission described in Acts, the synagogue had become the only place for Jews to gather for worship, since the temple had been destroyed by the Romans in A.D. 70. Acts indicates that Paul generally went to the synagogue first for his preaching. When many of the Jews rejected his message, he would then turn to the Gentiles.

[37]But the one whom God raised up did not see corruption.[r] [38]You must know, my brothers, that through him forgiveness of sins is being proclaimed to you, [and] in regard to everything from which you could not be justified* under the law of Moses, [39]in him every believer is justified.[s] [40]Be careful, then, that what was said in the prophets not come about:

44On the following sabbath almost the whole city gathered to hear the word of the Lord. 45When the Jews saw the crowds, they were filled with jealousy and with violent abuse contradicted what Paul said. 46*u*Both Paul and Barnabas spoke out boldly and said, "It was necessary that the word of God be spoken to you first, but since you reject it and condemn yourselves as unworthy of eternal life, we now turn to the Gentiles.* 47For so the Lord has commanded us, 'I have made you a light to the Gentiles, that you may be an instrument of salvation to the ends of the earth.'"v

48The Gentiles were delighted when they heard this and glorified the word of the Lord. All who were destined for eternal life came to believe, 49and the word of the Lord continued to spread through the whole region. 50The Jews, however, incited the women of prominence who were worshipers and the leading men of the city, stirred up a persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them from their territory. 51*w*So they shook the dust from their feet in protest against them and went to Iconium.* 52The disciples were filled with joy and the holy Spirit.

2 Tm 3:11

14 [1]In Iconium they entered the Jewish synagogue together and spoke in such a way that a great number of both Jews and Greeks came to believe, [2]although the disbelieving Jews stirred up and poisoned the minds of the Gentiles against the brothers. [3]So they stayed for a considerable period, speaking out boldly for the Lord, who confirmed the word about his grace by granting signs and wonders to occur through their hands.[a] [4]The people of the city were divided: some were with the Jews; others, with the apostles. [5]When there was an attempt by both the Gentiles and the Jews, together with their leaders, to attack and stone them,[b] [6]they realized it and fled to the Lycaonian cities of Lystra and Derbe and to the surrounding countryside, [7]where they continued to proclaim the good news.

Paul and Barnabas at Lystra

8*At Lystra there was a crippled man, lame from birth, who had never walked. 9He listened to Paul speaking, who looked intently at him, saw that he had the faith to be healed, 10and called out in a loud voice, “Stand up straight on your feet.” He jumped up and began to walk about. 11When the crowds saw what Paul had done, they cried out in Lycaonian, “The gods have come down to us in human form.”[c] 12They called Barnabas “Zeus”* and Paul “Hermes,” because he was the chief speaker. 13And the priest of Zeus, whose temple was at the entrance to the city, brought oxen and garlands to the gates, for he together with the people intended to offer sacrifice.

14The apostles Barnabas and Paul tore their garments* when they heard this and rushed out into the crowd, shouting, 15*“Men, why are you doing this? We are of the same nature as you, human beings. We proclaim to you good news that you should turn from these idols to the living God, ‘who made heaven and earth and sea and all that is in them.’[d] 16In past generations he allowed all Gentiles to go their own ways;[e] 17yet, in bestowing his goodness, he did not leave himself without witness, for he gave you rains from heaven and fruitful seasons, and filled you with nourishment and gladness for your hearts.”[f] 18Even with these words, they scarcely restrained the crowds from offering sacrifice to them.

2 Cor 11:25; 2 Tm 3:11

19[g]However, some Jews from Antioch and Iconium arrived and won over the crowds. They stoned Paul and dragged him out of the city, supposing that he was dead. 20But when the disciples gathered around him, he got up and entered the city. On the following day he left with Barnabas for Derbe.

[21]After they had proclaimed the good news to that city and made a considerable number of disciples, they returned to Lystra and to Iconium and to Antioch. [22]They strengthened the spirits of the disciples and exhorted them to persevere in the faith, saying, “It is necessary for us to undergo many hardships to enter the kingdom of God.”h [23]They appointed presbyters* for them in each church and, with prayer and fasting, commended them to the Lord in whom they had put their faith. [24]Then they traveled through Pisidia and reached Pamphylia. [25]After proclaiming the word at Perga they went down to Attalia. [26]From there they sailed to Antioch, where they had been commended to the grace of God for the work they had now accomplished.i [27]And when they arrived, they called the church together and reported what God had done with them and how he had opened the door of faith to the Gentiles. [28]Then they spent no little time with the disciples.

15 [1]Some who had come down from Judea were instructing the brothers,[a] “Unless you are circumcised according to the Mosaic practice,[b] you cannot be saved.” [2]Because there arose no little dissension and debate by Paul and Barnabas with them, it was decided that Paul, Barnabas, and some of the others should go up to Jerusalem to the apostles and presbyters about this question. [3]They were sent on their journey by the church, and passed through Phoenicia and Samaria telling of the conversion of the Gentiles, and brought great joy to all the brothers. [4]When they arrived in Jerusalem, they were welcomed by the church, as well as by the apostles and the presbyters, and they reported what God had done with them. [5]But some from the party of the Pharisees who had become believers stood up and said, “It is necessary to circumcise them and direct them to observe the Mosaic law.”

There are two versions of the so-called Council of Jerusalem. One is here in Acts, the other is Paul’s explanation in Galatians (Gal 2:1-10). A chart outlines some of the tensions in the two accounts. It is also possible that Acts 11, the story of Cornelius, provides some background to this story, since it involves Peter’s revelation that unclean foods should not be a problem for those who follow Jesus.

Acts 15	Galatians 2
Because of a debate about circumcision, Paul and Barnabas are sent to Jerusalem to consult the apostles and presbyters about the question.	Paul goes to Jerusalem to confirm his “gospel to the Gentiles.”
	Titus is not compelled to be circumcised. Some opponents slip in to try to sabotage Paul’s efforts.
After much debate, Peter speaks to those assembled and confirms Paul’s ministry to the Gentiles and that “Jewish” burdens should not be placed upon them.	Paul’s ministry to the Gentiles is confirmed, as is Peter’s (Kephas) to the Jews.
	Paul agrees to take up a collection for the poor in Jerusalem.
James, leader of the Jerusalem church, speaks to the assembly and confirms that they should not “trouble the	Later, Kephas comes from Antioch, and under the influence of followers of James, leader of the Jerusalem church,

The issue seems to have been about circumcision, unlawful marriage, and eating unclean foods.	The issue seems to have been about circumcision and eating unclean foods.
Peter and James both confirm Paul’s mission to the Gentiles.	Paul struggles to retain his special mission to the Gentiles, even though Peter and others either opposed it to some degree or waffled on it.

[6]*The apostles and the presbyters met together to see about this matter. [7]After much debate had taken place, Peter got up and said to them, “My brothers, you are well aware that from early days God made his choice among you that through my mouth the Gentiles would hear the word of the gospel and believe.[c] [8]And God, who knows the heart, bore witness by granting them the holy Spirit just as he did us.[d] [9]He made no distinction between us and them, for by faith he purified their hearts.[e] [10]Why, then, are you now putting God to the test by placing on the shoulders of the disciples a yoke that neither our ancestors nor we have been able to bear?[f] [11]On the contrary, we believe that we are saved through the grace of the Lord Jesus,[g] in the same way as they.” [12]The whole assembly fell silent, and they listened while Paul and Barnabas described the signs and wonders God had worked among the Gentiles through them.

James on Dietary Law

[13]After they had fallen silent, James responded, “My brothers, listen to me. [14]Symeon has described how God first concerned himself with acquiring from among the Gentiles a people for his name. [15]The words of the prophets agree with this, as is written:

[19][i]It is my judgment, therefore, that we ought to stop troubling the Gentiles who turn to God, [20]but tell them by letter to avoid pollution from idols, unlawful marriage, the meat of strangled animals, and blood.[j] [21]For Moses, for generations now, has had those who proclaim him in every town, as he has been read in the synagogues every sabbath.”

[22]Then the apostles and presbyters, in agreement with the whole church, decided to choose representatives and to send them to Antioch with Paul and Barnabas. The ones chosen were Judas, who was called Barsabbas, and Silas, leaders among the brothers. [23]This is the letter delivered by them: “The apostles and the presbyters, your brothers, to the brothers in Antioch, Syria, and Cilicia of Gentile origin: greetings. [24]Since we have heard that some of our number [who went out] without any mandate from us have upset you with their teachings and disturbed your peace of mind, [25]we have with one accord decided to choose representatives and to send them to you along with our beloved Barnabas and Paul, [26]who have dedicated their lives to the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. [27]So we are sending Judas and Silas who will also convey this same message by word of mouth: [28][k]‘It is the decision of the holy Spirit and of us not to place on you any burden beyond these necessities, [29]namely, to abstain from meat sacrificed to idols, from blood, from meats of strangled animals, and from unlawful marriage. If you keep free of these, you will be doing what is right. Farewell.’”[l]

Delegates at Antioch

30And so they were sent on their journey. Upon their arrival in Antioch they called the assembly together and delivered the letter. 31When the people read it, they were delighted with the exhortation. 32Judas and Silas, who were themselves prophets, exhorted and strengthened the brothers with many words. 33After they had spent some time there, they were sent off with greetings of peace from the brothers to those who had commissioned them. [34]* 35But Paul and Barnabas remained in Antioch, teaching and proclaiming with many others the word of the Lord.

13:13

36*After some time, Paul said to Barnabas, “Come, let us make a return visit to see how the brothers are getting on in all the cities where we proclaimed the word of the Lord.” 37Barnabas wanted to take with them also John, who was called Mark, 38but Paul insisted that they should not take with them someone who had deserted them at Pamphylia and who had not continued with them in their work.m 39So sharp was their disagreement that they separated. Barnabas took Mark and sailed to Cyprus. 40But Paul chose Silas and departed after being commended by the brothers to the grace of the Lord. 41He traveled through Syria and Cilicia bringing strength to the churches.

Paul in Lycaonia: Timothy

16 [1]He reached [also] Derbe and Lystra where there was a disciple named Timothy, the son of a Jewish woman who was a believer, but his father was a Greek.[a] [2]The brothers in Lystra and Iconium spoke highly of him,[b] [3]and Paul wanted him to come along with him. On account of the Jews of that region, Paul had him circumcised,* for they all knew that his father was a Greek. [4]As they traveled from city to city, they handed on to the people for observance the decisions reached by the apostles and presbyters in Jerusalem. [5]Day after day the churches grew stronger in faith and increased in number.

Through Asia Minor

[6]They traveled through the Phrygian and Galatian territory because they had been prevented by the holy Spirit from preaching the message in the province of Asia. [7]When they came to Mysia, they tried to go on into Bithynia, but the Spirit of Jesus* did not allow them, [8]so they crossed through Mysia and came down to Troas. [9]During [the] night Paul had a vision. A Macedonian stood before him and implored him with these words, “Come over to Macedonia and help us.” [10]When he had seen the vision, we* sought passage to Macedonia at once, concluding that God had called us to proclaim the good news to them.

Timothy was one of Paul’s most beloved companions (cf. 1 Cor 4:17; Phil 2:19-22). Paul used him frequently as a messenger to his congregations. Two NT letters (1 and 2 Timothy) are addressed to him, although scholars are unsure whether Paul himself penned them.

Into Europe

11*We set sail from Troas, making a straight run for Samothrace, and on the next day to Neapolis, 12and from there to Philippi, a leading city in that district of Macedonia and a Roman colony. We spent some time in that city. 13On the sabbath we went outside the city gate along the river where we thought there would be a place of prayer. We sat and spoke with the women who had gathered there. 14One of them, a woman named Lydia, a dealer in purple cloth, from the city of Thyatira, a worshiper of God,* listened, and the Lord opened her heart to pay attention to what Paul was saying. 15After she and her household had been baptized, she offered us an invitation, "If you consider me a believer in the Lord, come and stay at my home," and she prevailed on us.

Ancient ruins at Philippi

Imprisonment at Philippi

16As we were going to the place of prayer, we met a slave girl with an oracular spirit,* who used to bring a large profit to her owners through her fortune-telling. 17She began to follow Paul and us, shouting, “These people are slaves of the Most High God, who proclaim to you a way of salvation.” 18She did this for many days. Paul became annoyed, turned, and said to the spirit, “I command you in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her.” Then it came out at that moment.

2 Cor 11:25; Phil 1:30; 1 Thes 2:2

19When her owners saw that their hope of profit was gone, they seized Paul and Silas and dragged them to the public square before the local authorities. 20They brought them before the magistrates* and said, “These people are Jews and are disturbing our city 21and are advocating customs that are not lawful for us Romans to adopt or practice.” 22[c]The crowd joined in the attack on them, and the magistrates had them stripped and ordered them to be beaten with rods. 23After inflicting many blows on them, they threw them into prison and instructed the jailer to guard them securely. 24When he received these instructions, he put them in the innermost cell and secured their feet to a stake.

Deliverance from Prison

[25]About midnight, while Paul and Silas were praying and singing hymns to God as the prisoners listened, [26]there was suddenly such a severe earthquake that the foundations of the jail shook; all the doors flew open, and the chains of all were pulled loose. [27]When the jailer woke up and saw the prison doors wide open, he drew [his] sword and was about to kill himself, thinking that the prisoners had escaped. [28]But Paul shouted out in a loud voice, “Do no harm to yourself; we are all here.” [29]He asked for a light and rushed in and, trembling with fear, he fell down before Paul and Silas. [30]Then he brought them out and said, “Sirs, what must I do to be saved?” [31]And they said, “Believe in the Lord Jesus and you and your household will be saved.” [32]So they spoke the word of the Lord to him and to everyone in his house. [33]He took them in at that hour of the night and bathed their wounds; then he and all his family were baptized at once. [34]He brought them up into his house and provided a meal and with his household rejoiced at having come to faith in God.

[35]But when it was day, the magistrates sent the lictors* with the order, “Release those men.” [36]The jailer reported the[se] words to Paul, “The magistrates have sent orders that you be released. Now, then, come out and go in peace.” [37]But Paul said to them, “They have beaten us publicly, even though we are Roman citizens and have not been tried, and have thrown us into prison.[d] And now, are they going to release us secretly? By no means. Let them come themselves and lead us out.”* [38]The lictors reported these words to the magistrates, and they became alarmed when they heard that they were Roman citizens.[e] [39]So they came and placated them, and led them out and asked that they leave the city. [40]When they had come out of the prison, they went to Lydia’s house where they saw and encouraged the brothers, and then they left.

[5]But the Jews became jealous and recruited some worthless men loitering in the public square, formed a mob, and set the city in turmoil. They marched on the house of Jason,[c] intending to bring them before the people’s assembly. [6]When they could not find them, they dragged Jason and some of the brothers before the city magistrates, shouting, “These people who have been creating a disturbance all over the world have now come here, [7]and Jason has welcomed them.[d] They all act in opposition to the decrees of Caesar and claim instead that there is another king, Jesus.” [8]They stirred up the crowd and the city magistrates who, upon hearing these charges, [9]took a surety payment from Jason and the others before releasing them.

Paul’s journeys took him to important cities in modern-day Turkey and Greece

1 Thes 3:1-2

10The brothers immediately sent Paul and Silas to Beroea during the night. Upon arrival they went to the synagogue of the Jews. 11These Jews were more fair-minded than those in Thessalonica, for they received the word with all willingness and examined the scriptures daily to determine whether these things were so.[e] 12Many of them became believers, as did not a few of the influential Greek women and men. 13But when the Jews of Thessalonica learned that the word of God had now been proclaimed by Paul in Beroea also, they came there too to cause a commotion and stir up the crowds. 14So the brothers at once sent Paul on his way to the seacoast, while Silas and Timothy remained behind.[f] 15After Paul’s escorts had taken him to Athens, they came away with instructions for Silas and Timothy to join him as soon as possible.

Paul in Athens*

1 Cor 1:22

16While Paul was waiting for them in Athens, he grew exasperated at the sight of the city full of idols. 17So he debated in the synagogue with the Jews and with the worshipers, and daily in the public square with whoever happened to be there. 18Even some of the Epicurean and Stoic philosophers* engaged him in discussion. Some asked, “What is this scavenger trying to say?” Others said, “He sounds like a promoter of foreign deities,” because he was preaching about ‘Jesus’ and ‘Resurrection.’ 19They took him and led him to the Areopagus* and said, “May we learn what this new teaching is that you speak of?[g] 20For you bring some strange notions to our ears; we should like to know what these things mean.” 21Now all the Athenians as well as the foreigners residing there used their time for nothing else but telling or hearing something new.

22 Then Paul stood up at the Areopagus and said:* “You Athenians, I see that in every respect you are very religious. 23 For as I walked around looking carefully at your shrines, I even discovered an altar inscribed, ‘To an Unknown God.’* What therefore you unknowingly worship, I proclaim to you. 24 The God who made the world and all that is in it, the Lord of heaven and earth, does not dwell in sanctuaries made by human hands,[h] 25 nor is he served by human hands because he needs anything. Rather it is he who gives to everyone life and breath and everything. 26 He made from one* the whole human race to dwell on the entire surface of the earth, and he fixed the ordered seasons and the boundaries of their regions, 27 so that people might seek God, even perhaps grope for him and find him, though indeed he is not far from any one of us.[i] 28 For ‘In him we live and move and have our being,’* as even some of your poets have said, ‘For we too are his offspring.’ 29 Since therefore we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the divinity is like an image fashioned from gold, silver, or stone by human art and imagination.[j] 30 God has overlooked the times of ignorance, but now he demands that all people everywhere repent 31 because he has established a day on which he will ‘judge the world with justice’ through a man he has appointed, and he has provided confirmation for all by raising him from the dead.”[k]

[32]When they heard about resurrection of the dead, some began to scoff, but others said, “We should like to hear you on this some other time.” [33]And so Paul left them. He went to visit them [3]and, because he practiced the same trade, stayed with them and worked, for they were tentmakers by trade. [4]Every sabbath, he entered into discussions in the synagogue, attempting to convince both Jews and Greeks.

[5]When Silas and Timothy came down from Macedonia, Paul began to occupy himself totally with preaching the word, testifying to the Jews that the Messiah was Jesus. [6]When they opposed him and reviled him, he shook out his garments* and said to them, “Your blood be on your heads! I am clear of responsibility. From now on I will go to the Gentiles.”[b] [7]So he left there and went to a house belonging to a man named Titus Justus, a worshiper of God;* his house was next to a synagogue.[c] 8Crispus,* the synagogue official,[d] came to believe in the Lord along with his entire household, and many of the Corinthians who heard believed and were baptized. 9[e]One night in a vision the Lord said to Paul, “Do not be afraid. Go on speaking, and do not be silent, 10for I am with you. No one will attack and harm you, for I have many people in this city.” 11He settled there for a year and a half and taught the word of God among them.

Accusations before Gallio

[12]But when Gallio was proconsul of Achaia,* the Jews rose up together against Paul and brought him to the tribunal, [13]saying, “This man is inducing people to worship God contrary to the law.”* [14]When Paul was about to reply, Gallio spoke to the Jews, “If it were a matter of some crime or malicious fraud, I should with reason hear the complaint of you Jews; [15]but since it is a question of arguments over doctrine and titles and your own law, see to it yourselves. I do not wish to be a judge of such matters.” [16]And he drove them away from the tribunal. [17]They all seized Sosthenes, the synagogue official, and beat him in full view of the tribunal. But none of this was of concern to Gallio.

Return to Syrian Antioch

21:24; Nm 6:18

[18]Paul remained for quite some time, and after saying farewell to the brothers he sailed for Syria, together with Priscilla and Aquila. At Cenchreae he had his hair cut[f] because he had taken a vow.* [19]When they reached Ephesus, he left them there, while he entered the synagogue and held discussions with the Jews. [20]Although they asked him to stay for a longer time, he did not consent, [21]but as he said farewell he promised, "I shall come back to you again, God willing." Then he set sail from Ephesus. [22]Upon landing at Caesarea, he went up and greeted the church* and then went down to Antioch. [23]*After staying there some time, he left and traveled in orderly sequence through the Galatian country and Phrygia, bringing strength to all the disciples.

At the beginning of the last century, a doctoral student in France was working with fragments of a Greek inscription found at Delphi. Assembling nine fragments, he concluded that they belonged to an imperial decree issued by Claudius in A.D. 52. The inscription mentions a Junius Gallio who was proconsul. If the story narrated by Luke in Acts 18 is historical, Paul's eighteen-month stay at Corinth (see Acts 18:11) during his second missionary journey must overlap with Gallio's tenure as proconsul of the province of Achaia. Though it is not possible to say more than this, the Gallio inscription, used along with other evidence, has made it possible to reconstruct the chronology of Paul's missionary journeys with some precision. It is likely that Paul's stay in Corinth lasted from the autumn of A.D. 50 to the summer of A.D. 52.

Apollos was a coworker of Paul and highly esteemed by the Corinthian community (1 Cor 1:12; 3:4). Acts alone records any biographical information about him.

Apollos

1 Cor 1:12

24A Jew named Apollos,[g] a native of Alexandria, an eloquent speaker, arrived in Ephesus. He was an authority on the scriptures.* 25He had been instructed in the Way of the Lord and, with ardent spirit, spoke and taught accurately about Jesus, although he knew only the baptism of John. 26He began to speak boldly in the synagogue; but when Priscilla and Aquila heard him, they took him aside and explained to him the Way [of God]* more accurately. 27And when he wanted to cross to Achaia, the brothers encouraged him and wrote to the disciples there to welcome him. After his arrival he gave great assistance to those who had come to believe through grace. 28He vigorously refuted the Jews in public, establishing from the scriptures that the Messiah is Jesus.

19 [1]*While Apollos was in Corinth, Paul traveled through the interior of the country and came [down] to Ephesus where he found some disciples. [2]He said to them, “Did you receive the holy Spirit when you became believers?” They answered him, “We have never even heard that there is a holy Spirit.” [3]He said, “How were you baptized?” They replied, “With the baptism of John.” [4]Paul then said, “John baptized with a baptism of repentance, telling the people to believe in the one who was to come after him, that is, in Jesus.”[a] [5]When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. [6]And when Paul laid [his] hands on them, the holy Spirit came upon them, and they spoke in tongues and prophesied.[b] [7]Altogether there were about twelve men.

Priscilla and Aquila, Building the Church

Priscilla and Aquila, a Roman couple living in exile in Corinth, learned the faith from Paul (Acts 18:1-3). This couple taught the faith to Apollos (18:26) and grew in faith with the community gathered in their home (Rom 16:3-5; 1 Cor 16:19).

Obviously, influence can be exercised in a number of ways, and this couple did so from their home. In the everyday business of their lives, they witnessed to the Gospel they had received, and as a result, others gathered around them and formed a community of believers. They earned the trust of Paul, the great evangelist, and likewise the trust of others seeking to know the truth.

As heads of a local community of believers, Priscilla and Aquila were essential to building the church. Their mission was neither to travel as Paul did nor to preach to the masses as Apollos but to gather other believers and to teach what they knew and experienced.

5:15-16; Lk 8:44-47

[8]He entered the synagogue, and for three months debated boldly with persuasive arguments about the kingdom of God. [9]But when some in their obstinacy and disbelief disparaged the Way before the assembly, he withdrew and took his disciples with him and began to hold daily discussions in the lecture hall of Tyrannus. [10]This continued for two years with the result that all the inhabitants of the province of Asia heard the word of the Lord, Jews and Greeks alike. [11]So extraordinary were the mighty deeds God accomplished at the hands of Paul [12]that when face cloths or aprons that touched his skin were applied to the sick, their diseases left them and the evil spirits came out of them.[c]

The Jewish Exorcists

[13]Then some itinerant Jewish exorcists tried to invoke the name of the Lord Jesus over those with evil spirits, saying, “I adjure you by the Jesus whom Paul preaches.” [14]When the seven sons of Sceva, a Jewish high priest, tried to do this, [15]the evil spirit said to them in reply, “Jesus I recognize, Paul I know, but who are you?” [16]The person with the evil spirit then sprang at them and subdued them all. He so overpowered them that they fled naked and wounded from that house. [17]When this became known to all the Jews and Greeks who lived in Ephesus, fear fell upon them all, and the name of the Lord Jesus was held in great esteem. [18]Many of those who had become believers came forward and openly acknowledged their former practices. [19]Moreover, a large number of those who had practiced magic collected their books and burned them in public. They calculated their value and found it to be fifty thousand silver pieces. [20]Thus did the word of the Lord continue to spread with influence and power.

Paul’s Plans

23:11; Rom 1:13; 15:22-32

[21]When this was concluded, Paul made up his mind to travel through Macedonia and Achaia, and then to go on to Jerusalem, saying, “After I have been there, I must visit Rome also.”[d] [22]Then he sent to Macedonia two of his assistants, Timothy and Erastus, while he himself stayed for a while in the province of Asia.

The Riot of the Silversmiths

[23]About that time a serious disturbance broke out concerning the Way. [24]There was a silversmith named Demetrius who made miniature silver shrines of Artemis* and provided no little work for the craftsmen. [25]He called a meeting of these and other workers in related crafts and said, “Men, you know well that our prosperity derives from this work. [26]As you can now see and hear, not only in Ephesus but throughout most of the province of Asia this Paul has persuaded and misled a great number of people by saying that gods made by hands are not gods at all.[e] [27]The danger grows, not only that our business will be discredited, but also that the temple of the great goddess Artemis will be of no account, and that she whom the whole province of Asia and all the world worship will be stripped of her magnificence.”

[28]When they heard this, they were filled with fury and began to shout, “Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!” [29]The city was filled with confusion, and the people rushed with one accord into the theater, seizing Gaius and Aristarchus, the Macedonians, Paul’s traveling companions.[f] [30]Paul wanted to go before the crowd, but the disciples would not let him, [31]and even some of the Asiarchs* who were friends of his sent word to him advising him not to venture into the theater. [32]Meanwhile, some were shouting one thing, others something else; the assembly was in chaos, and most of the people had no idea why they had come together. [33]Some of the crowd prompted Alexander, as the Jews pushed him forward, and Alexander signaled with his hand that he wished to explain something to the gathering. [34]But when they recognized that he was a Jew, they all shouted in unison, for about two hours, “Great is Artemis of the Ephesians!” [35]Finally the town clerk restrained the crowd and said, “You Ephesians, what person is there who does not know that the city of the Ephesians is the guardian of the temple* of the great Artemis and of her image that fell from the sky? [36]Since these things are undeniable, you must calm yourselves and not do anything rash. [37]The men you brought here are not temple robbers, nor have they insulted our goddess. [38]If Demetrius and his fellow craftsmen have a complaint against anyone, courts are in session, and there are proconsuls. Let them bring charges against one another. [39]If you have anything further to investigate, let the matter be settled in the lawful assembly, [40]for, as it is, we are in danger of being charged with rioting because of today’s conduct. There is no cause for it. We shall [not]* be able to give a reason for this demonstration.” With these words he dismissed the assembly.

Journey to Macedonia and Greece

1 Cor 16:1

20 [1]When the disturbance was over, Paul had the disciples summoned and, after encouraging them, he bade them farewell and set out on his journey to Macedonia.[a] [2]As he traveled throughout those regions, he provided many words of encouragement for them. Then he arrived in Greece, [3]where he stayed for three months. But when a plot was made against him by the Jews as he was about to set sail for Syria, he decided to return by way of Macedonia.

Eutychus

Reading this story without a sense of humor is really a tragedy. While the raising of a dead child is nothing to laugh about, the circumstances themselves are a humorous commentary on Paul talking "on and on." Modern speakers are sometimes accused of being out of touch with their audience, unaware that the message is not reaching them or has gone on too long. In this case, it was demonstrated quite graphically.

Eutychus himself is not the focus of the story but his situation provides the framework for focusing attention on the power of faith, of the spoken word, of the gathered community, and the breaking of bread. "There is life in him" is the message of Christianity. Physical life, emotional life, spiritual life, mental life—in all these ways we can bear witness to the effects of the Gospel message in our midst.

7On the first day of the week* when we gathered to break bread, Paul spoke to them because he was going to leave on the next day, and he kept on speaking until midnight. 8There were many lamps in the upstairs room where we were gathered, 9and a young man named Eutychus who was sitting on the window sill was sinking into a deep sleep as Paul talked on and on. Once overcome by sleep, he fell down from the third story and when he was picked up, he was dead. 10*d*Paul went down,* threw himself upon him, and said as he embraced him, “Don’t be alarmed; there is life in him.” 11Then he returned upstairs, broke the bread, and ate; after a long conversation that lasted until daybreak, he departed. 12And they took the boy away alive and were immeasurably comforted.

Journey to Miletus

[13]We went ahead to the ship and set sail for Assos where we were to take Paul on board, as he had arranged, since he was going overland. [14]When he met us in Assos, we took him aboard and went on to Mitylene. [15]We sailed away from there on the next day and reached a point off Chios, and a day later we reached Samos, and on the following day we arrived at Miletus. [16]*Paul had decided to sail past Ephesus in order not to lose time in the province of Asia, for he was hurrying to be in Jerusalem, if at all possible, for the day of Pentecost.

17From Miletus he had the presbyters of the church at Ephesus summoned. 18When they came to him, he addressed them, “You know how I lived among you the whole time from the day I first came to the province of Asia. 19I served the Lord with all humility and with the tears and trials that came to me because of the plots of the Jews, 20and I did not at all shrink from telling you what was for your benefit, or from teaching you in public or in your homes. 21I earnestly bore witness for both Jews and Greeks to repentance before God and to faith in our Lord Jesus. 22But now, compelled by the Spirit, I am going to Jerusalem. What will happen to me there I do not know, 23except that in one city after another the holy Spirit has been warning me that imprisonment and hardships await me.e 24Yet I consider life of no importance to me, if only I may finish my course and the ministry that I received from the Lord Jesus, to bear witness to the gospel of God’s grace.f 36When he had finished speaking he knelt down and prayed with them all. 37They were all weeping loudly as they threw their arms around Paul and kissed him, 38for they were deeply distressed that he had said that they would never see his face again. Then they escorted him to the ship.

Arrival at Tyre

21 [1]*When we had taken leave of them we set sail, made a straight run for Cos, and on the next day for Rhodes, and from there to Patara. [2]Finding a ship crossing to Phoenicia, we went on board and put out to sea. [3]We caught sight of Cyprus but passed by it on our left and sailed on toward Syria and put in at Tyre where the ship was to unload cargo. [4]There we sought out the disciples and stayed for a week. They kept telling Paul through the Spirit not to embark for Jerusalem. [5]At the end of our stay we left and resumed our journey. All of them, women and children included, escorted us out of the city, and after kneeling on the beach to pray, [6]we bade farewell to one another. Then we boarded the ship, and they returned home.

I am prepared not only to be bound but even to die in Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus.” 14[c]Since he would not be dissuaded we let the matter rest, saying,[d] “The Lord’s will be done.”*

15After these days we made preparations for our journey, then went up to Jerusalem. 16Some of the disciples from Caesarea came along to lead us to the house of Mnason, a Cypriot, a disciple of long standing, with whom we were to stay. 17*When we reached Jerusalem the brothers welcomed us warmly. 18The next day, Paul accompanied us on a visit to James, and all the presbyters were present. 19He greeted them, then proceeded to tell them in detail what God had accomplished among the Gentiles through his ministry. 20They praised God when they heard it but said to him, "Brother, you see how many thousands of believers there are from among the Jews, and they are all zealous observers of the law. 21They have been informed that you are teaching all the Jews who live among the Gentiles to abandon Moses and that you are telling them not to circumcise their children or to observe their customary practices. 22What is to be done? They will surely hear that you have arrived. 23*So do what we tell you. We have four men who have taken a vow.[e] 24Take these men and purify yourself with them, and pay their expenses* that they may have their heads shaved. In this way everyone will know that there is nothing to the reports they have been given about you but that you yourself live in observance of the law. 25[f]As for the Gentiles who have come to believe, we sent them our decision that they abstain from meat sacrificed to idols, from blood, from the meat of strangled animals, and from unlawful marriage."* 26So Paul took the men, and on the next day after purifying himself together with them entered the temple to give notice of the day when the purification would be completed and the offering made for each of them.[g]

[27]When the seven days were nearly completed, the Jews from the province of Asia noticed him in the temple, stirred up the whole crowd, and laid hands on him, [28]*h*shouting, “Fellow Israelites, help us. This is the man who is teaching everyone everywhere against the people and the law and this place, and what is more, he has even brought Greeks into the temple and defiled this sacred place.”* [29]For they had previously seen Trophimus the Ephesian in the city with him and supposed that Paul had brought him into the temple. [30]The whole city was in turmoil with people rushing together. They seized Paul and dragged him out of the temple, and immediately the gates were closed. [31]While they were trying to kill him, a report reached the cohort commander* that all Jerusalem was rioting. [32]He immediately took soldiers and centurions and charged down on them. When they saw the commander and the soldiers they stopped beating Paul. [33]The cohort commander came forward, arrested him, and ordered him to be secured with two chains; he tried to find out who he might be and what he had done. [34]Some in the mob shouted one thing, others something else; so, since he was unable to ascertain the truth because of the uproar, he ordered Paul to be brought into the compound. [35]When he reached the steps, he was carried by the soldiers because of the violence of the mob, [36]i*for a crowd of people followed and shouted, “Away with him!”

Getting It Right … Which James?

James is a common name in the NT that is given to several different individuals. A chart is useful to keep them straight.
See the related box on James, the brother of the Lord (at the end of the “Introduction to the New Testament”).

SUMMARY

Individual	Background	Key References

James, the brother of the Lord	Exact relationship to Jesus is uncertain: Protestant interpretation holds that he is a blood-brother, while the Catholic Church teaches that he is a cousin or other relative; leader of the believers in Jerusalem; reputed author of the Letter of James; was martyred in Jerusalem ca. A.D. 62	1 Cor 9:5; 15:7; Gal 1:19; Acts 12:17; 15:13-21
James, son of Zebedee	Brother of John; one of the Twelve (apostles) and the inner circle of Jesus; later called James the Great (Elder) or Major to distinguish him from the son of Alphaeus; martyred under Herod Agrippa I in A.D. 44	Mt 10:2-4; Mk 3:16-19; 10:35-45; Lk 6:14-16; Acts 12:2
James, son of Alphaeus	Called James the Less (Younger) or Minor because he appears only in the lists of the Twelve	Mt 10:3; Mk 3:18; Lk 6:15; Acts 1:13
James, son of Mary	Sometimes mistakenly identified with James the Less, but he was not a member of the Twelve; brother of Joses (Joseph)	Mt 27:56; Mk 15:40; 16:1; Lk 24:10
James, father of Judas	The father of another Judas (not the betrayer), a member of the Twelve about whom nothing else is known	Lk 6:16; Acts 1:13

[37]Just as Paul was about to be taken into the compound, he said to the cohort commander, “May I say something to you?” He replied, “Do you speak Greek? [38]So then you are not the Egyptian* who started a revolt some time ago and led the four thousand assassins into the desert?”[j] [39]Paul answered, “I am a Jew, of Tarsus in Cilicia, a citizen of no mean city; I request you to permit me to speak to the people.” [40]When he had given his permission, Paul stood on the steps and motioned with his hand to the people; and when all was quiet he addressed them in Hebrew.*

[22][m]They listened to him until he said this, but then they raised their voices and shouted, “Take such a one as this away from the earth. It is not right that he should live.”* [23]And as they were yelling and throwing off their cloaks and flinging dust into the air, [24]the cohort commander ordered him to be brought into the compound and gave instruction that he be interrogated under the lash to determine the reason why they were making such an outcry against him. [25][n]But when they had stretched him out for the whips, Paul said to the centurion on duty, “Is it lawful for you to scourge a man who is a Roman citizen and has not been tried?”* [26]When the centurion heard this, he went to the cohort commander and reported it, saying, “What are you going to do? This man is a Roman citizen.” [27]Then the commander came and said to him, “Tell me, are you a Roman citizen?” “Yes,” he answered. [28]The commander replied, “I acquired this citizenship for a large sum of money.” Paul said, “But I was born one.” [29]At once those who were going to interrogate him backed away from him, and the commander became alarmed when he realized that he was a Roman citizen and that he had had him bound.

Citizenship in the ancient Mediterranean world was originally a simple description of one’s place of birth or of residence. By the time of the Roman Empire, citizenship came to be associated with male privilege in the city of Rome and eventually throughout the empire. Once citizenship was acquired, usually by birth or by service to the empire (though sometimes also as a result of adoption or freedom from slavery), it was passed through one’s family. During the time of the first-century church, Roman citizens enjoyed, among other rights, the right to fair trial (Acts 16:37), exemption from torture (Acts 22:25), and appeal to the emperor (Acts 25:11). Such rights gradually eroded as the Roman Empire decayed.

Paul Before the Sanhedrin

30The next day, wishing to determine the truth about why he was being accused by the Jews, he freed him and ordered the chief priests and the whole Sanhedrin to convene. Then he brought Paul down and made him stand before them.

For it is written,[c] ‘You shall not curse a ruler of your people.’”*

[6]Paul was aware that some were Sadducees and some Pharisees, so he called out before the Sanhedrin, “My brothers, I am a Pharisee, the son of Pharisees; [I] am on trial for hope in the resurrection of the dead.”[d] [7]When he said this, a dispute broke out between the Pharisees and Sadducees, and the group became divided. [8]For the Sadducees say that there is no resurrection or angels or spirits, while the Pharisees acknowledge all three.[e] [9]A great uproar occurred, and some scribes belonging to the Pharisee party stood up and sharply argued, “We find nothing wrong with this man. Suppose a spirit or an angel has spoken to him?” [10]The dispute was so serious that the commander, afraid that Paul would be torn to pieces by them, ordered his troops to go down and rescue him from their midst and take him into the compound. [11]*[f] The following night the Lord stood by him and said, “Take courage. For just as you have borne witness to my cause in Jerusalem, so you must also bear witness in Rome.”

Transfer to Caesarea

12When day came, the Jews made a plot and bound themselves by oath not to eat or drink until they had killed Paul. 13There were more than forty who formed this conspiracy. 14They went to the chief priests and elders and said, “We have bound ourselves by a solemn oath to taste nothing until we have killed Paul. 15You, together with the Sanhedrin, must now make an official request to the commander to have him bring him down to you, as though you meant to investigate his case more thoroughly. We on our part are prepared to kill him before he arrives.” 16The son of Paul’s sister, however, heard about the ambush; so he went and entered the compound and reported it to Paul. 17Paul then called one of the centurions* and requested, “Take this young man to the commander; he has something to report to him.” 18So he took him and brought him to the commander and explained, “The prisoner Paul called me and asked that I bring this young man to you; he has something to say to you.” 19The commander took him by the hand, drew him aside, and asked him privately, “What is it you have to report to me?” 20He replied, “The Jews have conspired to ask you to bring Paul down to the Sanhedrin tomorrow, as though they meant to inquire about him more thoroughly, 21but do not believe them. More than forty of them are lying in wait for him; they have bound themselves by oath not to eat or drink until they have killed him. They are now ready and only wait for your consent.” 22As the commander dismissed the young man he directed him, “Tell no one that you gave me this information.”

23Then he summoned two of the centurions and said, “Get two hundred soldiers ready to go to Caesarea by nine o’clock tonight,* along with seventy horsemen and two hundred auxiliaries. 24Provide mounts for Paul to ride and give him safe conduct to Felix the governor.” 25Then he wrote a letter with this content: 26*“Claudius Lysias to his excellency the governor Felix, greetings.* 27This man, seized by the Jews and about to be murdered by them, I rescued after intervening with my troops when I learned that he was a Roman citizen.[g] 28I wanted to learn the reason for their accusations against him so I brought him down to their Sanhedrin. 29I discovered that he was accused in matters of controversial questions of their law and not of any charge deserving death or imprisonment.[h] 30Since it was brought to my attention that there will be a plot against the man, I am sending him to you at once, and have also notified his accusers to state [their case] against him before you."

On Felix, see the chart on Roman Authorities in "Background to the Gospels," p. 1969.

[31]So the soldiers, according to their orders, took Paul and escorted him by night to Antipatris. [32]The next day they re turned to the compound, leaving the horsemen to complete the journey with him. [33]When they arrived in Caesarea they delivered the letter to the governor and presented Paul to him. [34]When he had read it and asked to what province he belonged, and learned that he was from Cilicia, [35]he said, "I shall hear your case when your accusers arrive." Then he ordered that he be held in custody in Herod's praetorium.

24 [1]Five days later the high priest Ananias came down with some elders and an advocate, a certain Tertullus, and they presented formal charges against Paul to the governor. [2]When he was called, Tertullus began to accuse him, saying, “Since we have attained much peace through you, and reforms have been accomplished in this nation through your provident care, [3]we acknowledge this in every way and everywhere, most excellent Felix, with all gratitude. [4]But in order not to detain you further, I ask you to give us a brief hearing with your customary graciousness. [5][a]We found this man to be a pest; he creates dissension among Jews all over the world and is a ringleader of the sect of the Nazoreans.* [6]He even tried to desecrate our temple, but we arrested him.[b] [[7]]* [8]If you examine him you will be able to learn from him for yourself about everything of which we are accusing him.” [9]The Jews also joined in the attack and asserted that these things were so.

[10]*Then the governor motioned to him to speak and Paul replied, “I know that you have been a judge over this nation for many years and so I am pleased to make my defense before you. [11]As you can verify, not more than twelve days have passed since I went up to Jerusalem to worship. [12]Neither in the temple, nor in the synagogues, nor anywhere in the city did they find me arguing with anyone or instigating a riot among the people. [13]Nor can they prove to you the accusations they are now making against me. [14]But this I do admit to you, that according to the Way, which they call a sect, I worship the God of our ancestors and I believe everything that is in accordance with the law and written in the prophets.[c] [15]I have the same hope in God as they themselves have that there will be a resurrection of the righteous and the unrighteous.[d] [16]Because of this, I always strive to keep my conscience clear before God and man.[e] [17]After many years, I came to bring alms for my nation and offerings.[f] [18]While I was so engaged, they found me, after my purification, in the temple without a crowd or disturbance.[g] [19]But some Jews from the province of Asia, who should be here before you to make whatever accusation they might have against me—[20]or let these men themselves state what crime they discovered when I stood before the Sanhedrin, [21]unless it was my one outcry as I stood among them, that 'I am on trial before you today for the resurrection of the dead.'"[h]

[22]Then Felix, who was accurately informed about the Way, postponed the trial, saying, "When Lysias the commander comes down, I shall decide your case." [23]He gave orders to the centurion that he should be kept in custody but have some liberty, and that he should not prevent any of his friends from caring for his needs.

Captivity in Caesarea

[24]*Several days later Felix came with his wife Drusilla, who was Jewish. He had Paul summoned and listened to him speak about faith in Christ Jesus. [25]But as he spoke about righteousness and self-restraint and the coming judgment, Felix became frightened and said, “You may go for now; when I find an opportunity I shall summon you again.” [26]At the same time he hoped that a bribe would be offered him by Paul, and so he sent for him very often and conversed with him.

[27]Two years passed and Felix was succeeded by Porcius Festus. Wishing to ingratiate himself with the Jews, Felix left Paul in prison.*

On Portius Festus, see the chart on Roman Authorities in “Background to the Gospels,” p. 1969.

Appeal to Caesar

25 [1]Three days after his arrival in the province, Festus went up from Caesarea to Jerusalem [2]where the chief priests and Jewish leaders presented him their formal charges against Paul.* They asked him [3]as a favor to have him sent to Jerusalem, for they were plotting to kill him along the way. [4]Festus replied that Paul was being held in custody in Caesarea and that he himself would be returning there shortly. [5]He said, “Let your authorities come down with me, and if this man has done something improper, let them accuse him.”

[6]After spending no more than eight or ten days with them, he went down to Caesarea, and on the following day took his seat on the tribunal and ordered that Paul be brought in. [7]When he appeared, the Jews who had come down from Jerusalem surrounded him and brought many serious charges against him, which they were unable to prove. [8]In defending himself Paul said, “I have committed no crime either against the Jewish law or against the temple or against Caesar.” [9]*Then Festus, wishing to ingratiate himself with the Jews, said to Paul in reply, “Are you willing to go up to Jerusalem and there stand trial before me on these charges?” [10]Paul answered, “I am standing before the tribunal of Caesar; this is where I should be tried. I have committed no crime against the Jews, as you very well know. [11]If I have committed a crime or done anything deserving death, I do not seek to escape the death penalty; but if there is no substance to the charges they are bringing against me, then no one has the right to hand me over to them. I appeal to Caesar.” [12]Then Festus, after conferring with his council, replied, “You have appealed to Caesar. To Caesar you will go.”

Paul Before King Agrippa

[13]When a few days had passed, King Agrippa and Bernice* arrived in Caesarea on a visit to Festus. [14]Since they spent several days there, Festus referred Paul’s case to the king, saying, “There is a man here left in custody by Felix.[a] [15]When I was in Jerusalem the chief priests and the elders of the Jews brought charges against him and demanded his condemnation. [16]I answered them that it was not Roman practice to hand over an accused person before he has faced his accusers and had the opportunity to defend himself against their charge. [17]So when [they] came together here, I made no delay; the next day I took my seat on the tribunal and ordered the man to be brought in. [18][b]His accusers stood around him, but did not charge him with any of the crimes I suspected. [19]Instead they had some issues with him about their own religion and about a certain Jesus who had died but who Paul claimed was alive. [20]Since I was at a loss how to investigate this controversy, I asked if he were willing to go to Jerusalem and there stand trial on these charges. [21]And when Paul appealed that he be held in custody for the Emperor’s decision, I ordered him held until I could send him to Caesar.” [22]Agrippa said to Festus, “I too should like to hear this man.” He replied, “Tomorrow you will hear him.”

[23]The next day Agrippa and Bernice came with great ceremony and entered the audience hall in the company of cohort commanders and the prominent men of the city and, by command of Festus, Paul was brought in. [24]And Festus said, “King Agrippa and all you here present with us, look at this man about whom the whole Jewish populace petitioned me here and in Jerusalem, clamoring that he should live no longer. [25]I found, however, that he had done nothing deserving death, and so when he appealed to the Emperor, I decided to send him. [26]But I have nothing definite to write about him to our sovereign; therefore I have brought him before all of you, and particularly before you, King Agrippa, so that I may have something to write as a result of this investigation. [27]For it seems senseless to me to send up a prisoner without indicating the charges against him.”

26 [1]Then Agrippa said to Paul, “You may now speak on your own behalf.” So Paul stretched out his hand and began his defense. [2]“I count myself fortunate, King Agrippa, that I am to defend myself before you today against all the charges made against me by the Jews, [3]especially since you are an expert in all the Jewish customs and controversies. And therefore I beg you to listen patiently. [4]My manner of living from my youth, a life spent from the beginning among my people and in Jerusalem, all [the] Jews know. [5][a]They have known about me from the start, if they are willing to testify, that I have lived my life as a Pharisee, the strictest party of our religion. [6][b]But now I am standing trial because of my hope in the promise made by God to our ancestors. [7]Our twelve tribes hope to attain to that promise as they fervently worship God day and night; and on account of this hope I am accused by Jews, O king. [8]Why is it thought unbelievable among you that God raises the dead? [9][c]I myself once thought that I had to do many things against the name of Jesus the Nazorean, [10]and I did so in Jerusalem. I imprisoned many of the holy ones with the authorization I received from the chief priests, and when they were to be put to death I cast my vote against them.[d] [11]Many times, in synagogue after synagogue, I punished them in an attempt to force them to blaspheme; I was so enraged against them that I pursued them even to foreign cities.

Acts recounts the conversion of Paul three times, hinting at its importance (cf. 9:1-19; 22:1-16; 26:12-18). The details in each account are not entirely consistent (e.g., the light, the voice, and what the witnesses saw or heard). Nonetheless, all three accounts strongly affirm Paul’s mission to the Gentiles.

Reactions to Paul’s Speech

24 While Paul was so speaking in his defense, Festus said in a loud voice, “You are mad, Paul; much learning is driving you mad.” 25 But Paul replied, “I am not mad, most excellent Festus; I am speaking words of truth and reason. 26 The king knows about these matters and to him I speak boldly, for I cannot believe that [any] of this has escaped his notice; this was not done in a corner.* 27 King Agrippa, do you believe the prophets?* I know you believe.” 28 Then Agrippa said to Paul, “You will soon persuade me to play the Christian.” 29 Paul replied, “I would pray to God that sooner or later not only you but all who listen to me today might become as I am except for these chains.”

Departure for Rome

27 [1]When it was decided that we should sail to Italy, they handed Paul and some other prisoners over to a centurion named Julius of the Cohort Augusta. [2]We went on board a ship from Adramyttium bound for ports in the province of Asia and set sail. Aristarchus, a Macedonian from Thessalonica, was with us.[a] [3]On the following day we put in at Sidon where Julius was kind enough to allow Paul to visit his friends who took care of him. [4]From there we put out to sea and sailed around the sheltered side of Cyprus because of the headwinds, [5]and crossing the open sea off the coast of Cilicia and Pamphylia we came to Myra in Lycia.

Storm and Shipwreck

[6]There the centurion found an Alexandrian ship that was sailing to Italy and put us on board. [7]For many days we made little headway, arriving at Cnidus only with difficulty, and because the wind would not permit us to continue our course we sailed for the sheltered side of Crete off Salmone. [8]We sailed past it with difficulty and reached a place called Fair Havens, near which was the city of Lasea.

[9]Much time had now passed and sailing had become hazardous because the time of the fast* had already gone by, so Paul warned them,[b] [10]“Men, I can see that this voyage will result in severe damage and heavy loss not only to the cargo and the ship, but also to our lives.” [11]The centurion, however, paid more attention to the pilot and to the owner of the ship than to what Paul said. [12]Since the harbor was unfavorably situated for spending the winter, the majority planned to put out to sea from there in the hope of reaching Phoenix, a port in Crete facing west-northwest, there to spend the winter.

Traveling in the ancient world was never taken for granted, seldom attempted without companions, and almost certainly not undertaken for leisure. It was a dangerous enterprise whether on foot (as with Israel’s ancestors) or by sea (as with the followers of Jesus as they fanned out across the Roman Empire). Paul himself describes the dangers inherent in travel in his colorful passage found in 2 Corinthians 11:25-26.

Although sea travel had been around for almost 2700 years at the time of the apostles, it was still a great risk to sail at the mercy of the winds and with maps whose accuracy depended on reading the position of the sun and stars. The safest period for sailing, with fair winds and clear skies, was from the end of May to mid-September. Sailing in the stormy season, between mid-November and mid-March, outlawed by Roman law, could account for the type of journey that Paul experienced on his forced journey to Rome with other prisoners. Often, as in this case, the ships that sailed were primarily concerned with transporting precious cargo such as grain. Generally, the needs of those on board a cargo ship (a place to sleep, food, water) were secondary to the safe delivery of the cargo itself.

[13]A south wind blew gently, and thinking they had attained their objective, they weighed anchor and sailed along close to the coast of Crete. [14]Before long an offshore wind of hurricane force called a "Northeaster" struck. [15]Since the ship was caught up in it and could not head into the wind we gave way and let ourselves be driven. [16]We passed along the sheltered side of an island named Cauda and managed only with difficulty to get the dinghy under control. [17]They hoisted it aboard, then used cables to undergird the ship. Because of their fear that they would run aground on the shoal of Syrtis, they lowered the drift anchor and were carried along in this way. [18]We were being pounded by the storm so violently that the next day they jettisoned some cargo, [19]and on the third day with their own hands they threw even the ship's tackle overboard. [20]Neither the sun nor the stars were visible for many days, and no small storm raged. Finally, all hope of our surviving was taken away.

[21]When many would no longer eat, Paul stood among them and said, "Men, you should have taken my advice and not have set sail from Crete and you would have avoided this disastrous loss. [22]I urge you now to keep up your courage; not one of you will be lost, only the ship. [23]For last night an angel of the God to whom [I] belong and whom I serve stood by me [24]and said, 'Do not be afraid, Paul. You are destined to stand before Caesar; and behold, for your sake, God has granted safety to all who are sailing with you.'[c] [25]Therefore, keep up your courage, men; I trust in God that it will turn out as I have been told. [26]We are destined to run aground on some island."

[27]On the fourteenth night, as we were still being driven about on the Adriatic Sea, toward midnight the sailors began to suspect that they were nearing land. [28]They took soundings and found twenty fathoms; a little farther on, they again took soundings and found fifteen fathoms.

[29]Fearing that we would run aground on a rocky coast, they dropped four anchors from the stern and prayed for day to come. [30]The sailors then tried to abandon ship; they lowered the dinghy to the sea on the pretext of going to lay out anchors from the bow. [31]But Paul said to the centurion and the soldiers, "Unless these men stay with the ship, you cannot be saved." [32]So the soldiers cut the ropes of the dinghy and set it adrift.

Mt 15:36; Mk 6:41; 8:6; Lk 22:19; 1 Cor 11:23-24

[33]Until the day began to dawn, Paul kept urging all to take some food. He said, "Today is the fourteenth day that you have been waiting, going hungry and eating nothing. [34]I urge you, therefore, to take some food; it will help you survive. Not a hair of the head of anyone of you will be lost." [35]When he said this, he took bread,* gave thanks to God in front of them all, broke it, and began to eat.[d] [36]They were all encouraged, and took some food themselves. [37]In all, there were two hundred seventy-six of us on the ship. [38]After they had eaten enough, they lightened the ship by throwing the wheat into the sea.

[39]When day came they did not recognize the land, but made out a bay with a beach. They planned to run the ship ashore on it, if they could. [40]So they cast off the anchors and abandoned them to the sea, and at the same time they unfastened the lines of the rudders, and hoisting the foresail into the wind, they made for the beach. [41]But they struck a sandbar and ran the ship aground. The bow was wedged in and could not be moved, but the stern began to break up under the pounding [of the waves]. [42]The soldiers planned to kill the prisoners so that none might swim away and escape, [43]but the centurion wanted to save Paul and so kept them from carrying out their plan. He ordered those who could swim to jump overboard first and get to the shore, [44]and then the rest, some on planks, others on debris from the ship. In this way, all reached shore safely.

28 [1]Once we had reached safety we learned that the island was called Malta. [2]The natives showed us extraordinary hospitality; they lit a fire and welcomed all of us because it had begun to rain and was cold. [3]Paul had gathered a bundle of brushwood and was putting it on the fire when a viper, escaping from the heat, fastened on his hand. [4]When the natives saw the snake hanging from his hand, they said to one another, “This man must certainly be a murderer; though he escaped the sea, Justice* has not let him remain alive.” [5]But he shook the snake off into the fire and suffered no harm. [6]They were expecting him to swell up or suddenly to fall down dead but, after waiting a long time and seeing nothing unusual happen to him, they changed their minds and began to say that he was a god.[a] [7]In the vicinity of that place were lands belonging to a man named Publius, the chief of the island. He welcomed us and received us cordially as his guests for three days. [8]It so happened that the father of Publius was sick with a fever and dysentery. Paul visited him and, after praying, laid his hands on him and healed him. [9]After this had taken place, the rest of the sick on the island came to Paul and were cured. [10]They paid us great honor and when we eventually set sail they brought us the provisions we needed.

The Appian Way dates from the early fourth century B.C.

Arrival in Rome

[11]Three months later we set sail on a ship that had wintered at the island. It was an Alexandrian ship with the Dioscuri* as its figurehead. [12]We put in at Syracuse and stayed there three days, [13]and from there we sailed round the coast and arrived at Rhegium. After a day, a south wind came up and in two days we reached Puteoli. [14]There we found some brothers and were urged to stay with them for seven days. And thus we came to Rome. [15]The brothers from there heard about us and came as far as the Forum of Appius and Three Taverns to meet us. On seeing them, Paul gave thanks to God and took courage. [16]When he entered Rome,* Paul was allowed to live by himself, with the soldier who was guarding him.

[17]Three days later he called together the leaders of the Jews. When they had gathered he said to them, “My brothers, although I had done nothing against our people or our ancestral customs, I was handed over to the Romans as a prisoner from Jerusalem.[b] [18]After trying my case the Romans wanted to release me, because they found nothing against me deserving the death penalty.[c] [19]But when the Jews objected, I was obliged to appeal to Caesar, even though I had no accusation to make against my own nation.[d] [20]This is the reason, then, I have requested to see you and to speak with you, for it is on account of the hope of Israel that I wear these chains.”[e] [21]They answered him, “We have received no letters from Judea about you, nor has any of the brothers arrived with a damaging report or rumor about you. [22]But we should like to hear you present your views, for we know that this sect is denounced everywhere.”[f]

[23]So they arranged a day with him and came to his lodgings in great numbers. From early morning until evening, he expounded his position to them, bearing witness to the kingdom of God and trying to convince them about Jesus from the law of Moses and the prophets. [24]Some were convinced by what he had said, while others did not believe. [25]*Without reaching any agreement among themselves they began to leave; then Paul made one final statement. “Well did the holy Spirit speak to your ancestors through the prophet Isaiah, saying:

[28]*h*Let it be known to you that this salvation of God has been sent to the Gentiles; they will listen.” [[29]]*

[30]*He remained for two full years in his lodgings. He received all who came to him, [31]and with complete assurance and without hindrance he proclaimed the kingdom of God and taught about the Lord Jesus Christ.

1:1-26 This introductory material (1:1-2) connects Acts with the Gospel of Luke, shows that the apostles were instructed by the risen Jesus (1:3-5), points out that the parousia or second coming in glory of Jesus will occur as certainly as his ascension occurred (1:6-11), and lists the members of the Twelve, stressing their role as a body of divinely mandated witnesses to his life, teaching, and resurrection (1:12-26).

1:3 Appearing to them during forty days: Luke considered especially sacred the interval in which the appearances and instructions of the risen Jesus occurred and expressed it therefore in terms of the sacred number forty (cf. Dt 8:2). In his gospel, however, Luke connects the ascension of Jesus with the resurrection by describing the ascension on Easter Sunday evening (Lk 24:50-53). What should probably be understood as one event (resurrection, glorification, ascension, sending of the Spirit—the paschal mystery) has been historicized by Luke when he writes of a visible ascension of Jesus after forty days and the descent of the Spirit at Pentecost. For Luke, the ascension marks the end of the appearances of Jesus except for the extraordinary appearance to Paul. With regard to Luke’s understanding of salvation history, the ascension also marks the end of the time of Jesus (Lk 24:50-53) and signals the beginning of the time of the church.

1:4 The promise of the Father: the holy Spirit, as is clear from the next verse. This gift of the Spirit was first promised in Jesus’ final instructions to his chosen witnesses in Luke’s gospel (Lk 24:49) and formed part of the continuing instructions of the risen Jesus on the kingdom of God, of which Luke speaks in Acts 1:3.

1:6 The question of the disciples implies that in believing Jesus to be the Christ (see the note on Lk 2:11) they had expected him to be a political leader who would restore self-rule to Israel during his historical ministry. When this had not taken place, they ask if it is to take place at this time, the period of the church.

1:7 This verse echoes the tradition that the precise time of the parousia is not revealed to human beings; cf. Mark 13:32; 1 Thessalonians 5:1-3.

1:8 Just as Jerusalem was the city of destiny in the Gospel of Luke (the place where salvation was accomplished), so here at the beginning of Acts, Jerusalem occupies a central position. It is the starting point for the mission of the Christian disciples to “the ends of the earth,” the place where the apostles were situated and the doctrinal focal point in the early days of the community (15:2, 6). The ends of the earth: for Luke, this means Rome.

1:18 Luke records a popular tradition about the death of Judas that differs from the one in Matthew 27:5, according to which Judas hanged himself. Here, although the text is not certain, Judas is depicted as purchasing a piece of property with the betrayal money and being killed on it in a fall.

1:26 The need to replace Judas was probably dictated by the symbolism of the number twelve, recalling the twelve tribes of Israel. This symbolism also indicates that for Luke (see Lk 22:30) the Christian church is a reconstituted Israel.

2:1-41 Luke’s pentecostal narrative consists of an introduction (2:1-13), a speech ascribed to Peter declaring the resurrection of Jesus and its messianic significance (2:14-36), and a favorable response from the audience (2:37-41). It is likely that the narrative telescopes events that took place over a period of time and on a less dramatic scale. The Twelve were not originally in a position to proclaim publicly the messianic office of Jesus without incurring immediate reprisal from those religious authorities in Jerusalem who had brought about Jesus’ death precisely to stem the rising tide in his favor.

2:2 There came from the sky a noise like a strong driving wind: wind and spirit are associated in John 3:8. The sound of a great rush of wind would herald a new action of God in the history of salvation.

2:3 Tongues as of fire: see Exodus 19:18 where fire symbolizes the presence of God to initiate the covenant on Sinai. Here the holy Spirit acts upon the apostles, preparing them to proclaim the new covenant with its unique gift of the Spirit (2:38).

2:4 To speak in different tongues: ecstatic prayer in praise of God, interpreted in Acts 2:6, 11 as speaking in foreign languages, symbolizing the worldwide mission of the church.

2:14-36 The first of six discourses in Acts (along with 3:12-26; 4:8-12; 5:29-32; 10:34-43; 13:16-41) dealing with the resurrection of Jesus and its messianic import. Five of these are attributed to Peter, the final one to Paul. Modern scholars term these discourses in Acts the “kerygma,” the Greek word for proclamation (cf. 1 Cor 15:11).

2:33 At the right hand of God: or “by the right hand of God.”

2:38 Repent and be baptized: repentance is a positive concept, a change of mind and heart toward God reflected in the actual goodness of one’s life. It is in accord with the apostolic teaching derived from Jesus (2:42) and ultimately recorded in the four gospels. Luke presents baptism in Acts as the expected response to the apostolic preaching about Jesus and associates it with the conferring of the Spirit (1:5; 10:44-48; 11:16).

2:42-47 The first of three summary passages (along with 4:32-37; 5:12-16) that outline, somewhat idyllically, the chief characteristics of the Jerusalem community: adherence to the teachings of the Twelve and the centering of its religious life in the eucharistic liturgy (2:42); a system of distribution of goods that led wealthier Christians to sell their possessions when the needs of the community’s poor required it (2:44 and the note on 4:32-37); and continued attendance at the temple, since in this initial stage there was little or no thought of any dividing line between Christianity and Judaism (2:46).

3:1–4:31 This section presents a series of related events: the dramatic cure of a lame beggar (3:1-10) produces a large audience for the kerygmatic discourse of Peter (3:11-26). The Sadducees, taking exception to the doctrine of resurrection, have Peter, John, and apparently the beggar as well, arrested (4:1-4) and brought to trial before the Sanhedrin. The issue concerns the authority by which Peter and John publicly teach religious doctrine in the temple (4:5-7). Peter replies with a brief summary of the kerygma, implying that his authority is prophetic (4:8-12). The court warns the apostles to abandon their practice of invoking prophetic authority in the name of Jesus (4:13-18). When Peter and John reply that the prophetic role cannot be abandoned to satisfy human objections, the court nevertheless releases them, afraid to do otherwise since the beggar, lame from birth and over forty years old, is a well-known figure in Jerusalem and the facts of his cure are common property (4:19-22). The narrative concludes with a prayer of the Christian community imploring divine aid against threats of persecution (4:23-31).

3:1 For the three o'clock hour of prayer: literally, "at the ninth hour of prayer." With the day beginning at 6 a.m., the ninth hour would be 3 p.m.

3:6-10 The miracle has a dramatic cast; it symbolizes the saving power of Christ and leads the beggar to enter the temple, where he hears Peter's proclamation of salvation through Jesus.

3:13 Has glorified: through the resurrection and ascension of Jesus, God reversed the judgment against him on the occasion of his trial. Servant: the Greek word can also be rendered as "son" or even "child" here and also in Acts 3:26; 4:25 (applied to David); Acts 4:27; and Acts 4:30. Scholars are of the opinion, however, that the original concept reflected in the words identified Jesus with the suffering Servant of the Lord of Isaiah 52:13–53:12.

3:14 The Holy and Righteous One: so designating Jesus emphasizes his special relationship to the Father (see Lk 1:35; 4:34) and emphasizes his sinlessness and religious dignity that are placed in sharp contrast with the guilt of those who rejected him in favor of Barabbas.

3:15 The author of life: other possible translations of the Greek title are "leader of life" or "pioneer of life." The title clearly points to Jesus as the source and originator of salvation.

3:17 Ignorance: a Lucan motif, explaining away the actions not only of the people but also of their leaders in crucifying Jesus. On this basis the presbyters in Acts could continue to appeal to the Jews in Jerusalem to believe in Jesus, even while affirming their involvement in his death because they were unaware of his messianic dignity. See also Acts 13:27 and Luke 23:34.

3:18 Through the mouth of all the prophets: Christian prophetic insight into the Old Testament saw the crucifixion and death of Jesus as the main import of messianic prophecy. The Jews themselves did not anticipate a suffering Messiah; they usually understood the Servant Song in Isaiah 52:13–53:12 to signify their own suffering as a people. In his typical fashion (cf. Lk 18:31; 24:25, 27, 44), Luke does not specify the particular Old Testament prophecies that were fulfilled by Jesus. See also the note on Luke 24:26.

3:20 The Lord … and send you the Messiah already appointed for you, Jesus: an allusion to the parousia or second coming of Christ, judged to be imminent in the apostolic age. This reference to its nearness is the only explicit one in Acts. Some scholars believe that this verse preserves a very early christology, in which the title “Messiah” (Greek “Christ”) is applied to him as of his parousia, his second coming (contrast 2:36). This view of a future messiahship of Jesus is not found elsewhere in the New Testament.

3:21 The times of universal restoration: like “the times of refreshment” (3:20), an apocalyptic designation of the messianic age, fitting in with the christology of Acts 3:20 that associates the messiahship of Jesus with his future coming.

3:22 A loose citation of Deuteronomy 18:15, which teaches that the Israelites are to learn the will of Yahweh from no one but their prophets. At the time of Jesus, some Jews expected a unique prophet to come in fulfillment of this text. Early Christianity applied this tradition and text to Jesus and used them especially in defense of the divergence of Christian teaching from traditional Judaism.

4:1 The priests, the captain of the temple guard, and the Sadducees: the priests performed the temple liturgy; the temple guard was composed of Levites, whose captain ranked next after the high priest. The Sadducees, a party within Judaism at this time, rejected those doctrines, including bodily resurrection, which they believed alien to the ancient Mosaic religion. The Sadducees were drawn from priestly families and from the lay aristocracy.

4:11 Early Christianity applied this citation from Psalm 118:22 to Jesus; cf. Mark 12:10; 1 Peter 2:7.

4:12 In the Roman world of Luke’s day, salvation was often attributed to the emperor who was hailed as “savior” and “god.” Luke, in the words of Peter, denies that deliverance comes through anyone other than Jesus.

4:27 Herod: Herod Antipas, ruler of Galilee and Perea from 4 B.C. to A.D. 39, who executed John the Baptist and before whom Jesus was arraigned; cf. Luke 23:6-12.

4:31 The place … shook: the earthquake is used as a sign of the divine presence in Exodus 19:18; Isaiah 6:4. Here the shaking of the building symbolizes God’s favorable response to the prayer. Luke may have had as an additional reason for using the symbol in this sense the fact that it was familiar in the Hellenistic world. Ovid and Virgil also employ it.

4:32-37 This is the second summary characterizing the Jerusalem community (see the note on 2:42-47). It emphasizes the system of the distribution of goods and introduces Barnabas, who appears later in Acts as the friend and companion of Paul, and who, as noted here (4:37), endeared himself to the community by a donation of money through the sale of property. This sharing of material possessions continues a practice that Luke describes during the historical ministry of Jesus (Lk 8:3) and is in accord with the sayings of Jesus in Luke’s gospel (Lk 12:33; 16:9, 11, 13).

5:1-11 The sin of Ananias and Sapphira did not consist in the withholding of part of the money but in their deception of the community. Their deaths are ascribed to a lie to the holy Spirit (5:3, 9), i.e., they accepted the honor accorded them by the community for their generosity, but in reality they were not deserving of it.

5:12-16 This, the third summary portraying the Jerusalem community, underscores the Twelve as its bulwark, especially because of their charismatic power to heal the sick; cf. Acts 2:42-47; 4:32-37.

5:17-42 A second action against the community is taken by the Sanhedrin in the arrest and trial of the Twelve; cf. Acts 4:1-3. The motive is the jealousy of the religious authorities over the popularity of the apostles (5:17) who are now charged with the defiance of the Sanhedrin’s previous order to them to abandon their prophetic role (5:28; cf. 4:18). In this crisis the apostles are favored by a miraculous release from prison (5:18-24). (For similar incidents involving Peter and Paul, see 12:6-11; 16:25-29.) The real significance of such an event, however, would be manifest only to people of faith, not to unbelievers; since the Sanhedrin already judged the Twelve to be inauthentic prophets, it could disregard reports of their miracles. When the Twelve immediately resumed public teaching, the Sanhedrin determined to invoke upon them the penalty of death (5:33) prescribed in Deuteronomy 13:6-10. Gamaliel's advice against this course finally prevailed, but it did not save the Twelve from the punishment of scourging (5:40) in a last endeavor to shake their conviction of their prophetic mission.

5:30 Hanging him on a tree: that is, crucifying him (cf. also Gal 3:13).

5:31 At his right hand: see the note on Acts 2:33.

5:34 Gamaliel: in Acts 22:3, Paul identifies himself as a disciple of this Rabbi Gamaliel I who flourished in Jerusalem between A.D. 25 and 50.

5:36-37 Gamaliel offers examples of unsuccessful contemporary movements to argue that if God is not the origin of this movement preached by the apostles it will perish by itself. The movement initiated by Theudas actually occurred when C. Cuspius Fadus was governor, A.D. 44–46. Luke's placing of Judas the Galilean after Theudas and at the time of the census (see the note on Lk 2:1-2) is an indication of the vagueness of his knowledge of these events.

6:1-7 The Hellenists … the Hebrews: the Hellenists were not necessarily Jews from the diaspora, but were more probably Palestinian Jews who spoke only Greek. The Hebrews were Palestinian Jews who spoke Hebrew or Aramaic and who may also have spoken Greek. Both groups belong to the Jerusalem Jewish Christian community. The conflict between them leads to a restructuring of the community that will better serve the community's needs. The real purpose of the whole episode, however, is to introduce Stephen as a prominent figure in the community whose long speech and martyrdom will be recounted in Acts 7.

6:2-4 The essential function of the Twelve is the "service of the word," including development of the kerygma by formulation of the teachings of Jesus.

6:2 To serve at table: some commentators think that it is not the serving of food that is described here but rather the keeping of the accounts that recorded the distribution of food to the needy members of the community. In any case, after Stephen and the others are chosen, they are never presented carrying out the task for which they were appointed (6:2-3). Rather, two of their number, Stephen and Philip, are presented as preachers of the Christian message. They, the Hellenist counterpart of the Twelve, are active in the ministry of the word.

6:6 They … laid hands on them: the customary Jewish way of designating persons for a task and invoking upon them the divine blessing and power to perform it.

6:8–8:1 The summary (6:7) on the progress of the Jerusalem community, illustrated by the conversion of the priests, is followed by a lengthy narrative regarding Stephen. Stephen's defense is not a response to the charges made against him but takes the form of a discourse that reviews the fortunes of God's word to Israel and leads to a prophetic declaration: a plea for the hearing of that word as announced by Christ and now possessed by the Christian community. The charges that Stephen depreciated the importance of the temple and the Mosaic law and elevated Jesus to a stature above Moses (6:13-14) were in fact true. Before the Sanhedrin, no defense against them was possible. With Stephen, who thus perceived the fuller implications of the teachings of Jesus, the differences between Judaism and Christianity began to appear. Luke's account of Stephen's martyrdom and its aftermath shows how the major impetus behind the Christian movement passed from Jerusalem, where the temple and law prevailed, to Antioch in Syria, where these influences were less pressing.

6:13 False witnesses: here, and in his account of Stephen's execution (7:54-60), Luke parallels the martyrdom of Stephen with the death of Jesus.

7:2-53 Stephen's speech represents Luke's description of Christianity's break from its Jewish matrix. Two motifs become prominent in the speech: (1) Israel's reaction to God's chosen leaders in the past reveals that the people have consistently rejected them; and (2) Israel has misunderstood God's choice of the Jerusalem temple as the place where he is to be worshiped.

7:2 God … appeared to our father Abraham … in Mesopotamia: the first of a number of minor discrepancies between the data of the Old Testament and the data of Stephen's discourse. According to Genesis 12:1, God first spoke to Abraham in Haran. The main discrepancies are these: in Acts 7:16 it is said that Jacob was buried in Shechem, whereas Genesis 50:13 says he was buried at Hebron; in the same verse it is said that the tomb was purchased by Abraham, but in Genesis 33:19 and Joshua 24:32 the purchase is attributed to Jacob himself.

7:55 He … saw … Jesus standing at the right hand of God: Stephen affirms to the Sanhedrin that the prophecy Jesus made before them has been fulfilled (Mk 14:62).

7:57 Covered their ears: Stephen's declaration, like that of Jesus, is a scandal to the court, which regards it as blasphemy.

7:59 Compare Luke 23:34, 46.

8:1-40 Some idea of the severity of the persecution that now breaks out against the Jerusalem community can be gathered from Acts 22:4 and Acts 26:9-11. Luke, however, concentrates on the fortunes of the word of God among people, indicating how the dispersal of the Jewish community resulted in the conversion of the Samaritans (8:4-17, 25). His narrative is further expanded to include the account of Philip's acceptance of an Ethiopian (8:26-39).

8:1 All were scattered … except the apostles: this observation leads some modern scholars to conclude that the persecution was limited to the Hellenist Christians and that the Hebrew Christians were not molested, perhaps because their attitude toward the law and temple was still more in line with that of their fellow Jews (see the charge leveled against the Hellenist Stephen in 6:13-14). Whatever the facts, it appears that the Twelve took no public stand regarding Stephen's position, choosing, instead, to await the development of events.

8:3 Saul … was trying to destroy the church: like Stephen, Saul was able to perceive that the Christian movement contained the seeds of doctrinal divergence from Judaism. A pupil of Gamaliel, according to Acts 22:3, and totally dedicated to the law as the way of salvation (Gal 1:13-14), Saul accepted the task of crushing the Christian movement, at least insofar as it detracted from the importance of the temple and the law. His vehement opposition to Christianity reveals how difficult it was for a Jew of his time to accept a messianism that differed so greatly from the general expectation.

8:9-13, 18-24 Sorcerers were well known in the ancient world. Probably the incident involving Simon and his altercation with Peter is introduced to show that the miraculous charisms possessed by members of the Christian community (8:6-7) were not to be confused with the magic of sorcerers.

8:16 Here and in Acts 10:44-48 and Acts 19:1-6, Luke distinguishes between baptism in the name of the Lord Jesus and the reception of the Spirit. In each case, the Spirit is conferred through members of the Twelve (Peter and John) or their representative (Paul). This may be Luke's way of describing the role of the church in the bestowal of the Spirit. Elsewhere in Acts, baptism and the Spirit are more closely related (1:5; 11:16).

8:18-20 Simon attempts to buy the gift of God (8:20) with money. Peter's cursing of Simon's attempt so to use his money expresses a typically Lucan attitude toward material wealth (cf. Lk 6:24; 12:16-21; 16:13).

8:26-40 In the account of the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch, Luke adduces additional evidence to show that the spread of Christianity outside the confines of Judaism itself was in accord with the plan of God. He does not make clear whether the Ethiopian was originally a convert to Judaism or, as is more probable, a "God-fearer" (10:1), i.e., one who accepted Jewish monotheism and ethic and attended the synagogue but did not consider himself bound by other regulations such as circumcision and observance of the dietary laws. The story of his conversion to Christianity is given a strong supernatural cast by the introduction of an angel (8:26), instruction from the holy Spirit (8:29), and the strange removal of Philip from the scene (8:39).

8:27 The Candace: Candace is not a proper name here but the title of a Nubian queen.

8:30-34 Philip is brought alongside the carriage at the very moment when the Ethiopian is pondering the meaning of Isaiah 53:7-8, a passage that Christianity, from its earliest origins, has applied to Jesus; cf. the note on Acts 3:13.

8:37 The oldest and best manuscripts of Acts omit this verse, which is a Western text reading: "And Philip said, 'If you believe with all your heart, you may.' And he said in reply, 'I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.' "

9:1-19 This is the first of three accounts of Paul's conversion (with 22:3-16 and 26:2-18) with some differences of detail owing to Luke's use of different sources. Paul's experience was not visionary but was precipitated by the appearance of Jesus, as he insists in 1 Corinthians 15:8. The words of Jesus, "Saul, Saul, why are you persecuting me?" related by Luke with no variation in all three accounts, exerted a profound and lasting influence on the thought of Paul. Under the influence of this experience he gradually developed his understanding of justification by faith (see the letters to the Galatians and Romans) and of the identification of the Christian community with Jesus Christ (see 1 Cor 12:27). That Luke would narrate this conversion three times is testimony to the importance he attaches to it. This first account occurs when the word is first spread to the Gentiles. At this point, the conversion of the hero of the Gentile mission is recounted. The emphasis in the account is on Paul as a divinely chosen instrument (9:15).

9:2 The Way: a name used by the early Christian community for itself (18:26; 19:9, 23; 22:4; 24:14, 22). The Essene community at Qumran used the same designation to describe its mode of life.

9:8 He could see nothing: a temporary blindness (9:18) symbolizing the religious blindness of Saul as persecutor (cf. 26:18).

9:13 Your holy ones: literally, "your saints."

9:19-30 This is a brief resume of Paul's initial experience as an apostolic preacher. At first he found himself in the position of being regarded as an apostate by the Jews and suspect by the Christian community of Jerusalem. His acceptance by the latter was finally brought about through his friendship with Barnabas (9:27).

9:20 Son of God: the title “Son of God” occurs in Acts only here, but cf. the citation of Psalm 2:7 in Paul’s speech at Antioch in Pisidia (13:33).

9:26 This visit of Paul to Jerusalem is mentioned by Paul in Galatians 1:18.

9:29 Hellenists: see the note on Acts 6:1-7.

9:31-43 In the context of the period of peace enjoyed by the community through the cessation of Paul’s activities against it, Luke introduces two traditions concerning the miraculous power exercised by Peter as he was making a tour of places where the Christian message had already been preached. The towns of Lydda, Sharon, and Joppa were populated by both Jews and Gentiles and their Christian communities may well have been mixed.

9:36 Tabitha (Dorcas), respectively the Aramaic and Greek words for “gazelle,” exemplifies the right attitude toward material possessions expressed by Jesus in the Lucan Gospel (Lk 6:30; 11:41; 12:33; 18:22; 19:8).

9:43 The fact that Peter lodged with a tanner would have been significant to both the Gentile and Jewish Christians, for Judaism considered the tanning occupation unclean.

10:1-48 The narrative centers on the conversion of Cornelius, a Gentile and a “God-fearer” (see the note on 8:26-40). Luke considers the event of great importance, as is evident from his long treatment of it. The incident is again related in Acts 11:1-18 where Peter is forced to justify his actions before the Jerusalem community and alluded to in Acts 15:7-11 where at the Jerusalem “Council” Peter supports Paul’s missionary activity among the Gentiles. The narrative divides itself into a series of distinct episodes, concluding with Peter’s presentation of the Christian kerygma (10:4-43) and a pentecostal experience undergone by Cornelius’ household preceding their reception of baptism (10:44-48).

10:1 The Cohort called the Italica: this battalion was an auxiliary unit of archers formed originally in Italy but transferred to Syria shortly before A.D. 69.

10:2 Used to give alms generously: like Tabitha (9:36), Cornelius exemplifies the proper attitude toward wealth (see the note on 9:36).

10:3 About three o’clock: literally, “about the ninth hour.” See the note on Acts 3:1.

10:7 A devout soldier: by using this adjective, Luke probably intends to classify him as a “God-fearer” (see the note on 8:26-40).

10:9-16 The vision is intended to prepare Peter to share the food of Cornelius’ household without qualms of conscience (10:48). The necessity of such instructions to Peter reveals that at first not even the apostles fully grasped the implications of Jesus’ teaching on the law. In Acts, the initial insight belongs to Stephen.

10:9 At about noontime: literally, “about the sixth hour.”

10:17-23 The arrival of the Gentile emissaries with their account of the angelic apparition illuminates Peter’s vision: he is to be prepared to admit Gentiles, who were considered unclean like the animals of his vision, into the Christian community.

10:24-27 So impressed is Cornelius with the apparition that he invites close personal friends to join him in his meeting with Peter. But his understanding of the person he is about to meet is not devoid of superstition, suggested by his falling down before him. For a similar experience of Paul and Barnabas, see Acts 14:11-18.

10:28 Peter now fully understands the meaning of his vision; see the note on Acts 10:17-23.

10:30 Four days ago: literally, “from the fourth day up to this hour.”

10:34-43 Peter’s speech to the household of Cornelius typifies early Christian preaching to Gentiles.

10:34-35 The revelation of God’s choice of Israel to be the people of God did not mean he withheld the divine favor from other people.

10:36-43 These words are more directed to Luke’s Christian readers than to the household of Cornelius, as indicated by the opening words, “You know.” They trace the continuity between the preaching and teaching of Jesus of Nazareth and the proclamation of Jesus by the early community. The emphasis on this divinely ordained continuity (10:41) is meant to assure Luke’s readers of the fidelity of Christian tradition to the words and deeds of Jesus.

10:36 To the Israelites: Luke, in the words of Peter, speaks of the prominent position occupied by Israel in the history of salvation.

10:38 Jesus of Nazareth: God’s revelation of his plan for the destiny of humanity through Israel culminated in Jesus of Nazareth. Consequently, the ministry of Jesus is an integral part of God’s revelation. This viewpoint explains why the early Christian communities were interested in conserving the historical substance of the ministry of Jesus, a tradition leading to the production of the four gospels.

10:39 We are witnesses: the apostolic testimony was not restricted to the resurrection of Jesus but also included his historical ministry. This witness, however, was theological in character; the Twelve, divinely mandated as prophets, were empowered to interpret his sayings and deeds in the light of his redemptive death and resurrection. The meaning of these words and deeds was to be made clear to the developing Christian community as the bearer of the word of salvation (cf. 1:21-26). Hanging him on a tree: see the note on Acts 5:30.

10:42 As judge of the living and the dead: the apostolic preaching to the Jews appealed to their messianic hope, while the preaching to Gentiles stressed the coming divine judgment; cf. 1 Thessalonians 1:10.

10:44 Just as the Jewish Christians received the gift of the Spirit, so too do the Gentiles.

11:1-18 The Jewish Christians of Jerusalem were scandalized to learn of Peter’s sojourn in the house of the Gentile Cornelius. Nonetheless, they had to accept the divine directions given to both Peter and Cornelius. They concluded that the setting aside of the legal barriers between Jew and Gentile was an exceptional ordinance of God to indicate that the apostolic kerygma was also to be directed to the Gentiles. Only in Acts 15 at the “Council” in Jerusalem does the evangelization of the Gentiles become the official position of the church leadership in Jerusalem.

11:3 You entered …: alternatively, this could be punctuated as a question.

11:12 These six brothers: companions from the Christian community of Joppa (see 10:23).

11:19-26 The Jewish Christian antipathy to the mixed community was reflected by the early missionaries generally. The few among them who entertained a different view succeeded in introducing Gentiles into the community at Antioch (in Syria). When the disconcerted Jerusalem community sent Barnabas to investigate, he was so favorably impressed by what he observed that he persuaded his friend Saul to participate in the Antioch mission.

11:26 Christians: “Christians” is first applied to the members of the community at Antioch because the Gentile members of the community enable it to stand out clearly from Judaism.

11:27-30 It is not clear whether the prophets from Jerusalem came to Antioch to request help in view of the coming famine or whether they received this insight during their visit there. The former supposition seems more likely. Suetonius and Tacitus speak of famines during the reign of Claudius (A.D. 41–54), while the Jewish historian Josephus mentions a famine in Judea in A.D. 46–48. Luke is interested, rather, in showing the charity of the Antiochene community toward the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem despite their differences on mixed communities.

11:30 Presbyters: this is the same Greek word that elsewhere is translated "elders," primarily in reference to the Jewish community.

12:1-19 Herod Agrippa ruled Judea A.D. 41–44. While Luke does not assign a motive for his execution of James and his intended execution of Peter, the broad background lies in Herod's support of Pharisaic Judaism. The Jewish Christians had lost the popularity they had had in Jerusalem (2:47), perhaps because of suspicions against them traceable to the teaching of Stephen.

12:2 James, the brother of John: this James, the son of Zebedee, was beheaded by Herod Agrippa ca. A.D. 44.

12:3, 4 Feast of Unleavened Bread … Passover: see the note on Luke 22:1.

12:17 To James: this James is not the son of Zebedee mentioned in Acts 12:2, but is James, the "brother of the Lord" (Gal 1:19), who in Acts 15; 21 is presented as leader of the Jerusalem Christian community. He left and went to another place: the conjecture that Peter left for Rome at this time has nothing to recommend it. His chief responsibility was still the leadership of the Jewish Christian community in Palestine (see Gal 2:7). The concept of the great missionary effort of the church was yet to come (see 13:1-3).

12:20-23 Josephus gives a similar account of Herod's death that occurred in A.D. 44. Early Christian tradition considered the manner of it to be a divine punishment upon his evil life. See 2 Kings 19:35 for the figure of the angel of the Lord in such a context.

12:25 They returned to Jerusalem: many manuscripts read "from Jerusalem," since Acts 11:30 implies that Paul and Barnabas are already in Jerusalem. This present verse could refer to a return visit or subsequent relief mission.

13:1-3 The impulse for the first missionary effort in Asia Minor is ascribed to the prophets of the Antiochene community, under the inspiration of the holy Spirit. Just as the Jerusalem community had earlier been the center of missionary activity, so too Antioch becomes the center from which the missionaries Barnabas and Saul are sent out.

13:4–14:27 The key event in Luke's account of the first missionary journey is the experience of Paul and Barnabas at Pisidian Antioch (13:14-52). The Christian kerygma proclaimed by Paul in the synagogue was favorably received. Some Jews and "God-fearers" (see the note on 8:26-40) became interested and invited the missionaries to speak again on the following sabbath (13:42). By that time, however, the appearance of a large number of Gentiles from the city had so disconcerted the Jews that they became hostile toward the apostles (13:44-50). This hostility of theirs appears in all three accounts of Paul's missionary journeys in Acts, the Jews of Iconium (14:1-2) and Beroea (17:11) being notable exceptions.

13:5 John: that is, John Mark (see 12:12, 25).

13:6 A magician named Bar-Jesus who was a Jewish false prophet: that is, he posed as a prophet. Again Luke takes the opportunity to dissociate Christianity from the magical acts of the time (13:7-11); see also Acts 8:18-24.

13:9 Saul, also known as Paul: there is no reason to believe that his name was changed from Saul to Paul upon his conversion. The use of a double name, one Semitic (Saul), the other Greco-Roman (Paul), is well attested (cf. Acts 1:23 Joseph Justus; Acts 12:12, 25, John Mark).

13:16-41 This is the first of several speeches of Paul to Jews proclaiming that the Christian church is the logical development of Pharisaic Judaism (see also 24:10-21; 26:2-23).

13:16 Who are God-fearing: see the note on Acts 8:26-40.

13:18 Put up with: some manuscripts read “sustained.”

13:20 At the end of about four hundred and fifty years: the manuscript tradition makes it uncertain whether the mention of four hundred and fifty years refers to the sojourn in Egypt before the Exodus, the wilderness period and the time of the conquest (see Ex 12:40-41), as the translation here suggests, or to the time between the conquest and the time of Samuel, the period of the judges, if the text is read, “After these things, for about four hundred and fifty years, he provided judges.”

13:31 The theme of the Galilean witnesses is a major one in the Gospel of Luke and in Acts and is used to signify the continuity between the teachings of Jesus and the teachings of the church and to guarantee the fidelity of the church’s teachings to the words of Jesus.

13:38-39 Justified: the verb is the same as that used in Paul’s letters to speak of the experience of justification and, as in Paul, is here connected with the term “to have faith” (“every believer”). But this seems the only passage about Paul in Acts where justification is mentioned. In Lucan fashion it is paralleled with “forgiveness of sins” (a theme at 2:38; 3:19; 5:31; 10:43) based on Jesus’ resurrection (13:37) rather than his cross, and is put negatively (13:38). Therefore, some would translate, “in regard to everything from which you could not be acquitted … every believer is acquitted.”

13:46 The refusal to believe frustrates God’s plan for his chosen people; however, no adverse judgment is made here concerning their ultimate destiny. Again, Luke, in the words of Paul, speaks of the priority of Israel in the plan for salvation (see 10:36).

13:51 See the note on Luke 9:5.

14:8-18 In an effort to convince his hearers that the divine power works through his word, Paul cures the cripple. However, the pagan tradition of the occasional appearance of gods among human beings leads the people astray in interpreting the miracle. The incident reveals the cultural difficulties with which the church had to cope. Note the similarity of the miracle worked here by Paul to the one performed by Peter in Acts 3:2-10.

14:12 Zeus … Hermes: in Greek religion, Zeus was the chief of the Olympian gods, the “father of gods and men”; Hermes was a son of Zeus and was usually identified as the herald and messenger of the gods.

14:14 Tore their garments: a gesture of protest.

14:15-17 This is the first speech of Paul to Gentiles recorded by Luke in Acts (cf. 17:22-31). Rather than showing how Christianity is the logical outgrowth of Judaism, as he does in speeches before Jews, Luke says that God excuses past Gentile ignorance and then presents a natural theology arguing for the recognition of God’s existence and presence through his activity in natural phenomena.

14:23 They appointed presbyters: the communities are given their own religious leaders by the traveling missionaries. The structure in these churches is patterned on the model of the Jerusalem community (11:30; 15:2, 5, 22; 21:18).

15:1-35 The Jerusalem “Council” marks the official rejection of the rigid view that Gentile converts were obliged to observe the Mosaic law completely. From here to the end of Acts, Paul and the Gentile mission become the focus of Luke’s writing.

15:1-5 When some of the converted Pharisees of Jerusalem discover the results of the first missionary journey of Paul, they urge that the Gentiles be taught to follow the Mosaic law. Recognizing the authority of the Jerusalem church, Paul and Barnabas go there to settle the question of whether Gentiles can embrace a form of Christianity that does not include this obligation.

15:6-12 The gathering is possibly the same as that recalled by Paul in Galatians 2:1-10. Note that in Acts 15:2 it is only the apostles and presbyters, a small group, with whom Paul and Barnabas are to meet. Here Luke gives the meeting a public character because he wishes to emphasize its doctrinal significance (see 15:22).

15:7-11 Paul’s refusal to impose the Mosaic law on the Gentile Christians is supported by Peter on the ground that within his own experience God bestowed the holy Spirit upon Cornelius and his household without preconditions concerning the adoption of the Mosaic law (see 10:44-47).

15:11 In support of Paul, Peter formulates the fundamental meaning of the gospel: that all are invited to be saved through faith in the power of Christ.

15:13-35 Some scholars think that this apostolic decree suggested by James, the immediate leader of the Jerusalem community, derives from another historical occasion than the meeting in question. This seems to be the case if the meeting is the same as the one related in Galatians 2:1-10. According to that account, nothing was imposed upon Gentile Christians in respect to Mosaic law; whereas the decree instructs Gentile Christians of mixed communities to abstain from meats sacrificed to idols and from blood-meats, and to avoid marriage within forbidden degrees of consanguinity and affinity (Lv 18), all of which practices were especially abhorrent to Jews. Luke seems to have telescoped two originally independent incidents here: the first a Jerusalem “Council” that dealt with the question of circumcision, and the second a Jerusalem decree dealing mainly with Gentile observance of dietary laws (see 21:25 where Paul seems to be learning of the decree for the first time).

15:14 Symeon: elsewhere in Acts he is called either Peter or Simon. The presence of the name Symeon here suggests that, in the source Luke is using for this part of the Jerusalem “Council” incident, the name may have originally referred to someone other than Peter (see 13:1 where the Antiochene Symeon Niger is mentioned). As the text now stands, however, it is undoubtedly a reference to Simon Peter (15:7).

15:34 Some manuscripts add, in various wordings, “But Silas decided to remain there.”

15:36–18:22 This continuous narrative recounts Paul’s second missionary journey. On the internal evidence of the Lucan account, it lasted about three years. Paul first visited the communities he had established on his first journey (16:1-5), then pushed on into Macedonia, where he established communities at Philippi, Thessalonica, and Beroea (16:7–17:5). To escape the hostility of the Jews of Thessalonica, he left for Greece and while resident in Athens attempted, without success, to establish an effective Christian community there. From Athens he proceeded to Corinth and, after a stay of a year and a half, returned to Antioch by way of Ephesus and Jerusalem (17:16–18:22). Luke does not concern himself with the structure or statistics of the communities but aims to show the general progress of the gospel in the Gentile world as well as its continued failure to take root in the Jewish community.

16:3 Paul had him circumcised: he did this in order that Timothy might be able to associate with the Jews and so perform a ministry among them. Paul did not object to the Jewish Christians' adherence to the law. But he insisted that the law could not be imposed on the Gentiles. Paul himself lived in accordance with the law, or as exempt from the law, according to particular circumstances (see 1 Cor 9:19-23).

16:7 The Spirit of Jesus: this is an unusual formulation in Luke's writings. The parallelism with Acts 16:6 indicates its meaning, the holy Spirit.

16:10-17 This is the first of the so-called "we-sections" in Acts, where Luke writes as one of Paul's companions. The other passages are Acts 20:5-15; 21:1-18; 27:1–28:16. Scholars debate whether Luke may not have used the first person plural simply as a literary device to lend color to the narrative. The realism of the narrative, however, lends weight to the argument that the "we" includes Luke or another companion of Paul whose data Luke used as a source.

16:11-40 The church at Philippi became a flourishing community to which Paul addressed one of his letters (see Introduction to the Letter to the Philippians).

16:14 A worshiper of God: a "God-fearer." See the note on Acts 8:26-40.

16:16 With an oracular spirit: literally, "with a Python spirit." The Python was the serpent or dragon that guarded the Delphic oracle. It later came to designate a "spirit that pronounced oracles" and also a ventriloquist who, it was thought, had such a spirit in the belly.

16:20 Magistrates: in Greek, stratēgoi, the popular designation of the duoviri, the highest officials of the Roman colony of Philippi.

16:35 The lictors: the equivalent of police officers, among whose duties were the apprehension and punishment of criminals.

16:37 Paul's Roman citizenship granted him special privileges in regard to criminal process. Roman law forbade under severe penalty the beating of Roman citizens (see also 22:25).

17:6-7 The accusations against Paul and his companions echo the charges brought against Jesus in Luke 23:2.

17:7 There is another king, Jesus: a distortion into a political sense of the apostolic proclamation of Jesus and the kingdom of God (see 8:12).

17:16-21 Paul's presence in Athens sets the stage for the great discourse before a Gentile audience in Acts 17:22-31. Although Athens was a politically insignificant city at this period, it still lived on the glories of its past and represented the center of Greek culture. The setting describes the conflict between Christian preaching and Hellenistic philosophy.

17:18 Epicurean and Stoic philosophers: for the followers of Epicurus (342–271 B.C.), the goal of life was happiness attained through sober reasoning and the searching out of motives for all choice and avoidance. The Stoics were followers of Zeno, a younger contemporary of Alexander the Great. Zeno and his followers believed in a type of pantheism that held that the spark of divinity was present in all reality and that, in order to be free, each person must live "according to nature." This scavenger: literally, "seed-picker," as of a bird that picks up grain. The word is later used of scrap collectors and of people who take other people's ideas and propagate them as if they were their own. Promoter of foreign deities: according to Xenophon, Socrates was accused of promoting new deities. The accusation against Paul echoes the charge against Socrates. ‘Jesus’ and ‘Resurrection’: the Athenians are presented as misunderstanding Paul from the outset; they think he is preaching about Jesus and a goddess named Anastasis, i.e., Resurrection.

17:19 To the Areopagus: the “Areopagus” refers either to the Hill of Ares west of the Acropolis or to the Council of Athens, which at one time met on the hill but which at this time assembled in the Royal Colonnade (Stoa Basileios).

17:22-31 In Paul’s appearance at the Areopagus he preaches his climactic speech to Gentiles in the cultural center of the ancient world. The speech is more theological than christological. Paul’s discourse appeals to the Greek world’s belief in divinity as responsible for the origin and existence of the universe. It contests the common belief in a multiplicity of gods supposedly exerting their powers through their images. It acknowledges that the attempt to find God is a constant human endeavor. It declares, further, that God is the judge of the human race, that the time of the judgment has been determined, and that it will be executed through a man whom God raised from the dead. The speech reflects sympathy with pagan religiosity, handles the subject of idol worship gently, and appeals for a new examination of divinity, not from the standpoint of creation but from the standpoint of judgment.

17:23 ‘To an Unknown God’: ancient authors such as Pausanias, Philostratus, and Tertullian speak of Athenian altars with no specific dedication as altars of “unknown gods” or “nameless altars.”

17:26 From one: many manuscripts read “from one blood.” Fixed … seasons: or “fixed limits to the epochs.”

17:28 ‘In him we live and move and have our being’: some scholars understand this saying to be based on an earlier saying of Epimenides of Knossos (6th century B.C.). ‘For we too are his offspring’: here Paul is quoting Aratus of Soli, a third-century B.C. poet from Cilicia.

18:2 Aquila … Priscilla: both may already have been Christians at the time of their arrival in Corinth (see 18:26). According to 1 Corinthians 16:19, their home became a meeting place for Christians. Claudius: the Emperor Claudius expelled the Jews from Rome ca. A.D. 49. The Roman historian Suetonius gives as reason for the expulsion disturbances among the Jews “at the instigation of Chrestos,” probably meaning disputes about the messiahship of Jesus.

18:6 Shook out his garments: a gesture indicating Paul’s repudiation of his mission to the Jews there; cf. Acts 28:17-31.

18:7 A worshiper of God: see the note on Acts 8:26-40.

18:8 Crispus: in 1 Corinthians 1:14 Paul mentions that Crispus was one of the few he himself baptized at Corinth.

18:12 When Gallio was proconsul of Achaia: Gallio’s proconsulship in Achaia is dated to A.D. 51–52 from an inscription discovered at Delphi. This has become an important date in establishing a chronology of the life and missionary work of Paul.

18:13 Contrary to the law: Gallio (18:15) understands this to be a problem of Jewish, not Roman, law.

18:18 He had his hair cut because he had taken a vow: a reference to a Nazirite vow (see Nm 6:1-21, especially, 6:18) taken by Paul (see also 21:23-27).

18:22 He went up and greeted the church: “going up” suggests a visit to the church in Jerusalem.

18:23–21:16 Luke’s account of Paul’s third missionary journey devotes itself mainly to his work at Ephesus (19:1–20:1). There is a certain restiveness on Paul's part and a growing conviction that the Spirit bids him return to Jerusalem and prepare to go to Rome (19:21).

18:24, 25 Apollos appears as a preacher who knows the teaching of Jesus in the context of John's baptism of repentance. Aquila and Priscilla instruct him more fully. He is referred to in 1 Corinthians 1:12; 3:5-6, 22.

18:26 The Way [of God]: for the Way, see the note on Acts 9:2. Other manuscripts here read "the Way of the Lord," "the word of the Lord," or simply "the Way."

19:1-6 Upon his arrival in Ephesus, Paul discovers other people at the same religious stage as Apollos, though they seem to have considered themselves followers of Christ, not of the Baptist. On the relation between baptism and the reception of the Spirit, see the note on Acts 8:16.

19:24 Miniature silver shrines of Artemis: the temple of Artemis at Ephesus was one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. Artemis, originally the Olympian virgin hunter, moon goddess, and goddess of wild nature, was worshiped at Ephesus as an Asian mother goddess and goddess of fertility. She was one of the most widely worshiped female deities in the Hellenistic world (see 18:27).

19:31 Asiarchs: the precise status and role of the Asiarchs is disputed. They appear to have been people of wealth and influence who promoted the Roman imperial cult and who may also have been political representatives in a league of cities in the Roman province of Asia.

19:35 Guardian of the temple: this title was accorded by Rome to cities that provided a temple for the imperial cult. Inscriptional evidence indicates that Ephesus was acknowledged as the temple keeper of Artemis and of the imperial cult. That fell from the sky: many scholars think that this refers to a meteorite that was worshiped as an image of the goddess.

19:40 Some manuscripts omit the negative in [not] be able, making the meaning, "There is no cause for which we shall be able to give a reason for this demonstration."

20:5 The second "we-section" of Acts begins here. See the note on Acts 16:10-17.

20:6 Feast of Unleavened Bread: see the note on Luke 22:1.

20:7 The first day of the week: the day after the sabbath and the first day of the Jewish week, apparently chosen originally by the Jerusalem community for the celebration of the liturgy of the Eucharist in order to relate it to the resurrection of Christ.

20:10 The action of Paul in throwing himself upon the dead boy recalls that of Elijah in 1 Kings 17:21 where the son of the widow of Zarephath is revived and that of Elisha in 2 Kings 4:34 where the Shunammite woman's son is restored to life.

20:16-35 Apparently aware of difficulties at Ephesus and neighboring areas, Paul calls the presbyters together at Miletus, about thirty miles from Ephesus. He reminds them of his dedication to the gospel (20:18-21), speaks of what he is about to suffer for the gospel (20:22-27), and admonishes them to guard the community against false prophets, sure to arise upon his departure (20:28-31). He concludes by citing a saying of Jesus (20:35) not recorded in the gospel tradition. Luke presents this farewell to the Ephesian presbyters as Paul's last will and testament.

20:28 Overseers: see the note on Philippians 1:1. The church of God: because the clause "that he acquired with his own blood" following "the church of God" suggests that “his own blood” refers to God’s blood, some early copyists changed “the church of God” to “the church of the Lord.” Some prefer the translation “acquired with the blood of his own,” i.e., Christ.

21:1-18 The third “we-section” of Acts (see the note on 16:10-17).

21:8 One of the Seven: see the note on Acts 6:2-4.

21:10 Agabus: mentioned in Acts 11:28 as the prophet who predicted the famine that occurred when Claudius was emperor.

21:11 The symbolic act of Agabus recalls those of Old Testament prophets. Compare Isaiah 20:2; Ezekiel 4:1; Jeremiah 13:1.

21:14 The Christian disciples’ attitude reflects that of Jesus (see Lk 22:42).

21:17-26 The leaders of the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem inform Paul that the Jews there believe he has encouraged the Jews of the diaspora to abandon the Mosaic law. According to Acts, Paul had no objection to the retention of the law by the Jewish Christians of Jerusalem and left the Jews of the diaspora who accepted Christianity free to follow the same practice.

21:23-26 The leaders of the community suggest that Paul, on behalf of four members of the Jerusalem community, make the customary payment for the sacrifices offered at the termination of the Nazirite vow (see Nm 6:1-24) in order to impress favorably the Jewish Christians in Jerusalem with his high regard for the Mosaic law. Since Paul himself had once made this vow (18:18), his respect for the law would be on public record.

21:24 Pay their expenses: according to Numbers 6:14-15 the Nazirite had to present a yearling lamb for a holocaust, a yearling ewe lamb for a sin offering, and a ram for a peace offering, along with food and drink offerings, upon completion of the period of the vow.

21:25 Paul is informed about the apostolic decree, seemingly for the first time (see the note on 15:13-35). The allusion to the decree was probably introduced here by Luke to remind his readers that the Gentile Christians themselves were asked to respect certain Jewish practices deriving from the law.

21:28 The charges against Paul by the diaspora Jews are identical to the charges brought against Stephen by diaspora Jews in Acts 6:13. Brought Greeks into the temple: non-Jews were forbidden, under penalty of death, to go beyond the Court of the Gentiles. Inscriptions in Greek and Latin on a stone balustrade marked off the prohibited area.

21:31 Cohort commander: literally, “the leader of a thousand in a cohort.” At this period the Roman cohort commander usually led six hundred soldiers, a tenth of a legion; but the number in a cohort varied.

21:36 Away with him: at the trial of Jesus before Pilate in Luke 23:18, the people similarly shout, “Away with this man.”

21:38 The Egyptian: according to the Jewish historian Josephus, an Egyptian gathered a large crowd on the Mount of Olives to witness the destruction of the walls of Jerusalem that would fall at the Egyptian “prophet’s” word. The commotion was put down by the Roman authorities and the Egyptian escaped, but only after thousands had been killed. Four thousand assassins: literally, sicarii. According to Josephus, these were political nationalists who removed their opponents by assassination with a short dagger, called in Latin a sica.

21:40 In Hebrew: meaning, perhaps, in Aramaic, which at this time was the Semitic tongue in common use.

22:1-21 Paul's first defense speech is presented to the Jerusalem crowds. Luke here presents Paul as a devout Jew (22:3) and zealous persecutor of the Christian community (22:4-5), and then recounts the conversion of Paul for the second time in Acts (see the note on 9:1-19).

22:15 His witness: like the Galilean followers during the historical ministry of Jesus, Paul too, through his experience of the risen Christ, is to be a witness to the resurrection (compare 1:8; 10:39-41; Lk 24:48).

22:21 Paul endeavors to explain that his position on the law has not been identical with that of his audience because it has been his prophetic mission to preach to the Gentiles to whom the law was not addressed and who had no faith in it as a way of salvation.

22:22 Paul's suggestion that his prophetic mission to the Gentiles did not involve his imposing the law on them provokes the same opposition as occurred in Pisidian Antioch (13:45).

22:25 Is it lawful for you to scourge a man who is a Roman citizen and has not been tried?: see the note on Acts 16:37.

23:2 The high priest Ananias: Ananias, son of Nedebaeus, was high priest from A.D. 47 to 59.

23:3 God will strike you: Josephus reports that Ananias was later assassinated in A.D. 66 at the beginning of the First Revolt.

23:5 Luke portrays Paul as a model of one who is obedient to the Mosaic law. Paul, because of his reverence for the law (Ex 22:27), withdraws his accusation of hypocrisy, "whitewashed wall" (cf. Mt 23:27), when he is told Ananias is the high priest.

23:11 The occurrence of the vision of Christ consoling Paul and assuring him that he will be his witness in Rome prepares the reader for the final section of Acts: the journey of Paul and the word he preaches to Rome under the protection of the Romans.

23:17 Centurions: a centurion was a military officer in charge of one hundred soldiers.

23:23 By nine o'clock tonight: literally, "by the third hour of the night." The night hours began at 6 p.m. Two hundred auxiliaries: the meaning of the Greek is not certain. It seems to refer to spearmen from the local police force and not from the cohort of soldiers, which would have numbered only 500–1000 men.

23:26-30 The letter emphasizes the fact that Paul is a Roman citizen and asserts the lack of evidence that he is guilty of a crime against the empire. The tone of the letter implies that the commander became initially involved in Paul's case because of his Roman citizenship, but this is not an exact description of what really happened (see 21:31-33; 22:25-29).

23:26 M. Antonius Felix was procurator of Judea from A.D. 52 to 60. His procuratorship was marked by cruelty toward and oppression of his Jewish subjects.

24:5 Nazoreans: that is, followers of Jesus of Nazareth.

24:7 The Western text has added here a verse (really Acts 24:6b-8a) that is not found in the best Greek manuscripts. It reads, "and would have judged him according to our own law, but the cohort commander Lysias came and violently took him out of our hands and ordered his accusers to come before you."

24:10-21 Whereas the advocate Tertullus referred to Paul's activities on his missionary journeys, the apostle narrowed the charges down to the riot connected with the incident in the temple (see 21:27-30; 24:17-20). In his defense, Paul stresses the continuity between Christianity and Judaism.

24:24, 25 The way of Christian discipleship greatly disquiets Felix, who has entered into an adulterous marriage with Drusilla, daughter of Herod Agrippa I. This marriage provides the background for the topics Paul speaks about and about which Felix does not want to hear.

24:27 Very little is known of Porcius Festus who was a procurator of Judea from A.D. 60 to 62.

25:2 Even after two years the animosity toward Paul in Jerusalem had not subsided (see 24:27).

25:9-12 Paul refuses to acknowledge that the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem has any jurisdiction over him now (25:11). Paul uses his right as a Roman citizen to appeal his case to the jurisdiction of the Emperor (Nero, ca. A.D. 60) (25:12). This move broke the deadlock between Roman protective custody of Paul and the plan of his enemies to kill him (25:3).

25:13 King Agrippa and Bernice: brother and sister, children of Herod Agrippa I whose activities against the Jerusalem community are mentioned in Acts 12:1-19. Agrippa II was a petty ruler over small areas in northern Palestine and some villages in Perea. His influence on the Jewish population of Palestine was insignificant.

26:2-23 Paul’s final defense speech in Acts is now made before a king (see 9:15). In the speech Paul presents himself as a zealous Pharisee and Christianity as the logical development of Pharisaic Judaism. The story of his conversion is recounted for the third time in Acts in this speech (see the note on 9:1-19).

26:4 Among my people: that is, among the Jews.

26:14 In Hebrew: see the note on Acts 21:40. It is hard for you to kick against the goad: this proverb is commonly found in Greek literature and in this context signifies the senselessness and ineffectiveness of any opposition to the divine influence in his life.

26:16 The words of Jesus directed to Paul here reflect the dialogues between Christ and Ananias (9:15) and between Ananias and Paul (22:14-15) in the two previous accounts of Paul’s conversion.

26:18 To open their eyes: though no mention is made of Paul’s blindness in this account (cf. 9:8-9, 12, 18; 22:11-13), the task he is commissioned to perform is the removal of other people’s spiritual blindness.

26:22 Saying nothing different from what the prophets and Moses foretold: see the note on Luke 18:31.

26:23 That the Messiah must suffer: see the note on Luke 24:26.

26:26 Not done in a corner: for Luke, this Greek proverb expresses his belief that he is presenting a story about Jesus and the church that is already well known. As such, the entire history of Christianity is public knowledge and incontestable. Luke presents his story in this way to provide “certainty” to his readers about the instructions they have received (Lk 1:4).

26:27–28 If the Christian missionaries proclaim nothing different from what the Old Testament prophets had proclaimed (26:22-23), then the logical outcome for the believing Jew, according to Luke, is to become a Christian.

26:31–32 In recording the episode of Paul’s appearance before Agrippa, Luke wishes to show that, when Paul’s case was judged impartially, no grounds for legal action against him were found (see 23:29; 25:25).

27:1–28:16 Here Luke has written a stirring account of adventure on the high seas, incidental to his main purpose of showing how well Paul got along with his captors and how his prophetic influence saved the lives of all on board. The recital also establishes the existence of Christian communities in Puteoli and Rome. This account of the voyage and shipwreck also constitutes the final "we-section" in Acts (see the note on 16:10-17).

27:1 Cohort Augusta: the presence of a Cohort Augusta in Syria during the first century A.D. is attested in inscriptions. Whatever the historical background to this information given by Luke may be, the name Augusta serves to increase the prominence and prestige of the prisoner Paul whose custodians bear so important a Roman name.

27:9 The time of the fast: the fast kept on the occasion of the Day of Atonement (Lv 16:29-31), which occurred in late September or early October.

27:35 He took bread …: the words recall the traditional language of the celebration of the Eucharist (see Lk 22:19).

28:4 Justice: in Greek mythology, the pursuing goddess of vengeance and justice.

28:11 Dioscuri: that is, the Twin Brothers, Castor and Pollux, the sons of Zeus and the patrons of the sailors.

28:16 With Paul's arrival in Rome, the programmatic spread of the word of the Lord to "the ends of the earth" (1:8) is accomplished. In Rome, Paul is placed under house arrest, and under this mild form of custody he is allowed to proclaim the word in the capital of the civilized world of his day.

28:17-22 Paul's first act in Rome is to learn from the leaders of the Jewish community whether the Jews of Jerusalem plan to pursue their case against him before the Roman jurisdiction. He is informed that no such plan is afoot, but that the Jews of Rome have heard the Christian teaching denounced. Paul's offer to explain it to them is readily accepted.

28:20 The hope of Israel: in the words of Paul (23:6), Luke has identified this hope as hope in the resurrection of the dead.

28:25-28 Paul's final words in Acts reflect a major concern of Luke's writings: how the salvation promised in the Old Testament, accomplished by Jesus, and offered first to Israel (13:26), has now been offered to and accepted by the Gentiles. Quoting Isaiah 6:9-10, Paul presents the scriptural support for his indictment of his fellow Jews who refuse to accept the message he proclaims. Their rejection leads to its proclamation among the Gentiles.

28:29 The Western text has added here a verse that is not found in the best Greek manuscripts: "And when he had said this, the Jews left, seriously arguing among themselves."

28:30-31 Although the ending of Acts may seem to be abrupt, Luke has now completed his story with the establishment of Paul and the proclamation of Christianity in Rome. Paul's confident and unhindered proclamation of the gospel in Rome forms the climax to the story whose outline was provided in Acts 1:8—"You will be my witnesses in Jerusalem … and to the ends of the earth."

New Testament Letters

In the New Testament canon, between the Acts of the Apostles and Revelation, there are twenty-one documents that take the form of letters or epistles. Most of these are actual letters, but some are more like treatises in the guise of letters. In a few cases even some of the more obvious elements of the letter form are absent; see the Introductions to Hebrews and to 1 John.

The virtually standard form found in these documents, though with some variation, is dependent upon the conventions of letter writing common in the ancient world, but these were modified to suit the purposes of Christian writers. The New Testament letters usually begin with a greeting including an identification of the sender or senders and of the recipients. Next comes a prayer, usually in the form of a thanksgiving. The body of the letter provides an exposition of Christian teaching, usually provoked by concrete circumstances, and generally also draws conclusions regarding ethical behavior. There often follows a discussion of practical matters, such as the writer's travel plans, and the letter concludes with further advice and a formula of farewell.

Fourteen of the twenty-one letters have been traditionally attributed to Paul. One of these, the Letter to the Hebrews, does not itself claim to be the work of Paul; when it was accepted into the canon after much discussion, it was attached at the very end of the Pauline corpus. The other thirteen identify Paul as their author, but most scholars believe that some of them were actually written by his disciples; see the Introductions to Ephesians, Colossians, 2 Thessalonians, and 1 Timothy.

Four of the letters in the Pauline corpus (Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and Philemon) are called the "Captivity Epistles" because in each of them the author speaks of being in prison at the time of writing. Three others (1–2 Timothy and Titus) are known as the "Pastoral Epistles" because, addressed to individuals rather than communities, they give advice to disciples about caring for the flock. The letters of the Pauline corpus are arranged in roughly descending order of length from Romans to Philemon, with Hebrews added at the end.

The other seven letters of the New Testament that follow the Pauline corpus are collectively referred to as the "Catholic Epistles." This term, which means "universal," refers to the fact that most of them are directed not to a single Christian community, as are most of the Pauline letters, but to a wider audience; see the Introduction to the catholic letters. Three of them (1–2–3 John) are closely related to the fourth gospel and thus belong to the Johannine corpus. The catholic letters, like those of the Pauline corpus, are also arranged in roughly descending order of length, but the three Johannine letters are kept together and Jude is placed at the end.

The genuine letters of Paul are earlier in date than any of our written gospels. The dates of the other New Testament letters are more difficult to determine, but for the most part they belong to the second and third Christian generations rather than to the first.

Romans

The Letter to the

Of all the letters of Paul, that to the Christians at Rome has long held pride of place. It is the longest and most systematic unfolding of the apostle’s thought, expounding the gospel of God’s righteousness that saves all who believe (1:16-17); it reflects a universal outlook, with special implications for Israel’s relation to the church (chaps. 9–11). Yet, like all Paul’s letters, Romans too arose out of a specific situation, when the apostle wrote from Greece, likely Corinth, between A.D. 56 and 58 (cf. Acts 20:2-3).

Paul at that time was about to leave for Jerusalem with a collection of funds for the impoverished Jewish Christian believers there, taken up from his predominantly Gentile congregations (15:25-27). He planned then to travel on to Rome and to enlist support there for a mission to Spain (15:24, 28). Such a journey had long been on his mind (1:9-13; 15:23). Now, with much missionary preaching successfully accomplished in the East (15:19), he sought new opportunities in the West (15:20-21), in order to complete the divine plan of evangelization in the Roman world. Yet he recognized that the visit to Jerusalem would be hazardous (15:30-32), and we know from Acts that Paul was arrested there and came to Rome only in chains, as a prisoner (Acts 21–28, especially Acts 21:30-33 and Acts 28:14, 30-31).

The existence of a Christian community in Rome antedates Paul’s letter there. When it arose, likely within the sizable Jewish population at Rome, and how, we do not know. The Roman historian Suetonius mentions an edict of the Emperor Claudius about A.D. 49 ordering the expulsion of Jews from Rome in connection with a certain “Chrestus,” probably involving a dispute in the Jewish community over Jesus as the Messiah (“Christus”). According to Acts 18:2, Aquila and Priscilla (or Prisca, as in 16:3) were among those driven out; from them, in Corinth, Paul may have learned about conditions in the church at Rome.

SUMMARY

Romans, the longest of Paul's letters, addresses the universal reality of sin in the world and the need for salvation in Jesus Christ. Emphasizing Abraham as the model of faith, Romans urges readers to live in the freedom of God bestowed by the Holy Spirit. God's grace ultimately triumphs over sin and death.

Author: Paul.

Date: Circa A.D. 56–58 from Corinth.

Content: Dominance of sin in the world and the need for salvation; the strength yet limits of the law of Moses; the new life attained in the Holy Spirit; the mystery of God's salvation of Israel; ethical responsibilities for Christians; extensive greetings to Paul's acquaintances.

Main Characters: Holy Spirit, Abraham and Sarah, Adam.

Opinions vary as to whether Jewish or Gentile Christians predominated in the house churches (cf. 16:5) in the capital city of the empire at the time Paul wrote. Perhaps already by then Gentile Christians were in the majority. Paul speaks in Romans of both Jews and Gentiles (3:9, 29; see the note on 1:14). The letter also refers to those "weak in faith" (14:1) and those "who are strong" (15:1); this terminology may reflect not so much differences between believers of Jewish and of Gentile background, respectively, as an ascetic tendency in some converts (14:2) combined with Jewish laws about clean and unclean foods (14:14, 20). The issues were similar to problems that Paul had faced in Corinth (1 Cor 8). If Romans 16 is part of the letter to Rome (see the note on 16:1-23), then Paul had considerable information about conditions in Rome through all these people there whom he knew, and our letter does not just reflect a generalized picture of an earlier situation in Corinth.

In any case, Paul writes to introduce himself and his message to the Christians at Rome, seeking to enlist their support for the proposed mission to Spain. He therefore employs formulations likely familiar to the Christians at Rome; see the note on the confessional material at Romans 1:3-4 and compare Romans 3:25-26; 4:25. He cites the Old Testament frequently (1:17; 3:10-18; 4; 9:7, 12-13, 15, 17, 25-29, 33; 10:5-13, 15-21; 15:9-12). The gospel Paul presents is meant to be a familiar one to those in Rome, even though they heard it first from other preachers.

As the outline below shows, this gospel of Paul (see 16:25) finds its center in salvation and justification through faith in Christ (1:16-17). While God's wrath is revealed against all sin and wickedness of Gentile and Jew alike (1:18–3:20), God's power to save by divine righteous or justifying action in Christ is also revealed (1:16-17; 3:21–5:21). The consequences and implications for those who believe are set forth (6:1–8:39), as are results for those in Israel (chaps. 9–11) who, to Paul's great sorrow (9:1-5), disbelieve. The apostle's hope is that, just as rejection of the gospel by some in Israel has led to a ministry of salvation for non-Jews, so one day, in God's mercy, "all Israel" will be saved (11:11-15, 25-29, 30-32). The fuller ethical response of believers is also drawn out, both with reference to life in Christ's body (chap. 12) and with regard to the world (13:1-7), on the basis of the eschatological situation (13:11-14) and conditions in the community (14:1–15:13).

Others have viewed Romans more in the light of Paul's earlier, quite polemical Letter to the Galatians and so see the theme as the relationship between Judaism and Christianity, a topic judged to be much in the minds of the Roman Christians. Each of these religious faiths claimed to be the way of salvation based upon a covenant between God and a people chosen and made the beneficiary of divine gifts. But Christianity regarded itself as the prophetic development and fulfillment of the faith of the Old Testament, declaring that the preparatory Mosaic covenant must now give way to the new and more perfect covenant in Jesus Christ. Paul himself had been the implacable advocate of freedom of Gentiles from the laws of the Mosaic covenant and, especially in Galatia, had refused to allow attempts to impose them on Gentile converts to the gospel. He had witnessed the personal hostilities that developed between the adherents of the two faiths and had written his strongly worded Letter to the Galatians against those Jewish Christians who were seeking to persuade Gentile Christians to adopt the religious practices of Judaism. For him, the purity of the religious understanding of Jesus as the source of salvation would be seriously impaired if Gentile Christians were obligated to amalgamate the two religious faiths.

Still others find the theme of Israel and the church as expressed in Romans 9–11 to be the heart of Romans. Then the implication of Paul's exposition of justification by faith rather than by means of law is that the divine plan of salvation works itself out on a broad theological plane to include the whole of humanity, despite the differences in the content of the given religious system to which a human culture is heir. Romans presents a plan of salvation stretching from Adam through Abraham and Moses to Christ (chaps. 4; 5) and on to the future revelation at Christ's parousia (8:18-25). Its outlook is universal.

Paul's Letter to the Romans is a powerful exposition of the doctrine of the supremacy of Christ and of faith in Christ as the source of salvation. It is an implicit plea to the Christians at Rome, and to all Christians, to hold fast to that faith. They are to resist any pressure put on them to accept a doctrine of salvation through works of the law (see the note on 10:4). At the same time they are not to exaggerate Christian freedom as an abdication of responsibility for others (12:1-2) or as a repudiation of God's law and will (see the notes on 3:9-26; 3:31; 7:7-12, 13-25).

The principal divisions of the Letter to the Romans are the following:

I. Address (1:1-15)
II. Humanity Lost Without the Gospel (1:16–3:20)
III. Justification Through Faith in Christ (3:21–5:21)
IV. Justification and the Christian Life (6:1–8:39)
V. Jews and Gentiles in God's Plan (9:1–11:36)
VI. The Duties of Christians (12:1–15:13)
VII. Conclusion (15:14–16:27)

1 [1]Paul, a slave of Christ Jesus,* called to be an apostle and set apart for the gospel of God,[a] [2]which he promised previously through his prophets in the holy scriptures,[b] [3]*the gospel about his Son, descended from David according to the flesh,[c] [4]but established as Son of God in power according to the spirit of holiness through resurrection from the dead, Jesus Christ our Lord.[d] [5]Through him we have received the grace of apostleship, to bring about the obedience of faith, for the sake of his name, among all the Gentiles,[e] [6]among whom are you also, who are called to belong to Jesus Christ;[f] [7]to all the beloved of God in Rome, called to be holy. Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.[g]

“Grace to you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.” This greeting, common in Paul in one form or another, has become a standard liturgical formula in the Mass and other worship services.

Archaeological excavations in Rome have shown that it had a considerable Jewish community in the first century A.D. Estimates range to some fifty thousand Jews who had been present since at least the first century B.C.

24Therefore, God handed them over to impurity through the lusts of their hearts* for the mutual degradation of their bodies.[v] 25They exchanged the truth of God for a lie and revered and worshiped the creature rather than the creator, who is blessed forever. Amen.[w] 26Therefore, God handed them over to degrading passions. Their females exchanged natural relations for unnatural, 27and the males likewise gave up natural relations with females and burned with lust for one another. Males did shameful things with males and thus received in their own persons the due penalty for their perversity.[x] 28And since they did not see fit to acknowledge God, God handed them over to their undiscerning mind to do what is improper. 29[y]They are filled with every form of wickedness, evil, greed, and malice; full of envy, murder, rivalry, treachery, and spite. They are gossips 30and scandalmongers and they hate God. They are insolent, haughty, boastful, ingenious in their wickedness, and rebellious toward their parents. 31They are senseless, faithless, heartless, ruthless. 32Although they know the just decree of God that all who practice such things deserve death, they not only do them but give approval to those who practice them.[z]

Homosexual activity, both female and male, was tolerated in the Greco-Roman world but abhorred by the Jews. Jewish teaching saw homosexual behavior as a corruption of God’s law. Paul views it as an example of idolatry and one among many distortions in the Gentile world that needed to be reformed by God’s grace. This is not a condemnation of homosexual orientation, something beyond the understanding of ancient peoples, but of specific sexual activity.

A diatribe was a rhetorical device used to further one’s position. The form of the diatribe could vary but often included rhetorical questions posed of a hypothetical opponent, as Paul uses here. Other examples can be found in Romans (at 3:27-31 and 7:1-25).

Circumcision of the heart is a metaphor representing true internal commitment to the law of God, for the heart is the seat of the will. The image is also found in the OT (such as Dt 10:16; 30:6; Jer 4:4; cf. Ez 44:7-9).

True circumcision is not outward, in the flesh.[v] 29Rather, one is a Jew inwardly, and circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit, not the letter; his praise is not from human beings but from God.[w]

Yes, also to Gentiles,[u] 30for God is one and will justify the circumcised on the basis of faith and the uncircumcised through faith.[v] 31 Are we then annulling the law by this faith? Of course not![w] On the contrary, we are supporting the law.*

4* [1]What then can we say that Abraham found, our ancestor according to the flesh?[a] [2]Indeed, if Abraham was justified on the basis of his works, he has reason to boast; but this was not so in the sight of God. [3][b]For what does the scripture say? “Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness.” [4]A worker’s wage is credited not as a gift, but as something due.[c] [5]But when one does not work, yet believes in the one who justifies the ungodly, his faith is credited as righteousness. [6]So also David declares the blessedness of the person to whom God credits righteousness apart from works:

[7]“Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven[d] and whose sins are covered.
[8]Blessed is the man whose sin the Lord does not record.”

Justification is God’s free act of declaring people righteous, by which they receive the gift of salvation. Martin Luther viewed this concept as Paul’s primary teaching, in light of Luther’s own judgment that Roman Catholics overemphasized “earning” salvation by performing righteous deeds. In October 1999, Lutherans and Roman Catholics reached agreement on the teaching of justification by faith. The agreement clarified each other’s positions and demonstrated a common approach to justification as God’s free gift of salvation achieved, once and for all, in Jesus Christ (Joint Declaration on the Doctrine of Justification). In July 2006, the World Methodist Council also signed on to this agreement.

[9]Does this blessedness* apply only to the circumcised, or to the uncircumcised as well? Now we assert that “faith was credited to Abraham as righteousness.”[e] [10]Under what circumstances was it credited? Was he circumcised or not? He was not circumcised, but uncircumcised. [11]And he received the sign of circumcision as a seal on the righteousness received through faith while he was uncircumcised. Thus he was to be the father of all the uncircumcised who believe, so that to them [also] righteousness might be credited,[f] [12]as well as the father of the circumcised who not only are circumcised but also follow the path of faith that our father Abraham walked while still uncircumcised.

Is 53:4-5, 12; 1 Cor 15:17; 1 Pt 1:3 / 8:11

[13]It was not through the law that the promise was made to Abraham and his descendants that he would inherit the world, but through the righteousness that comes from faith.[g] [14]For if those who adhere to the law are the heirs, faith is null and the promise is void.[h] [15]For the law produces wrath;[i] but where there is no law, neither is there violation.* [16]For this reason, it depends on faith, so that it may be a gift, and the promise may be guaranteed to all his descendants, not to those who only adhere to the law but to those who follow the faith of Abraham, who is the father of all of us,[j] [17]as it is written, "I have made you father of many nations." He is our father in the sight of God, in whom he believed, who gives life to the dead and calls into being what does not exist.[k] [18]He believed, hoping against hope,[l] that he would become "the father of many nations," according to what was said, "Thus shall your descendants be." [19][m]He did not weaken in faith when he considered his own body as [already] dead (for he was almost a hundred years old) and the dead womb of Sarah. [20]He did not doubt

God’s promise in unbelief;* rather, he was empowered by faith and gave glory to God [21]and was fully convinced that what he had promised he was also able to do.[n] [22]That is why “it was credited to him as righteousness.”[o] [23]But it was not for him alone that it was written that “it was credited to him”; [24]it was also for us, to whom it will be credited, who believe in the one who raised Jesus our Lord from the dead,[p] [25]who was handed over for our transgressions and was raised for our justification.[q]

[7]Indeed, only with difficulty does one die for a just person, though perhaps for a good person one might even find courage to die.* [8]But God proves his love for us in that while we were still sinners Christ died for us.[e] [9]How much more then, since we are now justified by his blood, will we be saved through him from the wrath.[f] [10]Indeed, if, while we were enemies, we were reconciled to God through the death of his Son, how much more, once reconciled, will we be saved by his life.[g] [11]Not only that, but we also boast of God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received reconciliation.

[15]But the gift is not like the transgression. For if by that one person’s transgression the many died, how much more did the grace of God and the gracious gift of the one person Jesus Christ overflow for the many. [16]And the gift is not like the result of the one person’s sinning. For after one sin there was the judgment that brought condemnation; but the gift, after many transgressions, brought acquittal. [17]For if, by the transgression of one person, death came to reign through that one, how much more will those who receive the abundance of grace and of the gift of justification come to reign in life through the one person Jesus Christ. [18]In conclusion, just as through one transgression condemnation came upon all, so through one righteous act acquittal and life came to all.[k] [19]For just as through the disobedience of one person the many were made sinners, so through the obedience of one the many will be made righteous.[l] [20]The law entered in* so that transgression might increase but, where sin increased, grace overflowed all the more,[m] [21]*so that, as sin reigned in death, grace also might reign through justification for eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord.[n]

Only Paul in the NT makes an explicit comparison between Adam and Jesus Christ, employing the notion of typology. Adam is a “type” of Christ, a prefigurement of the one who sets right what humanity had distorted through sin (Gn 1–2). Paul’s elaborate comparison can be outlined, as below (see also 1 Cor 5:22, 45-49).

Adam	Jesus Christ
First human being (Hebrew, ʿadam)	Last Adam (new creation)
A living being	A life-giving spirit
A natural being	A spiritual being
An earthly being	A heavenly being
Humans bear the earthly image	Christians bear the heavenly image
Pride-filled	Humble
Was disobedient	Was obedient
Led to sin	Leads to salvation
Led to death in the world	Leads to resurrected life in the world to come

All ultimately die	All ultimately have eternal life

[8]If, then, we have died with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him.[g] [9]We know that Christ, raised from the dead, dies no more; death no longer has power over him.[h] 10 As to his death, he died to sin once and for all; as to his life, he lives for God.[i] 11 Consequently, you too must think of yourselves as [being] dead to sin and living for God in Christ Jesus.[j]

For just as you presented the parts of your bodies as slaves to impurity and to lawlessness for lawlessness, so now present them as slaves to righteousness for sanctification. 20[q]For when you were slaves of sin, you were free from righteousness.* 21But what profit did you get then from the things of which you are now ashamed? Freedom from the Law*

7 [1]Are you unaware, brothers (for I am speaking to people who know the law), that the law has jurisdiction over one as long as one lives? [2]Thus a married woman is bound by law to her living husband; but if her husband dies, she is released from the law in respect to her husband.[a] [3]Consequently, while her husband is alive she will be called an adulteress if she consorts with another man. But if her husband dies she is free from that law, and she is not an adulteress if she consorts with another man.

[5]For when we were in the flesh, our sinful passions, awakened by the law, worked in our members to bear fruit for death.[b] [6]But now we are released from the law, dead to what held us captive, so that we may serve in the newness of the spirit and not under the obsolete letter.[c]

Apart from the law sin is dead.[e] [9]I once lived outside the law, but when the commandment came, sin became alive; [10]then I died, and the commandment that was for life turned out to be death for me.[f] [11]For sin, seizing an opportunity in the commandment, deceived me and through it put me to death.[g] [12]So then the law is holy, and the commandment is holy and righteous and good.[h]

13Did the good, then, become death for me? Of course not! Sin, in order that it might be shown to be sin, worked death in me through the good, so that sin might become sinful beyond measure through the commandment.[i] 14We know that the law is spiritual; but I am carnal, sold into slavery to sin.[j] 15What I do, I do not understand. For I do not do what I want, but I do what I hate. 16Now if I do what I do not want, I concur that the law is good. 17So now it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells in me. 18For I know that good does not dwell in me, that is, in my flesh. The willing is ready at hand, but doing the good is not.[k] 19For I do not do the good I want, but I do the evil I do not want. 20Now if [I] do what I do not want, it is no longer I who do it, but sin that dwells in me. 21So, then, I discover the principle that when I want to do right, evil is at hand. 22For I take delight in the law of God, in my inner self, 23[l]but I see in my members another principle at war with the law of my mind, taking me captive to the law of sin that dwells in my members.* 24Miserable one that I am! 8 [1]Hence, now there is no condemnation for those who are in Christ Jesus. [2]For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus has freed you from the law of sin and death.[a] [3]For what the law, weakened by the flesh, was powerless to do, this God has done: by sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh and for the sake of sin, he condemned sin in the flesh,[b] [4]so that the righteous decree of the law might be fulfilled in us, who live not according to the flesh but according to the spirit.[c] [5]For those who live according to the flesh are concerned with the things of the flesh, but those who live according to the spirit with the things of the spirit. [6]The concern of the flesh is death, but the concern of the spirit is life and peace.[d] [7]For the concern of the flesh is hostility toward God; it does not submit to the law of God, nor can it;[e] [8]and those who are in the flesh cannot please God.[f] [9]But you are not in the flesh; on the contrary, you are in the spirit, if only the Spirit of God dwells in you. Whoever does not have the Spirit of Christ does not belong to him.[g] [10]But if Christ is in you, although the body is dead because of sin, the spirit is alive because of righteousness.[h] [11]If the Spirit of the one who raised Jesus from the dead dwells in you, the one who raised Christ from the dead will give life to your mortal bodies also, through his Spirit that dwells in you. [12]Consequently, brothers, we are not debtors to the flesh, to live according to the flesh. [13]For if you live according to the flesh, you will die, but if by the spirit you put to death the deeds of the body, you will live.[i]

Paul frequently contrasts flesh and spirit (see Rom 8:5-9; 1 Cor 3:3-4; Gal 5:16-23). Contrary to popular belief, Paul's "flesh" does not mean sexuality but all that is finite and ultimately corruptible. Spirit at times means the Holy Spirit but at other times represents that aspect of human existence that transcends the finite experience of this world. The contrast in the concepts can be summarized as follows:

Flesh	Spirit
All that is corrupt and fleeting	All that is permanent
That which is earthly (below)	That which is heavenly (above)
Leads to death	Leads to new life
Displeases God	Pleases God
Exhibited in a host of sinful activities	Exhibited in a host of virtues

[14]For those who are led by the Spirit of God are children of God.[j] [15]For you did not receive a spirit of slavery to fall back into fear, but you received a spirit of adoption, through which we cry, “*Abba, Father!”[k] [16]The Spirit itself bears witness with our spirit that we are children of God,[l] [17]and if children, then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, if only we suffer with him so that we may also be glorified with him.[m]

In the ancient world, adoption may have occurred in any number of circumstances: when a child was born to a surrogate mother (cf. Sarah and Hagar, Gn 16:1-2) or a foreign wife, when a child was abandoned (cf. Moses and Pharaoh’s daughter, Ex 2:10) or orphaned (cf. Esther and Mordecai, Est 2:7), and in the case of grandchildren (cf. Ephraim and Manasseh, adopted by Jacob in Gn 48:5-6). Significantly, even slaves could be adopted, as might have been the case with Jarha in 1 Chronicles 2. When used symbolically by Paul (here and in Rom 8:23; 9:4; Gal 4:5 and Eph 1:5) adoption imagery highlights the changing status of believers and the intimacy that Jesus shares in his relationship with God who is the head of the family.

Predestination is the theological notion that God’s sovereign plan of salvation directs the unfolding of history in due course. Different explanations of this concept have evolved over time. In Paul’s thought, predestination in no way interferes with free will. People always remain free to accept or reject God’s offer of eternal salvation. Paradoxically, binding oneself to Jesus Christ frees one to live a just life in accordance with God’s plan. Yet to be predestined means to be oriented toward salvation from the beginning. This is God’s will: all are chosen so that all might be saved. Living out this destiny challenges us to accept God’s outstretched hand and to embrace the ethically upright life that flows from God’s gracious gift of salvation.

> and whoever believes in him shall not be put to shame."[a]

Romans 9–11 reveal Paul struggling over the fate of Israel: How will Israel be included in God's final salvation if they reject Jesus as the Messiah? Paul's logic in these chapters is complex. He uses both OT background and his own unique insights to address the question. On the one hand, Paul affirms strongly that the Gentiles have received salvation in Jesus Christ. In fact, he sees himself as "the apostle to the Gentiles" (11:13). On the other hand, just because much of Israel has rejected Jesus does not mean the Jews will not be saved. On the contrary, Paul says that eventually Israel will be "grafted back into their own olive tree" (11:24) of salvation because God wills it. In the end, Paul surrenders to the power of God's mercy to bring this about and concludes with an uplifting prayer in awe of that mercy (11:33-36).

(that is, the word of faith that we preach), [9]for, if you confess* with your mouth that Jesus is Lord and believe in your heart that God raised him from the dead, you will be saved.[i] [10]For one believes with the heart and so is justified, and one confesses with the mouth and so is saved. [11]For the scripture says, “No one who believes in him will be put to shame.”[j] [12]For there is no distinction between Jew and Greek; the same Lord is Lord of all, enriching all who call upon him.[k] [13]For “everyone who calls on the name of the Lord will be saved.”[l]

11 [1]I ask, then, has God rejected his people? Of course not![a] For I too am an Israelite, a descendant of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin.[b] [2]God has not rejected his people whom he foreknew. Do you not know what the scripture says about Elijah, how he pleads with God against Israel? [3]“Lord, they have killed your prophets, they have torn down your altars, and I alone am left, and they are seeking my life.”[c] [4]But what is God’s response to him? “I have left for myself seven thousand men who have not knelt to Baal.”[d] [5]So also at the present time there is a remnant, chosen by grace.[e] [6]But if by grace, it is no longer because of works; otherwise grace would no longer be grace.[f] [7]What then? What Israel was seeking it did not attain, but the elect attained it; the rest were hardened,[g] [8]as it is written:

If you do boast, consider that you do not support the root; the root supports you.[n] 19Indeed you will say, “Branches were broken off so that I might be grafted in.” 20That is so. They were broken off because of unbelief, but you are there because of faith. So do not become haughty, but stand in awe.[o] 21For if God did not spare the natural branches, [perhaps] he will not spare you either.[p] 22See, then, the kindness and severity of God: severity toward those who fell, but God’s kindness to you, provided you remain in his kindness; otherwise you too will be cut off.[q] 23And they also, if they do not remain in unbelief, will be grafted in, for God is able to graft them in again.[r] 24For if you were cut from what is by nature a wild olive tree, and grafted, contrary to nature, into a cultivated one, how much more will they who belong to it by nature be grafted back into their own olive tree.

[6][e]Since we have gifts that differ according to the grace given to us, let us exercise them:* if prophecy, in proportion to the faith; [7]if ministry, in ministering; if one is a teacher, in teaching; [8]if one exhorts, in exhortation; if one contributes, in generosity; if one is over others,* with diligence; if one does acts of mercy, with cheerfulness.

[3]For rulers are not a cause of fear to good conduct, but to evil.[b] Do you wish to have no fear of authority? Then do what is good and you will receive approval from it, [4]for it is a servant of God for your good. But if you do evil, be afraid, for it does not bear the sword without purpose; it is the servant of God to inflict wrath on the evildoer.[c] [5]Therefore, it is necessary to be subject not only because of the wrath but also because of conscience.[d] [6]This is why you also pay taxes, for the authorities are ministers of God, devoting themselves to this very thing. [7]Pay to all their dues, taxes to whom taxes are due, toll to whom toll is due, respect to whom respect is due, honor to whom honor is due.[e]

Before his own master he stands or falls. And he will be upheld, for the Lord is able to make him stand.[e] [5] [For] one person considers one day more important than another, while another person considers all days alike.[f] Let everyone be fully persuaded in his own mind.* [6] Whoever observes the day, observes it for the Lord. Also whoever eats, eats for the Lord, since he gives thanks to God; while whoever abstains, abstains for the Lord and gives thanks to God. [7] None of us lives for oneself, and no one dies for oneself. [8] For if we live, we live for the Lord,* and if we die, we die for the Lord; so then, whether we live or die, we are the Lord's.[g] [9] For this is why Christ died and came to life, that he might be Lord of both the dead and the living.[h] [10] Why then do you judge your brother? Or you, why do you look down on your brother? For we shall all stand before the judgment seat of God;[i] [11] for it is written:

“As I live, says the Lord, every knee shall bend before me,

j
Is 49:18 / Is 45:23; Phil 2:10-11

and every tongue shall give praise to God.”[j]

There is an immense longing in the human heart to belong. Let us try to remember, then, that we do belong. We belong to the Lord. Thus we must be most careful about passing judgment on others who belong to the same Lord.

Do not because of your food destroy him for whom Christ died.[n] [16]So do not let your good be reviled.[o] [17]For the kingdom of God is not a matter of food and drink, but of righteousness, peace, and joy in the holy Spirit;[p] [18]whoever serves Christ in this way is pleasing to God and approved by others. [19]Let us* then pursue what leads to peace and to building up one another.[q] [20]For the sake of food, do not destroy the work of God.[r] Everything is indeed clean, but it is wrong for anyone to become a stumbling block by eating; [21]it is good not to eat meat or drink wine or do anything that causes your brother to stumble. Amen.[x]

The God of peace be with all of you. This is another greeting Paul uses, with some variation, to open or close letters. Shalom (Hebrew for “peace”) is not a bland greeting but a profound wish for well-being and blessing by God.

Women Who Worked with Paul

The last chapter of Romans lists many people whom Paul greets, among them women who participated in his ministry. Phoebe is mentioned explicitly as a “deacon” (masculine form) in the church at Cenchreae, one of the ports of Corinth. The title clearly implies a ministry but one that is nowhere explained in detail. Junia is listed as “prominent among the apostles,” but again there is little specificity to her exact ministry. That Paul had many female coworkers is clear, some of whom were heads of local churches.

The Roman Forum

1:1-7 In Paul's letters the greeting or praescriptio follows a standard form, though with variations. It is based upon the common Greco-Roman epistolary practice, but with the addition of Semitic and specifically Christian elements. The three basic components are: name of sender; name of addressee; greeting. In identifying himself, Paul often adds phrases to describe his apostolic mission; this element is more developed in Romans than in any other letter. Elsewhere he associates co-workers with himself in the greeting: Sosthenes (1 Cor), Timothy (2 Cor; Phil; Phlm), Silvanus (1 Thes–2 Thes). The standard secular greeting was the infinitive chairein, "greetings." Paul uses instead the similar-sounding charis, "grace," together with the Semitic greeting šālôm (Greek eirēnē), "peace." These gifts, foreshadowed in God's dealings with Israel (see Nm 6:24-26), have been poured out abundantly in Christ, and Paul wishes them to his readers. In Romans the Pauline praescriptio is expanded and expressed in a formal tone; it emphasizes Paul's office as apostle to the Gentiles. Romans 1:3-4 stress the gospel or kerygma, Romans 1:2 the fulfillment of God's promise, and Romans 1:1, 5 Paul's office. On his call, see Galatians 1:15-16; 1 Corinthians 9:1; 15:8-10; Acts 9:1-22; 22:3-16; 26:4-18.

1:1 Slave of Christ Jesus: Paul applies the term slave to himself in order to express his undivided allegiance to the Lord of the church, the Master of all, including slaves and masters. "No one can serve (i.e., be a slave to) two masters," said Jesus (Mt 6:24). It is this aspect of the slave-master relationship rather than its degrading implications that Paul emphasizes when he discusses Christian commitment.

1:3-4 Paul here cites an early confession that proclaims Jesus' sonship as messianic descendant of David (cf. Mt 22:42; 2 Tm 2:8; Rev 22:16) and as Son of God by the resurrection. As "life-giving spirit" (1 Cor 15:45), Jesus Christ is able to communicate the Spirit to those who believe in him.

1:5 Paul recalls his apostolic office, implying that the Romans know something of his history. The obedience of faith: as Paul will show at length in chaps. 6–8 and 12–15, faith in God's justifying action in Jesus Christ relates one to God's gift of the new life that is made possible through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ and the activity of the holy Spirit (see especially 8:1-11).

1:7 Called to be holy: Paul often refers to Christians as "the holy ones" or "the saints." The Israelite community was called a "holy assembly" because they had been separated for the worship and service of the Lord (see Lv 11:44; 23:1-44). The Christian community regarded its members as sanctified by baptism (6:22; 15:16; 1 Cor 6:11; Eph 5:26-27). Christians are called to holiness (1 Cor 1:2; 1 Thes 4:7), that is, they are called to make their lives conform to the gift they have already received.

1:8 In Greco-Roman letters, the greeting was customarily followed by a prayer. The Pauline letters usually include this element (except Gal and 1 Tm, 2 Tm) expressed in Christian thanksgiving formulas and usually stating the principal theme of the letter. In 2 Corinthians the thanksgiving becomes a blessing, and in Ephesians it is preceded by a lengthy blessing. Sometimes the thanksgiving is blended into the body of the letter, especially in 1 Thessalonians. In Romans it is stated briefly.

1:10-12 Paul lays the groundwork for his more detailed statement in Romans 15:22-24 about his projected visit to Rome.

1:13 Brothers is idiomatic for all Paul's "kin in Christ," all those who believe in the gospel; it includes women as well as men (cf. 4:3).

1:14 Greeks and non-Greeks: literally, "Greeks and barbarians." As a result of Alexander's conquests, Greek became the standard international language of the Mediterranean world. Greeks in Paul's statement therefore means people who know Greek or who have been influenced by Greek culture. Non-Greeks were people whose cultures remained substantially unaffected by Greek influences. Greeks called such people "barbarians" (cf. Acts 28:2), meaning people whose speech was foreign. Roman citizens would scarcely classify themselves as such, and Nero, who was reigning when Paul wrote this letter, prided himself on his admiration for Greek culture. Under obligation: Paul will expand on the theme of obligation in Romans 13:8; 15:1, 27.

1:16-17 The principal theme of the letter is salvation through faith. I am not ashamed of the gospel: Paul is not ashamed to proclaim the gospel, despite the criticism that Jews and Gentiles leveled against the proclamation of the crucified savior; cf. 1 Corinthians 1:23-24. Paul affirms, however, that it is precisely through the crucifixion and resurrection of Jesus that God's saving will and power become manifest. Jew first (cf. 2:9-10) means that Jews especially, in view of the example of Abraham (chap. 4), ought to be the leaders in the response of faith.

1:17 In it is revealed the righteousness of God from faith to faith: the gospel centers in Jesus Christ, in whom God's saving presence and righteousness in history have been made known. Faith is affirmation of the basic purpose and meaning of the Old Testament as proclamation of divine promise (1:2; 4:13) and exposure of the inability of humanity to effect its salvation even through covenant law. Faith is the gift of the holy Spirit and denotes acceptance of salvation as God's righteousness, that is, God's gift of a renewed relationship in forgiveness and power for a new life. Faith is response to God's total claim on people and their destiny. The one who is righteous by faith will live: see the note on Hebrews 2:4.

1:18–3:20 Paul aims to show that all humanity is in a desperate plight and requires God's special intervention if it is to be saved.

1:18-32 In this passage Paul uses themes and rhetoric common in Jewish-Hellenistic mission proclamation (cf. Wis 13:1–14:31) to indict especially the non-Jewish world. The close association of idolatry and immorality is basic, but the generalization needs in all fairness to be balanced against the fact that non-Jewish Christian society on many levels displayed moral attitudes and performance whose quality would challenge much of contemporary Christian culture. Romans themselves expressed abhorrence over devotion accorded to animals in Egypt. Paul's main point is that the wrath of God does not await the end of the world but goes into action at each present moment in humanity's history when misdirected piety serves as a facade for self-interest.

1:18 The wrath of God: God's reaction to human sinfulness, an Old Testament phrase that expresses the irreconcilable opposition between God and evil (see Is 9:11, 16, 18, 20; 10:4; 30:27). It is not contrary to God's universal love for his creatures, but condemns Israel's turning aside from the covenant obligations. Hosea depicts Yahweh as suffering intensely at the thought of having to punish Israel (Hos 11:8-9). God's wrath was to be poured forth especially on the "Day of Yahweh" and thus took on an eschatological connotation (see Zep 1:15).

1:24 In order to expose the depth of humanity's rebellion against the Creator, God handed them over to impurity through the lusts of their hearts. Instead of curbing people's evil interests, God abandoned them to self-indulgence, thereby removing the facade of apparent conformity to the divine will. Subsequently Paul will show that the Mosaic law produces the same effect; cf. Romans 5:20; 7:13-24. The divine judgment expressed here is related to the theme of hardness of heart described in Romans 9:17-18.

2:1–3:20 After his general indictment of the Gentile, Paul shows that in spite of special revelation Jews enjoy no advantage in moral status before God (3:1-8). With the entire human race now declared guilty before God (3:9-20), Paul will then be able to display the solution for the total problem: salvation through God's redemptive work that is revealed in Christ Jesus for all who believe (3:21-31).

2:1-11 As a first step in his demonstration that Jews enjoy no real moral supremacy over Gentiles, Paul explains that the final judgment will be a review of performance, not of privilege. From this perspective Gentiles stand on an equal footing with Jews, and Jews cannot condemn the sins of Gentiles without condemning themselves.

2:6 Will repay everyone according to his works: Paul reproduces the Septuagint text of Psalm 62:12 and Proverbs 24:12.

2:11 No partiality with God: this sentence is not at variance with the statements in Romans 2:9-10. Since Jews are the first to go under indictment, it is only fair that they be given first consideration in the distribution of blessings. Basic, of course, is the understanding that God accepts no bribes (Dt 10:17).

2:12-16 Jews cannot reasonably demand from Gentiles the standard of conduct inculcated in the Old Testament since God did not address its revelation to them. Rather, God made it possible for Gentiles to know instinctively the difference between right and wrong. But, as Paul explained in Romans 1:18-32, humanity misread the evidence of God's existence, power, and divinity, and "while claiming to be wise, they became fools" (1:22).

2:15 Paul expands on the thought of Jeremiah 31:33; Wisdom 17:11.

2:17-29 Mere possession of laws is no evidence of virtue. By eliminating circumcision as an elitist moral sign, Paul clears away the last obstacle to his presentation of justification through faith without claims based on the receipt of circumcision and its attendant legal obligations.

2:24 According to Isaiah 52:5 the suffering of Israel prompts her enemies to revile God. Paul uses the passage in support of his point that the present immorality of Israelites is the cause of such defamation.

3:1-4 In keeping with the popular style of diatribe, Paul responds to the objection that his teaching on the sinfulness of all humanity detracts from the religious prerogatives of Israel. He stresses that Jews have remained the vehicle of God’s revelation despite their sins, though this depends on the fidelity of God.

3:4 Though every human being is a liar: these words reproduce the Greek text of Psalm 116:11. The rest of the verse is from Psalm 51:6.

3:9-20 Well, then, are we better off?: this phrase can also be translated “Are we at a disadvantage?” but the latter version does not substantially change the overall meaning of the passage. Having explained that Israel’s privileged status is guaranteed by God’s fidelity, Paul now demonstrates the infidelity of the Jews by a catena of citations from scripture, possibly derived from an existing collection of testimonia. These texts show that all human beings share the common burden of sin. They are linked together by mention of organs of the body: throat, tongue, lips, mouth, feet, eyes.

3:19 The law: Paul here uses the term in its broadest sense to mean all of the scriptures; none of the preceding texts is from the Torah or Pentateuch.

3:20 No human being will be justified in his sight: these words are freely cited from Psalm 143:2. In place of the psalmist’s “no living person,” Paul substitutes “no human being” (literally, “no flesh,” a Hebraism), and he adds “by observing the law.”

3:21-31 These verses provide a clear statement of Paul’s “gospel,” i.e., the principle of justification by faith in Christ. God has found a means of rescuing humanity from its desperate plight: Paul’s general term for this divine initiative is the righteousness of God (3:21). Divine mercy declares the guilty innocent and makes them so. God does this not as a result of the law but apart from it (3:21), and not because of any merit in human beings but through forgiveness of their sins (3:24), in virtue of the redemption wrought in Christ Jesus for all who believe (3:22, 24-25). God has manifested his righteousness in the coming of Jesus Christ, whose saving activity inaugurates a new era in human history.

3:21 But now: Paul adopts a common phrase used by Greek authors to describe movement from disaster to prosperity. The expressions indicate that Romans 3:21-26 are the consolatory answer to Romans 3:9-20.

3:25 Expiation: this rendering is preferable to “propitiation,” which suggests hostility on the part of God toward sinners. As Paul will be at pains to point out (5:8-10), it is humanity that is hostile to God.

3:27-31 People cannot boast of their own holiness, since it is God’s free gift (3:27), both to the Jew who practices circumcision out of faith and to the Gentile who accepts faith without the Old Testament religious culture symbolized by circumcision (3:29-30).

3:27 Principle of faith: literally, “law of faith.” Paul is fond of wordplay involving the term “law”; cf. Romans 7:21, 23; 8:2. Since “law” in Greek may also connote “custom” or “principle,” his readers and hearers would have sensed no contradiction in the use of the term after the negative statement concerning law in Romans 3:20.

3:31 We are supporting the law: giving priority to God’s intentions. God is the ultimate source of law, and the essence of law is fairness. On the basis of the Mosaic covenant, God’s justice is in question if those who sinned against the law are permitted to go free (see 3:23-26). In order to rescue all humanity rather than condemn it, God thinks of an alternative: the law or “principle” of faith (3:27). What can be more fair than to admit everyone into the divine presence on the basis of forgiveness grasped by faith? Indeed, this principle of faith antedates the Mosaic law, as Paul will demonstrate in Romans 4, and does not therefore mark a change in divine policy.

4:1-25 This is an expanded treatment of the significance of Abraham's faith, which Paul discusses in Galatians 3:6-18; see the notes there.

4:2-5 Romans 4:2 corresponds to Romans 4:4, and Romans 4:3-5. The Greek term here rendered credited means "made an entry." The context determines whether it is credit or debit. Romans 4:8 speaks of "recording sin" as a debit. Paul's repeated use of accountants' terminology in this and other passages can be traced both to the Old Testament texts he quotes and to his business activity as a tentmaker. The commercial term in Genesis 15:6, "credited it to him," reminds Paul in Romans 4:7-8 of Psalm 32:2, in which the same term is used and applied to forgiveness of sins. Thus Paul is able to argue that Abraham's faith involved receipt of forgiveness of sins and that all believers benefit as he did through faith.

4:3 James 2:24 appears to conflict with Paul's statement. However, James combats the error of extremists who used the doctrine of justification through faith as a screen for moral self-determination. Paul discusses the subject of holiness in greater detail than does James and beginning with Romans 6 shows how justification through faith introduces one to the gift of a new life in Christ through the power of the holy Spirit.

4:9 Blessedness: evidence of divine favor.

4:15 Law has the negative function of bringing the deep-seated rebellion against God to the surface in specific sins; see the note on Romans 1:18-32.

4:20 He did not doubt God's promise in unbelief: any doubts Abraham might have had were resolved in commitment to God's promise. Hebrews 11:8-12 emphasizes the faith of Abraham and Sarah.

5:1-11 Popular piety frequently construed reverses and troubles as punishment for sin; cf. John 9:2. Paul therefore assures believers that God's justifying action in Jesus Christ is a declaration of peace. The crucifixion of Jesus Christ displays God's initiative in certifying humanity for unimpeded access into the divine presence. Reconciliation is God's gift of pardon to the entire human race. Through faith one benefits personally from this pardon or, in Paul's term, is justified. The ultimate aim of God is to liberate believers from the pre-Christian self as described in Romans 1–3. Since this liberation will first find completion in the believer's resurrection, salvation is described as future in Romans 5:10. Because this fullness of salvation belongs to the future it is called the Christian hope. Paul's Greek term for hope does not, however, suggest a note of uncertainty, to the effect: "I wonder whether God really means it." Rather, God's promise in the gospel fills believers with expectation and anticipation for the climactic gift of unalloyed commitment in the holy Spirit to the performance of the will of God. The persecutions that attend Christian commitment are to teach believers patience and to strengthen this hope, which will not disappoint them because the holy Spirit dwells in their hearts and imbues them with God's love (5:5).

5:1 We have peace: a number of manuscripts, versions, and church Fathers read "Let us have peace"; cf. Romans 14:19.

5:7 In the world of Paul's time the good person is especially one who is magnanimous to others.

5:12–21 Paul reflects on the sin of Adam (Gn 3:1-13) in the light of the redemptive mystery of Christ. Sin, as used in the singular by Paul, refers to the dreadful power that has gripped humanity, which is now in revolt against the Creator and engaged in the exaltation of its own desires and interests. But no one has a right to say, "Adam made me do it," for all are culpable (5:12): Gentiles under the demands of the law written in their hearts (2:14-15), and Jews under the Mosaic covenant. Through the Old Testament law, the sinfulness of humanity that was operative from the beginning (5:13) found further stimulation, with the result that sins were generated in even greater abundance. According to Romans 5:15-21, God's act in Christ is in total contrast to the disastrous effects of the virus of sin that invaded humanity through Adam's crime.

5:12 Inasmuch as all sinned: others translate "because all sinned," and understand Rom 5:13 as a parenthetical remark. Unlike Wisdom 2:24, Paul does not ascribe the entry of death to the devil.

5:20 The law entered in: sin had made its entrance (Rom 5:12); now the law comes in alongside sin. See the notes on Romans 1:18-32; 5:12-21. Where sin increased, grace overflowed all the more: Paul declares that grace outmatches the productivity of sin.

6:1-11 To defend the gospel against the charge that it promotes moral laxity (cf. 3:5-8), Paul expresses himself in the typical style of spirited diatribe. God's display of generosity or grace is not evoked by sin but, as stated in Romans 5:8 is the expression of God's love, and this love pledges eternal life to all believers (5:21). Paul views the present conduct of the believers from the perspective of God's completed salvation when the body is resurrected and directed totally by the holy Spirit. Through baptism believers share the death of Christ and thereby escape from the grip of sin. Through the resurrection of Christ the power to live anew becomes reality for them, but the fullness of participation in Christ's resurrection still lies in the future. But life that is lived in dedication to God now is part and parcel of that future. Hence anyone who sincerely claims to be interested in that future will scarcely be able to say, "Let us sin so that grace may prosper" (cf. 6:1).

6:12-19 Christians have been released from the grip of sin, but sin endeavors to reclaim its victims. The antidote is constant remembrance that divine grace has claimed them and identifies them as people who are alive only for God's interests.

6:17 In contrast to humanity, which was handed over to self-indulgence (1:24-32), believers are entrusted ("handed over") to God's pattern of teaching, that is, the new life God aims to develop in Christians through the productivity of the holy Spirit. Throughout this passage Paul uses the slave-master model in order to emphasize the fact that one cannot give allegiance to both God and sin.

6:20 You were free from righteousness: expressed ironically, for such freedom is really tyranny. The commercial metaphors in Romans 6:21-23 add up only one way: sin is a bad bargain.

6:22 Sanctification: or holiness.

7:1-6 Paul reflects on the fact that Christians have a different understanding of the law because of their faith in Christ. Law binds the living, not the dead, as exemplified in marriage, which binds in life but is dissolved through death. Similarly, Christians who through baptism have died with Christ to sin (cf. 6:2-4) are freed from the law that occasioned transgressions, which in turn were productive of death. Now that Christians are joined to Christ, the power of Christ's resurrection makes it possible for them to bear the fruit of newness of life for God.

7:7-25 In this passage Paul uses the first person singular in the style of diatribe for the sake of argument. He aims to depict the disastrous consequences when a Christian reintroduces the law as a means to attain the objective of holiness pronounced in Romans 6:22.

7:7-12 The apostle defends himself against the charge of identifying the law with sin. Sin does not exist in law but in human beings, whose sinful inclinations are not overcome by the proclamation of law.

7:13-25 Far from improving the sinner, law encourages sin to expose itself in transgressions or violations of specific commandments (see 1:24; 5:20). Thus persons who do not experience the justifying grace of God, and Christians who revert to dependence on law as the criterion for their relationship with God, will recognize a rift between their reasoned desire for the goodness of the law and their actual performance that is contrary to the law. Unable to free themselves from the slavery of sin and the power of death, they can only be rescued from defeat in the conflict by the power of God's grace working through Jesus Christ.

7:23 As in Romans 3:27, Paul plays on the term law, which in Greek can connote custom, system, or principle.

8:1-13 After his warning in Romans 7 against the wrong route to fulfillment of the objective of holiness expressed in Romans 6:22, Paul points his addressees to the correct way. Through the redemptive work of Christ, Christians have been liberated from the terrible forces of sin and death. Holiness was impossible so long as the flesh (or our "old self"), that is, self-interested hostility toward God (8:7), frustrated the divine objectives expressed in the law. What is worse, sin used the law to break forth into all manner of lawlessness (8:8). All this is now changed. At the cross God broke the power of sin and pronounced sentence on it (8:3). Christians still retain the flesh, but it is alien to their new being, which is life in the spirit, namely the new self, governed by the holy Spirit. Under the direction of the holy Spirit Christians are able to fulfill the divine will that formerly found expression in the law (8:4). The same Spirit who enlivens Christians for holiness will also resurrect their bodies at the last day (8:11). Christian life is therefore the experience of a constant challenge to put to death the evil deeds of the body through life of the spirit (8:13).

8:14-17 Christians, by reason of the Spirit's presence within them, enjoy not only new life but also a new relationship to God, that of adopted children and heirs through Christ, whose sufferings and glory they share.

8:15 Abba: see the note on Mark 14:36.

8:18-27 The glory that believers are destined to share with Christ far exceeds the sufferings of the present life. Paul considers the destiny of the created world to be linked with the future that belongs to the believers. As it shares in the penalty of corruption brought about by sin, so also will it share in the benefits of redemption and future glory that comprise the ultimate liberation of God's people (8:19-22). After patient endurance in steadfast expectation, the full harvest of the Spirit's presence will be realized. On earth believers enjoy the firstfruits, i.e., the Spirit, as a guarantee of the total liberation of their bodies from the influence of the rebellious old self (8:23).

8:28-30 These verses outline the Christian vocation as it was designed by God: to be conformed to the image of his Son, who is to be the firstborn among many brothers (8:29). God's redemptive action on behalf of the believers has been in process before the beginning of the world. Those whom God chooses are those he foreknew (8:29) or elected. Those who are called (8:30) are predestined or predetermined. These expressions do not mean that God is arbitrary. Rather, Paul uses them to emphasize the thought and care that God has taken for the Christian's salvation.

8:28 We know that all things work for good for those who love God: a few ancient authorities have God as the subject of the verb, and some translators render: "We know that God makes everything work for good for those who love God …."

8:29 Image: while man and woman were originally created in God's image (Gn

1:26-27), it is through baptism into Christ, the image of God (2 Cor 4:4; Col 1:15), that we are renewed according to the image of the Creator (Col 3:10).

8:31-39 The all-conquering power of God’s love has overcome every obstacle to Christians’ salvation and every threat to separate them from God. That power manifested itself fully when God’s own Son was delivered up to death for their salvation. Through him Christians can overcome all their afflictions and trials.

8:38 Present things and future things may refer to astrological data. Paul appears to be saying that the gospel liberates believers from dependence on astrologers.

8:39 Height, depth may refer to positions in the zodiac, positions of heavenly bodies relative to the horizon. In astrological documents the term for “height” means “exaltation” or the position of greatest influence exerted by a planet. Since hostile spirits were associated with the planets and stars, Paul includes powers (8:38) in his list of malevolent forces.

9:1–11:36 Israel’s unbelief and its rejection of Jesus as savior astonished and puzzled Christians. It constituted a serious problem for them in view of God’s specific preparation of Israel for the advent of the Messiah. Paul addresses himself here to the essential question of how the divine plan could be frustrated by Israel’s unbelief. At the same time, he discourages both complacency and anxiety on the part of Gentiles. To those who might boast of their superior advantage over Jews, he warns that their enjoyment of the blessings assigned to Israel can be terminated. To those who might anxiously ask, “How can we be sure that Israel’s fate will not be ours?” he replies that only unbelief can deprive one of salvation.

9:1-5 The apostle speaks in strong terms of the depth of his grief over the unbelief of his own people. He would willingly undergo a curse himself for the sake of their coming to the knowledge of Christ (9:3; cf. Lv 27:28-29). His love for them derives from God’s continuing choice of them and from the spiritual benefits that God bestows on them and through them on all of humanity (9:4-5).

9:5 Some editors punctuate this verse differently and prefer the translation, “Of whom is Christ according to the flesh, who is God over all.” However, Paul’s point is that God who is over all aimed to use Israel, which had been entrusted with every privilege, in outreach to the entire world through the Messiah.

9:10 Children by one husband, our father Isaac: Abraham had two children, Ishmael and Isaac, by two wives, Hagar and Sarah, respectively. In that instance Isaac, although born later than Ishmael, became the bearer of the messianic promise. In the case of twins born to Rebecca, God’s elective procedure is seen even more dramatically, and again the younger, contrary to Semitic custom, is given the preference.

9:13 The literal rendering, “Jacob I loved, but Esau I hated,” suggests an attitude of divine hostility that is not implied in Paul’s statement. In Semitic usage “hate” means to love less; cf. Luke 14:26 with Matthew 10:37. Israel’s unbelief reflects the mystery of the divine election that is always operative within it. Mere natural descent from Abraham does not ensure the full possession of the divine gifts; it is God’s sovereign prerogative to bestow this fullness upon, or to withhold it from, whomsoever he wishes; cf. Matthew 3:9; John 8:39. The choice of Jacob over Esau is a case in point.

9:14-18 The principle of divine election does not invite Christians to theoretical inquiry concerning the nonelected, nor does this principle mean that God is unfair in his dealings with humanity. The instruction concerning divine election is a part of the gospel and reveals that the gift of faith is the enactment of God’s mercy (9:16). God raised up Moses to display that mercy, and Pharaoh to display divine severity in punishing those who obstinately oppose their Creator.

9:18 The basic biblical principle is: those who will not see or hear shall not see or hear. On the other hand, the same God who thus makes stubborn or hardens the heart can reconstruct it through the work of the holy Spirit.

9:19-29 The apostle responds to the objection that if God rules over faith through the principle of divine election, God cannot then accuse unbelievers of sin (9:19). For Paul, this objection is in the last analysis a manifestation of human insolence, and his "answer" is less an explanation of God's ways than the rejection of an argument that places humanity on a level with God. At the same time, Paul shows that God is far less arbitrary than appearances suggest, for God endures with much patience (9:22) a person like the Pharaoh of the Exodus.

9:25 Beloved: in Semitic discourse means "preferred" or "favorite" (cf. 9:13). See Hosea 2:1.

9:30-33 In the conversion of the Gentiles and, by contrast, of relatively few Jews, the Old Testament prophecies are seen to be fulfilled; cf. Romans 9:25-29. Israel feared that the doctrine of justification through faith would jeopardize the validity of the Mosaic law, and so they never reached their goal of righteousness that they had sought to attain through meticulous observance of the law (9:31). Since Gentiles, including especially Greeks and Romans, had a great regard for righteousness, Paul's statement concerning Gentiles in Romans 9:30 is to be understood from a Jewish perspective: quite evidently they had not been interested in "God's" righteousness, for it had not been revealed to them; but now in response to the proclamation of the gospel they respond in faith.

9:32 Paul discusses Israel as a whole from the perspective of contemporary Jewish rejection of Jesus as Messiah. The Old Testament and much of Jewish noncanonical literature in fact reflect a fervent faith in divine mercy.

10:1-13 Despite Israel's lack of faith in God's act in Christ, Paul does not abandon hope for her salvation (10:1). However, Israel must recognize that the Messiah's arrival in the person of Jesus Christ means the termination of the Mosaic law as the criterion for understanding oneself in a valid relationship to God. Faith in God's saving action in Jesus Christ takes precedence over any such legal claim (10:6).

10:4 The Mosaic legislation has been superseded by God's action in Jesus Christ. Others understand end here in the sense that Christ is the goal of the law, i.e., the true meaning of the Mosaic law, which cannot be correctly understood apart from him. Still others believe that both meanings are intended.

10:5-6 The subject of the verb says (10:6) is righteousness personified. Both of the statements in Romans 10:5, 6 derive from Moses, but Paul wishes to contrast the language of law and the language of faith.

10:7 Here Paul blends Deuteronomy 30:13 and Psalm 107:26.

10:9-11 To confess Jesus as Lord was frequently quite hazardous in the first century (cf. Mt 10:18; 1 Thes 2:2; 1 Pt 2:18-21; 3:14). For a Jew it could mean disruption of normal familial and other social relationships, including great economic sacrifice. In the face of penalties imposed by the secular world, Christians are assured that no one who believes in Jesus will be put to shame (10:11).

10:14-21 The gospel has been sufficiently proclaimed to Israel, and Israel has adequately understood God's plan for the messianic age, which would see the gospel brought to the uttermost parts of the earth. As often in the past, Israel has not accepted the prophetic message; cf. Acts 7:51-53.

10:15 How beautiful are the feet of those who bring [the] good news: in Semitic fashion, the parts of the body that bring the messenger with welcome news are praised; cf. Luke 11:27.

11:1-10 Although Israel has been unfaithful to the prophetic message of the gospel (10:14-21), God remains faithful to Israel. Proof of the divine fidelity lies in the existence of Jewish Christians like Paul himself. The unbelieving Jews, says Paul, have been blinded by the Christian teaching concerning the Messiah.

11:11-15 The unbelief of the Jews has paved the way for the preaching of the gospel to the Gentiles and for their easier acceptance of it outside the context of Jewish culture. Through his mission to the Gentiles Paul also hopes to fill his fellow Jews with jealousy. Hence he hastens to fill the entire Mediterranean world with the gospel. Once all the Gentile nations have heard the gospel, Israel as a whole is expected to embrace it. This will be tantamount to resurrection of the dead, that is, the reappearance of Jesus Christ with all the believers at the end of time.

11:16-24 Israel remains holy in the eyes of God and stands as a witness to the faith described in the Old Testament because of the firstfruits (or the first piece baked) (11:16), that is, the converted remnant, and the root that is holy, that is, the patriarchs (11:16). The Jews' failure to believe in Christ is a warning to Gentile Christians to be on guard against any semblance of anti-Jewish arrogance, that is, failure to recognize their total dependence on divine grace.

11:25-29 In God's design, Israel's unbelief is being used to grant the light of faith to the Gentiles. Meanwhile, Israel remains dear to God (cf. 9:13), still the object of special providence, the mystery of which will one day be revealed.

11:30-32 Israel, together with the Gentiles who have been handed over to all manner of vices (chap. 1), has been delivered … to disobedience. The conclusion of Romans 11:32 repeats the thought of Romans 5:20, "Where sin increased, grace overflowed all the more."

11:33-36 This final reflection celebrates the wisdom of God's plan of salvation. As Paul has indicated throughout these chapters, both Jew and Gentile, despite the religious recalcitrance of each, have received the gift of faith. The methods used by God in making this outreach to the world stagger human comprehension but are at the same time a dazzling invitation to abiding faith.

11:34 The citation is from the Greek text of Isaiah 40:13. Paul does not explicitly mention Isaiah in this verse, nor Job in Rom 11:35.

11:35 Paul quotes from an old Greek version of Job 41:3a, which differs from the Hebrew text (Jb 41:11a).

12:1–13:14 Since Christ marks the termination of the Mosaic law as the primary source of guidance for God's people (10:4), the apostle explains how Christians can function, in the light of the gift of justification through faith, in their relation to one another and the state.

12:1-8 The Mosaic code included elaborate directions on sacrifices and other cultic observances. The gospel, however, invites believers to present their bodies as a living sacrifice (12:1). Instead of being limited by specific legal maxims, Christians are liberated for the exercise of good judgment as they are confronted with the many and varied decisions required in the course of daily life. To assist them, God distributes a variety of gifts to the fellowship of believers, including those of prophecy, teaching, and exhortation (12:6-8). Prophets assist the community to understand the will of God as it applies to the present situation (12:6). Teachers help people to understand themselves and their responsibilities in relation to others (12:7). One who exhorts offers encouragement to the community to exercise their faith in the performance of all that is pleasing to God (12:8). Indeed, this very section, beginning with Romans 12:1, is a specimen of Paul's own style of exhortation.

12:5 One body in Christ: on the church as the body of Christ, see 1 Corinthians 12:12-27.

12:6 Everyone has some gift that can be used for the benefit of the community. When the instruction on justification through faith is correctly grasped, the possessor of a gift will understand that it is not an instrument of self-aggrandizement. Possession of a gift is not an index to quality of faith. Rather, the gift is a challenge to faithful use.

12:8 Over others: usually taken to mean "rule over" but possibly "serve as a patron." Wealthier members in Greco-Roman communities were frequently asked to assist in public service projects. In view of the references to contributing in generosity and to acts of mercy, Paul may have in mind people like Phoebe (16:1-2), who is called a benefactor (or "patron") because of the services she rendered to many Christians, including Paul.

12:14-21 Since God has justified the believers, it is not necessary for them to take justice into their own hands by taking vengeance. God will ultimately deal justly with all, including those who inflict injury on the believers. This question of personal rights as a matter of justice prepares the way for more detailed consideration of the state as adjudicator.

13:1-7 Paul must come to grips with the problem raised by a message that declares people free from the law. How are they to relate to Roman authority? The problem was exacerbated by the fact that imperial protocol was interwoven with devotion to various deities. Paul builds on the traditional instruction exhibited in Wisdom 6:1-3, according to which kings and magistrates rule by consent of God. From this perspective, then, believers who render obedience to the governing authorities are obeying the one who is highest in command. At the same time, it is recognized that Caesar has the responsibility to make just ordinances and to commend uprightness; cf. Wisdom 6:4-21. That Caesar is not entitled to obedience when such obedience would nullify God's prior claim to the believers' moral decision becomes clear in the light of the following verses.

13:8-10 When love directs the Christian's moral decisions, the interest of law in basic concerns, such as familial relationships, sanctity of life, and security of property, is safeguarded (13:9). Indeed, says Paul, the same applies to any other commandment (13:9), whether one in the Mosaic code or one drawn up by local magistrates under imperial authority. Love anticipates the purpose of public legislation, namely, to secure the best interests of the citizenry. Since Caesar's obligation is to punish the wrongdoer (13:4), the Christian who acts in love is free from all legitimate indictment.

13:11-14 These verses provide the motivation for the love that is encouraged in Romans 13:8-10.

13:13 Let us conduct ourselves properly as in the day: the behavior described in Romans 1:29-30 is now to be reversed. Secular moralists were fond of making references to people who could not wait for nightfall to do their carousing. Paul says that Christians claim to be people of the new day that will dawn with the return of Christ. Instead of planning for nighttime behavior they should be concentrating on conduct that is consonant with avowed interest in the Lord's return.

14:1–15:6 Since Christ spells termination of the law, which included observance of specific days and festivals as well as dietary instruction, the jettisoning of long-practiced customs was traumatic for many Christians brought up under the Mosaic code. Although Paul acknowledges that in principle no food is a source of moral contamination (14:14), he recommends that the consciences of Christians who are scrupulous in this regard be respected by other Christians (14:21). On the other hand, those who have scruples are not to sit in judgment on those who know that the gospel has liberated them from such ordinances (14:10). See 1 Corinthians 8; 10.

14:5 Since the problem to be overcome was humanity's perverted mind or judgment (1:28), Paul indicates that the mind of the Christian is now able to function with appropriate discrimination (cf. 12:2).

14:8 The Lord: Jesus, our Master. The same Greek word, kyrios, was applied to both rulers and holders of slaves. Throughout the Letter to the Romans Paul emphasizes God's total claim on the believer; see the note on Romans 1:1.

14:19 Some manuscripts, versions, and church Fathers read, "We then pursue …"; cf. Romans 5:1.

14:23 Whatever is not from faith is sin: Paul does not mean that all the actions of unbelievers are sinful. He addresses himself to the question of intracommunity living. Sin in the singular is the dreadful power described in Romans 5:12-14.

15:3 Liberation from the law of Moses does not make the scriptures of the old covenant irrelevant. Much consolation and motivation for Christian living can be derived from the Old Testament, as in the citation from Psalm 69:10. Because this psalm is quoted several times in the New Testament, it has been called indirectly messianic.

15:5 Think in harmony: a Greco-Roman ideal. Not rigid uniformity of thought and expression but thoughtful consideration of other people's views finds expression here.

15:7-13 True oneness of mind is found in pondering the ultimate mission of the church: to bring it about that God's name be glorified throughout the world and that Jesus Christ be universally recognized as God's gift to all humanity. Paul here prepares his addressees for the climactic appeal he is about to make.

15:10 Paul's citation of Deuteronomy 32:43 follows the Greek version.

15:14-33 Paul sees himself as apostle and benefactor in the priestly service of the gospel and so sketches plans for a mission in Spain, supported by those in Rome.

15:14 Full of goodness: the opposite of what humanity was filled with according to Romans 1:29-30.

15:19 Illyricum: Roman province northwest of Greece on the eastern shore of the Adriatic.

15:20 I aspire: Paul uses terminology customarily applied to philanthropists. Unlike some philanthropists of his time, Paul does not engage in cheap competition for public acclaim. This explanation of his missionary policy is to assure the Christians in Rome that he is also not planning to remain in that city and build on other people's foundations (cf. 2 Cor 10:12-18). However, he does solicit their help in sending him on his way to Spain, which was considered the limit of the western world. Thus Paul's addressees realize that evangelization may be understood in the broader sense of mission or, as in Romans 1:15, of instruction within the Christian community that derives from the gospel.

15:21 The citation from Isaiah 52:15 concerns the Servant of the Lord. According to Isaiah, the Servant is first of all Israel, which was to bring the knowledge of Yahweh to the nations. In Romans 9–11 Paul showed how Israel failed in this mission. Therefore, he himself undertakes almost singlehandedly Israel's responsibility as the Servant and moves as quickly as possible with the gospel through the Roman empire.

15:25-27 Paul may have viewed the contribution he was gathering from Gentile Christians for the poor in Jerusalem (cf. 2 Cor 8–9) as a fulfillment of the vision of Isaiah 60:5-6. In confidence that the messianic fulfillment was taking place, Paul stresses in Romans 14–16 the importance of harmonious relationships between Jews and Gentiles.

15:26 Achaia: the Roman province of southern Greece.

16:1-23 Some authorities regard these verses as a later addition to the letter, but in general the evidence favors the view that they were included in the original. Paul endeavors through the long list of greetings (16:3-16, 21-23) to establish strong personal contact with congregations that he has not personally encountered before. The combination of Jewish and Gentile names dramatically attests the unity in the gospel that transcends previous barriers of nationality, religious ceremony, or racial status.

16:1 Minister: in Greek, diakonos; see the note on Philippians 1:1.

16:3 Prisca and Aquila: presumably the couple mentioned at Acts 18:2; 1 Corinthians 16:19; 2 Timothy 4:19.

16:5 The church at their house: i.e., that meets there. Such local assemblies (cf. 1 Cor 16:19; Col 4:15; Phlm 2) might consist of only one or two dozen Christians each. It is understandable, therefore, that such smaller groups might experience difficulty in relating to one another on certain issues. Firstfruits: cf. Romans 8:23; 11:16; 1 Corinthians 16:15.

16:7 The name Junia is a woman’s name. One ancient Greek manuscript and a number of ancient versions read the name “Julia.” Most editors have interpreted it as a man’s name, Junias.

16:13 This Rufus cannot be identified to any degree of certainty with the Rufus of Mark 15:21.

16:17-18 Paul displays genuine concern for the congregations in Rome by warning them against self-seeking teachers. It would be a great loss, he intimates, if their obedience, which is known to all (cf. 1:8), would be diluted.

16:20 This verse contains the only mention of Satan in Romans.

16:23 This Erastus is not necessarily to be identified with the Erastus of Acts 19:22 or of 2 Timothy 4:20.

16:24 Some manuscripts add, similarly to Romans 16:20, “The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.”

16:25-27 This doxology is assigned variously to the end of Romans 14; 15; 16 in the manuscript tradition. Some manuscripts omit it entirely. Whether written by Paul or not, it forms an admirable conclusion to the letter at this point.

16:25 Paul’s gospel reveals the mystery kept secret for long ages: justification and salvation through faith, with all the implications for Jews and Gentiles that Paul has developed in the letter.

The First Letter to the Corinthians

Paul's first letter to the church of Corinth provides us with a fuller insight into the life of an early Christian community of the first generation than any other book of the New Testament. Through it we can glimpse both the strengths and the weaknesses of this small group in a great city of the ancient world, men and women who had accepted the good news of Christ and were now trying to realize in their lives the implications of their baptism. Paul, who had founded the community and continued to look after it as a father, responds both to questions addressed to him and to situations of which he had been informed. In doing so, he reveals much about himself, his teaching, and the way in which he conducted his work of apostleship. Some things are puzzling because we have the correspondence only in one direction. For the person studying this letter, it seems to raise as many questions as it answers, but without it our knowledge of church life in the middle of the first century would be much poorer.

Paul established a Christian community in Corinth about the year 51, on his second missionary journey. The city, a commercial crossroads, was a melting pot full of devotees of various pagan cults and marked by a measure of moral depravity not unusual in a great seaport. The Acts of the Apostles suggests that moderate success attended Paul's efforts among the Jews in Corinth at first, but that they soon turned against him (Acts 18:1-8). More fruitful was his year and a half spent among the Gentiles (Acts 18:11), which won to the faith many of the city's poor and underprivileged (1:26). After his departure the eloquent Apollos, an Alexandrian Jewish Christian, rendered great service to the community, expounding "from the scriptures that the Messiah is Jesus" (Acts 18:24-28).

While Paul was in Ephesus on his third journey (16:8; Acts 19:1-20), he received disquieting news about Corinth. The community there was displaying open factionalism, as certain members were identifying themselves exclusively with individual Christian leaders and interpreting Christian teaching as a superior wisdom for the initiated few (1:10–4:21). The community lacked the decisiveness to take appropriate action against one of its members who was living publicly in an incestuous union (5:1-13). Other members engaged in legal conflicts in pagan courts of law (6:1-11); still others may have participated in religious prostitution (6:12-20) or temple sacrifices (10:14-22).

SUMMARY

First Corinthians deals with divisions in the believing community at Corinth and the harm that they inflict on “the body of Christ.” Paul also deals with many individual ethical problems in the community of which he has become aware through letters and contacts.

Author: Paul, with Sosthenes listed as a coauthor (1:1).

Date: Circa A.D. 56 from Ephesus.

Content: Divisions in the community; true wisdom; the role of God’s ministers; various ethical issues, for example, incest, lawsuits, sexual immorality, marriage and celibacy, idolatry; liturgical disturbances; the diversity of spiritual gifts and the one Spirit; resurrection.

The community’s ills were reflected in its liturgy. In the celebration of the Eucharist certain members discriminated against others, drank too freely at the agape, or fellowship meal, and denied Christian social courtesies to the poor among the membership (11:17-22). Charisms such as ecstatic prayer, attributed freely to the impulse of the holy Spirit, were more highly prized than works of charity (13:1-2, 8), and were used at times in a disorderly way (14:1-40). Women appeared at the assembly without the customary head-covering (11:3-16), and perhaps were quarreling over their right to address the assembly (14:34-35).

Still other problems with which Paul had to deal concerned matters of conscience discussed among the faithful members of the community: the eating of meat that had been sacrificed to idols (8:1-13), the use of sex in marriage (7:1-7), and the attitude to be taken by the unmarried toward marriage in view of the possible proximity of Christ’s second coming (7:25-40). There was also a doctrinal matter that called for Paul’s attention, for some members of the community, despite their belief in the resurrection of Christ, were denying the possibility of general bodily resurrection.

To treat this wide spectrum of questions, Paul wrote this letter from Ephesus about the year A.D. 56. The majority of the Corinthian Christians may well have been quite faithful. Paul writes on their behalf to guard against the threats posed to the community by the views and conduct of various minorities. He writes with confidence in the authority of his apostolic mission, and he presumes that the Corinthians, despite their deficiencies, will recognize and accept it. On the other hand, he does not hesitate to exercise his authority as his judgment dictates in each situation, even going so far as to promise a direct confrontation with recalcitrants, should the abuses he scores remain uncorrected (4:18-21).

The letter illustrates well the mind and character of Paul. Although he is impelled to insist on his office as founder of the community, he recognizes that he is only one servant of God among many and generously acknowledges the labors of Apollos (3:5-8). He provides us in this letter with many valuable examples of his method of theological reflection and exposition. He always treats the questions at issue on the level of the purity of Christian teaching and conduct. Certain passages of the letter are of the greatest importance for the understanding of early Christian teaching on the Eucharist (10:14-22; 11:17-34) and on the resurrection of the body (15:1-58).

Paul's authorship of 1 Corinthians, apart from a few verses that some regard as later interpolations, has never been seriously questioned. Some scholars have proposed, however, that the letter as we have it contains portions of more than one original Pauline letter. We know that Paul wrote at least two other letters to Corinth (see 5:9; 2 Cor 2:3-4) in addition to the two that we now have; this theory holds that the additional letters are actually contained within the two canonical ones. Most commentators, however, find 1 Corinthians quite understandable as a single coherent work.

The principal divisions of the First Letter to the Corinthians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-9)
II. Disorders in the Corinthian Community (1:10–6:20)
    A. Divisions in the Church (1:10–4:21)
    B. Moral Disorders (5:1–6:20)
III. Answers to the Corinthians' Questions (7:1–11:1)
    A. Marriage and Virginity (7:1-40)
    B. Offerings to Idols (8:1–11:1)
IV. Problems in Liturgical Assemblies (11:2–14:40)

- A. Women’s Headdresses (11:3-16)
- B. The Lord’s Supper (11:17-34)
- C. Spiritual Gifts (12:1–14:40)

V. The Resurrection (15:1-58)

- A. The Resurrection of Christ (15:1-11)
- B. The Resurrection of the Dead (15:12-34)
- C. The Manner of the Resurrection (15:35-58)

VI. Conclusion (16:1-24)

[10]I urge you, brothers, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that all of you agree in what you say, and that there be no divisions among you, but that you be united in the same mind and in the same purpose.[f] [11]For it has been reported to me about you, my brothers, by Chloe's people, that there are rivalries among you. [12]I mean that each of you is saying, "I belong to* Paul," or "I belong to Apollos," or "I belong to Cephas," or "I belong to Christ."[g] [13]*Is Christ divided? Was Paul crucified for you? Or were you baptized in the name of Paul? [14]I give thanks [to God] that I baptized none of you except Crispus and Gaius,[h] [15]so that no one can say you were baptized in my name. [16](I baptized the household of Stephanas also; beyond that I do not know whether I baptized anyone else.)[i] [17]For Christ did not send me to baptize but to preach the gospel, and not with the wisdom of human eloquence, so that the cross of Christ might not be emptied of its meaning.[j]

Paradox of the Cross

18The message of the cross is foolishness to those who are perishing, but to us who are being saved it is the power of God.[k] 19For it is written:

20Where is the wise one? Where is the scribe? Where is the debater of this age? Has not God made the wisdom of the world foolish?[m] 21*For since in the wisdom of God the world did not come to know God through wisdom, it was the will of God through the foolishness of the proclamation to save those who have faith. 22For Jews demand signs and Greeks look for wisdom,[n] 23but we proclaim Christ crucified, a stumbling block to Jews and foolishness to Gentiles,[o] 24but to those who are called, Jews and Greeks alike, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. 25For the foolishness of God is wiser than human wisdom, and the weakness of God is stronger than human strength.

26Consider your own calling, brothers. Not many of you were wise by human standards, not many were powerful, not many were of noble birth. 27Rather, God chose the foolish of the world to shame the wise, and God chose the weak of the world to shame the strong,[p] 28and God chose the lowly and despised of the world, those who count for nothing, to reduce to nothing those who are something, 29so that no human being might boast* before God.[q] 30It is due to him that you are in Christ Jesus, who became for us wisdom from God, as well as righteousness, sanctification, and redemption,[r] 31so that, as it is written, “Whoever boasts, should boast in the Lord.”[s]

2 1When I came to you, brothers, proclaiming the mystery of God,* I did not come with sublimity of words or of wisdom.[a] 2For I resolved to know nothing while I was with you except Jesus Christ, and him crucified.[b] 3I came to you in weakness* and fear and much trembling, 4and my message and my proclamation were not with persuasive [words of] wisdom,* but with a demonstration of spirit and power,[c] 5so that your faith might rest not on human wisdom but on the power of God.[d]

The True Wisdom*

6Yet we do speak a wisdom to those who are mature, but not a wisdom of this age, nor of the rulers of this age who are passing away. 7Rather, we speak God’s wisdom,* mysterious, hidden, which God predetermined before the ages for our glory, 8and which none of the rulers of this age* knew; for, if they had known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. 9But as it is written:

“What eye has not seen, and ear has not heard, and what has not entered the human heart, what God has prepared for those who love him,”[e]

f
Mt 11:25; 13:11; 16:17

10[f]this God has revealed to us through the Spirit.

Ruins at Corinth

For the Spirit scrutinizes everything, even the depths of God. 11Among human beings, who knows what pertains to a person except the spirit of the person that is within? Similarly, no one knows what pertains to God except the Spirit of God. [12]We have not received the spirit of the world but the Spirit that is from God, so that we may understand the things freely given us by God. [13]And we speak about them not with words taught by human wisdom, but with words taught by the Spirit, describing spiritual realities in spiritual terms.*

[14]Now the natural person* does not accept what pertains to the Spirit of God, for to him it is foolishness, and he cannot understand it, because it is judged spiritually. [15]The spiritual person, however, can judge everything but is not subject to judgment* by anyone.

Indeed, you are still not able, even now,[a] [3]for you are still of the flesh. While there is jealousy and rivalry among you,* are you not of the flesh and behaving in an ordinary human way?[b] [4]Whenever someone says, “I belong to Paul,” and another, “I belong to Apollos,” are you not merely human?[c]

The Role of God’s Ministers*

Eph 2:20-22; 1 Pt 2:5

5What is Apollos, after all, and what is Paul? Ministers* through whom you became believers, just as the Lord assigned each one. 6I planted, Apollos watered, but God caused the growth.[d] 7Therefore, neither the one who plants nor the one who waters is anything, but only God, who causes the growth. 8The one who plants and the one who waters are equal, and each will receive wages in proportion to his labor. 9For we are God’s co-workers; you are God’s field, God’s building.[e]

Apollos, the Gardener

An experienced gardener knows that there’s more to growing flowers than simply getting them in the ground. Beautiful flowers are a result of good soil preparation, watering the seeds and plants without flooding them, ample sunshine or shade, a sufficiently long growing season, and, perhaps most important, the sheer enjoyment of daily investigation and the thrill of even the smallest signs of growth.

Paul uses gardening imagery to speak of the roles that he and Apollos had in the Corinthian community. Rather than guard his territory as the evangelizer in Corinth, Paul allowed room for others to preach and teach and influence the community. The determining factor was God’s work through them.

Apollos came to “water” the Gospel message so that its roots would grow deep and strong. Far from unimportant, his role was essential.

It will be revealed with fire, and the fire [itself] will test the quality of each one's work.f [14]If the work stands that someone built upon the foundation, that person will receive a wage. [15]But if someone's work is burned up, that one will suffer loss; the person will be saved,* but only as through fire. [16]Do you not know that you are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwells in you?g [17]If anyone destroys God's temple, God will destroy that person; for the temple of God, which you are, is holy.*

[6]I have applied these things to myself and Apollos for your benefit, brothers, so that you may learn from us not to go beyond what is written,* so that none of you will be inflated with pride in favor of one person over against another. The one who did this deed should be expelled from your midst. [3]I, for my part, although absent in body but present in spirit, have already, as if present, pronounced judgment on the one who has committed this deed,[b] [4]in the name of [our] Lord Jesus: when you have gathered together and I am with you in spirit with the power of the Lord Jesus, [5]you are to deliver this man to Satan* for the destruction of his flesh, so that his spirit may be saved on the day of the Lord.[c]

Wis 3:8; Mt 19:28; Rev 20:4

6 [1]How can any one of you with a case against another dare to bring it to the unjust for judgment instead of to the holy ones? [2]*Do you not know that the holy ones will judge the world? If the world is to be judged by you, are you unqualified for the lowest law courts?[a] [3]Do you not know that we will judge angels? Then why not everyday matters? [4]If, therefore, you have courts for everyday matters, do you seat as judges people of no standing in the church? [5]I say this to shame you. Can it be that there is not one among you wise enough to be able to settle a case between brothers? [6]But rather brother goes to court against brother, and that before unbelievers?

Why not rather let yourselves be cheated?[b] [8]Instead, you inflict injustice and cheat, and this to brothers. [9]Do you not know that the unjust will not inherit the kingdom of God? Do not be deceived; neither fornicators nor idolaters nor adulterers nor boy prostitutes nor sodomites[c] [10]nor thieves nor the greedy nor drunkards nor slanderers nor robbers will inherit the kingdom of God. [11]That is what some of you used to be; but now you have had yourselves washed, you were sanctified, you were justified in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and in the Spirit of our God.[d]

For “the two,” it says, “will become one flesh.”[h] [17]But whoever is joined to the Lord becomes one spirit with him.[i] [18]Avoid immorality. III: ANSWERS TO THE CORINTHIANS’ QUESTIONS

*A. Marriage and Virginity

Advice to the Married

Mt 19:11-12

7 * 1Now in regard to the matters about which you wrote: “It is a good thing for a man not to touch a woman,”* 2but because of cases of immorality every man should have his own wife, and every woman her own husband. 3The husband should fulfill his duty toward his wife, and likewise the wife toward her husband. 4A wife does not have authority over her own body, but rather her husband, and similarly a husband does not have authority over his own body, but rather his wife. 5Do not deprive each other, except perhaps by mutual consent for a time, to be free for prayer, but then return to one another, so that Satan may not tempt you through your lack of self-control. 6This I say by way of concession,* however, not as a command. 7Indeed, I wish everyone to be as I am, but each has a particular gift from God,* one of one kind and one of another.[a]

8*[b]Now to the unmarried and to widows I say: it is a good thing for them to remain as they are, as I do, 9but if they cannot exercise self-control they should marry, for it is better to marry than to be on fire. 10[c]To the married, however, I give this instruction (not I, but the Lord):* A wife should not separate from her husband 11—and if she does separate she must either remain single or become reconciled to her husband—and a husband should not divorce his wife.

12To the rest* I say (not the Lord): if any brother has a wife who is an unbeliever, and she is willing to go on living with him, he should not divorce her; 13and if any woman has a husband who is an unbeliever, and he is willing to go on living with her, she should not divorce her husband. 14For the unbelieving husband is made holy through his wife, and the unbelieving wife is made holy through the brother. Otherwise your children would be unclean, whereas in fact they are holy.[d]

15If the unbeliever separates,* however, let him separate. The brother or sister is not bound in such cases; God has called you to peace. 16For how do you know, wife, whether you will save your husband; or how do you know, husband, whether you will save your wife?

The Life That the Lord Has Assigned

1 Mc 1:15 / Acts 15:1-2

Rom 2:25, 29; Gal 5:6; 6:15

17*Only, everyone should live as the Lord has assigned, just as God called each one. I give this order in all the churches. 18Was someone called after he had been circumcised? He should not try to undo his circumcision. Was an uncircumcised person called? He should not be circumcised.[e] 19Circumcision means nothing, and uncircumcision means nothing; what matters is keeping God's commandments.[f] 20Everyone should remain in the state in which he was called.

Eph 6:5-9; Col 3:11; Phlm 16

21Were you a slave when you were called? Do not be concerned but, even if you can gain your freedom, make the most of it. 22For the slave called in the Lord is a freed person in the Lord, just as the free person who has been called is a slave of Christ.[g] 23You have been purchased at a price. Do not become slaves to human beings.[h] 24Brothers, everyone should continue before God in the state in which he was called.

Advice to Virgins and Widows

25Now in regard to virgins I have no commandment from the Lord,* but I give my opinion as one who by the Lord’s mercy is trustworthy.
26So this is what I think best because of the present distress: that it is a good thing for a person to remain as he is.[i] 27Are you bound to a wife?
Do not seek a separation. Are you free of a wife? Then do not look for a wife. 28If you marry, however, you do not sin, nor does an unmarried woman sin if she marries; but such people will experience affliction in their earthly life, and I would like to spare you that.

Paul’s eschatology—his views on the “end times” (from Greek eschaton)—are most apparent in this passage. Like most of the early followers of Jesus, Paul expected Jesus to return quickly after the resurrection to bring the sinful world to judgment and to establish a kingdom of righteousness. This expectation fueled the urgency of his message: “the time is running out” (1 Cor 7:29; cf. also 1 Thes 5:1-3). As time went on, believers recognized that the end times might not come as quickly as originally expected and that it was foolish to speculate on the timing or details of this future event (cf. Mk 13:32-33; Acts 1:6-7). This belief in Jesus’ eventual return and future judgment remains an essential part of the church’s faith.

Rom 13:11

29*I tell you, brothers, the time is running out. From now on, let those having wives act as not having them,[j] 30those weeping as not weeping, those rejoicing as not rejoicing, those buying as not owning, 31those using the world as not using it fully. For the world in its present form is passing away.

k
Lk 14:20
l
1 Tm 5:5
m
Lk 10:39-42

32I should like you to be free of anxieties. An unmarried man is anxious about the things of the Lord, how he may please the Lord.

[33]But a married man is anxious about the things of the world, how he may please his wife,[k] [34]and he is divided. An unmarried woman or a virgin is anxious about the things of the Lord, so that she may be holy in both body and spirit. A married woman, on the other hand, is anxious about the things of the world, how she may please her husband.[l] [35]I am telling you this for your own benefit, not to impose a restraint upon you, but for the sake of propriety and adherence to the Lord without distraction.[m]

[36]If anyone thinks he is behaving improperly toward his virgin, and if a critical moment has come and so it has to be, let him do as he wishes. He is committing no sin; let them get married. [37]The one who stands firm in his resolve, however, who is not under compulsion but has power over his own will, and has made up his mind to keep his virgin, will be doing well. [38]So then, the one who marries his virgin does well; the one who does not marry her will do better.

The Corinthian letters from Paul correspond to the cultural environment of the first-century Greco-Roman Empire. In that culture, men and women had somewhat defined roles, though they were in the process of some change. The legal status of women had improved over earlier centuries, allowing for greater economic security and dealings, especially for those in the upper class. In the general population, marriages were usually arranged by male family members, with the male considered head of the household and the one responsible for most dealings with the outside world, and the woman responsible for the household duties, including child rearing. However, even these roles were somewhat fluid when comparing the roles between urban households (more restrictive for women) and rural ones (where women had more involvement in providing for the family).

8 1Now in regard to meat sacrificed to idols:* we realize that “all of us have knowledge”; knowledge inflates with pride, but love builds up.[a] 2If anyone supposes he knows something, he does not yet know as he ought to know. 3But if one loves God, one is known by him.[b]

4So about the eating of meat sacrificed to idols: we know that “there is no idol in the world,” and that “there is no God but one.”[c] 5Indeed, even though there are so-called gods in heaven and on earth (there are, to be sure, many “gods” and many “lords”), 6*yet for us there is

Who plants a vineyard without eating its produce? Or who shepherds a flock without using some of the milk from the flock?[c] 8Am I saying this on human authority, or does not the law also speak of these things? 9It is written in the law of Moses, "You shall not muzzle an ox while it is treading out the grain."[d] Is God concerned about oxen, 10or is he not really speaking for our sake? It was written for our sake, because the plowman should plow in hope, and the thresher in hope of receiving a share.[e] 11If we have sown spiritual seed for you, is it a great thing that we reap a material harvest from you?[f] 12If others share this rightful claim on you, do not we still more?[g]

That, when I preach, I offer the gospel free of charge so as not to make full use of my right in the gospel.[m]

Paul frequently asks his congregations to “imitate” him (cf. 1 Cor 4:16; Phil 3:17). Paul viewed himself as a model for faith. Just as he attempted to emulate Jesus in every way, such as in embracing suffering and preaching good news, so Paul exhorted his communities to do likewise. Sometimes he commended their effectiveness in becoming models themselves.

But if it is shameful for a woman to have her hair cut off or her head shaved, then she should wear a veil.

13*Judge for yourselves: is it proper for a woman to pray to God with her head unveiled? 14Does not nature itself teach you that if a man wears his hair long it is a disgrace to him, 15whereas if a woman has long hair it is her glory, because long hair has been given [her] for a covering? 16But if anyone is inclined to be argumentative, we do not have such a custom, nor do the churches of God.

Do this in remembrance of me.” [25]In the same way also the cup, after supper, saying, “This cup is the new covenant in my blood. Do this, as often as you drink it, in remembrance of me.”[l] [26]For as often as you eat this bread and drink the cup, you proclaim the death of the Lord until he comes.

The Institution of the Eucharist

Only First Corinthians and the Synoptic Gospels record the institution of the Eucharist at the Last Supper. Paul’s account is the earliest version. All the accounts tell of Jesus’ final meal with his disciples on the eve of his passion, but scholars are not certain that it was historically a Passover meal, although it took place near the Feast of Passover (see list of Jewish Feasts). The Synoptic Gospels portray it as a Passover meal, but John does not. In any case, it was a special meal in which Jesus revealed the profound meaning of his coming death and resurrection as a salvific action in which he would sacrifice his own body as “bread” for the world. The details of the four accounts vary slightly to give one or another emphasis to the deep theological meaning of this event (chart below). At every Mass, the church celebrates Jesus’ eucharistic action on the night before he died. It is interesting that John’s gospel does not describe the words of institution; instead it narrates Jesus’ washing the feet of his disciples (Jn 13:1-15). This is the gospel the church uses for the Mass on Holy Thursday evening, called the “Mass of the Lord’s Supper.”

Dt 8:5; Heb 12:5-11

[27]Therefore whoever eats the bread or drinks the cup of the Lord unworthily will have to answer for the body and blood of the Lord.* [28]A person should examine himself,* and so eat the bread and drink the cup. [29]For anyone who eats and drinks without discerning the body, eats and drinks judgment* on himself. [30]That is why many among you are ill and infirm, and a considerable number are dying. [31]If we discerned ourselves, we would not be under judgment; [32]but since we are judged by [the] Lord, we are being disciplined so that we may not be condemned along with the world.[m]

[33]Therefore, my brothers, when you come together to eat, wait for one another. [34]If anyone is hungry, he should eat at home, so that your meetings may not result in judgment. The other matters I shall set in order when I come.

*C. Spiritual Gifts

Unity and Variety

Rom 10:9; 1 Jn 4:2-3

12 [1]Now in regard to spiritual gifts, brothers, I do not want you to be unaware. [2]*You know how, when you were pagans, you were constantly attracted and led away to mute idols.[a] [3]Therefore, I tell you that nobody speaking by the spirit of God says, “Jesus be accursed.” And no one can say, “Jesus is Lord,” except by the holy Spirit.[b]

7:7; Eph 4:7

[4]*There are different kinds of spiritual gifts but the same Spirit;[c] [5]there are different forms of service but the same Lord; [6]there are different workings but the same God who produces all of them in everyone. [7]To each individual the manifestation of the Spirit is given for some benefit. [8]To one is given through the Spirit the expression of wisdom; to another the expression of knowledge according to the same Spirit;[d] [9]to another faith by the same Spirit; to another gifts of healing by the one Spirit; [10]to another mighty deeds; to another prophecy; to another discernment of spirits; to another varieties of tongues; to another interpretation of tongues.[e] [11]But one and the same Spirit produces all of these, distributing them individually to each person as he wishes.[f]

One Body, Many Parts*

10:17; Rom 12:4-5; Eph 2:16; Col 3:15

h

Gal 3:28; Eph 2:13-18; Col 3:11 / Jn 7:37-39

12As a body is one though it has many parts, and all the parts of the body, though many, are one body, so also Christ.[g] 13For in one Spirit we were all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, slaves or free persons, and we were all given to drink of one Spirit.[h]

14Now the body is not a single part, but many. 15If a foot should say, “Because I am not a hand I do not belong to the body,” it does not for this reason belong any less to the body. 16Or if an ear should say, “Because I am not an eye I do not belong to the body,” it does not for this reason belong any less to the body. 17If the whole body were an eye, where would the hearing be? If the whole body were hearing, where would the sense of smell be? 18But as it is, God placed the parts, each one of them, in the body as he intended. 19If they were all one part, where would the body be? 20But as it is, there are many parts, yet one body. 21The eye cannot say to the hand, “I do not need you,” nor again the head to the feet, “I do not need you.” 22Indeed, the parts of the body that seem to be weaker are all the more necessary, 23and those parts of the body that we consider less honorable we surround with greater honor, and our less presentable parts are treated with greater propriety, 24whereas our more presentable parts do not need this. But God has so constructed the body as to give greater honor to a part that is without it, 25so that there may be no division in the body, but that the parts may have the same concern for one another. 26If [one] part suffers, all the parts suffer with it; if one part is honored, all the parts share its joy.

Paul’s image of the “body of Christ” for the church is one of the most important in the NT. In the Greco-Roman world the “body” was identified both with the human body and a political reality, such as a city. When one part of the body suffers, all suffer. When another part rejoices, so do all. Vatican II featured this image prominently in calling the church to recognize the diversity within it while working for the deeper unity desired by Christ (LG 7, 17).

[27]Now you are Christ’s body, and individually parts of it.[i] [28]Some people God has designated in the church to be, first, apostles;* second, prophets; third, teachers; then, mighty deeds; then, gifts of healing, assistance, administration, and varieties of tongues.[j] [29]Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Do all work mighty deeds? [30]Do all have gifts of healing? Do all speak in tongues? Do all interpret? [31]Strive eagerly for the greatest spiritual gifts.

8 *Love never fails. If there are prophecies, they will be brought to nothing; if tongues, they will cease; if knowledge, it will be brought to nothing. 9For we know partially and we prophesy partially, 10but when the perfect comes, the partial will pass away. 11When I was a child, I used to talk as a child, think as a child, reason as a child; when I became a man, I put aside childish things. 12At present we see indistinctly, as in a mirror, but then face to face. At present I know partially; then I shall know fully, as I am fully known.[g] 13*So faith, hope, love remain, these three;[h] but the greatest of these is love.

Prophecy Greater than Tongues

14:5, 12, 39

14:4–5, 12, 17, 26; 3:9; 8:1, 10; 10:23

14 1 *Pursue love, but strive eagerly for the spiritual gifts, above all that you may prophesy.[a] 2 For one who speaks in a tongue does not speak to human beings but to God, for no one listens; he utters mysteries in spirit. 3 On the other hand, one who prophesies does speak to human beings, for their building up, encouragement, and solace.[b] 4 Whoever speaks in a tongue builds himself up, but whoever prophesies builds up the church. 5 Now I should like all of you to speak in tongues, but even more to prophesy. One who prophesies is greater than one who speaks in tongues, unless he interprets, so that the church may be built up.

6 *Now, brothers, if I should come to you speaking in tongues, what good will I do you if I do not speak to you by way of revelation, or knowledge, or prophecy, or instruction? 7 Likewise, if inanimate things that produce sound, such as flute or harp, do not give out the tones distinctly, how will what is being played on flute or harp be recognized? 8 And if the bugle gives an indistinct sound, who will get ready for battle? 9 Similarly, if you, because of speaking in tongues, do not utter intelligible speech, how will anyone know what is being said? For you will be talking to the air. 10 It happens that there are many different languages in the world, and none is meaningless; 11 but if I do not know the meaning of a language, I shall be a foreigner to one who speaks it, and one who speaks it a foreigner to me. 12 So with yourselves: since you strive eagerly for spirits, seek to have an abundance of them for building up the church.

Need for Interpretation*

Eph 5:19; Col 3:16

[13]Therefore, one who speaks in a tongue should pray to be able to interpret. [14][For] if I pray in a tongue, my spirit* is at prayer but my mind is unproductive. [15]So what is to be done? I will pray with the spirit, but I will also pray with the mind. I will sing praise with the spirit, but I will also sing praise with the mind.[c] [16]Otherwise, if you pronounce a blessing [with] the spirit, how shall one who holds the place of the uninstructed say the “Amen” to your thanksgiving, since he does not know what you are saying? [17]For you may be giving thanks very well, but the other is not built up. [18]I give thanks to God that I speak in tongues more than any of you, [19]but in the church I would rather speak five words with my mind, so as to instruct others also, than ten thousand words in a tongue.

Functions of These Gifts

Mt 10:16; Rom 16:19; Eph 4:14

20*Brothers, stop being childish in your thinking. In respect to evil be like infants, but in your thinking be mature.[d] 21It is written in the law:

“By people speaking strange tongues and by the lips of foreigners
I will speak to this people,

e

Is 28:11-12; Dt 28:49

    and even so they will not listen to me,[e]

says the Lord.” 22Thus, tongues are a sign not for those who believe but for unbelievers, whereas prophecy is not for unbelievers but for those who believe.

f

Acts 2:6, 13

4:5 / Is 45:14; Zec 8:23

23*So if the whole church meets in one place and everyone speaks in tongues, and then uninstructed people or unbelievers should come in, will they not say that you are out of your minds?[f] 24But if everyone is prophesying, and an unbeliever or uninstructed person should come in, he will be convinced by everyone and judged by everyone, 25and the secrets of his heart will be disclosed, and so he will fall down and worship God, declaring, “God is really in your midst.”[g]

Rules of Order

Eph 4:12

26*So what is to be done, brothers? When you assemble, one has a psalm, another an instruction, a revelation, a tongue, or an interpretation. Everything should be done for building up.[h] 27If anyone speaks in a tongue, let it be two or at most three, and each in turn, and one should interpret. 28But if there is no interpreter, the person should keep silent in the church and speak to himself and to God.

29Two or three prophets should speak, and the others discern. 30But if a revelation is given to another person sitting there, the first one should be silent. 31For you can all prophesy one by one, so that all may learn and all be encouraged. 32Indeed, the spirits of prophets are under the prophets' control, 33since he is not the God of disorder but of peace.

1 Tm 2:11-15; 1 Pt 3:1

As in all the churches of the holy ones,* 34women should keep silent in the churches, for they are not allowed to speak, but should be subordinate, as even the law says.[i] 35But if they want to learn anything, they should ask their husbands at home. For it is improper for a woman to speak in the church. 36Did the word of God go forth from you? Or has it come to you alone?

37If anyone thinks that he is a prophet or a spiritual person, he should recognize that what I am writing to you is a commandment of the Lord. 38If anyone does not acknowledge this, he is not acknowledged. 39So, [my] brothers, strive eagerly to prophesy, and do not forbid speaking in tongues, 40but everything must be done properly and in order.

[2]Through it you are also being saved, if you hold fast to the word I preached to you, unless you believed in vain. [3]For I handed on to you as of first importance what I also received: that Christ died for our sins in accordance with the scriptures;[a] [4]that he was buried; that he was raised on the third day in accordance with the scriptures;[b] [5]that he appeared to Cephas, then to the Twelve.[c] [6]After that, he appeared to more than five hundred brothers at once, most of whom are still living, though some have fallen asleep. [7]After that he appeared to James, then to all the apostles. [8]Last of all, as to one born abnormally, he appeared to me.[d] [9]For I am the least of the apostles, not fit to be called an apostle, because I persecuted the church of God.[e] [10]But by the grace of God I am what I am, and his grace to me has not been ineffective. Indeed, I have toiled harder than all of them; not I, however, but the grace of God [that is] with me. [11]Therefore, whether it be I or they, so we preach and so you believed.

[20][h]But now Christ has been raised from the dead, the firstfruits* of those who have fallen asleep. [21]For since death came through a human being, the resurrection of the dead came also through a human being. [22]For just as in Adam all die, so too in Christ shall all be brought to life,[i] [23]but each one in proper order: Christ the firstfruits; then, at his coming, those who belong to Christ;[j] [24]then comes the end, when he hands over the kingdom to his God and Father, when he has destroyed every sovereignty and every authority and power.[k] [25]For he must reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet.[l] [26]*The last enemy[m] to be destroyed is death, [27]*for "he subjected everything under his feet."[n] But when it says that everything has been subjected, it is clear that it excludes the one who subjected everything to him. [28]When everything is subjected to him, then the Son himself will [also] be subjected to the one who subjected everything to him, so that God may be all in all.[o]

Practical Arguments*

29Otherwise, what will people accomplish by having themselves baptized for the dead?* If the dead are not raised at all, then why are they having themselves baptized for them?

36*You fool! What you sow is not brought to life unless it dies.[t] 37And what you sow is not the body that is to be but a bare kernel of wheat, perhaps, or of some other kind; 38[u]but God gives it a body as he chooses, and to each of the seeds its own body. 39*Not all flesh is the same, but there is one kind for human beings, another kind of flesh for animals, another kind of flesh for birds, and another for fish. 40There are both heavenly bodies and earthly bodies, but the brightness of the heavenly is one kind and that of the earthly another. 41The brightness of the sun is one kind, the brightness of the moon another, and the brightness of the stars another. For star differs from star in brightness.

42*So also is the resurrection of the dead. It is sown corruptible; it is raised incorruptible. 43It is sown dishonorable; it is raised glorious. It is sown weak; it is raised powerful.[v] 44It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body. If there is a natural body, there is also a spiritual one.

45So, too, it is written, “The first man, Adam,* became a living being,” the last Adam a life-giving spirit.[w] 46But the spiritual was not first; rather the natural and then the spiritual. 47The first man was from the earth, earthly; the second man, from heaven. 48As was the earthly one, so also are the earthly, and as is the heavenly one, so also are the heavenly. 49Just as we have borne the image of the earthly one, we shall also bear the image* of the heavenly one.[x]

As far as is known, Paul is the first to make the comparison and contrast between Adam and Christ (cf. Rom 5:12-14 and chart below). It reinforces Paul’s profound understanding that in Jesus Christ, God was essentially enacting a new creation (2 Cor 5:17).

Adam	Jesus
The first “man”	The “last” living being
A natural being	A spiritual (supernatural) being
Origin from earth (Hebrew, ʾādām)	Origin from heaven
Imprinted human image on all	Will imprint heavenly image on all
Allowed sin and death to enter the world through disobedience	Will allow salvation and life to enter the world through obedience
Is a “type” (Greek, typos) of Christ	The one who was to come, prefigured in Adam

Hos 13:14

Paul calls the resurrection event that all are expected to experience when the kingdom of God arrives a mystery. He employs OT apocalyptic language to describe it, such as the trumpet blast and the raising of the dead (cf. Jl 2:1-2; Zep 1:16; Zec 9:14; Is 27:13). Paul views this as an instantaneous change in our appearance and in reality. Our finite and corruptible bodies will be totally transformed into incorruptible bodies. Although the details cannot necessarily be taken in literal fashion, the NT clearly envisions the resurrection event as a material change, not simply a state of mind.

1:1-9 Paul follows the conventional form for the opening of a Hellenistic letter (cf.

Rom 1:1-7), but expands the opening with details carefully chosen to remind the readers of their situation and to suggest some of the issues the letter will discuss.

1:1 Called … by the will of God: Paul's mission and the church's existence are grounded in God's initiative. God's call, grace, and fidelity are central ideas in this introduction, emphasized by repetition and wordplays in the Greek.

1:6 The testimony: this defines the purpose of Paul's mission (see also 15:15 and the note on 2:1). The forms of his testimony include oral preaching and instruction, his letters, and the life he leads as an apostle.

1:10–4:21 The first problem Paul addresses is that of divisions within the community. Although we are unable to reconstruct the situation in Corinth completely, Paul clearly traces the divisions back to a false self-image on the part of the Corinthians, coupled with a false understanding of the apostles who preached to them (cf. 4:6, 9; 9:1-5) and of the Christian message itself. In these chapters he attempts to deal with those underlying factors and to bring the Corinthians back to a more correct perspective.

1:12 I belong to: the activities of Paul and Apollos in Corinth are described in Acts 18. Cephas (i.e., "the Rock," a name by which Paul designates Peter also in 3:22; 9:5; 15:5 and in Gal 1:18; 2:9, 11, 14) may well have passed through Corinth; he could have baptized some members of the community either there or elsewhere. The reference to Christ may be intended ironically here.

1:13-17 The reference to baptism and the contrast with preaching the gospel in v. 17a suggest that some Corinthians were paying special allegiance to the individuals who initiated them into the community.

1:17b-18 The basic theme of 1 Corinthians 1–4 is announced. Adherence to individual leaders has something to do with differences in rhetorical ability and also with certain presuppositions regarding wisdom, eloquence, and effectiveness (power), which Paul judges to be in conflict with the gospel and the cross.

1:17b Not with the wisdom of human eloquence: both of the nouns employed here involve several levels of meaning, on which Paul deliberately plays as his thought unfolds. Wisdom (sophia) may be philosophical and speculative, but in biblical usage the term primarily denotes practical knowledge such as is demonstrated in the choice and effective application of means to achieve an end. The same term can designate the arts of building (cf. 3:10) or of persuasive speaking (cf. 2:4) or effectiveness in achieving salvation. Eloquence (logos): this translation emphasizes one possible meaning of the term logos (cf. the references to rhetorical style and persuasiveness in 2:1, 4). But the term itself may denote an internal reasoning process, plan, or intention, as well as an external word, speech, or message. So by his expression ouk en sophia logou in the context of gospel preaching, Paul may intend to exclude both human ways of reasoning or thinking about things and human rhetorical technique. Human: this adjective does not stand in the Greek text but is supplied from the context. Paul will begin immediately to distinguish between sophia and logos from their divine counterparts and play them off against each other.

1:21-25 True wisdom and power are to be found paradoxically where one would least expect them, in the place of their apparent negation. To human eyes the crucified Christ symbolizes impotence and absurdity.

1:26–2:5 The pattern of God's wisdom and power is exemplified in their own experience, if they interpret it rightly (1:26-31), and can also be read in their experience of Paul as he first appeared among them preaching the gospel (2:1-5).

1:29-31 "Boasting (about oneself)" is a Pauline expression for the radical sin, the claim to autonomy on the part of a creature, the illusion that we live and are saved by our own resources. "Boasting in the Lord" (1:31), on the other hand, is the acknowledgment that we live only from God and for God.

2:1 The mystery of God: God's secret, known only to himself, is his plan for the salvation of his people; it is clear from 1 Corinthians 1:18-25; 2:2, 8-10 that this secret involves Jesus and the cross. In place of mystery, other good manuscripts read "testimony" (cf. 1:6).

2:3 The weakness of the crucified Jesus is reflected in Paul's own bearing (cf. 2 Cor 10–13). Fear and much trembling: reverential fear based on a sense of God's transcendence permeates Paul's existence and preaching. Compare his advice to the Philippians to work out their salvation with "fear and trembling" (Phil 2:12), because God is at work in them just as his exalting power was paradoxically at work in the emptying, humiliation, and obedience of Jesus to death on the cross (Phil 2:6-11).

2:4 Among many manuscript readings here the best is either "not with the persuasion of wisdom" or "not with persuasive words of wisdom," which differ only by a nuance. Whichever reading is accepted, the inefficacy of human wisdom for salvation is contrasted with the power of the cross.

2:6–3:4 Paul now asserts paradoxically what he has previously been denying. To the Greeks who "are looking for wisdom" (1:22), he does indeed bring a wisdom, but of a higher order and an entirely different quality, the only wisdom really worthy of the name. The Corinthians would be able to grasp Paul's preaching as wisdom and enter into a wisdom-conversation with him if they were more open to the Spirit and receptive to the new insight and language that the Spirit teaches.

2:7-10a God's wisdom: his plan for our salvation. This was his own eternal secret that no one else could fathom, but in this new age of salvation he has graciously revealed it to us. For the pattern of God's secret, hidden to others and now revealed to the Church, cf. also Romans 11:25-36; 16:25-27; Ephesians 1:3-10; 3:3-11; Colossians 1:25-28.

2:8 The rulers of this age: this suggests not only the political leaders of the Jews and Romans under whom Jesus was crucified (cf. Acts 4:25-28) but also the cosmic powers behind them (cf. Eph 1:20-23; 3:10). They would not have crucified the Lord of glory: they became the unwitting executors of God's plan, which will paradoxically bring about their own conquest and submission (15:24-28).

2:13 In spiritual terms: the Spirit teaches spiritual people a new mode of perception (2:12) and an appropriate language by which they can share their self-understanding, their knowledge about what God has done in them. The final phrase in 1 Corinthians 2:13 can also be translated "describing spiritual realities to spiritual people," in which case it prepares for 1 Corinthians 2:14-16.

2:14 The natural person: see the note on 1 Corinthians 3:1.

2:15 The spiritual person … is not subject to judgment: since spiritual persons have been given knowledge of what pertains to God (2:11-12), they share in God's own capacity to judge. One to whom the mind of the Lord (and of Christ) is revealed (2:16) can be said to share in some sense in God's exemption from counseling and criticism.

3:1-4 The Corinthians desire a sort of wisdom dialogue or colloquy with Paul; they are looking for solid, adult food, and he appears to disappoint their expectations. Paul counters: if such a dialogue has not yet taken place, the reason is that they are still at an immature stage of development (cf. 2:6).

3:1 Spiritual people … fleshly people: Paul employs two clusters of concepts and terms to distinguish what later theology will call the "natural" and the "supernatural." (1) The natural person (2:14) is one whose existence, perceptions, and behavior are determined by purely natural principles, the psychē (2:14) and the sarx (flesh, a biblical term that connotes creatureliness, 3:1, 3). Such persons are only infants (3:1); they remain on a purely human level (anthrōpoi, 3:4). (2) On the other hand, they are called to be animated by a higher principle, the pneuma, God's spirit. They are to become spiritual (pneumatikoi, 3:1) and mature (2:6) in their perceptions and behavior (cf. Gal 5:16-26). The culmination of existence in the Spirit is described in 1 Corinthians 15:44-49.

3:3-4 Jealousy, rivalry, and divisions in the community are symptoms of their arrested development; they reveal the immaturity both of their self-understanding (3:4) and of the judgments about their apostles (3:21).

3:5–4:5 The Corinthians tend to evaluate their leaders by the criteria of human wisdom and to exaggerate their importance. Paul views the role of the apostles in the light of his theology of spiritual gifts (cf. 12–14, where the charism of the apostle heads the lists). The essential aspects of all spiritual gifts (12:4-6 presents them as gifts of grace, as services, and as modes of activity) are exemplified by the apostolate, which is a gift of grace (3:10) through which God works (3:9) and a form of service (3:5) for the common good (elsewhere expressed by the verb "build up," suggested here by the image of the building, 3:9). The apostles serve the church, but their accountability is to God and to Christ (4:1-5).

3:5 Ministers: for other expressions of Paul's understanding of himself as minister or steward to the church, cf. 1 Corinthians 4:1; 9:17, 19-27; 2 Corinthians 3:6-9; 4:1; 5:18; 6:3-4; and 2 Corinthians 11:23 (the climax of Paul's defense).

3:10-11 There are diverse functions in the service of the community, but each individual's task is serious, and each will stand accountable for the quality of his contribution.

3:13 The Day: the great day of Yahweh, the day of judgment, which can be a time of either gloom or joy. Fire both destroys and purifies.

3:15 Will be saved: although Paul can envision very harsh divine punishment (cf. 3:17), he appears optimistic about the success of divine corrective means both here and elsewhere (cf. 5:5; 11:32 [discipline]). The text of 1 Corinthians 3:15 has sometimes been used to support the notion of purgatory, though it does not envisage this.

3:17 Holy: i.e., "belonging to God." The cultic sanctity of the community is a fundamental theological reality to which Paul frequently alludes (cf. 1:2, 30; 6:11; 7:14).

3:21-23 These verses pick up the line of thought of 1 Corinthians 1:10-13. If the Corinthians were genuinely wise (3:18-20), their perceptions would be reversed, and they would see everything in the world and all those with whom they exist in the church in their true relations with one another. Paul assigns all the persons involved in the theological universe a position on a scale: God, Christ, church members, church leaders. Read from top to bottom, the scale expresses ownership; read from bottom to top, the obligation to serve. This picture should be complemented by similar statements such as those in 1 Corinthians 8:6 and 1 Corinthians 15:20-28.

4:6-21 This is an emotionally charged peroration to the discussion about divisions. It contains several exhortations and statements of Paul's purpose in writing (cf. 4:6, 14-17, 21) that counterbalance the initial exhortation at 1 Corinthians 1:10.

4:6 That you may learn from us not to go beyond what is written: the words “to go” are not in the Greek, but have here been added as the minimum necessary to elicit sense from this difficult passage. It probably means that the Corinthians should avoid the false wisdom of vain speculation, contenting themselves with Paul’s proclamation of the cross, which is the fulfillment of God’s promises in the Old Testament (what is written). Inflated with pride: literally, “puffed up,” i.e., arrogant, filled with a sense of self-importance. The term is particularly Pauline, found in the New Testament only in 1 Corinthians 4:6, 18-19; 5:2; 8:1; 13:4; Colossians 2:18 (cf. the related noun at 2 Cor 12:20). It sometimes occurs in conjunction with the theme of “boasting,” as in 1 Corinthians 4:6-7 here.

4:8 Satisfied … rich … kings: these three statements could also be punctuated as questions continuing the series begun in v. 7. In any case these expressions reflect a tendency at Corinth toward an overrealized eschatology, a form of self-deception that draws Paul’s irony. The underlying attitude has implications for the Corinthians’ thinking about other issues, notably morality and the resurrection, that Paul will address later in the letter.

4:9-13 A rhetorically effective catalogue of the circumstances of apostolic existence, in the course of which Paul ironically contrasts his own sufferings with the Corinthians’ illusion that they have passed beyond the folly of the passion and have already reached the condition of glory. His language echoes that of the beatitudes and woes, which assert a future reversal of present conditions. Their present sufferings (“to this very hour,” 11) place the apostles in the class of those to whom the beatitudes promise future relief (Mt 5:3-11; Lk 6:20-23); whereas the Corinthians’ image of themselves as “already” filled, rich, ruling (4:8), as wise, strong, and honored (4:10) places them paradoxically in the position of those whom the woes threaten with future undoing (Lk 6:24-26). They have lost sight of the fact that the reversal is predicted for the future.

4:14-17 My beloved children: the close of the argument is dominated by the tender metaphor of the father who not only gives his children life but also educates them. Once he has begotten them through his preaching, Paul continues to present the gospel to them existentially, by his life as well as by his word, and they are to learn, as children do, by imitating their parents (4:16). The reference to the rod in 1 Corinthians 4:21 belongs to the same image-complex. So does the image of the ways in 1 Corinthians 4:17: the ways that Paul teaches everywhere, “his ways in Christ Jesus,” mean a behavior pattern quite different from the human ways along which the Corinthians are walking (3:3).

4:18-21 1 Corinthians 4:20 picks up the contrast between a certain kind of talk (logos) and true power (dynamis) from 1 Corinthians 1:17-18 and 1 Corinthians 2:4-5. The kingdom, which many of them imagine to be fully present in their lives (4:8), will be rather unexpectedly disclosed in the strength of Paul’s encounter with them, if they make a powerful intervention on his part necessary. Compare the similar ending to an argument in 2 Corinthians 13:1-4, 10.

5:1–6:20 Paul now takes up a number of other matters that require regulation. These have come to his attention by hearsay (5:1), probably in reports brought by “Chloe’s people” (1:11).

5:1-13 Paul first deals with the incestuous union of a man with his stepmother (5:1-8) and then attempts to clarify general admonitions he has given about associating with fellow Christians guilty of immorality (5:9-13). Each of these three brief paragraphs expresses the same idea: the need of separation between the holy and the unholy.

5:2 Inflated with pride: this remark and the reference to boasting in 1 Corinthians 5:6 suggest that they are proud of themselves despite the infection in their midst, tolerating and possibly even approving the situation. The attitude expressed in 1 Corinthians 6:2, 13 may be influencing their thinking in this case.

5:5 Deliver this man to Satan: once the sinner is expelled from the church, the sphere of Jesus' lordship and victory over sin, he will be in the region outside over which Satan is still master. For the destruction of his flesh: the purpose of the penalty is medicinal: through affliction, sin's grip over him may be destroyed and the path to repentance and reunion laid open. With Paul's instructions for an excommunication ceremony here, contrast his recommendations for the reconciliation of a sinner in 2 Corinthians 2:5-11.

5:6 A little yeast: yeast, which induces fermentation, is a natural symbol for a source of corruption that becomes all-pervasive. The expression is proverbial.

5:7-8 In the Jewish calendar, Passover was followed immediately by the festival of Unleavened Bread. In preparation for this feast all traces of old bread were removed from the house, and during the festival only unleavened bread was eaten. The sequence of these two feasts provides Paul with an image of Christian existence: Christ's death (the true Passover celebration) is followed by the life of the Christian community, marked by newness, purity, and integrity (a perpetual feast of unleavened bread). Paul may have been writing around Passover time (cf. 16:5); this is a little Easter homily, the earliest in Christian literature.

5:9-13 Paul here corrects a misunderstanding of his earlier directives against associating with immoral fellow Christians. He concedes the impossibility of avoiding contact with sinners in society at large but urges the Corinthians to maintain the inner purity of their own community.

6:1-11 Christians at Corinth are suing one another before pagan judges in Roman courts. A barrage of rhetorical questions (6:1-9) betrays Paul's indignation over this practice, which he sees as an infringement upon the holiness of the Christian community.

6:2-3 The principle to which Paul appeals is an eschatological prerogative promised to Christians: they are to share with Christ the judgment of the world (cf. Dn 7:22, 27). Hence they ought to be able to settle minor disputes within the community.

6:9-10 A catalogue of typical vices that exclude from the kingdom of God and that should be excluded from God's church. Such lists (cf. 5:10) reflect the common moral sensibility of the New Testament period.

6:9 The Greek word translated as boy prostitutes may refer to catamites, i.e., boys or young men who were kept for purposes of prostitution, a practice not uncommon in the Greco-Roman world. In Greek mythology this was the function of Ganymede, the "cupbearer of the gods," whose Latin name was Catamitus. The term translated sodomites refers to adult males who indulged in homosexual practices with such boys. See similar condemnations of such practices in Romans 1:26-27; 1 Timothy 1:10.

6:12-20 Paul now turns to the opinion of some Corinthians that sexuality is a morally indifferent area (6:12-13). This leads him to explain the mutual relation between the Lord Jesus and our bodies (6:13b) in a densely packed paragraph that contains elements of a profound theology of sexuality (6:15-20).

6:12-13 Everything is lawful for me: the Corinthians may have derived this slogan from Paul's preaching about Christian freedom, but they mean something different by it: they consider sexual satisfaction a matter as indifferent as food, and they attribute no lasting significance to bodily functions (6:13a). Paul begins to deal with the slogan by two qualifications, which suggest principles for judging sexual activity. Not everything is beneficial: cf. 1 Corinthians 10:23, and the whole argument of 1 Corinthians 8–10 on the finality of freedom and moral activity. Not let myself be dominated: certain apparently free actions may involve in fact a secret servitude in conflict with the lordship of Jesus.

6:15b-16 A prostitute: the reference may be specifically to religious prostitution, an accepted part of pagan culture at Corinth and elsewhere; but the prostitute also serves as a symbol for any sexual relationship that conflicts with Christ's claim over us individually. The two … will become one flesh: the text of Genesis 2:24 is applied positively to human marriage in Matthew and Mark, and in Ephesians 5:29-32: love of husband and wife reflect the love of Christ for his church. The application of the text to union with a prostitute is jarring, for such a union is a parody, an antitype of marriage, which does conflict with Christ's claim over us. This explains the horror expressed in 1 Cor 6:15b.

6:18 Against his own body: expresses the intimacy and depth of sexual disorder, which violates the very orientation of our bodies.

6:19-20 Paul's vision becomes trinitarian. A temple: sacred by reason of God's gift, his indwelling Spirit. Not your own: but "for the Lord," who acquires ownership by the act of redemption. Glorify God in your body: the argument concludes with a positive imperative to supplement the negative "avoid immorality" of 1 Corinthians 6:18. Far from being a terrain that is morally indifferent, the area of sexuality is one in which our relationship with God (and his Christ and his Spirit) is very intimately expressed: he is either highly glorified or deeply offended.

7:1-40 Paul now begins to answer questions addressed to him by the Corinthians (7:1–11:1). The first of these concerns marriage. This chapter contains advice both to the married (7:1-16) and to the unmarried (7:25-38) or widowed (7:39-40); these two parts are separated by 1 Corinthians 7:17-24, which enunciate a principle applicable to both.

7:1-16 It seems that some Christians in Corinth were advocating asceticism in sexual matters. The pattern it is a good thing …, but occurs twice (7:1-2, 8-9; cf. 7:26), suggesting that in this matter as in others the Corinthians have seized upon a genuine value but are exaggerating or distorting it in some way. Once again Paul calls them to a more correct perspective and a better sense of their own limitations. The phrase it is a good thing (7:1) may have been the slogan of the ascetic party at Corinth.

7:1-7 References to Paul's own behavior (7:7-8) suggest that his celibate way of life and his preaching to the unmarried (cf. 7:25-35) have given some the impression that asceticism within marriage, i.e., suspension of normal sexual relations, would be a laudable ideal. Paul points to their experience of widespread immorality to caution them against overestimating their own strength (7:2); as individuals they may not have the particular gift that makes such asceticism feasible (7:7) and hence are to abide by the principle to be explained in 1 Corinthians 7:17-24.

7:6 By way of concession: this refers most likely to the concession mentioned in 1 Corinthians 7:5a: temporary interruption of relations for a legitimate purpose.

7:7 A particular gift from God: use of the term charisma suggests that marriage and celibacy may be viewed in the light of Paul's theology of spiritual gifts (7:12-14).

7:8 Paul was obviously unmarried when he wrote this verse. Some interpreters believe that he had previously been married and widowed; there is no clear evidence either for or against this view, which was expressed already at the end of the second century by Clement of Alexandria.

7:10-11 (Not I, but the Lord): Paul reminds the married of Jesus' principle of nonseparation (Mk 10:9). This is one of his rare specific references to the teaching of Jesus.

7:12-14 To the rest: marriages in which only one partner is a baptized Christian. Jesus' prohibition against divorce is not addressed to them, but Paul extends the principle of nonseparation to such unions, provided they are marked by peacefulness and shared sanctification.

7:15-16 If the unbeliever separates: the basis of the "Pauline privilege" in Catholic marriage legislation.

7:17-24 On the ground that distinct human conditions are less significant than the whole new existence opened up by God's call, Paul urges them to be less concerned with changing their states of life than with answering God's call where it finds them. The principle applies both to the married state (7:1-16) and to the unmarried (7:25-38).

7:25-28 Paul is careful to explain that the principle of 1 Corinthians 7:17 does not bind under sin but that present earthly conditions make it advantageous for the unmarried to remain as they are (7:28). These remarks must be complemented by the statement about "particular gifts" from 1 Corinthians 7:7.

7:29-31 The world … is passing away: Paul advises Christians to go about the ordinary activities of life in a manner different from those who are totally immersed in them and unaware of their transitoriness.

7:36-38 The passage is difficult to interpret, because it is unclear whether Paul is thinking of a father and his unmarried daughter (or slave), or of a couple engaged in a betrothal or spiritual marriage. The general principles already enunciated apply: there is no question of sin, even if they should marry, but staying as they are is "better" (for the reasons mentioned in 7:28-35). Once again the charisma of 1 Corinthians 7:7, which applies also to the unmarried (7:8-9), is to be presupposed.

7:36 A critical moment has come: either because the woman will soon be beyond marriageable age, or because their passions are becoming uncontrollable (cf. 7:9).

7:39-40 Application of the principles to the case of widows. If they do choose to remarry, they ought to prefer Christian husbands.

8:1–11:1 The Corinthians' second question concerns meat that has been sacrificed to idols; in this area they were exhibiting a disordered sense of liberation that Paul here tries to rectify. These chapters contain a sustained and unified argument that illustrates Paul's method of theological reflection on a moral dilemma. Although the problem with which he is dealing is dated, the guidelines for moral decisions that he offers are of lasting validity. Essentially Paul urges them to take a communitarian rather than an individualistic view of their Christian freedom. Many decisions that they consider pertinent only to their private relationship with God have, in fact, social consequences. Nor can moral decisions be determined by merely theoretical considerations; they must be based on concrete circumstances, specifically on the value and needs of other individuals and on mutual responsibility within the community. Paul here introduces the theme of "building up" (oikodomē), i.e., of contributing by individual action to the welfare and growth of the community. This theme will be further developed in 1 Corinthians 14; see the note on 1 Corinthians 14:3b-5. Several years later Paul would again deal with the problem of meat sacrificed to idols in Romans 14:1–15:6.

8:1a Meat sacrificed to idols: much of the food consumed in the city could have passed through pagan religious ceremonies before finding its way into markets and homes. "All of us have knowledge": a slogan, similar to 1 Corinthians 6:12, which reveals the self-image of the Corinthians. 1 Corinthians 8:4 will specify the content of this knowledge.

8:6 This verse rephrases the monotheistic confession of v. 4 in such a way as to contrast it with polytheism (8:5) and to express our relationship with the one God in concrete, i.e., in personal and Christian terms. And for whom we exist: since the Greek contains no verb here and the action intended must be inferred from the preposition eis, another translation is equally possible: “toward whom we return.” Through whom all things: the earliest reference in the New Testament to Jesus’ role in creation.

8:8-9 Although the food in itself is morally neutral, extrinsic circumstances may make the eating of it harmful. A stumbling block: the image is that of tripping or causing someone to fall (cf. 8:13; 9:12; 10:12, 32; 2 Cor 6:3; Rom 14:13, 20-21). This is a basic moral imperative for Paul, a counterpart to the positive imperative to “build one another up”; compare the expression “giving offense” as opposed to “pleasing” in 1 Corinthians 10:32-33.

8:13 His own course is clear: he will avoid any action that might harm another Christian. This statement prepares for the paradigmatic development in 1 Corinthians 9.

9:1-27 This chapter is an emotionally charged expansion of Paul’s appeal to his own example in 1 Corinthians 8:13; its purpose is to reinforce the exhortation of 1 Corinthians 8:9. The two opening questions introduce the themes of Paul’s freedom and his apostleship (9:1), themes that the chapter will develop in reverse order, 1 Corinthians 9:1-18 treating the question of his apostleship and the rights that flow from it, and 1 Corinthians 9:19-27 exploring dialectically the nature of Paul’s freedom. The language is highly rhetorical, abounding in questions, wordplays, paradoxes, images, and appeals to authority and experience. The argument is unified by repetitions; its articulations are highlighted by inclusions and transitional verses.

9:3 My defense against those who would pass judgment on me: the reference to a defense (apologia) is surprising, and suggests that Paul is incorporating some material here that he has previously used in another context. The defense will touch on two points: the fact of Paul’s rights as an apostle (9:4-12a and 9:13-14) and his nonuse of those rights (9:12b and 9:15-18).

9:4-12a Apparently some believe that Paul is not equal to the other apostles and therefore does not enjoy equal privileges. His defense on this point (here and in 9:13-14) reinforces the assertion of his apostolic character in 1 Corinthians 9:2. It consists of a series of analogies from natural equity (9:7) and religious custom (9:13) designed to establish his equal right to support from the churches (9:4-6, 11-12a); these analogies are confirmed by the authority of the law (9:8-10) and of Jesus himself (9:14).

9:12 It appears, too, that suspicion or misunderstanding has been created by Paul’s practice of not living from his preaching. The first reason he asserts in defense of this practice is an entirely apostolic one; it anticipates the developments to follow in 1 Corinthians 9:19-22. He will give a second reason in 1 Corinthians 9:15-18.

9:13-14 The position of these verses produces an interlocking of the two points of Paul’s defense. These arguments by analogy (9:13) and from authority (9:14) belong with those of 1 Corinthians 9:7-10 and ground the first point. But Paul defers them until he has had a chance to mention “the gospel of Christ” (9:12b), after which it is more appropriate to mention Jesus’ injunction to his preachers and to argue by analogy from the sacred temple service to his own liturgical service, the preaching of the gospel (cf. Rom 1:9; 15:16).

9:15-18 Paul now assigns a more personal motive to his nonuse of his right to support. His preaching is not a service spontaneously undertaken on his part but a stewardship imposed by a sort of divine compulsion. Yet to merit any reward he must bring some spontaneous quality to his service, and this he does by freely renouncing his right to support. The material here is quite similar to that contained in Paul's "defense" at 2 Corinthians 11:5-12; 12:11-18.

9:19-23 In a rhetorically balanced series of statements Paul expands and generalizes the picture of his behavior and explores the paradox of apostolic freedom. It is not essentially freedom from restraint but freedom for service—a possibility of constructive activity.

9:24-27 A series of miniparables from sports, appealing to readers familiar with Greek gymnasia and the nearby Isthmian games.

9:27 For fear that … I myself should be disqualified: a final paradoxical turn to the argument: what appears at first a free, spontaneous renunciation of rights (9:12-18) seems subsequently to be required for fulfillment of Paul's stewardship (to preach effectively he must reach his hearers wherever they are, 9:19-22), and finally is seen to be necessary for his own salvation (9:23-27). Mention of the possibility of disqualification provides a transition to 1 Corinthians 10.

10:1-5 Paul embarks unexpectedly upon a panoramic survey of the events of the Exodus period. The privileges of Israel in the wilderness are described in terms that apply strictly only to the realities of the new covenant ("baptism," "spiritual food and drink"); interpreted in this way they point forward to the Christian experience (10:1-4). But those privileges did not guarantee God's permanent pleasure (10:5).

10:4 A spiritual rock that followed them: the Torah speaks only about a rock from which water issued, but rabbinic legend amplified this into a spring that followed the Israelites throughout their migration. Paul uses this legend as a literary type: he makes the rock itself accompany the Israelites, and he gives it a spiritual sense. The rock was the Christ: in the Old Testament, Yahweh is the Rock of his people (cf. Dt 32, Moses' song to Yahweh the Rock). Paul now applies this image to the Christ, the source of the living water, the true Rock that accompanied Israel, guiding their experiences in the desert.

10:6-13 This section explicitates the typological value of these Old Testament events: the desert experiences of the Israelites are examples, meant as warnings, to deter us from similar sins (idolatry, immorality, etc.) and from a similar fate.

10:9 Christ: to avoid Paul's concept of Christ present in the wilderness events, some manuscripts read "the Lord."

10:11 Upon whom the end of the ages has come: it is our period in time toward which past ages have been moving and in which they arrive at their goal.

10:12-13 Take care not to fall: the point of the whole comparison with Israel is to caution against overconfidence, a sense of complete security (10:12). This warning is immediately balanced by a reassurance, based, however, on God (10:13).

10:14-22 The warning against idolatry from 1 Corinthians 10:7 is now repeated (10:14) and explained in terms of the effect of sacrifices: all sacrifices, Christian (10:16-17), Jewish (10:18), or pagan (10:20), establish communion. But communion with Christ is exclusive, incompatible with any other such communion (10:21). Compare the line of reasoning at 1 Corinthians 6:15.

10:20 To demons: although Jews denied divinity to pagan gods, they often believed that there was some nondivine reality behind the idols, such as the dead, or angels, or demons. The explanation Paul offers in 1 Corinthians 10:20 is drawn from Deuteronomy 32:17: the power behind the idols, with which the pagans commune, consists of demonic powers hostile to God.

10:23–11:1 By way of peroration Paul returns to the opening situation (chap. 8) and draws conclusions based on the intervening considerations (chaps. 9–10).

10:23-24 He repeats in the context of this new problem the slogans of liberty from 1 Corinthians 6:12, with similar qualifications. Liberty is not merely an individual perfection, nor an end in itself, but is to be used for the common good. The language of 1 Corinthians 10:24 recalls the descriptions of Jesus' self-emptying in Philippians 2.

10:25-30 A summary of specific situations in which the eating of meat sacrificed to idols could present problems of conscience. Three cases are considered. In the first (the marketplace, 10:25-26) and the second (at table, 10:27), there is no need to be concerned with whether food has passed through a pagan sacrifice or not, for the principle of 1 Corinthians 8:4-6 still stands, and the whole creation belongs to the one God. But in the third case (10:28), the situation changes if someone present explicitly raises the question of the sacrificial origin of the food; eating in such circumstances may be subject to various interpretations, some of which could be harmful to individuals. Paul is at pains to insist that the enlightened Christian conscience need not change its judgment about the neutrality, even the goodness, of the food in itself (10:29-30); yet the total situation is altered to the extent that others are potentially endangered, and this calls for a different response, for the sake of others.

10:32–11:1 In summary, the general rule of mutually responsible use of their Christian freedom is enjoined first negatively (10:32), then positively, as exemplified in Paul (10:33), and finally grounded in Christ, the pattern for Paul's behavior and theirs (11:1; cf. Rom 15:1-3).

11:2–14:40 This section of the letter is devoted to regulation of conduct at the liturgy. The problems Paul handles have to do with the dress of women in the assembly (11:3-16), improprieties in the celebration of community meals (11:17-34), and the use of charisms or spiritual gifts (12:1–14:40). The statement in 1 Corinthians 11:2 introduces all of these discussions, but applies more appropriately to the second (cf. the mention of praise in 11:17 and of tradition in 11:23).

11:3-16 Women have been participating in worship at Corinth without the head-covering normal in Greek society of the period. Paul's stated goal is to bring them back into conformity with contemporary practice and propriety. In his desire to convince, he reaches for arguments from a variety of sources, though he has space to develop them only sketchily and is perhaps aware that they differ greatly in persuasiveness.

11:3 A husband the head of his wife: the specific problem suggests to Paul the model of the head as a device for clarifying relations within a hierarchical structure. The model is similar to that developed later in greater detail and nuance in Ephesians 5:21-33. It is a hybrid model, for it grafts onto a strictly theological scale of existence (cf. 3:21-23) the hierarchy of sociosexual relations prevalent in the ancient world: men, dominant, reflect the active function of Christ in relation to his church; women, submissive, reflect the passive role of the church with respect to its savior. This gives us the functional scale: God, Christ, man, woman.

11:4-6 From man's direct relation to Christ, Paul infers that his head should not be covered. But woman, related not directly to Christ on the scale but to her husband, requires a covering as a sign of that relationship. Shameful … to have her hair cut off: certain less honored classes in society, such as lesbians and prostitutes, are thought to have worn their hair close-cropped.

11:7-9 The hierarchy of v. 3 is now expressed in other metaphors: the image (eikōn) and the reflected glory (doxa). Paul is alluding basically to the text of Genesis 1:27, in which mankind as a whole, the male-female couple, is created in God's image and given the command to multiply and together dominate the lower creation. But Genesis 1:24 is interpreted here in the light of the second creation narrative in Genesis 2, in which each of the sexes is created separately (first the man and then the woman from man and for him, to be his helpmate, Gn 2:20-23), and under the influence of the story of the fall, as a result of which the husband rules over the woman (Gn 3:16). This interpretation splits the single image of God into two, at different degrees of closeness.

11:10 A sign of authority: "authority" (exousia) may possibly be due to mistranslation of an Aramaic word for "veil"; in any case, the connection with 1 Corinthians 11:9 indicates that the covering is a sign of woman's subordination. Because of the angels: a surprising additional reason, which the context does not clarify. Presumably the reference is to cosmic powers who might inflict harm on women or whose function is to watch over women or the cult.

11:11-12 These parenthetical remarks relativize the argument from Genesis 2–3. In the Lord: in the Christian economy the relation between the sexes is characterized by a mutual dependence, which is not further specified. And even in the natural order conditions have changed: the mode of origin described in Genesis 2 has been reversed (11:12a). But the ultimately significant fact is the origin that all things have in common (11:12b).

11:13-16 The argument for conformity to common church practice is summed up and pressed home. 1 Corinthians 11:14-15 contain a final appeal to the sense of propriety that contemporary Greek society would consider "natural" (cf. 11:5-6).

11:17-34 Paul turns to another abuse connected with the liturgy, and a more serious one, for it involves neglect of basic Christian tradition concerning the meaning of the Lord's Supper. Paul recalls that tradition for them and reminds them of its implications.

11:19 That … those who are approved among you may become known: Paul situates their divisions within the context of the eschatological separation of the authentic from the inauthentic and the final revelation of the difference. The notion of authenticity-testing recurs in the injunction to self-examination in view of present and future judgment (11:28-32).

11:23-25 This is the earliest written account of the institution of the Lord's Supper in the New Testament. The narrative emphasizes Jesus' action of self-giving (expressed in the words over the bread and the cup) and his double command to repeat his own action.

11:27 It follows that the only proper way to celebrate the Eucharist is one that corresponds to Jesus' intention, which fits with the meaning of his command to reproduce his action in the proper spirit. If the Corinthians eat and drink unworthily, i.e., without having grasped and internalized the meaning of his death for them, they will have to answer for the body and blood, i.e., will be guilty of a sin against the Lord himself (cf. 8:12).

11:28 Examine himself: the Greek word is similar to that for "approved" in 1 Corinthians 11:19, which means "having been tested and found true." The self-testing required for proper eating involves discerning the body (11:29), which, from the context, must mean understanding the sense of Jesus' death (11:26), perceiving the imperative to unity that follows from the fact that Jesus gives himself to all and requires us to repeat his sacrifice in the same spirit (11:18-25).

11:29-32 Judgment: there is a series of wordplays in these verses that would be awkward to translate literally into English; it includes all the references to judgment (krima, 11:29, 34; krinō, 11:31, 32) discernment (diakrinō, 11:29, 31), and condemnation (katakrinō, 11:32). The judgment is concretely described as the illness, infirmity, and death that have visited the community. These are signs that the power of Jesus' death is not yet completely recognized and experienced. Yet even the judgment incurred is an expression of God's concern; it is a medicinal measure meant to rescue us from condemnation with God's enemies.

12:1–14:40 Ecstatic and charismatic activity were common in early Christian experience, as they were in other ancient religions. But the Corinthians seem to have developed a disproportionate esteem for certain phenomena, especially tongues, to the detriment of order in the liturgy. Paul's response to this development provides us with the fullest exposition we have of his theology of the charisms.

12:2-3 There is an experience of the Spirit and an understanding of ecstatic phenomena that are specifically Christian and that differ, despite apparent similarities, from those of the pagans. It is necessary to discern which spirit is leading one; ecstatic phenomena must be judged by their effect (12:2). 1 Corinthians 12:3 illustrates this by an example: power to confess Jesus as Lord can come only from the Spirit, and it is inconceivable that the Spirit would move anyone to curse the Lord.

12:4-6 There are some features common to all charisms, despite their diversity: all are gifts (charismata), grace from outside ourselves; all are forms of service (diakoniai), an expression of their purpose and effect; and all are workings (energēmata), in which God is at work. Paul associates each of these aspects with what later theology will call one of the persons of the Trinity, an early example of "appropriation."

12:12-26 The image of a body is introduced to explain Christ's relationship with believers (12:12). 1 Corinthians 12:13 applies this model to the church: by baptism all, despite diversity of ethnic or social origins, are integrated into one organism. 1 Corinthians 12:14-26 then develop the need for diversity of function among the parts of a body without threat to its unity.

12:27-30 Paul now applies the image again to the church as a whole and its members (12:27). The lists in 1 Corinthians 12:28-30 spell out the parallelism by specifying the diversity of functions found in the church (cf. Rom 12:6-8; Eph 4:11).

12:28 First, apostles: apostleship was not mentioned in 1 Corinthians 12:8-10, nor is it at issue in these chapters, but Paul gives it pride of place in his listing. It is not just one gift among others but a prior and fuller gift that includes the others. They are all demonstrated in Paul's apostolate, but he may have developed his theology of charisms by reflecting first of all on his own grace of apostleship (cf. 3:5-4:14; 9:1-27; 2 Cor 2:14-6:13; 10:1–13:30, esp. 1 Cor 11:23 and 12:12).

13:1-13 This chapter involves a shift of perspective and a new point. All or part of the material may once have been an independent piece in the style of Hellenistic eulogies of virtues, but it is now integrated, by editing, into the context of 1 Corinthians 12–14 (cf. the reference to tongues and prophecy) and into the letter as a whole (cf. the references to knowledge and to behavior). The function of 1 Corinthians 13 within the discussion of spiritual gifts is to relativize all the charisms by contrasting them with the more basic, pervasive, and enduring value that gives them their purpose and their effectiveness. The rhetoric of this chapter is striking.

13:1-3 An inventory of gifts, arranged in careful gradation: neither tongues (on the lowest rung), nor prophecy, knowledge, or faith, nor even self-sacrifice has value unless informed by love.

13:4-7 This paragraph is developed by personification and enumeration, defining love by what it does or does not do. The Greek contains fifteen verbs; it is natural to translate many of them by adjectives in English.

13:8-13 The final paragraph announces its topic, Love never fails (13:8), then develops the permanence of love in contrast to the charisms (13:9-12), and finally asserts love's superiority even over the other "theological virtues" (13:13).

13:13 In speaking of love, Paul is led by spontaneous association to mention faith and hope as well. They are already a well-known triad (cf. 1 Thes 1:3), three interrelated (cf. 1 Cor 13:7) features of Christian life, more fundamental than any particular charism. The greatest … is love: love is operative even within the other members of the triad (1 Cor 13:7), so that it has a certain primacy among them. Or, if the perspective is temporal, love will remain (cf. "never fails," 13:8) even when faith has yielded to sight and hope to possession.

14:1-5 1 Corinthians 14:1b returns to the thought of 1 Corinthians 12:31a and reveals Paul's primary concern. The series of contrasts in 1 Corinthians 14:2-5 discloses the problem at Corinth: a disproportionate interest in tongues, with a corresponding failure to appreciate the worth of prophecy. Paul attempts to clarify the relative values of those gifts by indicating the kind of communication achieved in each and the kind of effect each produces.

14:2-3a They involve two kinds of communication: tongues, private speech toward God in inarticulate terms that need interpretation to be intelligible to others (see 14:27-28); prophecy, communication with others in the community.

14:3b-5 They produce two kinds of effect. One who speaks in tongues builds himself up; it is a matter of individual experience and personal perfection, which inevitably recalls Paul's previous remarks about being inflated, seeking one's own good, pleasing oneself. But a prophet builds up the church: the theme of "building up" or "edifying" others, the main theme of the letter, comes to clearest expression in this chapter (14:3, 4, 5, 12, 17). It has been anticipated at 1 Corinthians 8:1 and 1 Corinthians 10:23, and by the related concept of "the beneficial" in 1 Corinthians 6:12; 10:23; 12:7; etc.

14:6-12 Sound, in order to be useful, must be intelligible. This principle is illustrated by a series of analogies from music (14:7-8) and from ordinary human speech (14:10-11); it is applied to the case at hand in 1 Corinthians 14:9, 12.

14:13-19 The charism of interpretation lifts tongues to the level of intelligibility, enabling them to produce the same effect as prophecy (cf. 14:5, 26-28).

14:14-15 My spirit: Paul emphasizes the exclusively ecstatic, nonrational quality of tongues. The tongues at Pentecost are also described as an ecstatic experience (Acts 2:4, 12-13), though Luke superimposes further interpretations of his own. My mind: the ecstatic element, dominant in earliest Old Testament prophecy as depicted in 1 Samuel 10:5-13; 19:20-24, seems entirely absent from Paul's notion of prophecy and completely relegated to tongues. He emphasizes the role of reason when he specifies instruction as a function of prophecy (14:6, 19, 31). But he does not exclude intuition and emotion; cf. references to encouragement and consolation (14:3, 31) and the scene describing the ideal exercise of prophecy (14:24-25).

14:20-22 The Corinthians pride themselves on tongues as a sign of God's favor, a means of direct communication with him (2:28). To challenge them to a more mature appraisal, Paul draws from scripture a less flattering explanation of what speaking in tongues may signify. Isaiah threatened the people that if they failed to listen to their prophets, the Lord would speak to them (in punishment) through the lips of Assyrian conquerors (Is 28:11-12). Paul compresses Isaiah's text and makes God address his people directly. Equating tongues with foreign languages (cf. 14:10-11), Paul concludes from Isaiah that tongues are a sign not for those who believe, i.e., not a mark of God's pleasure for those who listen to him but a mark of his displeasure with those in the community who are faithless, who have not heeded the message that he has sent through the prophets.

14:23-25 Paul projects the possible missionary effect of two hypothetical liturgical experiences, one consisting wholly of tongues, the other entirely of prophecy. Uninstructed (idiōtai): the term may simply mean people who do not speak or understand tongues, as in 1 Corinthians 14:16, where it seems to designate Christians. But coupled with the term "unbelievers" it may be another way of designating those who have not been initiated into the community of faith; some believe it denotes a special class of non-Christians who are close to the community, such as catechumens. Unbelievers (apistoi): he has shifted from the inner-community perspective of 1 Corinthians 14:22; the term here designates non-Christians (cf. 6:6; 7:15; 10:27).

14:26-33a Paul concludes with specific directives regarding exercise of the gifts in their assemblies. Verse 26 enunciates the basic criterion in the use of any gift: it must contribute to "building up."

14:33b-36 Verse 33b may belong with what precedes, so that the new paragraph would begin only with 1 Corinthians 14:34. 1 Corinthians 14:34-35 changes the subject. These two verses have the theme of submission in common with 1 Corinthians 14:11 despite differences in vocabulary, and a concern with what is or is not becoming; but it is difficult to harmonize the injunction to silence here with 1 Corinthians 11 which appears to take it for granted that women do pray and prophesy aloud in the assembly (cf. 11:5, 13). Hence the verses are often considered an interpolation, reflecting the discipline of later churches; such an interpolation would have to have antedated our manuscripts, all of which contain them, though some transpose them to the very end of the chapter.

15:1-58 Some consider this chapter an earlier Pauline composition inserted into the present letter. The problem that Paul treats is clear to a degree: some of the Corinthians are denying the resurrection of the dead (15:12), apparently because of their inability to imagine how any kind of bodily existence could be possible after death (15:35). It is plausibly supposed that their attitude stems from Greek anthropology, which looks with contempt upon matter and would be content with the survival of the soul, and perhaps also from an overrealized eschatology of gnostic coloration, such as that reflected in 2 Timothy 2:18, which considers the resurrection a purely spiritual experience already achieved in baptism and in the forgiveness of sins. Paul, on the other hand, will affirm both the essential corporeity of the resurrection and its futurity. His response moves through three steps: a recall of the basic kerygma about Jesus' resurrection (15:1-11), an assertion of the logical inconsistencies involved in denial of the resurrection (15:12-34), and an attempt to perceive theologically what the properties of the resurrected body must be (15:35-58).

15:1-11 Paul recalls the tradition (15:3-7), which he can presuppose as common ground and which provides a starting point for his argument. This is the fundamental content of all Christian preaching and belief (15:1-2, 11).

15:3-7 The language by which Paul expresses the essence of the "gospel" (15:1) is not his own but is drawn from older credal formulas. This credo highlights Jesus' death for our sins (confirmed by his burial) and Jesus' resurrection (confirmed by his appearances) and presents both of them as fulfillment of prophecy. In accordance with the scriptures: conformity of Jesus' passion with the scriptures is asserted in Matthew 16:1; Luke 24:25-27, 32, 44-46. Application of some Old Testament texts (Pss 2:7; 16:8-11) to his resurrection is illustrated by Acts 2:27-31; 13:29-39; and Isaiah 52:13–53:12 and Hosea 6:2 may also have been envisaged.

15:9-11 A persecutor may have appeared disqualified (ouk … hikanos) from apostleship, but in fact God's grace has qualified him. Cf. the remarks in 2 Corinthians about his qualifications (2 Cor 2:16; 3:5) and his greater labors (2 Cor 11:23). These verses are parenthetical, but a nerve has been touched (the references to his abnormal birth and his activity as a persecutor may echo taunts from Paul's opponents), and he is instinctively moved to self-defense.

15:12-19 Denial of the resurrection (15:12) involves logical inconsistencies. The basic one, stated twice (15:13, 16), is that if there is no such thing as (bodily) resurrection, then it has not taken place even in Christ's case.

15:17-18 The consequences for the Corinthians are grave: both forgiveness of sins and salvation are an illusion, despite their strong convictions about both. Unless Christ is risen, their faith does not save.

15:20-28 After a triumphant assertion of the reality of Christ's resurrection (15:20a), Paul explains its positive implications and consequences. As a soteriological event of both human (15:20-23) and cosmic (15:24-28) dimensions, Jesus' resurrection logically and necessarily involves ours as well.

15:20 The firstfruits: the portion of the harvest offered in thanksgiving to God implies the consecration of the entire harvest to come. Christ's resurrection is not an end in itself; its finality lies in the whole harvest, ourselves.

15:21-22 Our human existence, both natural and supernatural, is corporate, involves solidarity. In Adam … in Christ: the Hebrew word ʾādām in Genesis is both a common noun for mankind and a proper noun for the first man. Paul here presents Adam as at least a literary type of Christ; the parallelism and contrast between them will be developed further in 1 Corinthians 15:45-49 and in Romans 5:12-21.

15:24-28 Paul's perspective expands to cosmic dimensions, as he describes the climax of history, the end. His viewpoint is still christological, as in 1 Corinthians 15:20-23. 1 Corinthians 15:24, 28 describe Christ's final relations to his enemies and his Father in language that is both royal and military; 1 Corinthians 15:25-28 insert a proof from scripture (Pss 110:1; 8:6) into this description. But the viewpoint is also theological, for God is the ultimate agent and end, and likewise soteriological, for we are the beneficiaries of all the action.

15:26 The last enemy … is death: a parenthesis that specifies the final fulfillment of the two Old Testament texts just referred to, Psalm 110:1 and Psalm 8:7. Death is not just one cosmic power among many, but the ultimate effect of sin in the universe (cf. 15:56; Rom 5:12). Christ defeats death where it prevails, in our bodies. The destruction of the last enemy is concretely the "coming to life" (15:22) of "those who belong to Christ" (15:23).

15:27b-28 The one who subjected everything to him: the Father is the ultimate agent in the drama, and the final end of the process, to whom the Son and everything else is ordered (24, 28). That God may be all in all: his reign is a dynamic exercise of creative power, an outpouring of life and energy through the universe, with no further resistance. This is the supremely positive meaning of "subjection": that God may fully be God.

15:29-34 Paul concludes his treatment of logical inconsistencies with a listing of miscellaneous Christian practices that would be meaningless if the resurrection were not a fact.

15:29 Baptized for the dead: this practice is not further explained here, nor is it necessarily mentioned with approval, but Paul cites it as something in their experience that attests in one more way to belief in the resurrection.

15:30-34 A life of sacrifice, such as Paul describes in 1 Corinthians 4:9-13 and 2 Corinthians, would be pointless without the prospect of resurrection; a life of pleasure, such as that expressed in the Epicurean slogan of 1 Corinthians 15:32, would be far more consistent. I fought with beasts: since Paul does not elsewhere mention a combat with beasts at Ephesus, he may be speaking figuratively about struggles with adversaries.

15:35-58 Paul imagines two objections that the Corinthians could raise: one concerning the manner of the resurrection (how?), the other pertaining to the qualities of the risen body (what kind?). These questions probably lie behind their denial of the resurrection (15:12), and seem to reflect the presumption that no kind of body other than the one we now possess would be possible. Paul deals with these objections in inverse order, in 1 Corinthians 15:36-49 and 1 Corinthians 15:50-58. His argument is fundamentally theological and its appeal is to the understanding.

15:35-49 Paul approaches the question of the nature of the risen body (what kind of body?) by means of two analogies: the seed (15:36-44) and the first man, Adam (15:45-49).

15:36-38 The analogy of the seed: there is a change of attributes from seed to plant; the old life-form must be lost for the new to emerge. By speaking about the seed as a body that dies and comes to life, Paul keeps the point of the analogy before the reader's mind.

15:39-41 The expression "its own body" (15:38) leads to a development on the marvelous diversity evident in bodily life.

15:42-44 The principles of qualitative difference before and after death (15:36-38) and of diversity on different levels of creation (15:39-41) are now applied to the human body. Before: a body animated by a lower, natural life-principle (psychē) and endowed with the properties of natural existence (corruptibility, lack of glory, weakness). After: a body animated by a higher life-principle (pneuma; cf. 15:45) and endowed with other qualities (incorruptibility, glory, power, spirituality), which are properties of God himself.

15:45 The analogy of the first man, Adam, is introduced by a citation from Genesis 2:7. Paul alters the text slightly, adding the adjective first, and translating the Hebrew ʾādām twice, so as to give it its value both as a common noun (man) and as a proper name (Adam). 1 Corinthians 15:45b then specifies similarities and differences between the two Adams. The last Adam, Christ (cf. 15:21-22) has become a … spirit (pneuma), a life-principle transcendent with respect to the natural soul (psychē) of the first Adam (on the terminology here, cf. the note on 3:1). Further, he is not just alive, but life-giving, a source of life for others.

15:49 We shall also bear the image: although it has less manuscript support, this reading better fits the context's emphasis on futurity and the transforming action of God; on future transformation as conformity to the image of the Son, cf. Romans 8:29; Philippians 3:21. The majority reading, "let us bear the image," suggests that the image of the heavenly man is already present and exhorts us to conform to it.

15:50-57 These verses, an answer to the first question of 1 Corinthians 15:35, explain theologically how the change of properties from one image to another will take place: God has the power to transform, and he will exercise it.

15:50-53 Flesh and blood … corruption: living persons and the corpses of the dead, respectively. In both cases, the gulf between creatures and God is too wide to be bridged unless God himself transforms us.

15:51-52 A mystery: the last moment in God’s plan is disclosed; cf. the notes on 1 Corinthians 2:1, 7-10a. The final trumpet and the awakening of the dead are stock details of the apocalyptic scenario. We shall not all fall asleep: Paul expected that some of his contemporaries might still be alive at Christ’s return; after the death of Paul and his whole generation, copyists altered this statement in various ways. We will all be changed: the statement extends to all Christians, for Paul is not directly speaking about anyone else. Whether they have died before the end or happen still to be alive, all must be transformed.

15:54-55 Death is swallowed up in victory: scripture itself predicts death’s overthrow. O death: in his prophetic vision Paul may be making Hosea’s words his own, or imagining this cry of triumph on the lips of the risen church.

15:56 The sting of death is sin: an explanation of Hosea’s metaphor. Death, scorpion-like, is equipped with a sting, sin, by which it injects its poison. Christ defeats sin, the cause of death (Gn 3:19; Rom 5:12).

16:1-4 This paragraph contains our earliest evidence for a project that became a major undertaking of Paul’s ministry. The collection for the church at Jerusalem was a symbol in his mind for the unity of Jewish and Gentile Christianity. Cf. Galatians 2:10; Romans 15:25-29; 2 Corinthians 8–9 and the notes to this last passage.

16:1 In regard to the collection: it has already begun in Galatia and Macedonia (cf. 2 Cor 8), and presumably he has already instructed the Corinthians about its purpose.

16:4 That I should go also: presumably Paul delivered the collection on his final visit to Jerusalem; cf. Romans 15:25-32; Acts 24:14.

16:5-12 The travel plans outlined here may not have materialized precisely as Paul intended; cf. 2 Corinthians 1:8-2:13; 7:4-16.

16:8 In Ephesus until Pentecost: this tells us the place from which he wrote the letter and suggests he may have composed it about Easter time (cf. 5:7-8).

16:19-24 These paragraphs conform to the normal epistolary conclusion, but their language is overlaid with liturgical coloration as well. The greetings of the Asian churches are probably to be read, along with the letter, in the liturgy at Corinth, and the union of the church is to be expressed by a holy kiss (16:19-20). Paul adds to this his own greeting (16:21) and blessings (16:23-24).

16:22 Accursed: literally, “anathema.” This expression (cf. 12:3) is a formula for exclusion from the community; it may imply here a call to self-examination before celebration of the Eucharist, in preparation for the Lord’s coming and judgment (cf. 11:17-34). Marana tha: an Aramaic expression, probably used in the early Christian liturgy. As understood here (“O Lord, come!”), it is a prayer for the early return of Christ. If the Aramaic words are divided differently (Maran atha, “Our Lord has come”), it becomes a credal declaration. The former interpretation is supported by what appears to be a Greek equivalent of this acclamation in Revelation 22:20 “Amen. Come, Lord Jesus!”

The Second Letter to the Corinthians

The Second Letter to the Corinthians is the most personal of all of Paul's extant writings, and it reveals much about his character. In it he deals with one or more crises that have arisen in the Corinthian church. The confrontation with these problems caused him to reflect deeply on his relationship with the community and to speak about it frankly. One moment he is venting his feelings of frustration and uncertainty, the next he is pouring out his relief and affection. The importance of the issues at stake between them calls forth from him an enormous effort of personal persuasion, as well as doctrinal considerations that are of great value for us. Paul's ability to produce profound theological foundations for what may at first sight appear to be rather commonplace circumstances is perhaps nowhere better exemplified than in Second Corinthians. The emotional tone of the letter, its lack of order, and our ignorance of some of its background do not make it easy to follow, but it amply repays the effort required of the reader.

Second Corinthians is rich and varied in content. The interpretation of Exodus in chapter 3, for instance, offers a striking example of early apologetic use of the Old Testament. Paul's discussion of the collection in chaps. 8–9 contains a theology of sharing of possessions, of community of goods among Christian churches, which is both balanced and sensitive. Furthermore, the closing chapters provide an illustration of early Christian invective and polemic, because the conflict with intruders forces Paul to assert his authority. But in those same chapters Paul articulates the vision and sense of values that animate his own apostolate, revealing his faith that Jesus' passion and resurrection are the pattern for all Christian life and expressing a spirituality of ministry unsurpassed in the New Testament.

The letter is remarkable for its rhetoric. Paul falls naturally into the style and argumentation of contemporary philosophic preachers, employing with ease the stock devices of the "diatribe." By a barrage of questions, by challenges both serious and ironic, by paradox heaped upon paradox, even by insults hurled at his opponents, he strives to awaken in his hearers a true sense of values and an appropriate response. All his argument centers on the destiny of Jesus, in which a paradoxical reversal of values is revealed. But Paul appeals to his own personal experience as well. In passages of great rhetorical power (4:7-15; 6:3-10; 11:21-29; 12:5-10; 13:3-4) he enumerates the circumstances of his ministry and the tribulations he has had to endure for Jesus and the gospel, in the hope of illustrating the pattern of Jesus' existence in his own and of drawing the Corinthians into a reappraisal of the values they cherish. Similar passages in the same style in his other letters (cf. especially Rom 8:31-39; 1 Cor 1:26-31; 4:6-21; 9:1-27; 13:1-13; Phil 4:10-19) confirm Paul's familiarity with contemporary rhetoric and demonstrate how effectively it served to express his vision of Christian life and ministry.

SUMMARY

Second Corinthians speaks of the many challenges of ministry that paradoxically strengthen both individuals and the community of faith. It also contains a striking instruction on reconciliation and the new creation that has come about in Christ Jesus.

Author: Paul, with Timothy listed as coauthor (1:1).

Date: Circa A.D. 57 from Macedonia.

Content: The complex nature of ministry; the ministry of reconciliation; the collection for the poor; the paradox of strength in weakness; Paul's personal sufferings as an apostle and their consequence.

Second Corinthians was occasioned by events and problems that developed after Paul's first letter reached Corinth. We have no information about these circumstances except what is contained in the letter itself, which of course supposes that they are known to the readers. Consequently the reconstruction of the letter's background is an uncertain enterprise about which there is not complete agreement.

The letter deals principally with these three topics: (1) a crisis between Paul and the Corinthians, occasioned at least partially by changes in his travel plans (1:12–2:13), and the successful resolution of that crisis (7:5-16); (2) further directives and encouragement in regard to the collection for the church in Jerusalem (8:1–9:15); (3) the definition and defense of Paul’s ministry as an apostle. Paul’s reflections on this matter are occasioned by visitors from other churches who passed through Corinth, missionaries who differed from Paul in a variety of ways, both in theory and in practice. Those differences led to comparisons. Either the visitors themselves or some of the local church members appear to have sown confusion among the Corinthians with regard to Paul’s authority or his style, or both. Paul deals at length with aspects of this situation in 2 Corinthians 2:14–7:4 and again in 2 Corinthians 10:1–13:10, though the manner of treatment and the thrust of the argument differ in each of these sections.

Scholars have noticed a lack of continuity in this document. For example, the long section of 2 Corinthians 2:14–7:4 seems abruptly spliced into the narrative of a crisis and its resolution. Identical or similar topics, moreover, seem to be treated several times during the letter (compare 2:14–7:4 with 10:1–13:10, and 8:1-24 with 9:1-15). Many judge, therefore, that this letter as it stands incorporates several briefer letters sent to Corinth over a certain span of time. If this is so, then Paul himself or, more likely, some other editor clearly took care to gather those letters together and impose some literary unity upon the collection, thus producing the document that has come down to us as the Second Letter to the Corinthians. Others continue to regard it as a single letter, attributing its inconsistencies to changes of perspective in Paul that may have been occasioned by the arrival of fresh news from Corinth during its composition. The letter, or at least some sections of it, appears to have been composed in Macedonia (2:12-13; 7:5-6; 8:1-4; 9:2-4). It is generally dated about the autumn of A.D. 57; if it is a compilation, of course, the various parts may have been separated by intervals of at least some months.

The principal divisions of the Second Letter to the Corinthians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-11)

II. The Crisis Between Paul and the Corinthians (1:12–7:16)

  A. Past Relationships (1:12–2:13)

  B. Paul’s Ministry (2:14–7:4)

  C. Resolution of the Crisis (7:5-16)

III. The Collection for Jerusalem (8:1–9:15)

IV. Paul’s Defense of His Ministry (10:1–13:10)

V. Conclusion (13:11-13)

3[b]Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of compassion and God of all encouragement,* 4who encourages us in our every affliction, so that we may be able to encourage those who are in any affliction with the encouragement with which we ourselves are encouraged by God.[c] 5For as Christ's sufferings overflow to us, so through Christ* does our encouragement also overflow. 6If we are afflicted, it is for your encouragement and salvation; if we are encouraged, it is for your encouragement, which enables you to endure the same sufferings that we suffer. 7Our hope for you is firm, for we know that as you share in the sufferings, you also share in the encouragement.*

8We do not want you to be unaware, brothers, of the affliction that came to us in the province of Asia;* we were utterly weighed down beyond our strength, so that we despaired even of life.[d] 9Indeed, we had accepted within ourselves the sentence of death,* that we might trust not in ourselves but in God who raises the dead.[e] 10He rescued us from such great danger of death, and he will continue to rescue us; in him we have put our hope [that] he will also rescue us again,[f] 11as you help us with prayer, so that thanks may be given by many on our behalf for the gift granted us through the prayers of many.[g]

12*For our boast is this, the testimony of our conscience that we have conducted ourselves in the world, and especially toward you, with the simplicity and sincerity of God, [and] not by human wisdom but by the grace of God. 13For we write you nothing but what you can read and understand, and I hope that you will understand completely, 14as you have come to understand us partially, that we are your boast as you also are ours, on the day of [our] Lord Jesus.[h]

How can you make the theology of Paul's thanksgiving after affliction your own? How have you received consolation in times of difficulties? Keep in mind that God often uses others to bring us that consolation.

15With this confidence I formerly intended to come* to you so that you might receive a double favor, 16namely, to go by way of you to Macedonia, and then to come to you again on my return from

Macedonia, and have you send me on my way to Judea.[i] 17So when I intended this, did I act lightly?* Or do I make my plans according to human considerations, so that with me it is “yes, yes” and “no, no”?[j] 18As God is faithful,* our word to you is not “yes” and “no.” 19For the Son of God, Jesus Christ, who was proclaimed to you by us, Silvanus and Timothy and me, was not “yes” and “no,” but “yes” has been in him.[k] 20For however many are the promises of God, their Yes is in him; therefore, the Amen from us also goes through him to God for glory.[l] 21*But the one who gives us security with you in Christ and who anointed us is God;[m] 22he has also put his seal upon us and given the Spirit in our hearts as a first installment.[n]

Paul’s Change of Plan

[23][o]But I call upon God as witness, on my life, that it is to spare you that I have not yet gone to Corinth.* [24]Not that we lord it over your faith; rather, we work together for your joy, for you stand firm in the faith.

2 [1]For I decided not to come to you again in painful circumstances. [2]For if I inflict pain upon you, then who is there to cheer me except the one pained by me? [3]And I wrote as I did* so that when I came I might not be pained by those in whom I should have rejoiced, confident about all of you that my joy is that of all of you. [4]For out of much affliction and anguish of heart I wrote to you with many tears, not that you might be pained but that you might know the abundant love I have for you.

5If anyone has caused pain, he has caused it not to me, but in some measure (not to exaggerate) to all of you. 6This punishment by the majority is enough for such a person, 7so that on the contrary you should forgive and encourage him instead, or else the person may be overwhelmed by excessive pain.[a] 8Therefore, I urge you to reaffirm your love for him. 9For this is why I wrote, to know your proven character, whether you were obedient in everything.[b] 10Whomever you forgive anything, so do I. For indeed what I have forgiven, if I have forgiven anything, has been for you in the presence of Christ, 11so that we might not be taken advantage of by Satan, for we are not unaware of his purposes.[c]

[14]But thanks be to God, who always leads us in triumph in Christ* and manifests through us the odor of the knowledge of him* in every place. Who is qualified* for this? [17]For we are not like the many who trade on the word of God; but as out of sincerity, indeed as from God and in the presence of God, we speak in Christ.[g]

[2]You are our letter,* written on our hearts, known and read by all, [3]*[b]shown to be a letter of Christ administered by us, written not in ink but by the Spirit of the living God, not on tablets of stone but on tablets that are hearts of flesh.

Eph 3:7 / Jer 31:31-34

[4]Such confidence we have through Christ toward God. [5]Not that of ourselves we are qualified to take credit for anything as coming from us; rather, our qualification comes from God,[c] [6]who has indeed qualified us as ministers of a new covenant, not of letter but of spirit;[d] for the letter brings death, but the Spirit gives life.

Whether it appears in your mailbox or on your computer screen, a personal letter is a joy to receive. You are a personal letter written by the Spirit of God. Imagine what each moment might be like for your fellow human beings if, as you open the door to the new day, you would remember that you are Christ's letter to the world.

Contrast with the Old Covenant

7*Now if the ministry of death,* carved in letters on stone, was so glorious that the Israelites could not look intently at the face of Moses because of its glory that was going to fade,[e] 8how much more* will the ministry of the Spirit be glorious? 9For if the ministry of condemnation was glorious, the ministry of righteousness will abound much more in glory. 10Indeed, what was endowed with glory has come to have no glory in this respect because of the glory that surpasses it. 11For if what was going to fade was glorious, how much more will what endures be glorious.

12Therefore, since we have such hope,* we act very boldly 13and not like Moses,* who put a veil over his face so that the Israelites could not look intently at the cessation of what was fading. 14Rather, their thoughts were rendered dull, for to this present day* the same veil remains unlifted when they read the old covenant, because through Christ it is taken away. 15To this day, in fact, whenever Moses is read, a veil lies over their hearts,[f] 16but whenever a person turns to the Lord the veil is removed.[g] 17Now the Lord is the Spirit,* and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom. 18*All of us, gazing with unveiled face on the glory of the Lord, are being transformed into the same image from glory to glory, as from the Lord who is the Spirit.[h]

Rom 8:36; 1 Cor 15:31

[7]But we hold this treasure in earthen vessels, that the surpassing power may be of God and not from us. [8]We are afflicted in every way, but not constrained; perplexed, but not driven to despair;[e] [9]persecuted, but not abandoned; struck down, but not destroyed; [10][f]always carrying about in the body the dying of Jesus, so that the life of Jesus may also be manifested in our body. [11]For we who live are constantly being given up to death for the sake of Jesus, so that the life of Jesus may be manifested in our mortal flesh.[g]

From the earth we have come fragile, precious, and broken, formed to be a vessel of glory. Out of our brokenness and our glory we pour forth gifts. We are ministers of the word of God. We are servants of God’s glory.

5*For even when we came into Macedonia,* our flesh had no rest, but we were afflicted in every way—external conflicts, internal fears.[b] 6But God, who encourages the downcast, encouraged us by the arrival of Titus,[c] 7and not only by his arrival but also by the encouragement with which he was encouraged in regard to you, as he told us of your yearning, your lament, your zeal for me, so that I rejoiced even more. 8*For even if I saddened you by my letter, I do not regret it; and if I did regret it ([for] I see that that letter saddened you, if only for a while),[d] 9I rejoice now, not because you were saddened, but because you were saddened into repentance; for you were saddened in a godly way, so that you did not suffer loss in anything because of us. 10For godly sorrow produces a salutary repentance without regret, but worldly sorrow produces death. 11For behold what earnestness this godly sorrow has produced for you, as well as readiness for a defense, and indignation, and fear, and yearning, and zeal, and punishment. In every way you have shown yourselves to be innocent in the matter. 12So then even though I wrote to you, it was not on account of the one who did the wrong, or on account of the one who suffered the wrong, but in order that your concern for us might be made plain to you in the sight of God.[e] 13For this reason we are encouraged.

And besides our encouragement,* we rejoice even more because of the joy of Titus, since his spirit has been refreshed by all of you. 8 [1]We want you to know, brothers, of the grace of God* that has been given to the churches of Macedonia,[a] [2]*for in a severe test of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their profound poverty overflowed in a wealth of generosity on their part. [3]For according to their means, I can testify, and beyond their means, spontaneously, [4]they begged us insistently for the favor of taking part in the service to the holy ones,[b] [5]and this, not as we expected, but they gave themselves first to the Lord and to us through the will of God, [6]so that we urged Titus* that, as he had already begun, he should also complete for you this gracious act also.[c] [7]*Now as you excel in every respect, in faith, discourse, knowledge, all earnestness, and in the love we have for you,[d] may you excel in this gracious act also.

[8]I say this not by way of command, but to test the genuineness of your love by your concern for others. [9][e]For you know the gracious act of our Lord Jesus Christ, that for your sake he became poor although he was rich, so that by his poverty you might become rich. [10]And I am giving counsel in this matter, for it is appropriate for you who began not only to act but to act willingly last year:[f] [11]complete it now, so that your eager willingness may be matched by your completion of it out of what you have. [12]*For if the eagerness is there, it is acceptable according to what one has, not according to what one does not have; [13]not that others should have relief while you are burdened, but that as a matter of equality [14]your surplus at the present time should supply their needs, so that their surplus may also supply your needs, that there may be equality. [15]As it is written:

[16]But thanks be to God who put the same concern for you into the heart of Titus, [17]for he not only welcomed our appeal but, since he is very concerned, he has gone to you of his own accord. [18]With him we have sent the brother* who is praised in all the churches for his preaching of the gospel.[h] [19]And not only that, but he has also been appointed our traveling companion by the churches in this gracious work administered by us for the glory of the Lord [himself] and for the expression of our eagerness.[i] [20]This we desire to avoid, that anyone blame us* about this lavish gift administered by us, [21]for we are concerned for what is honorable not only in the sight of the Lord but also in the sight of others.[j] [22]And with them we have sent our brother whom we often tested in many ways and found earnest, but who is now much more earnest because of his great confidence in you. [23]As for Titus, he is my partner and co-worker for you; as for our brothers, they are apostles of the churches, the glory of Christ. [24]So give proof before the churches of your love and of our boasting about you to them.*

God’s Indescribable Gift*

8:10; Rom 15:26

9 [1]Now about the service to the holy ones, it is superfluous for me to write to you, [2]for I know your eagerness, about which I boast of you to the Macedonians, that Achaia* has been ready since last year; and your zeal has stirred up most of them.[a] [3]Nonetheless, I sent the brothers* so that our boast about you might not prove empty in this case, so that you might be ready, as I said, [4]for fear that if any Macedonians come with me and find you not ready we might be put to shame (to say nothing of you) in this conviction. [5]So I thought it necessary to encourage the brothers to go on ahead to you and arrange in advance for your promised gift, so that in this way it might be ready as a bountiful gift and not as an exaction.

[9]As it is written:

What causes some people to be generous and others to hold back from giving?

12 1I* must boast; not that it is profitable, but I will go on to visions and revelations of the Lord. 2I know someone in Christ who, fourteen years ago (whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows), was caught up to the third heaven. 3And I know that this person (whether in the body or out of the body I do not know, God knows) 4was caught up into Paradise and heard ineffable things, which no one may utter.[a] 5About this person* I will boast, but about myself I will not boast, except about my weaknesses. 6Although if I should wish to boast, I would not be foolish, for I would be telling the truth. But I refrain, so that no one may think more of me than what he sees in me or hears from me 7because of the abundance of the revelations. Therefore, that I might not become too elated,* a thorn in the flesh was given to me, an angel of Satan, to beat me, to keep me from being too elated.[b] 8Three times* I begged the Lord about this, that it might leave me,[c] 9*but he said to me, “My grace is sufficient for you, for power is made perfect in weakness.” I will rather boast most gladly of my weaknesses,* in order that the power of Christ may dwell with me.[d] 10Therefore, I am content with weaknesses, insults, hardships, persecutions, and constraints, for the sake of Christ;[e] for when I am weak, then I am strong.*

Let this be your song today, “When I am powerless it is then I am strong.” Recall specific moments when this was made obvious in your life. Draw strength from this truth.

[20]For I fear that* when I come I may find you not such as I wish, and that you may find me not as you wish; that there may be rivalry, jealousy, fury, selfishness, slander, gossip, conceit, and disorder.[k] [21]I fear that when I come again* my God may humiliate me before you, and I may have to mourn over many of those who sinned earlier and have not repented of the impurity, immorality, and licentiousness they practiced.

Dt 19:15; Mt 18:16; Jn 8:17; Heb 10:28

13 [1]This third time I am coming* to you. “On the testimony of two or three witnesses a fact shall be established.”[a] [2]I warned those who sinned earlier* and all the others, and I warn them now while absent, as I did when present on my second visit, that if I come again I will not be lenient, [3]*since you are looking for proof of Christ speaking in me. He is not weak toward you but powerful in you. [4]For indeed he was crucified out of weakness, but he lives by the power of God. So also we are weak in him, but toward you we shall live with him by the power of God.

[5]*Examine yourselves to see whether you are living in faith. Test yourselves. Do you not realize that Jesus Christ is in you?—unless, of course, you fail the test. [6]I hope you will discover that we have not failed. [7]But we pray to God that you may not do evil, not that we may appear to have passed the test but that you may do what is right, even though we may seem to have failed. [8]For we cannot do anything against the truth, but only for the truth. [9]For we rejoice when we are weak but you are strong. What we pray for is your improvement.

[10]*[b]I am writing this while I am away, so that when I come I may not have to be severe in virtue of the authority that the Lord has given me to build up and not to tear down.

V: CONCLUSION*

Rom 16:16; 1 Cor 16:20 / Phil 4:22; 1 Thes 5:26; 1 Pt 5:14

[11]Finally, brothers, rejoice. Mend your ways, encourage one another, agree with one another, live in peace, and the God of love and peace will be with you. [12]Greet one another with a holy kiss. All the holy ones greet you.[c]

Rom 16:20; 1 Cor 16:23

[13]The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God and the fellowship of the holy Spirit be with all of you.[d]

The trinitarian formula used as a closing blessing to this letter has been taken over by the church as one of the possible greetings at the beginning of Mass.

1:1-11 The opening follows the usual Pauline form, except that the thanksgiving takes the form of a doxology or glorification of God (1:3). This introduces a meditation on the experience of suffering and encouragement shared by Paul and the Corinthians (1:4-7), drawn, at least in part, from Paul's reflections on a recent affliction (1:8-10). The section ends with a modified and delayed allusion to thanksgiving (1:11).

1:3 God of all encouragement: Paul expands a standard Jewish blessing so as to state the theme of the paragraph. The theme of "encouragement" or "consolation" (paraklēsis) occurs ten times in this opening, against a background formed by multiple references to "affliction" and "suffering."

1:5 Through Christ: the Father of compassion is the Father of our Lord Jesus (1:3); Paul's sufferings and encouragement (or "consolation") are experienced in union with Christ. Cf. Luke 2:25: the "consolation of Israel" is Jesus himself.

1:7 You also share in the encouragement: the eschatological reversal of affliction and encouragement that Christians expect (cf. Mt 5:4; Lk 6:24) permits some present experience of reversal in the Corinthians' case, as in Paul's.

1:8 Asia: a Roman province in western Asia Minor, the capital of which was Ephesus.

1:9-10 The sentence of death: it is unclear whether Paul is alluding to a physical illness or to an external threat to life. The result of the situation was to produce an attitude of faith in God alone. God who raises the dead: rescue is the constant pattern of God's activity; his final act of encouragement is the resurrection.

1:12–2:13 The autobiographical remarks about the crisis in Asia Minor lead into consideration of a crisis that has arisen between Paul and the Corinthians. Paul will return to this question, after a long digression, in 2 Corinthians 7:5-16. Both of these sections deal with travel plans Paul had made, changes in the plans, alternative measures adopted, a breach that opened between him and the community, and finally a reconciliation between them.

1:12-14 Since Paul's own conduct will be under discussion here, he prefaces the section with a statement about his habitual behavior and attitude toward the community. He protests his openness, single-mindedness, and conformity to God's grace; he hopes that his relationship with them will be marked by mutual understanding and pride, which will constantly increase until it reaches its climax at the judgment. Two references to boasting frame this paragraph (1:12, 14), the first appearances of a theme that will be important in the letter, especially in 2 Corinthians 10–13; the term is used in a positive sense here (cf. the note on 1 Cor 1:29-31).

1:15 I formerly intended to come: this plan reads like a revision of the one mentioned in 1 Corinthians 16:5. Not until 2 Corinthians 1:23–2:1 will Paul tell us something his original readers already knew, that he has canceled one or the other of these projected visits.

1:17 Did I act lightly?: the subsequent change of plans casts suspicion on the original intention, creating the impression that Paul is vacillating and inconsistent or that human considerations keep dictating shifts in his goals and projects (cf. the counterclaim of 1:12). "Yes, yes" and "no, no": stating something and denying it in the same or the next breath; being of two minds at once, or from one moment to the next.

1:18-22 As God is faithful: unable to deny the change in plans, Paul nonetheless asserts the firmness of the original plan and claims a profound constancy in his life and work. He grounds his defense in God himself, who is firm and reliable; this quality can also be predicated in various ways of those who are associated with him. Christ, Paul, and the Corinthians all participate in analogous ways in the constancy of God. A number of the terms here, which appear related only conceptually in Greek or English, would be variations of the same root, ʾmn, in a Semitic language, and thus naturally associated in a Semitic mind, such as Paul's. These include the words yes (1:17-20), faithful (1:18), Amen (1:20), gives us security (1:21), faith, stand firm (1:24).

1:21-22 The commercial terms gives us security, seal, first installment are here used analogously to refer to the process of initiation into the Christian life, perhaps specifically to baptism. The passage is clearly trinitarian. The Spirit is the first installment or "down payment" of the full messianic benefits that God guarantees to Christians. Cf. Ephesians 1:13-14.

1:23-24 I have not yet gone to Corinth: some suppose that Paul received word of some affair in Corinth, which he decided to regulate by letter even before the first of his projected visits (cf. 1:16). Others conjecture that he did pay the first visit, was offended there (cf. 2:5), returned to Ephesus, and sent a letter (2:3-9) in place of the second visit. The expressions to spare you (1:23) and work together for your joy (1:24) introduce the major themes of the next two paragraphs, which are remarkable for insistent repetition of key words and ideas. These form two clusters of terms in the English translation: (1) cheer, rejoice, encourage, joy; (2) pain, affliction, anguish. These clusters reappear when Paul resumes treatment of this subject in 2 Corinthians 7:5-16.

2:3-4 I wrote as I did: we learn for the first time about the sending of a letter in place of the proposed visit. Paul mentions the letter in passing, but emphasizes his motivation in sending it: to avoid being saddened by them (cf. 1 Cor 2:1), and to help them realize the depth of his love. Another motive will be added in 2 Corinthians 7:12: to bring to light their own concern for him. With many tears: it has been suggested that we may have all or part of this "tearful letter" somewhere in the Corinthian correspondence, either in 1 Corinthians 5 (the case of the incestuous man), or in 1 Corinthians as a whole, or in 2 Corinthians 2:10-13. None of these hypotheses is entirely convincing. See the note on 2 Corinthians 13:1.

2:5-11 The nature of the pain (2:5) is unclear, though some believe an individual at Corinth rejected Paul's authority, thereby scandalizing many in the community. In any case, action has been taken, and Paul judges the measures adequate to right the situation (2:6). The follow-up directives he now gives are entirely positive: forgive, encourage, love. Overwhelmed (2:7): a vivid metaphor (literally, "swallowed") that Paul employs positively at 2 Corinthians 5:4 and in 1 Corinthians 15:54 (2 Cor 2:7). It is often used to describe satanic activity (cf. 1 Pt 5:8); note the reference to Satan here in 2 Corinthians 2:11.

2:12-13 I had no relief: Paul does not explain the reason for his anxiety until he resumes the thread of his narrative at 2 Corinthians 7:5: he was waiting to hear how the Corinthians would respond to his letter. Since 2 Corinthians 7:5-16 describes their response in entirely positive terms, we never learn in detail why he found it necessary to defend and justify his change of plans, as in 2 Corinthians 1:15-24. Was this portion of the letter written before the arrival of Titus with his good news (7:6-7)?

2:13 Macedonia: a Roman province in northern Greece.

2:14–7:4 This section constitutes a digression within the narrative of the crisis and its resolution (1:12–2:13 and 7:5-16). The main component (2:14–6:10) treats the nature of Paul's ministry and his qualifications for it; this material bears some similarity to the defense of his ministry in 2 Corinthians 2:10-13, but it may well come from a period close to the crisis. This is followed by a supplementary block of material quite different in character and tone (6:14–7:1). These materials may have been brought together into their present position during final editing of the letter; appeals to the Corinthians link them to one another (6:11-13) and lead back to the interrupted narrative (7:2-4).

2:14–6:10 The question of Paul's adequacy (2:16; cf. 3:5) and his credentials (3:1-2) has been raised. Paul responds by an extended treatment of the nature of his ministry. It is a ministry of glory (3:7–4:6), of life (4:7–5:10), of reconciliation (5:11–6:10).

2:14-16a The initial statement plunges us abruptly into another train of thought. Paul describes his personal existence and his function as a preacher in two powerful images (2:14) that constitute a prelude to the development to follow.

2:14a Leads us in triumph in Christ: this metaphor of a festive parade in honor of a conquering military hero can suggest either a positive sharing in Christ's triumph or an experience of defeat, being led in captivity and submission (cf. 4:8-11; 1 Cor 4:9). Paul is probably aware of the ambiguity, as he is in the case of the next metaphor.

2:14b-16a The odor of the knowledge of him: incense was commonly used in triumphal processions. The metaphor suggests the gradual diffusion of the knowledge of God through the apostolic preaching. The aroma of Christ: the image shifts from the fragrance Paul diffuses to the aroma that he is. Paul is probably thinking of the "sweet odor" of the sacrifices in the Old Testament (e.g., Gn 8:21; Ex 29:18) and perhaps of the metaphor of wisdom as a sweet odor (Sir 24:15). Death … life: the aroma of Christ that comes to them through Paul is perceived differently by various classes of people. To some his preaching and his life (cf. 1 Cor 1:17–2:6) are perceived as death, and the effect is death for them; others perceive him, despite appearances, as life, and the effect is life for them. This fragrance thus produces a separation and a judgment (cf. the function of the "light" in John's gospel).

2:16b-17 Qualified: Paul may be echoing either the self-satisfied claims of other preachers or their charges about Paul's deficiencies. No one is really qualified, but the apostle contrasts himself with those who dilute or falsify the preaching for personal advantage and insists on his totally good conscience: his ministry is from God, and he has exercised it with fidelity and integrity (cf. 3:5-6).

3:1 Paul seems to allude to certain preachers who pride themselves on their written credentials. Presumably they reproach him for not possessing similar credentials and compel him to spell out his own qualifications (4:2; 5:12; 6:4). The Corinthians themselves should have performed this function for Paul (5:12; cf. 12:11). Since he is forced to find something that can recommend him, he points to them: their very existence constitutes his letter of recommendation (3:1-2). Others who engage in self-commendation will also be mentioned in 2 Corinthians 10:12-18.

3:2-3 Mention of "letters of recommendation" generates a series of metaphors in which Paul plays on the word "letter": (1) the community is Paul's letter of recommendation (3:2a); (2) they are a letter engraved on his affections for all to see and read (3:2b); (3) they are a letter from Christ that Paul merely delivers (3:3a); (4) they are a letter written by the Spirit on the tablets of human hearts (3:3b). One image dissolves into another.

3:3 This verse contrasts Paul's letter with those written … in ink (like the credentials of other preachers) and those written … on tablets of stone (like the law of Moses). These contrasts suggest that the other preachers may have claimed special relationship with Moses. If they were Judaizers zealous for the Mosaic law, that would explain the detailed contrast between the old and the new covenants (3:6; 4:7–6:10). If they were charismatics who claimed Moses as their model, that would explain the extended treatment of Moses himself and his glory (3:7–4:6). Hearts of flesh: cf. Ezekiel's contrast between the heart of flesh that the Spirit gives and the heart of stone that it replaces (Ez 36:26); the context is covenant renewal and purification that makes observance of the law possible.

3:4-6 These verses resume 2 Corinthians 2:1–3:3. Paul's confidence (3:4) is grounded in his sense of God-given mission (2:17), the specifics of which are described in 2 Corinthians 3:1-3. 2 Corinthians 3:5-6 return to the question of his qualifications (2:16), attributing them entirely to God. 2 Corinthians 3:6 further spells out the situation described in 2 Cor 3:3b and "names" it: Paul is living within a new covenant, characterized by the Spirit, which gives life. The usage of a new covenant is derived from Jeremiah 31:31-33 a passage that also speaks of writing on the heart; cf. 2 Corinthians 3:2.

3:6 This verse serves as a topic sentence for 3:7–6:10. For the contrast between letter and spirit, cf. Romans 2:29; 7:5-6.

3:7–4:6 Paul now develops the contrast enunciated in 2 Corinthians 3:6b in terms of the relative glory of the two covenants, insisting on the greater glory of the new. His polemic seems directed against individuals who appeal to the glorious Moses and fail to perceive any comparable glory either in Paul's life as an apostle or in the gospel he preaches. He asserts in response that Christians have a glory of their own that far surpasses that of Moses.

3:7 The ministry of death: from his very first words, Paul describes the Mosaic covenant and ministry from the viewpoint of their limitations. They lead to death rather than life (3:6-7; cf. 4:7–5:10), to condemnation rather than reconciliation (3:9; cf. 5:11–6:10). Was so glorious: the basic text to which Paul alludes is Exodus 34:29-35 to which his opponents have undoubtedly laid claim. Going to fade: Paul concedes the glory of Moses’ covenant and ministry, but grants them only temporary significance.

3:8-11 How much more: the argument “from the less to the greater” is repeated three times (3:8, 9, 11). 2 Corinthians 3:10 expresses another point of view: the difference in glory is so great that only the new covenant and ministry can properly be called “glorious” at all.

3:12 Such hope: the glory is not yet an object of experience, but that does not lessen Paul’s confidence. Boldly: the term parrēsia expresses outspoken declaration of Christian conviction (cf. 4:1-2). Paul has nothing to hide and no reason for timidity.

3:13-14a Not like Moses: in Exodus Moses veiled his face to protect the Israelites from God’s reflected glory. Without impugning Moses’ sincerity, Paul attributes another effect to the veil. Since it lies between God’s glory and the Israelites, it explains how they could fail to notice the glory disappearing. Their thoughts were rendered dull: the problem lay with their understanding. This will be expressed in 2 Corinthians 3:14b-16 by a shift in the place of the veil: it is no longer over Moses’ face but over their perception.

3:14b-16 The parallelism in these verses makes it necessary to interpret corresponding parts in relation to one another. To this present day: this signals the shift of Paul’s attention to his contemporaries; his argument is typological, as in 1 Corinthians 10. The Israelites of Moses’ time typify the Jews of Paul’s time, and perhaps also Christians of Jewish origin or mentality who may not recognize the temporary character of Moses’ glory. When they read the old covenant: the lasting dullness prevents proper appraisal of Moses’ person and covenant. When his writings are read in the synagogue, a veil still impedes their understanding. Through Christ: i.e., in the new covenant. Whenever a person turns to the Lord: Moses in Exodus appeared before God without the veil and gazed on his face unprotected. Paul applies that passage to converts to Christianity: when they turn to the Lord fully and authentically, the impediment to their understanding is removed.

3:17 The Lord is the Spirit: the “Lord” to whom the Christian turns (3:16) is the Spirit of whom Paul has been speaking, the life-giving Spirit of the living God (3:6, 8), the inaugurator of the new covenant and ministry, who is also the Spirit of Christ. The Spirit of the Lord: the Lord here is the living God (3:3), but there may also be an allusion to Christ as Lord (3:14, 16). Freedom: i.e., from the ministry of death (3:7) and the covenant that condemned (3:9).

3:18 Another application of the veil image. All of us … with unveiled face: Christians (Israelites from whom the veil has been removed) are like Moses, standing in God’s presence, beholding and reflecting his glory. Gazing: the verb may also be translated “contemplating as in a mirror”; 2 Corinthians 4:6 would suggest that the mirror is Christ himself. Are being transformed: elsewhere Paul speaks of transformation, conformity to Jesus, God’s image, as a reality of the end time, and even 2 Corinthians 3:12 speaks of the glory as an object of hope. But the life-giving Spirit, the distinctive gift of the new covenant, is already present in the community (cf. 1:22, the “first installment”), and the process of transformation has already begun. Into the same image: into the image of God, which is Christ (4:4).

4:1-2 A ministry of this sort generates confidence and forthrightness; cf. 2 Corinthians 1:12-14; 2:17.

4:3-4 Though our gospel is veiled: the final application of the image. Paul has been reproached either for obscurity in his preaching or for his manner of presenting the gospel. But he confidently asserts that there is no veil over his gospel. If some fail to perceive its light, that is because of unbelief. The veil lies over their eyes (3:14), a blindness induced by Satan, and a sign that they are headed for destruction (cf. 2:15).

4:5 We do not preach ourselves: the light seen in his gospel is the glory of Christ (4:4). Far from preaching himself, the preacher should be a transparent medium through whom Jesus is perceived (cf. 4:10-11). Your slaves: Paul draws attention away from individuals as such and toward their role in relation to God, Christ, and the community; cf. 1 Corinthians 3:5; 2 Corinthians 4:1.

4:6 Autobiographical allusion to the episode at Damascus clarifies the origin and nature of Paul's service; cf. Acts 9:1-19; 22:3-16; 26:2-18. "Let light shine out of darkness": Paul seems to be thinking of Genesis 1:3 and presenting his apostolic ministry as a new creation. There may also be an allusion to Isaiah 9:1 suggesting his prophetic calling as servant of the Lord and light to the nations; cf. Isaiah 42:6, 16; 49:6; 60:1-2, and the use of light imagery in Acts 26:13-23. To bring to light the knowledge: Paul's role in the process of revelation, expressed at the beginning under the image of the odor and aroma (2:14-15), is restated now, at the end of this first moment of the development, in the imagery of light and glory (4:3-6).

4:7–5:10 Paul now confronts the difficulty that his present existence does not appear glorious at all; it is marked instead by suffering and death. He deals with this by developing the topic already announced in 2 Corinthians 3:3, 6, asserting his faith in the presence and ultimate triumph of life, in his own and every Christian existence, despite the experience of death.

4:7 This treasure: the glory that he preaches and into which they are being transformed. In earthen vessels: the instruments God uses are human and fragile; some imagine small terracotta lamps in which light is carried.

4:8-9 A catalogue of his apostolic trials and afflictions. Yet in these the negative never completely prevails; there is always some experience of rescue, of salvation.

4:10-11 Both the negative and the positive sides of the experience are grounded christologically. The logic is similar to that of 2 Corinthians 1:3-11. His sufferings are connected with Christ's, and his deliverance is a sign that he is to share in Jesus' resurrection.

4:12-15 His experience does not terminate in himself, but in others (12, 15; cf. 1:4-5). Ultimately, everything is ordered even beyond the community, toward God (4:15; cf. 1:11).

4:13-14 Like the psalmist, Paul clearly proclaims his faith, affirming life within himself despite death (4:10-11) and the life-giving effect of his experience upon the church (4:12, 14-15). And place us with you in his presence: Paul imagines God presenting him and them to Jesus at the parousia and the judgment; cf. 2 Corinthians 11:2; Romans 14:10.

4:16-18 In a series of contrasts Paul explains the extent of his faith in life. Life is not only already present and revealing itself (4:8-11, 16) but will outlast his experience of affliction and dying: it is eternal (4:17-18).

4:16 Not discouraged: i.e., despite the experience of death. Paul is still speaking of himself personally, but he assumes his faith and attitude will be shared by all Christians. Our outer self: the individual subject of ordinary perception and observation, in contrast to the interior and hidden self, which undergoes renewal. Is being renewed day by day: this suggests a process that has already begun; cf. 2 Corinthians 3:18. The renewal already taking place even in Paul's dying is a share in the life of Jesus, but this is recognized only by faith (4:13, 18; 5:7).

5:1 Our earthly dwelling: the same contrast is restated in the imagery of a dwelling. The language recalls Jesus' saying about the destruction of the temple and the construction of another building not made with hands (Mk 14:58), a prediction later applied to Jesus' own body (Jn 2:20).

5:2-5 2 Corinthians 5:2-3 and 4 are largely parallel in structure. We groan, longing: see the note on 2 Corinthians 5:5. Clothed with our heavenly habitation: Paul mixes his metaphors, adding the image of the garment to that of the building. Further clothed: the verb means strictly "to put one garment on over another." Paul may desire to put the resurrection body on over his mortal body, without dying; 2 Corinthians 5:2 and 5:4 permit this meaning but do not impose it. Or perhaps he imagines the resurrection body as a garment put on over the Christ-garment first received in baptism (Gal 3:27) and preserved by moral behavior (Rom 13:12-14; Col 3:12; cf. Mt 22:11-13). Some support for this interpretation may be found in the context; cf. the references to baptism (5:5), to judgment according to works (5:10), and to present renewal (4:16), an idea elsewhere combined with the image of "putting on" a new nature (Eph 4:22-24; Col 3:1-5, 9-10).

5:3 When we have taken it off: the majority of witnesses read "when we have put it on," i.e., when we have been clothed (in the resurrection body), then we shall not be without a body (naked). This seems mere tautology, though some understand it to mean: whether we are "found" (by God at the judgment) clothed or naked depends upon whether we have preserved or lost our original investiture in Christ (cf. the previous note). In this case to "put it on" does not refer to the resurrection body, but to keeping intact the Christ-garment of baptism. The translation follows the western reading (Codex Bezae, Tertullian), the sense of which is clear: to "take it off" is to shed our mortal body in death, after which we shall be clothed in the resurrection body and hence not "naked" (cf. 1 Cor 15:51-53).

5:4 We do not wish to be unclothed: a clear allusion to physical death (4:16; 5:1). Unlike the Greeks, who found dissolution of the body desirable (cf. Socrates), Paul has a Jewish horror of it. He seems to be thinking of the "intermediate period," an interval between death and resurrection. Swallowed up by life: cf. 1 Corinthians 15:54.

5:5 God has created us for resurrected bodily life and already prepares us for it by the gift of the Spirit in baptism. The Spirit as a first installment: the striking parallel to 2 Corinthians 5:1-5 in Romans 8:17-30 describes Christians who have received the "firstfruits" (cf. "first installment" here) of the Spirit as "groaning" (cf. 5:2, 4 here) for the resurrection, the complete redemption of their bodies. In place of clothing and building, Romans 8 uses other images for the resurrection: adoption and conformity to the image of the Son.

5:6-9 Tension between present and future is expressed by another spatial image, the metaphor of the country and its citizens. At present we are like citizens in exile or far away from home. The Lord is the distant homeland, believed in but unseen (5:7).

5:10 We must all appear: the verb is ambiguous: we are scheduled to "appear" for judgment, at which we will be "revealed" as we are (cf. 11; 2:14; 4:10-11).

5:11-15 This paragraph is transitional. Paul sums up much that has gone before. Still playing on the term "appearance," he reasserts his transparency before God and the Corinthians, in contrast to the self-commendation, boasting, and preoccupation with externals that characterize some others (cf. 1:12-14; 2:14; 3:1; 3:7–4:6). 2 Corinthians 5:14 recalls 2 Corinthians 3:7–4:6, and sums up 2 Corinthians 4:7–5:10.

5:13 Out of our minds: this verse confirms that a concern for ecstasy and charismatic experience may lie behind the discussion about “glory” in 2 Corinthians 3:7–4:6. Paul also enjoys such experiences but, unlike others, does not make a public display of them or consider them ends in themselves. Rational: the Greek virtue sōphrosynē, to which Paul alludes, implies reasonableness, moderation, good judgment, self-control.

5:14-15 These verses echo 2 Corinthians 4:14 and resume the treatment of “life despite death” from 2 Corinthians 4:7–5:10.

5:16-17 Consequently: the death of Christ described in 2 Corinthians 5:14-15 produces a whole new order (5:17) and a new mode of perception (5:16). According to the flesh: the natural mode of perception, characterized as “fleshly,” is replaced by a mode of perception proper to the Spirit. Elsewhere Paul contrasts what Christ looks like according to the old criteria (weakness, powerlessness, folly, death) and according to the new (wisdom, power, life); cf. 2 Corinthians 5:15, 21; 1 Corinthians 1:17–3:3. Similarly, he describes the paradoxical nature of Christian existence, e.g., in 2 Corinthians 4:10-11, 14. A new creation: rabbis used this expression to describe the effect of the entrance of a proselyte or convert into Judaism or of the remission of sins on the Day of Atonement. The new order created in Christ is the new covenant (3:6).

5:18-21 Paul attempts to explain the meaning of God’s action by a variety of different categories; his attention keeps moving rapidly back and forth from God’s act to his own ministry as well. Who has reconciled us to himself: i.e., he has brought all into oneness. Not counting their trespasses: the reconciliation is described as an act of justification (cf. “righteousness,” 5:21); this contrasts with the covenant that condemned (3:8). The ministry of reconciliation: Paul’s role in the wider picture is described: entrusted with the message of reconciliation (5:19), he is Christ’s ambassador, through whom God appeals (5:20a). In v. 20b Paul acts in the capacity just described.

5:21 This is a statement of God’s purpose, expressed paradoxically in terms of sharing and exchange of attributes. As Christ became our righteousness (1 Cor 1:30), we become God’s righteousness (cf. 2 Cor 5:14-15).

6:1-10 This paragraph is a single long sentence in the Greek, interrupted by the parenthesis of 2 Corinthians 5:2. The one main verb is “we appeal.” In this paragraph Paul both exercises his ministry of reconciliation (cf. 5:20) and describes how his ministry is exercised: the “message of reconciliation” (5:19) is lived existentially in his apostolic experience.

6:1 Not to receive … in vain: i.e., conform to the gift of justification and new creation. The context indicates how this can be done concretely: become God’s righteousness (5:21), not live for oneself (5:15) be reconciled with Paul (6:11-13; 7:2-3).

6:2 In an acceptable time: Paul cites the Septuagint text of Isaiah 49:8; the Hebrew reads “in a time of favor”; it is parallel to “on the day of salvation.” Now: God is bestowing favor and salvation at this very moment, as Paul is addressing his letter to them.

6:3 Cause no one to stumble: the language echoes that of 1 Corinthians 8–10 as does the expression “no longer live for themselves” in 2 Corinthians 5:15. That no fault may be found: i.e., at the eschatological judgment (cf. 1 Cor 4:2-5).

6:4a This is the central assertion, the topic statement for the catalogue that follows. We commend ourselves: Paul’s self-commendation is ironical (with an eye on the charges mentioned in 3:1-3) and paradoxical (pointing mostly to experiences that would not normally be considered points of pride but are perceived as such by faith). Cf. also the self-commendation in 2 Corinthians 11:23-29. As ministers of God: the same Greek word, diakonos, means “minister” and “servant”; cf. 2 Corinthians 11:23, the central assertion in a similar context, and 1 Corinthians 3:5.

6:4b-5 Through much endurance: this phrase functions as a subtitle; it is followed by an enumeration of nine specific types of trials endured.

6:6-7a A list of virtuous qualities in two groups of four, the second fuller than the first.

6:8b-10 A series of seven rhetorically effective antitheses, contrasting negative external impressions with positive inner reality. Paul perceives his existence as a reflection of Jesus’ own and affirms an inner reversal that escapes outward observation. The final two members illustrate two distinct kinds of paradox or apparent contradiction that are characteristic of apostolic experience.

6:11-13 Paul’s tone becomes quieter, but his appeal for acceptance and affection is emotionally charged. References to the heart and their mutual relations bring the development begun in 2 Corinthians 2:14–3:3 to an effective conclusion.

6:14–7:1 Language and thought shift noticeably here. Suddenly we are in a different atmosphere, dealing with a quite different problem. Both the vocabulary and the thought, with their contrast between good and evil, are more characteristic of Qumran documents or the Book of Revelation than they are of Paul. Hence, critics suspect that this section was inserted by another hand.

6:14-16a The opening injunction to separate from unbelievers is reinforced by five rhetorical questions to make the point that Christianity is not compatible with paganism. Their opposition is emphasized also by the accumulation of five distinct designations for each group. These verses are a powerful statement of God’s holiness and the exclusiveness of his claims.

6:16c-18 This is a chain of scriptural citations carefully woven together. God’s covenant relation to his people and his presence among them (6:16) is seen as conditioned on cultic separation from the profane and cultically impure (6:17); that relation is translated into the personal language of the parent-child relationship, an extension to the community of the language of 2 Samuel 7:14 (2 Cor 6:18). Some remarkable parallels to this chain are found in the final chapters of Revelation. God’s presence among his people (Rev 21:22) is expressed there, too, by applying 2 Samuel 7:14 to the community (Rev 21:7). There is a call to separation (Rev 18:4) and exclusion of the unclean from the community and its liturgy (Rev 21:27). The title “Lord Almighty” (Pantokratōr) occurs in the New Testament only here in 2 Corinthians 6:18 and nine times in Revelation.

7:2-4 These verses continue the thought of 2 Corinthians 6:11-13, before the interruption of 2 Corinthians 6:14–7:1. 2 Corinthians 7:4 serves as a transition to the next section: the four themes it introduces (confidence; pride or “boasting”; encouragement; joy in affliction) are developed in 2 Corinthians 7:5-16. All have appeared previously in the letter.

7:5-16 This section functions as a peroration or formal summing up of the whole first part of the letter, 2 Corinthians 1–7. It deals with the restoration of right relations between Paul and the Corinthians, and it is marked by fullness and intensity of emotion.

7:5-7 Paul picks up the thread of the narrative interrupted at 2 Corinthians 2:13 (7:5) and describes the resolution of the tense situation there depicted (7:6-7). Finally Titus arrives and his coming puts an end to Paul’s restlessness (2:13; 7:5), casts out his fears, and reverses his mood. The theme of encouragement and affliction is reintroduced (cf. 1:3-11); here, too, encouragement is traced back to God and is described as contagious (7:6). The language of joy and sorrow also reappears in 2 Corinthians 7:7 (cf. 1:23–2:1 and the note on 1:23-24).

7:5 Macedonia: see the note on 2 Corinthians 2:13.

7:8-12 Paul looks back on the episode from the viewpoint of its ending. The goal of their common activity, promotion of their joy (1:24), has been achieved, despite and because of the sorrow they felt. That sorrow was God-given. Its salutary effects are enumerated fully and impressively in 2 Corinthians 7:10-11; not the least important of these is that it has revealed to them the attachment they have to Paul.

7:13-16 Paul summarizes the effect of the experience on Titus: encouragement, joy, love, relief. Finally, he describes its effects on himself: encouragement, joy, confidence, pride or "boasting" (i.e., the satisfaction resulting from a boast that proves well-founded; cf. 7:4; 1:12, 14).

8:1–9:15 Paul turns to a new topic, the collection for the church in Jerusalem. There is an early precedent for this project in the agreement mentioned in Galatians 2:6-10. According to Acts, the church at Antioch had sent Saul and Barnabas to Jerusalem with relief (Acts 11:27-30). Subsequently Paul organized a project of relief for Jerusalem among his own churches. Our earliest evidence for it comes in 1 Corinthians 16:1-4, after it had already begun (see the notes there); by the time Paul wrote Romans 15:25-28 the collection was completed and ready for delivery. 2 Corinthians 8–9 contain what appear to be two letters on the subject. In them Paul gives us his fullest exposition of the meaning he sees in the enterprise, presenting it as an act of Christian charity and as an expression of the unity of the church, both present and eschatological. These chapters are especially rich in the recurrence of key words, on which Paul plays; it is usually impossible to do justice to these wordplays in the translation.

8:1-24 This is a letter of recommendation for Titus and two unnamed companions, written from Macedonia probably at least a year later than 1 Corinthians 16. The recommendation proper is prefaced by remarks about the ideals of sharing and equality within the Christian community (8:1-15). Philippians 4:10-20 shows that Paul has reflected on his personal experience of need and relief in his relations with the community at Philippi; he now develops his reflections on the larger scale of relations between his Gentile churches and the mother church in Jerusalem.

8:1-5 The example of the Macedonians, a model of what ought to be happening at Corinth, provides Paul with the occasion for expounding his theology of "giving."

8:1 The grace of God: the fundamental theme is expressed by the Greek noun charis, which will be variously translated throughout these chapters as "grace" (8:1; 9:8, 14), "favor" (8:4), "gracious act" (8:6, 7, 9) or "gracious work" (8:19), to be compared to "gracious gift" (1 Cor 16:3). The related term, eucharistia, "thanksgiving," also occurs at 2 Corinthians 9:11, 12. The wordplay is not superficial; various mutations of the same root signal inner connection between aspects of a single reality, and Paul consciously exploits the similarities in vocabulary to highlight that connection.

8:2 Three more terms are now introduced. Test (dokimē): the same root is translated as "to test" (8:8) and "evidence" (9:13); it means to be tried and found genuine. Abundance: variations on the same root lie behind "overflow" (8:2; 9:12), "excel" (8:7), "surplus" (8:14), "superfluous" (9:1) "make abundant" and "have an abundance" (9:8). These expressions of fullness contrast with references to need (8:14; 9:12). Generosity: the word haplotēs has nuances of both simplicity and sincerity; here and in 2 Corinthians 9:11, 13 it designates the singleness of purpose that manifests itself in generous giving.

8:3-4 Paul emphasizes the spontaneity of the Macedonians and the nature of their action. They begged us insistently: the same root is translated as “urge,” “appeal,” “encourage” (8:6, 17; 9:5). Taking part: the same word is translated “contribution” in 2 Corinthians 9:13 and a related term as “partner” in 2 Corinthians 8:23. Service (diakonia): this word occurs also in 2 Corinthians 9:1, 13 as “service”; in 2 Corinthians 9:12 it is translated “administration,” and in 2 Corinthians 8:19, 20 the corresponding verb is rendered “administer.”

8:5 They gave themselves … to the Lord and to us: on its deepest level their attitude is one of self-giving.

8:6 Titus: 1 Corinthians 16 seemed to leave the organization up to the Corinthians, but apparently Paul has sent Titus to initiate the collection as well; 2 Corinthians 8:16-17 will describe Titus’ attitude as one of shared concern and cooperation.

8:7 The charitable service Paul is promoting is seen briefly and in passing within the perspective of Paul’s theology of the charisms. Earnestness (spoudē): this or related terms occur also in 2 Corinthians 8:22 (“earnest”) and 2 Corinthians 8:8, 16, 17 (“concern”).

8:9 The dialectic of Jesus’ experience, expressed earlier in terms of life and death (5:15), sin and righteousness (5:21), is now rephrased in terms of poverty and wealth. Many scholars think this is a reference to Jesus’ preexistence with God (his “wealth”) and to his incarnation and death (his “poverty”), and they point to the similarity between this verse and Philippians 2:6-8. Others interpret the wealth and poverty as succeeding phases of Jesus’ earthly existence, e.g., his sense of intimacy with God and then the desolation and the feeling of abandonment by God in his death (cf. Mk 15:34).

8:11 Eager: the word prothymia also occurs in 2 Corinthians 8:12, 19; 9:2.

8:12-15 Paul introduces the principle of equality into the discussion. The goal is not impoverishment but sharing of resources; balance is achieved at least over the course of time. In 2 Corinthians 8:15 Paul grounds his argument unexpectedly in the experience of Israel gathering manna in the desert: equality was achieved, independently of personal exertion, by God, who gave with an even hand according to need. Paul touches briefly here on the theme of “living from God.”

8:16-24 In recommending Titus and his companions, Paul stresses their personal and apostolic qualities, their good dispositions toward the Corinthians, and their authority as messengers of the churches and representatives of Christ.

8:18 The brother: we do not know the identity of this co-worker of Paul, nor of the third companion mentioned below in 2 Corinthians 8:22.

8:20-22 That anyone blame us: 2 Corinthians 12:16-18 suggests that misunderstandings may indeed have arisen concerning Paul’s management of the collection through the messengers mentioned here, but those same verses seem to imply that the Corinthians by and large would recognize the honesty of Paul’s conduct in this area as in others (cf. 6:3).

8:24 As Paul began by holding up the Macedonians as examples to be imitated, he closes by exhorting the Corinthians to show their love (by accepting the envoys and by cooperating as the Macedonians do), thus justifying the pride Paul demonstrates because of them before other churches.

9:1-15 Quite possibly this was originally an independent letter, though it deals with the same subject and continues many of the same themes. In that case, it may have been written a few weeks later than 2 Corinthians 8, while the delegation there mentioned was still on its way.

9:2 Achaia: see the note on Romans 15:26.

9:3 I sent the brothers: the Greek aorist tense here could be epistolary, referring to the present; in that case Paul would be sending them now, and 2 Corinthians 9 would merely conclude the letter of recommendation begun in 2 Corinthians 8. But the aorist may also refer to a sending that is past as Paul writes; then 2 Corinthians 9, with its apparently fresh beginning, is a follow-up message entrusted to another carrier.

9:8-10 The behavior to which he exhorts them is grounded in God's own pattern of behavior. God is capable of overwhelming generosity, as scripture itself attests (9:9), so that they need not fear being short. He will provide in abundance, both supplying their natural needs and increasing their righteousness. Paul challenges them to godlike generosity and reminds them of the fundamental motive for encouragement: God himself cannot be outdone.

9:11-15 Paul's vision broadens to take in all the interested parties in one dynamic picture. His language becomes liturgically colored and conveys a sense of fullness. With a final play on the words charis and eucharistia (see the note on 8:1), he describes a circle that closes on itself: the movement of grace overflowing from God to them and handed on from them through Paul to others is completed by the prayer of praise and thanksgiving raised on their behalf to God.

10:1–13:10 These final chapters have their own unity of structure and theme and could well have formed the body of a separate letter. They constitute an apologia on Paul's part, i.e., a legal defense of his behavior and his ministry; the writing is emotionally charged and highly rhetorical. In the central section (11:16–12:10), the apologia takes the form of a boast. This section is prepared for by a prologue (11:1-15) and followed by an epilogue (12:11-18), which are similar in content and structure. These sections, in turn, are framed by an introduction (10:1-18) and a conclusion (12:19–13:10), both of which assert Paul's apostolic authority and confidence and define the purpose of the letter. The structure that results from this disposition of the material is chiastic, i.e., the first element corresponds to the last, the second to the second last, etc., following the pattern a b c b′ a′.

10:1-18 Paul asserts his apostolic authority and expresses the confidence this generates in him. He writes in response to certain opinions that have arisen in the community and certain charges raised against him and in preparation for a forthcoming visit in which he intends to set things in order. This section gives us an initial glimpse of the situation in Corinth that Paul must address; much of its thematic material will be taken up again in the finale (12:19–13:10).

10:1-2 A strong opening plunges us straight into the conflict. Contrasts dominate here: presence versus absence, gentleness-clemency-humility versus boldness-confidence-bravery. Through the gentleness and clemency of Christ: the figure of the gentle Christ, presented in a significant position before any specifics of the situation are suggested, forms a striking contrast to the picture of the bold and militant Paul (10:2-6); this tension is finally resolved in 2 Corinthians 13:3-4. Absent … present: this same contrast, with a restatement of the purpose of the letter, recurs in 2 Corinthians 13:10, which forms an inclusion with 2 Corinthians 10:1-2.

10:2b-4a Flesh: the Greek word sarx can express both the physical life of the body without any pejorative overtones (as in "we are in the flesh," 3) and our natural life insofar as it is marked by limitation and weakness (as in the other expressions) in contrast to the higher life and power conferred by the Spirit; cf. the note on 1 Corinthians 3:1. The wordplay is intended to express the paradoxical situation of a life already taken over by the Spirit but not yet seen as such except by faith. Lack of empirical evidence of the Spirit permits misunderstanding and misjudgment, but Paul resolutely denies that his behavior and effectiveness are as limited as some suppose.

10:3b-6 Paul is involved in combat. The strong military language and imagery are both an assertion of his confidence in the divine power at his disposal and a declaration of war against those who underestimate his resources. The threat is echoed in 2 Corinthians 13:2-3.

10:7-8 Belonging to Christ … so do we: these phrases already announce the pattern of Paul's boast in 2 Corinthians 11:21b-29, especially 2 Corinthians 11:22-23. For building you up and not for tearing you down: Paul draws on the language by which Jeremiah described the purpose of the prophetic power the Lord gave to him (Jer 1:9-10; 12:16-17; 24:6). Though Paul's power may have destructive effects on others (10:2-6), its intended effect on the community is entirely constructive (cf. 13:10). I shall not be put to shame: his assertions will not be refuted; they will be revealed as true at the judgment.

10:9-10 Paul cites the complaints of some who find him lacking in personal forcefulness and holds out the threat of a personal parousia (both "return" and "presence") that will be forceful, indeed will be a demonstration of Christ's own power (cf. 13:2-4).

10:12-18 Paul now qualifies his claim to boldness, indicating its limits. He distinguishes his own behavior from that of others, revealing those "others" as they appear to him: as self-recommending, immoderately boastful, encroaching on territory not assigned to them, and claiming credit not due to them.

10:13 Will keep to the limits: the notion of proper limits is expressed here by two terms with overlapping meanings, metron and kanōn, which are played off against several expressions denoting overreaching or expansion beyond a legitimate sphere.

10:17 Boast in the Lord: there is a legitimate boasting, in contrast to the immoderate boasting to which 2 Corinthians 10:13, 15 allude. God's work through Paul in the community is the object of his boast (10:13-16; 1:12-14) and constitutes his recommendation (3:1-3). Cf. notes on 2 Corinthians 1:12-14 and 1 Corinthians 1:29-31.

10:18 Approved: to be approved is to come successfully through the process of testing for authenticity (cf. 13:3-7 and the note on 8:2). Whom the Lord recommends: self-commendation is a premature and unwarranted anticipation of the final judgment, which the Lord alone will pass (cf. 1 Cor 4:3-5). Paul alludes to this judgment throughout 2 Corinthians 10–13, frequently in final or transitional positions; cf. 2 Corinthians 11:15; 12:19a; 13:3-7.

11:1-15 Although these verses continue to reveal information about Paul's opponents and the differences he perceives between them and himself, 2 Corinthians 11:1 signals a turn in Paul's thought. This section constitutes a prologue to the boasting that he will undertake in 2 Corinthians 11:16–12:10, and it bears remarkable similarities to the section that follows the central boast, 2 Corinthians 12:11-18.

11:1 Put up with a little foolishness from me: this verse indicates more clearly than the general statement of intent in 2 Corinthians 10:13 the nature of the project Paul is about to undertake. He alludes ironically to the Corinthians' toleration for others. Foolishness: Paul qualifies his project as folly from beginning to end; see the note on 2 Corinthians 11:16–12:10.

11:2 Paul gives us a sudden glimpse of the theological values that are at stake.

The jealousy of God: the perspective is that of the covenant, described in imagery of love and marriage, as in the prophets; cf. 1 Corinthians 10:22. I betrothed you: Paul, like a father (cf. 12:14), betroths the community to Christ as his bride (cf. Eph 5:21-33) and will present her to him at his second coming. Cf. Matthew 25:1-13 and the nuptial imagery in Revelation 21.

11:3 As the serpent deceived Eve: before Christ can return for the community Paul fears a repetition of the primal drama of seduction. Corruption of minds is satanic activity (see 2:11; 4:4). Satanic imagery recurs in 2 Corinthians 11:13-15, 20; 12:7b, 16-17; see notes on these passages.

11:4 Preaches another Jesus: the danger is specified, and Paul's opponents are identified with the cunning serpent. The battle for minds has to do with the understanding of Jesus, the Spirit, the gospel; the Corinthians have flirted with another understanding than the one that Paul handed on to them as traditional and normative.

11:5 These "superapostles": this term, employed again in 2 Corinthians 12:11b, designates the opponents of whom Paul has spoken in 2 Corinthians 10 and again in 2 Corinthians 11:4. They appear to be intruders at Corinth. Their preaching is marked at least by a different emphasis and style, and they do not hesitate to accept support from the community. Perhaps these itinerants appeal to the authority of church leaders in Jerusalem and even carry letters of recommendation from them. But it is not those distant leaders whom Paul is attacking here. The intruders are "superapostles" not in the sense of the "pillars" at Jerusalem (Gal 2), but in their own estimation. They consider themselves superior to Paul as apostles and ministers of Christ, and they are obviously enjoying some success among the Corinthians. Paul rejects their claim to be apostles in any superlative sense (hyperlian), judging them bluntly as "false apostles," ministers of Satan masquerading as apostles of Christ (11:13-15). On the contrary, he himself will claim to be a superminister of Christ (hyper egō, 11:23).

11:6 Apparently found deficient in both rhetorical ability (cf. 10:10) and knowledge (cf. 10:5), Paul concedes the former charge but not the latter. In every way: in all their contacts with him revelation has been taking place. Paul, through whom God reveals the knowledge of himself (2:14), and in whom the death and life of Jesus are revealed (4:10-11; cf. 6:4), also demonstrates his own role as the bearer of true knowledge. Cf. 1 Corinthians 1:18–2:16.

11:7-10 Abruptly Paul passes to another reason for complaints: his practice of preaching without remuneration (cf. 1 Cor 9:3-18). He deftly defends his practice by situating it from the start within the pattern of Christ's own self-humiliation (cf. 2 Cor 10:1) and reduces objections to absurdity by rhetorical questions (cf. 12:13).

11:11-12 Paul rejects lack of affection as his motive (possibly imputed to him by his opponents) and states his real motive, a desire to emphasize the disparity between himself and the others (cf. 11:19-21). The topic of his gratuitous service will be taken up once more in 2 Corinthians 12:13-18. 1 Corinthians 9:15-18 gives a different but complementary explanation of his motivation.

11:13-15 Paul picks up again the imagery of 2 Corinthians 11:3 and applies it to the opponents: they are false apostles of Christ, really serving another master. Deceitful … masquerade: deception and simulation, like cunning (11:3), are marks of the satanic. Angel of light: recalls the contrast between light and darkness, Christ and Beliar at 2 Corinthians 6:14-15. Ministers of righteousness: recalls the earlier contrast between the ministry of condemnation and that of righteousness (3:9). Their end: the section closes with another allusion to the judgment, when all participants in the final conflict will be revealed or unmasked and dealt with as they deserve.

11:16–12:10 Paul now accepts the challenge of his opponents and indulges in boasting similar to theirs, but with differences that he has already signaled in 2 Corinthians 10:12-18 and that become clearer as he proceeds. He defines the nature of his project and unmistakably labels it as folly at the beginning and the end (11:16-23; 12:11). Yet his boast does not spring from ignorance (11:21; 12:6) nor is it concerned merely with human distinctions (11:18). Paul boasts “in moderation” (10:13, 15) and “in the Lord” (10:17).

11:16-29 The first part of Paul’s boast focuses on labors and afflictions, in which authentic service of Christ consists.

11:16-21 These verses recapitulate remarks already made about the foolishness of boasting and the excessive toleration of the Corinthians. They form a prelude to the boast proper.

11:20 Paul describes the activities of the “others” in terms that fill out the picture drawn in vv. 3-4, 13-15. Much of the vocabulary suggests fleshly or even satanic activity. Enslaves: cf. Galatians 2:4. Devours: cf. 1 Peter 5:8. Gets the better: the verb lambanō means “to take,” but is used in a variety of senses; here it may imply financial advantage, as in the English colloquialism “to take someone.” It is similarly used at 2 Corinthians 12:16 and is there connected with cunning and deceit. Puts on airs: the same verb is rendered “raise oneself” (10:5) and “be too elated” (12:7).

11:21 Paul ironically concedes the charge of personal weakness from 2 Corinthians 10:1-18 but will refute the other charge there mentioned, that of lack of boldness, accepting the challenge to demonstrate it by his boast.

11:22 The opponents apparently pride themselves on their “Jewishness.” Paul, too, can claim to be a Jew by race, religion, and promise. Descendants of Abraham: elsewhere Paul distinguishes authentic from inauthentic heirs of Abraham and the promise (Rom 4:13-18; 9:7-13; 11:1; Gal 3:9, 27-29; cf. Jn 8:33-47). Here he grants his opponents this title in order to concentrate on the principal claim that follows.

11:23b-29 Service of the humiliated and crucified Christ is demonstrated by trials endured for him. This rhetorically impressive catalogue enumerates many of the labors and perils Paul encountered on his missionary journeys.

11:23a Ministers of Christ … I am still more: the central point of the boast (cf. the note on 11:5). Like an insane person: the climax of his folly.

11:30–12:10 The second part of Paul’s boast, marked by a change of style and a shift in focus. After recalling the project in which he is engaged, he states a new topic: his weaknesses as matter for boasting. Everything in this section, even the discussion of privileges and distinctions, will be integrated into this perspective.

11:31-32 The episode at Damascus is symbolic. It aptly illustrates Paul’s weakness but ends in deliverance (cf. 4:7-11).

12:1-4 In the body or out of the body: he seemed no longer confined to bodily conditions, but he does not claim to understand the mechanics of the experience. Caught up: i.e., in ecstasy. The third heaven … Paradise: ancient cosmologies depicted a multitiered universe. Jewish intertestamental literature contains much speculation about the number of heavens. Seven is the number usually mentioned, but the Testament of Levi (2:7-10; 3:1-4) speaks of three; God himself dwelt in the third of these. Without giving us any clear picture of the cosmos, Paul indicates a mental journey to a nonearthly space, set apart by God, in which secrets were revealed to him. Ineffable things: i.e., privileged knowledge, which it was not possible or permitted to divulge.

12:5-7 This person: the indirect way of referring to himself has the effect of emphasizing the distance between that experience and his everyday life, just as the indirect someone in Christ (12:2) and all the passive verbs emphasize his passivity and receptivity in the experience. The revelations were not a personal achievement, nor were they meant to draw attention to any quality of his own.

12:7 That I might not become too elated: God assures that there is a negative component to his experience, so that he cannot lose proper perspective; cf. 2 Corinthians 1:9; 4:7-11. A thorn in the flesh: variously interpreted as a sickness or physical disability, a temptation, or a handicap connected with his apostolic activity. But since Hebrew "thorn in the flesh," like English "thorn in my side," refers to persons (cf. Nm 33:55; Ez 28:24), Paul may be referring to some especially persistent and obnoxious opponent. The language of 2 Corinthians 12:7-8 permits this interpretation. If this is correct, the frequent appearance of singular pronouns in depicting the opposition may not be merely a stylistic variation; the singular may be provoked and accompanied by the image of one individual in whom criticism of Paul's preaching, way of life, and apostolic consciousness is concentrated, and who embodies all the qualities Paul attributes to the group. An angel of Satan: a personal messenger from Satan; cf. the satanic language already applied to the opponents in 2 Corinthians 11:3, 13-15, 20.

12:8 Three times: his prayer was insistent, like that of Jesus in Gethsemane, a sign of how intolerable he felt the thorn to be.

12:9 But he said to me: Paul's petition is denied; release and healing are withheld for a higher purpose. The Greek perfect tense indicates that Jesus' earlier response still holds at the time of writing. My grace is sufficient for you: this is not a statement about the sufficiency of grace in general. Jesus speaks directly to Paul's situation. Is made perfect: i.e., is given most fully and manifests itself fully.

12:9b-10a Paul draws the conclusion from the autobiographical anecdote and integrates it into the subject of this part of the boast. Weaknesses: the apostolic hardships he must endure, including active personal hostility, as specified in a final catalogue (12:10a). That the power of Christ may dwell with me: Paul pinpoints the ground for the paradoxical strategy he has adopted in his self-defense.

12:10 When I am weak, then I am strong: Paul recognizes a twofold pattern in the resolution of the weakness-power (and death-life) dialectic, each of which looks to Jesus as the model and is experienced in him. The first is personal, involving a reversal in oneself (Jesus, 13:4a; Paul, 1:9-10; 4:10-11; 6:9). The second is apostolic, involving an effect on others (Jesus, 5:14-15; Paul, 1:6; 4:12; 13:9). The specific kind of "effectiveness in ministry" that Paul promises to demonstrate on his arrival (13:4b; cf. 10:1-11) involves elements of both; this, too, will be modeled on Jesus' experience and a participation in that experience (9; 13:3b).

12:11-18 This brief section forms an epilogue or concluding observation to Paul's boast, corresponding to the prologue in 2 Corinthians 11:1-15. A four-step sequence of ideas is common to these two sections: Paul qualifies his boast as folly (11:1; 12:11a), asserts his noninferiority to the "superapostles" (11:5; 12:11b), exemplifies this by allusion to charismatic endowments (11:6; 12:12), and finally denies that he has been a financial burden to the community (11:7-12; 12:13-18).

12:12 Despite weakness and affliction (suggested by the mention of endurance), his ministry has been accompanied by demonstrations of power (cf. 1 Cor 2:3-4). Signs of an apostle: visible proof of belonging to Christ and of mediating Christ's power, which the opponents require as touchstones of apostleship (12:11; cf. 13:3).

12:13-18 Paul insists on his intention to continue refusing support from the community (cf. 11:8-12). In defending his practice and his motivation, he once more protests his love (cf. 11:11) and rejects the suggestion of secret self-enrichment. He has recourse here again to language applied to his opponents earlier: “cunning” (11:3), “deceit” (11:13), “got the better of you” (see the note on 11:20), “take advantage” (2:11).

12:19–13:10 This concludes the development begun in 2 Corinthians 10. In the chiastic arrangement of the material (see the note on 10:1–13:10), this final part corresponds to the opening; there are important similarities of content between the two sections as well.

12:19 This verse looks back at the previous chapters and calls them by their proper name, a defense, an apologia (cf. 1 Cor 9:3). Yet Paul insists on an important distinction: he has indeed been speaking for their benefit, but the ultimate judgment to which he submits is God’s (cf. 1 Cor 4:3-5). This verse also leads into the final section, announcing two of its themes: judgment and building up.

12:20 I fear that …: earlier Paul expressed fear that the Corinthians were being victimized, exploited, seduced from right thinking by his opponents (11:3-4, 19-21). Here he alludes unexpectedly to moral disorders among the Corinthians themselves. The catalogue suggests the effects of factions that have grown up around rival apostles.

12:21 Again: one can also translate, “I fear that when I come my God may again humiliate me.” Paul’s allusion to the humiliation and mourning that may await him recall the mood he described in 2 Corinthians 2:1-4, but there is no reference here to any individual such as there is in 2 Corinthians 2:5-11. The crisis of 2 Corinthians 2 has happily been resolved by integration of the offender and repentance (7:4-16), whereas 2 Corinthians 12:21 is preoccupied with still unrepentant sinners. The sexual sins recall 1 Corinthians 5–7.

13:1 This third time I am coming: designation of the forthcoming visit as the “third” (cf. 12:14) may indicate that, in addition to his founding sojourn in Corinth, Paul had already made the first of two visits mentioned as planned in 2 Corinthians 1:15, and the next visit will be the long-postponed second of these. If so, the materials in 2 Corinthians 1:12–2:13 plus 2 Corinthians 7:4-16 and 2 Corinthians 10–13 may date from the same period of time, presumably of some duration, between Paul’s second and third visit, though it is not clear that they are addressing the same crisis. The chronology is too unsure and the relations between sections of 2 Corinthians too unclear to yield any certainty. The hypothesis that 2 Corinthians 10–13 are themselves the “tearful letter” mentioned at 2 Corinthians 2:3-4 creates more problems than it solves.

13:2 I warned those who sinned earlier: mention of unrepentant sinners (12:21 and here) and of an oral admonition given them on an earlier visit complicates the picture at the very end of Paul’s development. It provides, in fact, a second explanation for the show of power that has been threatened from the beginning (10:1-6), but a different reason for it, quite unsuspected until now. It is not clear whether Paul is merely alluding to a dimension of the situation that he has not previously had occasion to mention, or whether some other community crisis, not directly connected with that behind 2 Corinthians 10–13, has influenced the final editing. I will not be lenient: contrast Paul’s hesitation and reluctance to inflict pain in 2 Corinthians 1:23 and 2 Corinthians 2:1-4. The next visit will bring the showdown.

13:3-4 Paul now gives another motive for severity when he comes, the charge of weakness leveled against him as an apostle. The motive echoes more closely the opening section (10:1-18) and the intervening development (especially 11:30–12:10). Proof of Christ speaking in me: the threat of 2 Corinthians 10:1-2 is reworded to recall Paul’s conformity with the pattern of Christ, his insertion into the interplay of death and life, weakness and power (cf. the note on 12:10b).

13:5-9 Paul turns the challenge mentioned in 2 Corinthians 13:3 on them: they are to put themselves to the test to demonstrate whether Christ is in them. These verses involve a complicated series of plays on the theme of dokimē (testing, proof, passing and failing a test). Behind this stands the familiar distinction between present human judgment and final divine judgment. This is the final appearance of the theme (cf. 10:18; 11:15; 12:19).

13:10 Authority … to build up and not to tear down: Paul restates the purpose of his letter in language that echoes 2 Corinthians 10:2, 8, emphasizing the positive purpose of his authority in their regard. This verse forms an inclusion with the topic sentence of the section (12:19), as well as with the opening of this entire portion of the letter (10:1-2).

13:11-13 These verses may have originally concluded 2 Corinthians 10–13, but they have nothing specifically to do with the material of that section. It is also possible to consider them a conclusion to the whole of 2 Corinthians in its present edited form. The exhortations are general, including a final appeal for peace in the community. The letter ends calmly, after its many storms, with the prospect of ecclesial unity and divine blessing. The final verse is one of the clearest trinitarian passages in the New Testament.

The Letter to the Galatians

The Galatians to whom the letter is addressed were Paul’s converts, most likely among the descendants of Celts who had invaded western and central Asia Minor in the third century B.C. and had settled in the territory around Ancyra (modern Ankara, Turkey). Paul had passed through this area on his second missionary journey (Acts 16:6) and again on his third (Acts 18:23). It is less likely that the recipients of this letter were Paul’s churches in the southern regions of Pisidia, Lycaonia, and Pamphylia where he had preached earlier in the Hellenized cities of Perge, Iconium, Pisidian Antioch, Lystra, and Derbe (Acts 13:13–14:27); this area was part of the Roman province of Galatia, and some scholars think that South Galatia was the destination of this letter.

If it is addressed to the Galatians in the north, the letter was probably written around A.D. 54 or 55, most likely from Ephesus after Paul’s arrival there for a stay of several years on his third missionary journey (Acts 19; 20:31). On the South Galatian theory, the date would be earlier, perhaps A.D. 48–50. Involved is the question of how one relates the events of Galatians 2:1-10 to the “Council of Jerusalem” described in Acts 15 (see the notes on each passage).

In any case, the new Christians whom Paul is addressing were converts from paganism (4:8-9) who were now being enticed by other missionaries to add the observances of the Jewish law, including the rite of circumcision, to the cross of Christ as a means of salvation. For, since Paul’s visit, some other interpretation of Christianity had been brought to these neophytes, probably by converts from Judaism (the name “Judaizers” is sometimes applied to them); it has specifically been suggested that they were Jewish Christians who had come from the austere Essene sect.

SUMMARY

Galatians, which is thematically related to Romans, addresses Paul’s understanding of Christian freedom and justification by faith. It insists strongly on the need to remain faithful to "the truth of the gospel," that is, that Christ has totally transformed creation and achieved salvation by his sacrifice of the cross.

Author: Paul, with "all the brothers" listed as co-senders (1:1-2).

Date: Either ca. A.D. 54–55 from Ephesus, or perhaps ca. A.D. 48–50.

Content: Reprimand of the Galatians for deserting the Gospel; Paul's personal commitment to proclaim the Gospel to the Gentiles; the meaning of justification by faith and Christian freedom; the contrast between life in the flesh and life in the Spirit.

These interlopers insisted on the necessity of following certain precepts of the Mosaic law along with faith in Christ. They were undermining Paul's authority also, asserting that he had not been trained by Jesus himself, that his gospel did not agree with that of the original and true apostles in Jerusalem, that he had kept from his converts in Galatia the necessity of accepting circumcision and other key obligations of the Jewish law, in order more easily to win them to Christ, and that his gospel was thus not the full and authentic one held by "those of repute" in Jerusalem (2:2). Some scholars also see in Galatians 5; 6 another set of opponents against whom Paul writes, people who in their emphasis on the Spirit set aside all norms for conduct and became libertines in practice.

When Paul learned of the situation, he wrote this defense of his apostolic authority and of the correct understanding of the faith. He set forth the unique importance of Christ and his redemptive sacrifice on the cross, the freedom that Christians enjoy from the old burdens of the law, the total sufficiency of Christ and of faith in Christ as the way to God and to eternal life, and the beauty of the new life of the Spirit. Galatians is thus a summary of basic Pauline theology. Its themes were more fully and less polemically developed in the Letter to the Romans.

Autobiographically, the letter gives us Paul's own accounts of how he came to faith (1:15-24), the agreement in "the truth of the gospel" (2:5, 14) that he shared with the Jewish Christian leaders in Jerusalem, James, Cephas, and John (2:1-10), and the rebuke he had to deliver to Cephas in Antioch for inconsistency, contrary to the gospel, on the issue of table fellowship in the racially mixed church of Jewish and Gentile Christians in Antioch (2:11-14; cf. 2:15-21). At the conclusion of the letter (6:11-18), Paul wrote in his own hand (cf. 2 Thes 3:17-18) a vivid summary of the message to the Galatians.

In his vigorous emphasis on the absolute preeminence of Christ and his cross as God's way to salvation and holiness, Paul stresses Christian freedom and the ineffectiveness of the Mosaic law for gaining divine favor and blessings (3:19-29). The pious Jew saw in the law a way established by God to win divine approval by a life of meticulous observance of ritual, social, and moral regulations. But Paul's profound insight into the higher designs of God in Christ led him to understand and welcome the priority of promise and faith (shown in the experience of Abraham, 3:6-18) and the supernatural gifts of the Spirit (3:2-5; 5:16–6:10). His enthusiasm for this new vision of the life of grace in Christ and of the uniquely salvific role of Christ's redemptive death on the cross shines through this whole letter.

The principal divisions of the Letter to the Galatians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-5)
II. Loyalty to the Gospel (1:6-10)
III. Paul's Defense of His Gospel and His Authority (1:11–2:21)
IV. Faith and Liberty (3:1–4:31)
V. Exhortation to Christian Living (5:1–6:10)
VI. Conclusion (6:11-18)

When Paul speaks of a revelation (Greek, apokalypsis, “unveiling”) as the source of his call by Jesus Christ, he gives no specific details, unlike his call-conversion as described in Acts 9:1-8. The word points to a transcendent experience of the risen Lord that is just as valid, in Paul’s mind, as Jesus’ call of the disciples during his earthly ministry.

John,* who were reputed to be pillars, gave me and Barnabas their right hands in partnership, that we should go to the Gentiles and they to the circumcised.[h] 10 Only, we were to be mindful of the poor,* which is the very thing I was eager to do.[i]

[18]But if I am building up again those things that I tore down, then I show myself to be a transgressor.* [19]For through the law I died to the law,* that I might live for God. I have been crucified with Christ;[o] [20]yet I live, no longer I, but Christ lives in me; insofar as I now live in the flesh, I live by faith in the Son of God who has loved me and given himself up for me.[p] [21]I do not nullify the grace of God; for if justification comes through the law, then Christ died for nothing.[q]

Getting It Right … Faith and Good Works

Throughout history Paul's teaching on the relationship between justification by faith and good works has often been misunderstood. It lies at the heart of the Protestant Reformation. "Protestant" Paul is often mistakenly contrasted with "Catholic" James (2:14-22) in the supposed opposition between doing good works to earn salvation or receiving salvation as a free gift of God, requiring no further obligation. Whatever Paul means by "works of the law" (v. 15) he acknowledges that the "law" of love requires leading an ethically upright life (5:22-23). In October 1999, Roman Catholics and most Lutheran churches reached an accord that breached this false dichotomy and restored a more authentic understanding of Paul's teaching. For both Paul and James, good works are actually a natural outgrowth of the faith that has been bestowed upon us in Jesus Christ. When we are "justified" and confess Jesus as Lord and Savior, we also put into action this faith by our living out of the Gospel message.

When you enter into the life of Christ so intimately as to feel what he is feeling, you will know what it means to be crucified with Christ. This means, of course, that you are also willing to enter into the lives of those who belong to Christ and walk with them through their crosses. Only after we have done this will we be able to say, yet I live, no longer I, but Christ lives in me (2:20).

23Before faith came, we were held in custody under law, confined for the faith that was to be revealed.[v] 24Consequently, the law was our disciplinarian* for Christ, that we might be justified by faith.[w] 25But now that faith has come, we are no longer under a disciplinarian.[x] 26For through faith you are all children of God* in Christ Jesus.[y] 27*For all of you who were baptized into Christ[z] have clothed yourselves with Christ.* 28There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free person, there is not male and female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus.[a] 29And if you belong to Christ, then you are Abraham’s descendant, heirs according to the promise.[b]

It is our faith in Christ that draws us together as one. Now that Christ has clothed us with himself, let us put aside all those things that once separated us. 4 [1]I mean that as long as the heir is not of age,* he is no different from a slave, although he is the owner of everything, [2]but he is under the supervision of guardians and administrators until the date set by his father. [3][a]In the same way we also, when we were not of age, were enslaved to the elemental powers of the world.* [4]But when the fullness of time had come, God sent his Son, born of a woman, born under the law,[b] [5]to ransom those under the law, so that we might receive adoption.[c] [6]As proof that you are children,* God sent the spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying out, “Abba, Father!”[d] [7]So you are no longer a slave but a child, and if a child then also an heir, through God.[e]

The notion of adoption has its roots in the OT. God’s relationship with Israel is said to be one of adoption: God makes Israel his special son and thereby establishes a covenantal relationship (Hos 11:1; Ex 4:22; Jer 3:19). God does the same with the king (2 Sm 7:14). This relationship is not earned nor is it “natural,” as in the case of a blood child. Rather, it is rooted in God’s beneficence. Now, in Jesus, God’s only begotten Son, we are given a share through baptism in his special relationship with his heavenly Father. This makes us adopted sons and daughters of God. See adoption at Rom 8:15 for more information.

[15]Where now is that blessedness of yours?* Indeed, I can testify to you that, if it had been possible, you would have torn out your eyes and given them to me. [16]So now have I become your enemy by telling you the truth? [17]They show interest in you, but not in a good way; they want to isolate you,* so that you may show interest in them.[j] [18]Now it is good to be shown interest for good reason at all times, and not only when I am with you. In Galatians 4–5 Paul contrasts the notions of slavery and freedom as a natural consequence of the salvific actions of Jesus Christ. Paradoxically, those who voluntarily make themselves “slaves” of Christ experience the greatest freedom of all (1 Cor 7:22). Observe the contrast outlined below:

Slavery	Freedom
To the Law (Torah)	To live for Jesus Christ
To circumcision, the mark of identity	To live the law of love, a new identity
Symbolized by Hagar, the slave woman and Ishmael, her offspring, a “child of the flesh”	Symbolized by Sarah, the free woman, and Isaac, her offspring, a “child of the spirit”
Natural “heir”	Adopted “heirs”
Tied to the earthly Jerusalem	Tied to the Jerusalem “above”
Sealed in the covenant on Sinai	Sealed in the “new covenant” in Christ
Leads to sin	Leads to all the effects of salvation
Leads to death	Leads to eternal life

When we experience the kind of freedom that Christ has called us into, then we will understand the mystery of love. We are invited into this freedom to know the joy of loving and serving one another in Christ.

[16][l]I say, then: live by the Spirit and you will certainly not gratify the desire of the flesh.* [17]For the flesh has desires against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh; these are opposed to each other, so that you may not do what you want.[m] [18]But if you are guided by the Spirit, you are not under the law.[n] [19]Now the works of the flesh are obvious: immorality, impurity, licentiousness,[o] [20]idolatry, sorcery, hatreds, rivalry, jealousy, outbursts of fury, acts of selfishness, dissensions, factions,[p] [21]occasions of envy, drinking bouts, orgies, and the like. I warn you, as I warned you before, that those who do such things will not inherit the kingdom of God. [22]In contrast, the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, generosity, faithfulness,[q] [23]gentleness, self-control. Against such there is no law.[r] [24]Now those who belong to Christ [Jesus] have crucified their flesh with its passions and desires.[s] [25]If we live in the Spirit, let us also follow the Spirit.[t] [26]Let us not be conceited, provoking one another, envious of one another.[u]

John Paul II links love with justice: “Love for others, and in the first place love for the poor, in whom the church sees Christ himself, is made concrete in the promotion of justice. Justice will never be fully attained unless people see in the poor person, who is asking for help in order to survive, not an annoyance or a burden, but an opportunity for showing kindness and a chance for greater enrichment” (CA 58).

18The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit, brothers. Amen.o

1:1-5 See the note on Romans 1:1-7, concerning the greeting.

1:1 Apostle: because of attacks on his authority in Galatia, Paul defends his apostleship. He is not an apostle commissioned by a congregation (Phil 2:25; 2 Cor 8:23) or even by prophets (1 Tm 1:18; 4:14) but through Jesus Christ and God the Father.

1:2 All the brothers: fellow believers in Christ, male and female; cf. Galatians 3:27-28. Paul usually mentions the co-sender(s) at the start of a letter, but the use of all is unique, adding weight to the letter. Galatia: central Turkey more likely than the Roman province of Galatia; see Introduction.

1:4 The greeting in v. 3 is expanded by a christological formula that stresses deliverance through the Lord Jesus from a world dominated by Satan; cf. 2 Corinthians 4:4; Ephesians 2:2; 6:12.

1:6-10 In place of the usual thanksgiving (see the note on Rom 1:8), Paul, with little to be thankful for in the Galatian situation, expresses amazement at the way his converts are deserting the gospel of Christ for a perverted message. He reasserts the one gospel he has preached (1:7-9) and begins to defend himself (1:10).

1:6 The one who called you: God or Christ, though in actuality Paul was the divine instrument to call the Galatians.

1:8 Accursed: in Greek, anathema; cf. Romans 9:3; 1 Corinthians 12:3; 16:22.

1:10 This charge by Paul's opponents, that he sought to conciliate people with flattery and to curry favor with God, might refer to his mission practices (cf. 1 Cor 9:19-23) but the word still suggests it refers to his pre-Christian days (cf. 1:14; Phil 3:6). The self-description slave of Christ is one Paul often uses in a greeting (Rom 1:1).

1:11–2:21 Paul's presentation on behalf of his message and of his apostleship reflects rhetorical forms of his day: he first narrates the facts about certain past events (1:12–2:14) and then states his contention regarding justification by faith as the gospel message (2:15-21). Further arguments follow from both experience and scripture in Galatians 3; 4 before he draws out the ethical consequences (5:1–6:10). The specific facts that he takes up here to show that his gospel is not a human invention (1:11) but came through a revelation of Jesus Christ (1:12) deal with his own calling as a Christian missionary (1:13-17), his initial relations with the apostles in Jerusalem (1:18-24), a later journey to Jerusalem (2:1-10), and an incident in Antioch involving Cephas and persons from James (2:11-14). The content of Paul's revealed gospel is then set forth in the heart of the letter (2:15-21).

1:12 Although Paul received his gospel through a revelation from Christ, this did not exclude his use of early Christian confessional formulations. See note on Galatians 1:4.

1:13-17 Along with Philippians 3:4-11, which also moves from autobiography to its climax in a discussion on justification by faith (cf. 2:15-21), this passage is Paul's chief account of the change from his former way of life (1:13) to service as a Christian missionary (1:16); cf. Acts 9:1-22; 22:4-16; 26:9-18. Paul himself does not use the term "conversion" but stresses revelation (1:12, 16). In Galatians 1:15 his language echoes the Old Testament prophetic call of Jeremiah. Unlike the account in Acts (cf. Acts 22:4-16), the calling of Paul here includes the mission to proclaim Christ to the Gentiles (1:16).

1:16 Flesh and blood: human authorities (cf. Mt 16:17; 1 Cor 15:50). Paul's apostleship comes from God (1:1).

1:17 Arabia: probably the region of the Nabataean Arabs, east and south of Damascus.

1:18-24 Paul's first journey to Jerusalem as a Christian, according to Galatians (cf. Acts 9:23-31 and the note on Acts 12:25). He is quite explicit about contacts there, testifying under oath (1:20). On returning to Syria (perhaps specifically Damascus, cf. 1:17) and Cilicia (including his home town Tarsus, cf. Acts 9:30; 22:3), Paul most likely engaged in missionary work. He underscores the fact that Christians in Judea knew of him only by reputation.

1:18 After three years: two years and more, since Paul's call. To confer with Cephas may mean simply "pay a visit" or more specifically "get information from" him about Jesus, over a two-week period. Cephas: Aramaic name of Simon (Peter); cf. Matthew 16:16-18 and the notes there.

1:19 James the brother of the Lord: not one of the Twelve, but a brother of Jesus (see note on Mk 6:3). He played an important role in the Jerusalem church (see note on 2:9), the leadership of which he took over from Peter (Acts 12:17). Paul may have regarded James as an apostle.

2:1-10 Paul's second journey to Jerusalem, according to Galatians, involved a private meeting with those of repute (2:2). At issue was a Gentile, Titus, and the question of circumcision, which false brothers (2:4) evidently demanded for him. Paul insists that the gospel he preaches (2:2; cf. 1:9, 11) remained intact with no addition by those of repute (2:6); that Titus was not compelled to accept circumcision (2:3); and that he and the reputed pillars in Jerusalem agreed on how each would advance the missionary task (1:7-10). Usually, Galatians 1:1-10 is equated with the "Council of Jerusalem," as it is called, described in Acts 15. See the notes on Acts 15:6-12, 13-35, the latter concerning the "decree" that Paul does not mention.

2:1 After fourteen years: thirteen or more years, probably reckoned from the return to Syria and Cilicia (1:21), though possibly from Paul's calling as a Christian (1:15). Barnabas: cf. Galatians 2:9, 13; 1 Corinthians 9:6. A Jewish Christian missionary, with whom Paul worked (Acts 4:36-37; 11:22, 25, 30; 12:25; 13:1-3; 15:2). Titus: a missionary companion of Paul (2 Cor 2:13; 7:6, 13-15; 8:6, 16, 23; 12:18), non-Jewish (Gal 2:3), never mentioned in Acts.

2:2 A revelation: cf. Galatians 1:1, 12. Paul emphasizes it was God's will, not Jerusalem authority, that led to the journey. Acts 15:2 states that the church in Antioch appointed Paul and Barnabas for the task. Those of repute: leaders of the Jerusalem church; the term, while positive, may be slightly ironic (cf. 1:6, 9). Run, in vain: while Paul presents a positive picture in what follows, his missionary work in Galatia would have been to no purpose if his opponents were correct that circumcision is needed for complete faith in Christ.

2:3 Not even a Gentile Christian like Titus was compelled to receive the rite of circumcision. The Greek text could be interpreted that he voluntarily accepted circumcision, but this is unlikely in the overall argument.

2:4 False brothers: Jewish Christians who took the position that Gentile Christians must first become Jews through circumcision and observance of the Mosaic law in order to become Christians; cf. Acts 15:1.

2:5 The truth of the gospel: the true gospel, in contrast to the false one of the opponents (1:6-9); the gospel of grace, used as a norm (2:14).

2:7-9 Some think that actual "minutes" of the meeting are here quoted. Paul's apostleship to the Gentiles (1:16) is recognized alongside that of Peter to the Jews. Moreover, the right to proclaim the gospel without requiring circumcision and the Jewish law is sealed by a handshake. That Paul and colleagues should go to the Gentiles did not exclude his preaching to the Jews as well (Rom 1:13-16) or Cephas to Gentile areas.

2:9 James and Cephas and John: see the notes on Galatians 1:18, 19; on Peter and John as leaders in the Jerusalem church, cf. Acts 3:1 and Acts 8:14. The order here, with James first, may reflect his prominence in Jerusalem after Peter (Cephas) departed (Acts 12:17).

2:10 The poor: Jerusalem Christians or a group within the church there (cf. Rom 15:26). The collection for them was extremely important in Paul's thought and labor (cf. Rom 15:25-28; 1 Cor 16:1-4; 2 Cor 8–9).

2:11-14 The decision reached in Jerusalem (2:3-7) recognized the freedom of Gentile Christians from the Jewish law. But the problem of table fellowship between Jewish Christians, who possibly still kept kosher food regulations, and Gentile believers was not yet settled. When Cephas first came to the racially mixed community of Jewish and Gentile Christians in Antioch (2:12), he ate with non-Jews. Pressure from persons arriving later from Jerusalem caused him and Barnabas to draw back. Paul therefore publicly rebuked Peter's inconsistency toward the gospel (2:14). Some think that what Paul said on that occasion extends through Galatians 2:16, 21.

2:11 Clearly was wrong: literally, "stood condemned," by himself and also by Paul. His action in breaking table fellowship was especially grievous if the eating involved the meal at the Lord's supper (cf. 1 Cor 11:17-25).

2:12 Some people came from James: strict Jewish Christians (cf. Acts 15:1, 5; 21:20-21), either sent by James (1:19; 2:9) or claiming to be from the leader of the Jerusalem church. The circumcised: presumably Jewish Christians, not Jews.

2:13 The Jews: Jewish Christians, like Barnabas. Hypocrisy: literally, "pretense," "play-acting"; moral insincerity.

2:14 Compel the Gentiles to live like Jews: that is, conform to Jewish practices, such as circumcision (2:3-5) or regulations about food (2:12).

2:15-21 Following on the series of incidents cited above, Paul's argument, whether spoken to Cephas at Antioch or only now articulated, is pertinent to the Galatian situation, where believers were having themselves circumcised (6:12-13) and obeying other aspects of Jewish law (4:9-10; 5:1-4). He insists that salvation is by faith in Christ, not by works of the law. His teaching on the gospel concerns justification by faith (2:16) in relation to sin (2:17), law (2:19), life in Christ (2:19-20), and grace (2:21).

2:16 No one will be justified: Psalm 143:2 is reflected.

2:17 A minister of sin: literally, "a servant of sin" (cf. Rom 15:8), an agent of sin, one who promotes it. This is possibly a claim by opponents that justification on the basis of faith in Christ makes Christ an abettor of sin when Christians are found to be sinners. Paul denies the conclusion (cf. Rom 6:1-4).

2:18 To return to observance of the law as the means to salvation would entangle one not only in inevitable transgressions of it but also in the admission that it was wrong to have abandoned the law in the first place.

2:19 Through the law I died to the law: this is variously explained: the law revealed sin (Rom 7:7-9) and led to death and then to belief in Christ; or, the law itself brought the insight that law cannot justify (2:16; Ps 143:2); or, the "law of Christ" (6:2) led to abandoning the Mosaic law; or, the law put Christ to death (cf. 3:13) and so provided a way to our salvation, through baptism into Christ, through which we die (crucified with Christ; see Rom 6:6). Cf. also Galatians 3:19-25 on the role of the law in reference to salvation.

3:1-14 Paul's contention that justification comes not through the law or the works of the law but by faith in Christ and in his death (2:16, 21) is supported by appeals to Christian experience (3:1-5) and to scripture (3:6-14). The gift of God's Spirit to the Galatians came from the gospel received in faith, not from doing what the law enjoins. The story of Abraham shows that faith in God brings righteousness (3:6; Gn 15:6). The promise to Abraham (3:8; Gn 12:3) extends to the Gentiles (3:14).

3:1 Stupid: not just senseless, for they were in danger of deserting their salvation.

3:2 Faith in what you heard: Paul's message received with faith. The Greek can also mean "the proclamation of the faith" or "a hearing that comes from faith."

3:3 On the contrast of Spirit and flesh, cf. Romans 8:1-11. Having received the Spirit, they need not be circumcised now.

3:4 Experience so many things: probably the mighty deeds of Galatians 1:5 but possibly the experience of sufferings.

3:6 Abraham … righteousness: see Genesis 15:6; Romans 4:3. The Galatians like Abraham heard with faith and experienced justification. This first argument forms the basis for the further scriptural evidence that follows.

3:7-9 Faith is what matters, for Abraham and the children of Abraham, in contrast to the claims of the opponents that circumcision and observance of the law are needed to bring the promised blessing of Genesis 12:3; cf. Genesis 18:18; Sirach 44:21; Acts 3:25.

3:10-14 Those who depend not on promise and faith but on works of the law are under a curse because they do not persevere in doing all the things written in the book of the law (3:10; Dt 27:26) in order to gain life (3:12; Lv 18:5; cf. Rom 10:5). But scripture teaches that no one is justified before God by the law (3:11; Heb 2:4, adapted from the Greek version of Habakkuk; cf. Rom 1:17; Heb 10:38). Salvation, then, depends on faith in Christ who died on the cross (3:13), taking upon himself a curse found in Deuteronomy 21:23 (about executed criminals hanged in public view), to free us from the curse of the law (3:13). That the Gentile Galatians have received the promised Spirit (Gal 3:14), by faith and in no other way returns the argument to the experience cited in Galatians 3:1-5.

3:15-18 A third argument to support Paul's position that salvation is not through the law but by promise (3:1-14) comes from legal practice and scriptural history. A legal agreement or human will, duly ratified, is unalterable (3:15). God's covenant with Abraham and its repeated promises (Gn 12:2-3, 7; 13:15; 17:7-8; 22:16-18; 24:7) is not superseded by the law, which came much later, in the time of Moses. The inheritance (of the Spirit and the blessings) is by promise, not by law (3:18). Paul's argument hinges on the fact that the same Greek word, diathēkē, can be rendered as will or testament (3:15) and as covenant (3:17).

3:16 Descendant: literally, "and to his seed." The Hebrew, as in Genesis 12:7; 15:18; 22:17-18, is a collective singular, traditionally rendered as a plural, descendants, but taken by Paul in its literal number to refer to Christ as descendant of Abraham.

3:17 Four hundred and thirty years afterward: follows Exodus 12:40 in the Greek (Septuagint) version, in contrast to Genesis 15:13 and Acts 7:6, for chronology.

3:18 This refutes the opponents' contention that the promises of God are fulfilled only as a reward for human observance of the law.

3:19-22 A digression: if the Mosaic law, then, does not save or bring life, why was it given? Elsewhere, Paul says the law served to show what sin is (Rom 3:20; 7:7-8). Here the further implication is that the law in effect served to produce transgressions. Moreover, it was received at second hand by angels, through a mediator, not directly from God (3:19). The law does not, however, oppose God's purposes, for it carries out its function (3:22), so that righteousness comes by faith and promise, not by human works of the law.

3:19 The descendant: Christ (3:16). By angels: Deuteronomy 33:2-4 stressed their presence as enhancing the importance of the law; Paul uses their role to diminish its significance (cf. Acts 7:38, 53). A mediator: Moses. But in a covenant of promise, where all depends on the one God, no mediator is needed (3:20).

3:23-29 Paul adds a further argument in support of righteousness or justification by faith and through God's promise rather than by works of the law (2:16; 3:22): as children of God, baptized into Christ, the Galatians are all Abraham's descendant and heirs of the promise to Abraham (3:8, 14, 16-18, 29). The teaching in Galatians 3:23-25, that since faith (Christianity) has come, we are no longer under the law, could be taken with the previous paragraph on the role of the Mosaic law, but it also fits here as a contrast between the situation before faith (3:23) and the results after faith has come (3:25-29).

3:24-25 Disciplinarian: the Greek paidagōgos referred to a slave who escorted a child to school but did not teach or tutor; hence, a guardian or monitor. Applying this to the law fits the role of the law described in Galatians 3:19-25.

3:26 Children of God: literally, "sons," in contrast to the young child under the disciplinarian in Galatians 3:24-25. The term includes males and females (3:28).

3:27-28 Likely a formula used at baptism that expresses racial, social-economic, and sexual equality in Christ (cf. Col 3:11).

3:27 Clothed yourselves with Christ: literally, "have put on Christ"; cf. Romans 13:14; Ephesians 4:24; Colossians 3:10. Baptismal imagery, traceable to the Old Testament (Jb 29:14; Is 59:17) but also found in pagan mystery cults.

4:1-7 What Paul has argued in Galatians 3:26-29 is now elaborated in terms of the Christian as the heir (4:1, 7; cf. 3:18, 29) freed from control by others. Again, as in Galatians 3:2-5, the proof that Christians are children of God is the gift of the Spirit of Christ relating them intimately to God.

4:1, 3 Not of age: an infant or minor.

4:3 The elemental powers of the world: while the term can refer to the "elements" like earth, air, fire, and water or to elementary forms of religion, the sense here is more likely that of celestial beings that were thought in pagan circles to control the world; cf. Galatians 4:8; Colossians 2:8, 20.

4:6 Children: see the note on Galatians 3:26; here in contrast to the infant or young person not of age (3:1, 3). Abba: cf. Mark 14:36 and the note; Romans 8:15.

4:8-11 On the basis of the arguments advanced from Galatians 3:1 through Galatians 4:7, Paul now launches his appeal to the Galatians with the question, how can you turn back to the slavery of the law (4:9)? The question is posed with reference to bondage to the elemental powers (see the note on 4:3) because the Galatians had originally been converted to Christianity from paganism, not Judaism (4:8). The use of the direct question is like Galatians 3:3-5.

4:8 Things that by nature are not gods: or “gods that by nature do not exist.”

4:10 This is likely a reference to ritual observances from the Old Testament, promoted by opponents: sabbaths or Yom Kippur, new moon, Passover or Pentecost, sabbatical years.

4:11 Cf. Galatians 2:2. If the Galatians become slaves … all over again to the law (4:9), Paul will have worked in vain among them.

4:12-20 A strongly personal section. Paul appeals to past ties between the Galatians and himself. He speaks sharply of the opponents (4:17-18) and pastorally to the Galatians (4:19-20).

4:12 Because I have also become as you are: a terse phrase in Greek, meaning “Be as I, Paul, am,” i.e., living by faith, independent of the law, for, in spite of my background in Judaism (1:13), I have become as you Galatians are now, a brother in Christ.

4:13 Physical illness: because its nature is not described, some assume an eye disease (4:15); others, epilepsy; some relate it to 2 Corinthians 12:7-9. Originally: this may also be translated “formerly” or “on the first (of two) visit(s)”; cf. Acts 16:6; 18:23.

4:15 That blessedness of yours: possibly a reference to the Galatians’ initial happy reception of Paul (4:14) and of his gospel (1:6; 3:1-4) and their felicitation at such blessedness, but the phrase could also refer ironically to earlier praise by Paul of the Galatians, no longer possible when they turn from the gospel to the claims of the opponents (4:17-18; 1:7). If the word is a more literal reference to a beatitude, Galatians 3:26-28 may be in view.

4:17 Isolate you: that is, from the blessings of the gospel and/or from Paul.

4:21-31 Paul supports his appeal for the gospel (4:9; 1:6-9; 2:16; 3:2) by a further argument from scripture (cf. 3:6-18). It involves the relationship of Abraham (3:6-16) to his wife, Sarah, the freeborn woman, and to Hagar, the slave woman, and the contrast between the sons born to each, Isaac, child of promise, and Ishmael, son of Hagar (Gn 16; 21). Only through Isaac is the promise of God preserved. This allegory (4:24), with its equation of the Sinai covenant and Mosaic law with slavery and of the promise of God with freedom, Paul uses only in light of previous arguments. His quotation of Genesis 21:10 at Galatians 4:30 suggests on a scriptural basis that the Galatians should expel those who are troubling them (1:7).

4:25 Hagar represents Sinai …: some manuscripts have what seems a geographical note, “For Sinai is a mountain in Arabia.”

4:27 Isaiah 54:1 in the Septuagint translation is applied to Sarah as the barren one (in Gn 15) who ultimately becomes the mother not only of Isaac but now of numerous children, i.e., of all those who believe, the children of the promise (4:28).

5:1-6 Paul begins the exhortations, continuing through Galatians 6:10, with an appeal to the Galatians to side with freedom instead of slavery (5:1). He reiterates his message of justification or righteousness by faith instead of law and circumcision (5:2-5); cf. Galatians 2:16; 3:3. Faith, not circumcision, is what counts (5:6).

5:1 Freedom: Paul stresses as the conclusion from the allegory in Galatians 4:21-31 this result of Christ’s work for us. It is a principle previously mentioned (2:4), the responsible use of which Galatians 5:13 will emphasize.

5:3 Cf. Galatians 3:10-12. Just as those who seek to live by the law must carry out all its contents, so those who have faith and live by promise must stand firm in their freedom (5:1, 13).

5:6 Cf. Romans 2:25-26; 1 Corinthians 7:19; Galatians 6:15. The Greek for faith working through love or "faith expressing itself through love" can also be rendered as "faith energized by (God's) love."

5:7-12 Paul addresses the Galatians directly: with questions (5:7, 11), a proverb (5:9), a statement (5:8), and biting sarcasm (5:12), seeking to persuade the Galatians to break with those trying to add law and circumcision to Christ as a basis for salvation.

5:7 Running well: as in an athletic contest; cf. Galatians 2:2; 1 Corinthians 9:24-26; Philippians 2:16; 3:14.

5:8 The one who called you: see note on Galatians 1:6.

5:11 Preaching circumcision: this could refer to Paul's pre-Christian period (possibly as a missionary for Judaism); more probably it arose as a charge from opponents, based perhaps on the story in Acts 16:1-3 that Paul had circumcised Timothy "on account of the Jews." Unlike the Gentile Titus in Galatians 2:3, Timothy was the son of a Jewish mother. The stumbling block of the cross: cf. 1 Corinthians 1:23.

5:12 A sarcastic half-wish that their knife would go beyond mere circumcision; cf. Philippians 3:2 and the note there.

5:13-26 In light of another reminder of the freedom of the gospel (5:13; cf. 5:1), Paul elaborates on what believers are called to do and be: they fulfill the law by love of neighbor (5:14-15), walking in the Spirit (5:16-26), as is illustrated by concrete fruit of the Spirit in their lives.

5:13 Serve … through love: cf. Galatians 5:6.

5:14 Leviticus 19:18, emphasized by Jesus (Mt 22:39; Lk 10:27); cf. Romans 13:8-10.

5:16-25 Spirit … flesh: cf. Galatians 3:3 and the note on Romans 8:1-13.

5:19-23 Such lists of vices and virtues (cf. Rom 1:29-31; 1 Cor 6:9-10) were common in the ancient world. Paul contrasts works of the flesh (5:19) with fruit (not "works") of the Spirit (5:22). Not law, but the Spirit, leads to such traits.

5:21 Occasions of envy: after the Greek word phthonoi, "envies," some manuscripts add a similar sounding one, phonoi, "murders."

6:1-10 The ethical exhortations begun at Galatians 5:1 continue with a variety of admonitions to the community (brothers: see the note on 1:2). Nearly every sentence contains a separate item of practical advice; the faith and freedom of the gospel underlie each maxim. Tensions and temptation within communal life have previously been addressed in Galatians 5:15, 26 and Galatians 6:1 continues with a case in which a person is caught in some transgression such as those in Galatians 5:19-21; cf. Galatians 2:17.

6:2 The law of Christ: cf. Romans 8:2; 1 Corinthians 9:21; Galatians 5:14. The principle of love for others is meant. To bear one another's burdens is to "serve one another through love" (5:13).

6:4-5 Self-examination is the cure for self-deception. Compare what you are with what you were before, and give the glory to God; cf. Romans 6:19-22. Load: used elsewhere of a soldier's pack. Correcting one's own conduct avoids burdening others with it.

6:6 Implies oral instruction in the faith by catechists; these are to be remunerated for their service; cf. Romans 15:27.

6:10 The family of the faith: the Christian household or church. Doing good has a universal object (to all), but the local community makes specific the reality of those to be served.

6:11-18 A postscript in Paul's own hand, as was his practice (see 1 Cor 16:21; 2 Thes 3:17). Paul summarizes his appeal against his opponents (6:12-13), then returns to his message of glorying in the cross, not in circumcision, as the means of salvation (6:14-15; cf. 5:11). A benediction follows at Galatians 6:16. In the polemical spirit that the attack on his apostleship called forth (1:11–2:21), Paul reasserts his missionary credentials (6:17) before giving a final benediction (6:18).

6:11 Large letters: in contrast to the finer hand of the scribe who wrote the letter up to this point. The larger Greek letters make Paul's message even more emphatic. Some find a hint of poor eyesight on Paul's part. See the note on Galatians 4:13.

6:12-15 The Jewish Christian opponents wished not to be persecuted, possibly by Jews. But since Judaism seems to have had a privileged status as a religion in the Roman empire, circumcised Christians might, if taken as Jews, thereby avoid persecution from the Romans. In any case, Paul instead stresses conformity with the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; cf. Galatians 2:19-21; 5:11.

6:13 Those having themselves circumcised: other manuscripts read, "those who have had themselves circumcised."

6:14 Through which: or "through whom."

6:15 New creation: or "new creature"; cf. 2 Corinthians 5:17.

6:16 This rule: the principle in Galatians 6:14, 15. The Israel of God: while the church may be meant (the phrase can be translated "to all who follow this rule, even the Israel of God"; cf. 6:10; 1 Cor 10:18), the reference may also be to God's ancient people, Israel; cf. Psalms 125:5; 128:6.

6:17 The marks of Jesus: slaves were often branded by marks (stigmata) burned into their flesh to show to whom they belonged; so also were devotees of pagan gods. Paul implies that instead of outdated circumcision, his body bears the scars of his apostolic labors (2 Cor 11:22-31), such as floggings (Acts 16:22; 2 Cor 11:25) and stonings (Acts 14:19), that mark him as belonging to the Christ who suffered (cf. Rom 6:3; 2 Cor 4:10; Col 1:24) and will protect his own.

Ephesians

The Letter to the

Ephesians is the great Pauline letter about the church. It deals, however, not so much with a congregation in the city of Ephesus in Asia Minor as with the worldwide church, the head of which is Christ (4:15), the purpose of which is to be the instrument for making God’s plan of salvation known throughout the universe (3:9-10). Yet this ecclesiology is anchored in God’s saving love, shown in Jesus Christ (2:4-10), and the whole of redemption is rooted in the plan and accomplishment of the triune God (1:3-14). The language is often that of doxology (1:3-14) and prayer (cf. 1:15-23; 3:14-19), indeed of liturgy and hymns (3:20-21; 5:14).

The majestic chapters of Ephesians emphasize the unity in the church of Christ that has come about for both Jews and Gentiles within God’s household (1:15–2:22, especially 2:11-22) and indeed the “seven unities” of church, Spirit, hope; one Lord, faith, and baptism; and the one God (4:4-6). Yet the concern is not with the church for its own sake but rather as the means for mission in the world (3:1–4:24). The gifts Christ gives its members are to lead to growth and renewal (4:7-24). Ethical admonition is not lacking either; all aspects of human life and relationships are illumined by the light of Christ (4:25–6:20).

The letter is seemingly addressed by Paul to Christians in Ephesus (1:1), a place where the apostle labored for well over two years (Acts 19:10). Yet there is a curiously impersonal tone to the writing for a community with which Paul was so intimately acquainted (cf. 3:2 and 4:21). There are no personal greetings (cf. 6:23). More significantly, important early manuscripts omit the words “in Ephesus” (see the note on 1:1). Many therefore regard the letter as an encyclical or “circular letter” sent to a number of churches in Asia Minor, the addressees to be designated in each place by its bearer, Tychicus (6:21-22). Others think that Ephesians is the letter referred to in Colossians 4:16 as “to the Laodiceans.”

SUMMARY

Ephesians is a letter that offers an exalted view of the church—the household of God—as the fulfillment of God’s plan of universal salvation. The church is the body of Christ, the bride of Christ, with Christ as its head.

Author: Most likely a secretary or later disciple of Paul.

Date: Circa A.D. 80–100; if from Paul, then dated A.D. 61–63, from Rome or Caesarea.

Content: The mystery of God’s plan of salvation; the church as Christ’s body; ethical rules for conduct within the church; marriage as a sign of Christ’s love for the church.

Paul, who is designated as the sole author at Ephesians 1:1, is described in almost unparalleled terms with regard to the significant role he has in God’s plan for bringing the Gentiles to faith in Christ (3:1-12). Yet at the time of writing he is clearly in prison (3:1; 4:1; 6:20), suffering afflictions (3:13). Traditionally this “Captivity Epistle” has, along with Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon, been dated to an imprisonment in Rome, likely in A.D. 61–63. Others appeal to an earlier imprisonment, perhaps in Caesarea (Acts 23:27–27:2). Since the early nineteenth century, however, much of critical scholarship has considered the letter’s style and use of words (especially when compared with Colossians), its concept of the church, and other points of doctrine put forward by the writer as grounds for serious doubt about authorship by Paul. The letter may then be the work of a secretary writing at the apostle’s direction or of a later disciple who sought to develop Paul’s ideas for a new situation around A.D. 80–100.

The principal divisions of The Letter to the Ephesians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-14)
II. Unity of the Church in Christ (1:15–2:22)
III. World Mission of the Church (3:1–4:24)
IV. Daily Conduct, an Expression of Unity (4:25–6:20)
V. Conclusion (6:21-24)

Mystery (Greek, mystērion), a major theme in Ephesians, means God's grand plan of universal salvation that is finally revealed in Jesus Christ (cf. 3:3-10; 5:32; 6:19). The Latin Vulgate translates the term with "sacrament" (sacramentum), connoting the special signs that are a participation in the mystery of Christ. For Ephesians, the crux of this plan is that the Gentiles are included as coheirs with the Jews (3:6). This brings to fulfillment in the church the vision of Abraham being the "father of many nations" (Gn 12:1-3).

Ephesus, near modern Kushadasi in Turkey, is one of the most important archaeological sites of the NT world. Paul spent more than two years ministering in this cosmopolitan seaport city. The city’s famous devotion to the pagan goddess Artemis fueled a riot against Paul and his colleagues for preaching the Gospel (Acts 19:23-40). Archaeological finds in this city have helped to fill in many details of urban life in the first century, for example, artifacts used in everyday life, the structures of sumptuous houses of some of the rich, foundations of shops and apartments in the market area, and excellently preserved theaters and remnants of pagan temples.

[14]For this reason I kneel before the Father, [15]from whom every family* in heaven and on earth is named, [16]that he may grant you in accord with the riches of his glory to be strengthened with power through his Spirit in the inner self,[l] [17]and that Christ may dwell in your hearts through faith; that you, rooted and grounded in love,[m] [18]may have strength to comprehend with all the holy ones what is the breadth and length and height and depth,[n] [19]and to know the love of Christ that surpasses knowledge, so that you may be filled with all the fullness of God.[o]

[20]Now to him who is able to accomplish far more than all we ask or imagine, by the power at work within us,[p] [21]to him be glory in the church and in Christ Jesus to all generations, forever and ever. Amen.

Carefully read Paul’s prayer. It is a prayer for you and for all believers. Copy the prayer into your journal. Underline the words that speak most directly to the spiritual longing in your heart at this moment in your history. Use the underlined words as your invitation to grace this week.

Diversity of Gifts

9What does “he ascended” mean except that he also descended into the lower [regions] of the earth? 10The one who descended is also the one who ascended far above all the heavens, that he might fill all things.

11*And he gave some as apostles, others as prophets, others as evangelists, others as pastors and teachers,[i] 12to equip the holy ones for the work of ministry,* for building up the body of Christ, 13until we all attain to the unity of faith and knowledge of the Son of God, to mature manhood,* to the extent of the full stature of Christ,[j] 14so that we may no longer be infants, tossed by waves and swept along by every wind of teaching arising from human trickery, from their cunning in the interests of deceitful scheming.[k] 15Rather, living the truth in love, we should grow in every way into him who is the head,[l] Christ,* 16from whom the whole body, joined and held together by every supporting ligament, with the proper functioning of each part, brings about the body’s growth and builds itself up in love.[m]

We are beginning to look at the interconnectedness of every piece of God’s creation. It is fitting that we should do this, and if we can see this connection in clouds, trees, plants, and all growing things upon this earth, is it not essential that we all find a home in the heart of our One God? May the day of unity come soon!

21 Be subordinate to one another[q] out of reverence for Christ. 22Wives should be subordinate to their husbands as to the Lord.[r] 23For the husband is head of his wife just as Christ is head of the church, he himself the savior of the body.[s] 24As the church is subordinate to Christ, so wives should be subordinate to their husbands in everything. 25Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ loved the church and handed himself over for her[t] 26to sanctify her, cleansing her by the bath of water with the word,[u] 27that he might present to himself the church in splendor, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, that she might be holy and without blemish.[v] 28So [also] husbands should love their wives as their own bodies. He who loves his wife loves himself. 29For no one hates his own flesh but rather nourishes and cherishes it, even as Christ does the church, 30because we are members of his body.[w]

31“For this reason a man shall leave [his] father and [his] mother

Household of God

Within the structure of God’s household (cf. 2:19), each person has a distinctive role to play (husbands and wives, children and parents, slaves and masters). All are charged to build up the church as the body of Christ, and all have certain ethical obligations to promote this vision. Scholars call these “household codes.” Some of these teachings can seem like common sense (e.g., advice to parents and children, similar to that in OT Wisdom literature), but all of it is given a Christian overlay by calling all members of the church to live out the teachings of Jesus Christ in their relationships and in everyday life.

In this famous passage (5:21-23) Paul uses marriage to explain the relationship between Christ and the church. Marriage is a complementary relationship: a husband and wife are to love one another, though each plays a unique role. Just so with the church: Christ is head of the church but lays down his life for her; the church returns that love with honor. The larger context of the passage shows that all people are called to imitate God (5:1). Husbands and wives are special models of God’s love who are to “be subordinate” to one another as to Christ (5:22). All are part of one family, the household of God, within which each party has a distinct role. At times, modern ears may find some words jarring, such as “wives should be subordinate to their husbands.” We must always place the text in its larger context. Nothing in the passage can be used to denigrate women, restrict their roles in society, or justify spousal abuse. When a husband and wife have Christlike love for one another and submit their marriage to God, each spouse is respected and God’s plan for marriage is fulfilled.

[9]Masters, act in the same way toward them, and stop bullying, knowing that both they and you have a Master in heaven and that with him there is no partiality.[f]

Using a variety of military images, this passage describes the Christian life in terms of a soldier's gear. Although the NT contains few military images, they appear on occasion and are assumed as a normal part of society (cf. Lk 14:31-32; Heb 4:12). Over time, Christian tradition has introduced an additional emphasis on the Christian life as a battle against sin and evil (e.g., songs such as "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "Onward Christian Soldiers").

Images for the Church

The Bible contains dozens of images of the church. Many NT images are rooted in OT background.

Major images include:
- the people of God (1 Pt 2:9-10; cf. Jer 31:31-34)
- a mystery (Eph 1:9)
- the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:27)
- the bride of Christ (2 Cor 11:2; Eph 5:25-27)
- a new creation (2 Cor 5:17; Gal 6:15)
- the household of God (Eph 2:19)

Minor images include:
- salt of the earth (Mt 5:13)
- light for the world (Mt 5:14)
- a vineyard (Mt 21:33-43; cf. Is 5:1-7)
- God’s building (1 Cor 3:9)
- ambassadors of Christ (2 Cor 5:20)
- the holy ones (1 Cor 14:33)
- the sheep of the Good Shepherd (Jn 10; cf. Ez 34)
- the branches of the vine (Jn 15)

Vatican Council II utilized some of these images, especially “people of God” and “mystery,” when teaching about the nature of the church in modern times (see LG 1 and 9).

1:1-2 For the epistolary form used at the beginning of letters, see the note on Romans 1:1-7. Twenty-two of the thirty Greek words in Ephesians 1:1-2 also occur in Colossians 1:1-2.

1:1 [In Ephesus]: the phrase is lacking in important early witnesses such as P46 (3rd cent.), and Sinaiticus and Vaticanus (4th cent.), appearing in the latter two as a fifth-century addition. Basil and Origen mention its absence from manuscripts. See Introduction. Without the phrase, the Greek can be rendered, as in Colossians 1:2, “to the holy ones and faithful brothers in Christ.”

1:3-14 While a Pauline letter usually continues after the greeting with a prayer of thanksgiving, as in Ephesians 1:15-23 below, Ephesians first inserts a blessing of God for the blessings Christians have experienced, as in 2 Corinthians 1:3-4 and 1 Peter 1:3-12. The blessing here, akin to a Jewish berakah, is rich in images almost certainly drawn from hymns and liturgy. Many ideas here are also found in Colossians 1:3-23. Certain phrases are frequently repeated, such as in Christ (1:3, 10, 12) or in him (1:4, 7, 9, 11, 13) or in the beloved (1:6) and (for) the praise of (his) glory (1:6, 12, 14). Some terms like chose (1:4) and destined (1:5) reflect Old Testament theology (Dt 7:7; 9:4-6; 23:5) or Pauline themes (redemption, 1:7, 14; grace, 1:6, 7) or specific emphases in Colossians (forgiveness, Col 1:14). A triadic structure is discernible in Ephesians 1:3-14: God the Father (1:3-6, 8, 11), Christ (1:3, 5, 7-10, 12), and the Spirit (1:13-14). The spiritual blessings Christians have received through Christ (1:3) are gratefully enumerated: the call to holiness (1:4; cf. Col 1:22); the gift of divine adoption establishing a unique spiritual relationship with God the Father through Christ (1:5; cf. Gal 4:5); liberation from sin through Christ’s sacrificial death (1:7); revelation of God’s plan of salvation in Christ (1:9; cf. 3:3-4; Rom 16:25); the gift of election and faith in Christ bestowed upon Jewish Christians (see the note on 1:12, we who first hoped in Christ); and finally, the same gift granted to Gentiles (1:13, you also). In the Christ-centered faith and existence of the Christian communities the apostle sees the predetermined plan of God to bring all creation under the final rule of Christ (1:4-5, 9-10) being made known (1:9) and carried through, to God’s glory (1:6, 12, 14).

1:3 In the heavens: literally, “in the heavenlies” or “in the heavenly places,” a term in Ephesians for the divine realm.

1:9 Mystery: as in Romans 16:25; Colossians 1:26-27 and elsewhere, a secret of God now revealed in the plan to save and sum up all things in Christ (1:10); cf. Ephesians 3:3-6.

1:12 We who first hoped: probably Jewish Christians (contrast 1:13, you, the Gentiles); possibly the people of Israel, “we who already enjoyed the hope of Christ,” or perhaps present hope in contrast to future redemption (cf. 1:14).

1:13 Sealed: by God, in baptism; cf. Ephesians 4:30; 2 Corinthians 1:22.

1:14 First installment: down payment by God on full salvation, as at 2 Corinthians 1:22.

1:15-23 See the note on Romans 1:8 for the thanksgiving form in a letter. Much of the content parallels thoughts in Colossians 1:3-20. The prayer moves from God and Christ (1:17, 20-21) to the Ephesians (1:17-19) and the church (1:22-23). Paul asks that the blessing imparted by God the Father (1:3) to the Ephesians will be strengthened in them through the message of the gospel (1:13, 17-19). Those blessings are seen in the context of God’s might in establishing the sovereignty of Christ over all other creatures (1:19-21) and in appointing him head of the church (1:22-23). For the allusion to angelic spirits in Ephesians 1:21, see Romans 8:38 and Colossians 1:16. Here, as in 1 Corinthians 15:24-25 and Colossians 2:15, every such principality and power is made subject to Christ.

1:15 Your faith … your love: some manuscripts omit the latter phrase, but cf. Colossians 1:4.

1:23 His body: the church (1:22); cf. the note on Colossians 1:18. Only in Ephesians and Colossians is Christ the head of the body, in contrast to the view in 1 Corinthians 12 and Romans 12:4-8 where Christ is equated with the entire body or community. Fullness: see the note on Colossians 1:19. Some take the one who fills as God, others as Christ (cf. 4:10). If in Christ "dwells the fullness of the deity bodily" (Col 2:9), then, as God "fills" Christ, Christ in turn fills the church and the believer (3:19; 5:18). But the difficult phrases here may also allow the church to be viewed as the "complement" of Christ who is "being filled" as God's plan for the universe is carried out through the church (cf. 3:9-10).

2:1-22 The gospel of salvation (1:13) that God worked in Christ (1:20) is reiterated in terms of what God's great love (2:4), expressed in Christ, means for us. The passage sometimes addresses you, Gentiles (2:1-2, 8, 11-13, 19, 22), but other times speaks of all of us who believe (2:3-7, 10, 14, 18). In urging people to remember their grim past when they were dead in sins (2:1-3, 11-12) and what they are now in Christ (2:4-10, 13), the author sees both Jew and Gentile reconciled with God, now one new person, a new humanity, one body, the household of God, a temple and dwelling place of God's Spirit (2:15-16, 19-22). The presentation falls into two parts, the second stressing more the meaning for the church.

2:1-10 The recipients of Paul's letter have experienced, in their redemption from transgressions and sins, the effect of Christ's supremacy over the power of the devil (2:1-2; cf. 6:11-12), who rules not from the netherworld but from the air between God in heaven and human beings on earth. Both Jew and Gentile have experienced, through Christ, God's free gift of salvation that already marks them for a future heavenly destiny (2:3-7). The language dead, raised us up, and seated us … in the heavens closely parallels Jesus' own passion and Easter experience. The terms in Ephesians 2:8-9 describe salvation in the way Paul elsewhere speaks of justification: by grace, through faith, the gift of God, not from works; cf. Galatians 2:16-21; Romans 3:24-28. Christians are a newly created people in Christ, fashioned by God for a life of goodness (2:10).

2:1-7 These verses comprise one long sentence in Greek, the main verb coming in Ephesians 2:5, God brought us to life, the object you/us dead in … transgressions being repeated in Ephesians 2:1, 5; cf. Colossians 2:13.

2:2 Age of this world: or "aeon," a term found in gnostic thought, possibly synonymous with the rulers of this world, but also reflecting the Jewish idea of "two ages," this present evil age and "the age to come"; cf. 1 Corinthians 3:19; 5:10; 7:31; Galatians 1:4; Titus 2:12. The disobedient: literally, "the sons of disobedience," a Semitism as at Isaiah 30:9.

2:5 Our relation through baptism with Christ, the risen Lord, is depicted in terms of realized eschatology, as already exaltation, though Ephesians 2:7 brings in the future aspect too.

2:11-22 The Gentiles lacked Israel's messianic expectation, lacked the various covenants God made with Israel, lacked hope of salvation and knowledge of the true God (2:11-12); but through Christ all these religious barriers between Jew and Gentile have been transcended (2:13-14) by the abolition of the Mosaic covenant-law (2:15) for the sake of uniting Jew and Gentile into a single religious community (2:15-16), imbued with the same holy Spirit and worshiping the same Father (2:18). The Gentiles are now included in God's household (2:19) as it arises upon the foundation of apostles assisted by those endowed with the prophetic gift (3:5), the preachers of Christ (2:20; cf. 1 Cor 12:28). With Christ as the capstone (2:20; cf. Is 28:16; Mt 21:42), they are being built into the holy temple of God's people where the divine presence dwells (2:21-22).

2:12 The community of Israel: or "commonwealth"; cf. Ephesians 4:18. The covenants: cf. Romans 9:4: with Abraham, with Moses, with David.

2:14-16 The elaborate imagery here combines pictures of Christ as our peace (Is 9:5), his crucifixion, the ending of the Mosaic law (cf. Col 2:14), reconciliation (2 Cor 5:18-21), and the destruction of the dividing wall such as kept people from God in the temple or a barrier in the heavens.

2:15 One new person: a corporate body, the Christian community, made up of Jews and Gentiles, replacing ancient divisions; cf. Romans 1:16.

2:20 Capstone: the Greek can also mean cornerstone or keystone.

3:1-13 Paul reflects on his mission to the Gentiles. He alludes to his call and appointment to the apostolic office (3:2-3) and how his insight through revelation, as well as that of the other apostles and charismatic prophets in the church (3:4-5), has deepened understanding of God's plan of salvation in Christ. Paul is the special herald (3:7) of a new promise to the Gentiles (3:6): that the divine plan includes them in the spiritual benefits promised to Israel. Not only is this unique apostolic role his; Paul also has been given the task of explaining to all the divine plan of salvation (3:8-9), once hidden. Through the church, God's plan to save through Christ is becoming manifest to angelic beings (3:10; cf. 1:21), in accord with God's purpose (3:11). The fulfillment of the plan in Christ gives the whole church more confidence through faith in God (3:12). The readers of this letter are also thereby encouraged to greater confidence despite Paul's imprisonment (3:13).

3:1 A prisoner of Christ: see Introduction. Paul abruptly departs from his train of thought at the end of Ephesians 3:1, leaving an incomplete sentence.

3:2 Stewardship: the Greek is the same term employed at Ephesians 1:10 for the plan that God administers (Col 1:25) and in which Paul plays a key role.

3:3-4 The mystery: God's resolve to deliver Gentiles along with Israel through Christ; cf. the notes on Ephesians 1:10; 3:9.

3:9 [For all]: while some think this phrase was added so as to yield the sense "to enlighten all about the plan …," it is more likely that some manuscripts and Fathers omitted it accidentally or to avoid the idea that all conflicted with Paul's assignment to preach to the Gentiles (3:8) specifically.

3:10 Principalities and authorities: see the note on Ephesians 1:15-23 regarding Ephesians 3:21.

3:14-21 The apostle prays that those he is addressing may, like the rest of the church, deepen their understanding of God's plan of salvation in Christ. It is a plan that affects the whole universe (3:15) with the breadth and length and height and depth of God's love in Christ (3:18) or possibly the universe in all its dimensions. The apostle prays that they may perceive the redemptive love of Christ for them and be completely immersed in the fullness of God (3:19). The prayer concludes with a doxology to God (3:20-21).

3:14-15 Every family: in the Greek there is wordplay on the word for the Father (patria, patēr). The phrase could also mean "God's whole family" (cf. 2:21).

4:1-16 A general plea for unity in the church. Christians have been fashioned through the Spirit into a single harmonious religious community (one body, 4:4, 12; cf. 4:16), belonging to a single Lord (in contrast to the many gods of the pagan world), and by one way of salvation through faith, brought out especially by the significance of baptism (4:1-6; cf. Rom 6:1-11). But Christian unity is more than adherence to a common belief. It is manifested in the exalted Christ's gifts to individuals to serve so as to make the community more Christlike (4:11-16). This teaching on Christ as the source of the gifts is introduced in Ephesians 4:8 by a citation of Psalm 68:18, which depicts Yahweh triumphantly leading Israel to salvation in Jerusalem. It is here understood of Christ, ascending above all the heavens, the head of the church; through his redemptive death, resurrection, and ascension he has become the source of the church's spiritual gifts. The "descent" of Christ (4:9-10) refers more probably to the incarnation (cf. Phil 2:6-8) than to Christ's presence after his death in the world of the dead (cf. 1 Pt 3:19).

4:4-6 The "seven unities" (church, Spirit, hope; Lord, faith in Christ [1:13], baptism; one God) reflect the triune structure of later creeds in reverse.

4:8-10 While the emphasis is on an ascension and gift-giving by Christ, there is also a reference in taking prisoners captive to the aeons and powers mentioned at Ephesians 1:21; 2:2; 3:10; 6:12.

4:11 Concerning this list of ministers, cf. 1 Corinthians 12:28 and Romans 12:6-8. Evangelists: missionary preachers (cf. Acts 21:8; 2 Tm 4:5), not those who wrote gospels. Pastors and teachers: a single group in the Greek, shepherding congregations.

4:12 The ministerial leaders in Ephesians 4:11 are to equip the whole people of God for their work of ministry.

4:13 Mature manhood: literally, "a perfect man" (cf. Col 1:28), possibly the "one new person" of Ephesians 2:15, though there anthrōpos suggests humanity, while here anēr is the term for male. This personage becomes visible in the church's growing to its fullness in the unity of those who believe in Christ.

4:15-16 The head, Christ: cf. Colossians 1:18 and contrast 1 Corinthians 12:12-27 and Romans 12:4-5 where Christ is identified with the whole body, including the head. The imagery may derive from ancient views in medicine, the head coordinating and caring for the body, each ligament (perhaps the ministers of 4:11) supporting the whole. But as at Ephesians 2:19-22, where the temple is depicted as a growing organism, there may also be the idea here of growing toward the capstone, Christ.

4:17-24 Paul begins to indicate how the new life in Christ contrasts with the Gentiles' old way of existence. Literally, the old self (4:22) and the new self (4:24) are "the old man" and "the new man" (anthrōpos, person), as at Ephesians 2:15; cf. the note on Ephesians 4:13.

4:24 Put on: in baptism. See the note on Galatians 3:27.

4:25–6:20 For similar exhortations to a morally good life in response to God's gift of faith, see the notes on Romans 12:1–13:14 and Galatians 5:13-26.

4:26 If angry, seek reconciliation that day, not giving the devil (6:11) opportunity to lead into sin.

4:28 Honest work: literally, "the good." His [own] hands: some manuscripts have the full phrase as in 1 Corinthians 4:12.

4:30 See the note on Ephesians 1:13.

5:1 Imitators of God: in forgiving (4:32) and in loving (as exhibited in how Christ loved us).

5:6 See the note on Ephesians 2:2.

5:14 An early Christian hymn, possibly from a baptismal liturgy. For the content compare Ephesians 2:5-6; 3:9 and Isaiah 60:1.

5:15-16, 19-20 The wording is similar to Colossians 4:5 and Ephesians 3:16-17.

5:21–6:9 Cf. the notes on Colossians 3:18–4:1 and 1 Peter 2:18–3:7 for a similar listing of household duties where the inferior is admonished first (wives, 5:22; children, 6:1; slaves, 6:5), then the superior (husbands, 5:25; fathers, 6:4; masters, 6:9). Paul varies this pattern by an emphasis on mutuality (see 5:20); use of Old Testament material about father and mother in Ephesians 6:2; the judgment to come for slave-owners (you have a Master in heaven, 6:9); and above all the initial principle of subordination to one another under Christ, thus effectively undermining exclusive claims to domination by one party. Into the section on wives and husbands an elaborate teaching on Christ and the church has been woven (5:22-33).

5:21-33 The apostle exhorts married Christians to a strong mutual love. Holding with Genesis 2:24 that marriage is a divine institution (5:31), Paul sees Christian marriage as taking on a new meaning symbolic of the intimate relationship of love between Christ and the church. The wife should serve her husband in the same spirit as that of the church's service to Christ (5:22, 24), and the husband should care for his wife with the devotion of Christ to the church (5:25-30). Paul gives to the Genesis passage its highest meaning in the light of the union of Christ and the church, of which Christlike loyalty and devotion in Christian marriage are a clear reflection (5:31-33).

6:10-20 A general exhortation to courage and prayer. Drawing upon the imagery and ideas of Isaiah 11:5; 59:16-17; and Wisdom 5:17-23, Paul describes the Christian in terms of the dress and equipment of Roman soldiers. He observes, however, that the Christian's readiness for combat is not directed against human beings but against the spiritual powers of evil (6:10-17; cf. 1:21; 2:2; 3:10). Unique importance is placed upon prayer (6:18-20).

6:21-24 Tychicus: the bearer of the letter; see the note on Colossians 4:7. Ephesians 6:21-22 parallel Colossians 4:7-8, often word for word. If Ephesians is addressed to several Christian communities (see Introduction), it is understandable that no greetings to individual members of these communities should have been included in it.

The Letter to the Philippians

Philippi, in northeastern Greece, was a city of some importance in the Roman province of Macedonia. Lying on the great road from the Adriatic coast to Byzantium, the Via Egnatia, and in the midst of rich agricultural plains near the gold deposits of Mt. Pangaeus, it was in Paul's day a Roman town (Acts 16:21), with a Greek-Macedonian population and a small group of Jews (see Acts 16:13). Originally founded in the sixth century B.C. as Krenides by the Thracians, the town was taken over after 360 B.C. by Philip II of Macedon, the father of Alexander the Great, and was renamed for himself, "Philip's City." The area became Roman in the second century B.C. On the plains near Philippi in October 42 B.C., Antony and Octavian decisively defeated the forces of Brutus and Cassius, the slayers of Julius Caesar. Octavian (Augustus) later made Philippi a Roman colony and settled many veterans of the Roman armies there.

Paul, according to Acts (Acts 16:9-40), established at Philippi the first Christian community in Europe. He came to Philippi, via its harbor town of Neapolis (modern Kavalla), on his second missionary journey, probably in A.D. 49 or 50, accompanied by Silas and Timothy (Acts 15:40; 16:3; cf. Phil 1:1) and Luke, if he is to be included in the "we" references of Acts 16:10-17. The Acts account tells of the conversion of a business woman, Lydia; the exorcism of a slave girl; and, after an earthquake, while Paul and Silas were imprisoned in Philippi, the faith and baptism of a jailer and his family. None of these persons, however, is directly mentioned in Philippians (cf. the notes on 4:2 and 4:3). Acts 16 concludes its account by describing how Paul (and Silas), asked by the magistrates to leave Philippi, went on to Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-10), where several times his loyal Philippians continued to support him with financial aid (Phil 4:16). Later, Paul may have passed through Philippi on his way from Ephesus to Greece (Acts 20:1-2), and he definitely stopped there on his fateful trip to Jerusalem (Acts 20:6).

SUMMARY

Philippians, one of the “prison epistles” of Paul, calls on the community to rejoice even when difficulties and struggles abound in life. Paul offers Jesus himself as the prime model to follow in his humility and obedience, embracing even death.

Author: Paul, with Timothy listed as co-sender (1:1).

Date: Circa A.D. 55, probably from Ephesus.

Content: Thanksgiving; progress of the Gospel; hymn about Christ’s suffering and exaltation; autobiographical information about Paul’s background; exhortations to rejoice.

Paul’s letter to the Christians at Philippi was written while he was in a prison somewhere (1:7, 13, 14, 17), indeed in danger of death (1:20-23). Although under guard for preaching Christ, Paul rejoices at the continuing progress of the gospel (1:12-26) and expresses gratitude for the Philippians’ renewed concern and help in an expression of thanks most clearly found at Philippians 4:10-20. Much of the letter is devoted to instruction about unity and humility within the Christian community at Philippi (1:27–2:18) and exhortations to growth, joy, and peace in their life together (4:1-9). The letter seems to be drawing to a close at the end of what we number as Philippians 2, as Paul reports the plans of his helper Timothy and of Epaphroditus (whom the Philippians had sent to aid Paul) to come to Philippi (2:19–3:1), and even Paul’s own expectation that he will go free and come to Philippi (1:25-26; 2:24). Yet quite abruptly at Philippians 3:2, Paul erupts into warnings against false teachers who threaten to impose on the Philippians the burdens of the Mosaic law, including circumcision. The section that follows, Philippians 3:2-21, is a vigorous attack on these Judaizers (cf. Gal 2:11–3:29) or Jewish Christian teachers (cf. 2 Cor 11:12-23), giving us insights into Paul’s own life story (3:4-6) and into the doctrine of justification, the Christian life, and ultimate hope (3:7-21).

The location of Paul’s imprisonment when he wrote to the Philippians, and thus the date of the letter, are uncertain. The traditional view has been that it stems from Paul’s confinement in Rome, between A.D. 59 and 63 (cf. Acts 28:14-31). One modern view suggests the period when he was imprisoned at Caesarea, on the coast of Palestine, A.D. 57 or 58 (Acts 23:23–26:32); another suggests Corinth (cf. 2 Cor 11:9). Much recent scholarship favors Ephesus, around A.D. 55, a situation referred to in 2 Corinthians 1:8 concerning “the affliction that came to us” in Asia Minor (cf. also 1 Cor 15:32). The reference at Philippians 1:13 to the “praetorium” (cf. also 4:22) can be understood to mean the imperial guard or government house at Ephesus (or Caesarea), or the praetorian camp in Rome. Involved in a decision are the several journeys back and forth between Philippi and wherever Paul is imprisoned, mentioned in the letter (2:25-28; 4:14); this factor causes many to prefer Ephesus because of its proximity to Philippi. The Ephesian hypothesis dates the composition of Philippians to the mid-50s when most of Paul’s major letters were written.

There is also a likelihood, according to some scholars, that the letter as we have it is a composite from parts of three letters by Paul to the Philippians. Seemingly Philippians 4:10-20 is a brief note of appreciation for help sent through Epaphroditus. The long section from Philippians 1:3 to 3:1 is then another letter, with news of Paul’s imprisonment and reports on Timothy and Epaphroditus (who has fallen ill while with Paul), along with exhortations to the Philippians about Christian conduct; and Philippians 3:2-21 a third communication warning about threats to Philippian Christianity. The other verses in Philippians 4 and Philippians 1:1-2, are variously assigned by critics to these three underlying letters, which an editor presumably put together to produce a picture of Paul writing earnestly from prison (chaps. 1–2), facing opponents of the faith (chap. 3), and with serene joy advising and thanking his Philippians (chap. 4). If all four chapters were originally a unity, then one must assume that a break occurred between the writing of Philippians 3:1 and Philippians 3:2, possibly involving the receipt of bad news from Philippi, and that Paul had some reasons for delaying his words of thanks for the aid brought by Epaphroditus till the end of his letter.

This beautiful letter is rich in insights into Paul’s theology and his apostolic love and concern for the gospel and his converts. In Philippians, Paul reveals his human sensitivity and tenderness, his enthusiasm for Christ as the key to life and death (1:21), and his deep feeling for those in Christ who dwell in Philippi. With them he shares his hopes and convictions, his anxieties and fears, revealing the total confidence in Christ that constitutes faith (3:8-10). The letter incorporates a hymn about the salvation that God has brought about through Christ (2:6-11), applied by Paul to the relations of Christians with one another (2:1-5). Philippians has been termed “the letter of joy” (4:4, 10). It is the rejoicing of faith, based on true understanding of Christ’s unique role in the salvation of all who profess his lordship (2:11; 3:8-12, 14, 20-21).

The principal divisions of the Letter to the Philippians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-11)
II. Progress of the Gospel (1:12-26)
III. Instructions for the Community (1:27–2:18)
IV. Travel Plans of Paul and His Assistants (2:19–3:1)
V. Polemic: Righteousness and the Goal in Christ (3:2-21)
VI. Instructions for the Community (4:1-9)
VII. Gratitude for the Philippians’ Generosity (4:10-20)
VIII. Farewell (4:21-23)

3I give thanks to my God at every remembrance of you,[c] 4praying always with joy in my every prayer for all of you, 5because of your partnership for the gospel from the first day until now. 6[d]I am confident of this, that the one who began a good work in you will continue to complete it until the day of Christ Jesus.* 7It is right that I should think this way about all of you, because I hold you in my heart, you who are all partners with me in grace, both in my imprisonment and in the defense and confirmation of the gospel. 8For God is my witness, how I long for all of you with the affection of Christ Jesus.[e] 9And this is my prayer: that your love may increase ever more and more in knowledge and every kind of perception,[f] 10to discern what is of value, so that you may be pure and blameless for the day of Christ,[g] 11filled with the fruit of righteousness that comes through Jesus Christ for the glory and praise of God.[h]

[12][i]I want you to know, brothers, that my situation has turned out rather to advance the gospel, [13]so that my imprisonment has become well known in Christ throughout the whole praetorium* and to all the rest,[j] [14]*and so that the majority of the brothers, having taken encouragement in the Lord from my imprisonment, dare more than ever to proclaim the word fearlessly.

[15]Of course, some preach Christ from envy and rivalry, others from good will. [16]The latter act out of love, aware that I am here for the defense of the gospel; [17]the former proclaim Christ out of selfish ambition, not from pure motives, thinking that they will cause me trouble in my imprisonment. [18]What difference does it make, as long as in every way, whether in pretense or in truth, Christ is being proclaimed?[k] And in that I rejoice.*

And I do not know which I shall choose.[o] [23]I am caught between the two. I long to depart this life and be with Christ, [for] that is far better.[p] [24]Yet that I remain [in] the flesh is more necessary for your benefit. 27Only, conduct yourselves in a way worthy of the gospel of Christ, so that, whether I come and see you or am absent, I may hear news of you, that you are standing firm in one spirit, with one mind struggling together for the faith of the gospel,[q] 28not intimidated in any way by your opponents. This is proof to them of destruction, but of your salvation. And this is God's doing. 29For to you has been granted, for the sake of Christ, not only to believe in him but also to suffer for him.[r] 30Yours is the same struggle[s] as you saw in me and now hear about me.*

Paul writes to the Philippian community about the quality of communal life. What are the characteristics of a community that lives by faith in the Gospel of Christ? Sollicitudo Rei Socialis suggests: a commitment to the good of one's neighbor with the readiness, in the gospel sense, to "lose oneself" for the sake of others instead of exploiting them, and to serve instead of oppressing them for one's own advantage (38; see also Mt 10:40-42; 20:25; Mk 10:42-45; Lk 22:25-27).

Remember Jesus! He emptied himself, not even grasping at his divinity. In this supreme act of surrender he came to know who he was. What about you? Of what do you need to loosen your grasp? What kind of surrender is needed for you to have a greater awareness of who you are, in Christ?

Scholars call the famous Philippians hymn the kenotic hymn (from the Greek, kenōsis, “emptying”) because it aptly describes Jesus’ emptying himself to take on human flesh. The church uses this hymn regularly—in the Liturgy of the Hours (Sunday Evening Prayer) and in the solemn liturgies of Palm Sunday and Good Friday—because it expresses eloquently the theology of Christ’s passion, death, and exaltation. It may subtly contrast Christ with Adam, as elsewhere in Paul (Rom 5:12-14).

25With regard to Epaphroditus,* my brother and co-worker and fellow soldier, your messenger and minister in my need, I consider it necessary to send him to you.[s] 26For he has been longing for all of you and was distressed because you heard that he was ill. 27He was indeed ill, close to death; but God had mercy on him, not just on him but also on me, so that I might not have sorrow upon sorrow. 28I send him therefore with the greater eagerness, so that, on seeing him, you may rejoice again, and I may have less anxiety. 29Welcome him then in the Lord with all joy and hold such people in esteem,[t] 30because for the sake of the work of Christ he came close to death, risking his life to make up for those services to me that you could not perform.

Epaphroditus and the Works of Mercy

Paul is known for acknowledging by name the many people who serve with him or provide for his needs. In this Letter to the Philippians, he speaks of Epaphroditus here and in 4:18. Although the references are brief, the mere mention of his name tells us that he served an important role.

For Paul, Epaphroditus is a brother, coworker, fellow soldier, and minister to his needs. Although we do not know the particulars of his service, we do know he proves his worth in many ways, most assuredly by his very presence and through some action on his part. We know that he will leave Paul “well supplied” (4:18).

For the Philippians, Epaphroditus is their messenger, their ambassador. He acts on their behalf and his ministry is a sign of their will to be present to Paul in some tangible way. His service to Paul is symbolic of their support and belief in Paul’s mission.

Epaphroditus will never go down in memory as one of the great heroes of the Bible, but he reminds us of the power of personal witness and community support. His ministry to an imprisoned Paul gives flesh to the teaching of Jesus that we must visit those in prison and care for those in need.

2 Beware of the dogs! Beware of the evil-workers![b] Beware of the mutilation! 3 For we are the circumcision,* we who worship through the Spirit of God, who boast in Christ Jesus and do not put our confidence in flesh,[c] 4 although I myself have grounds for confidence even in the flesh.[d]

[7][But] whatever gains I had, these I have come to consider a loss* because of Christ.[g] [8]More than that, I even consider everything as a loss because of the supreme good of knowing Christ Jesus my Lord. For his sake I have accepted the loss of all things and I consider them so much rubbish, that I may gain Christ [9]and be found in him, not having any righteousness of my own based on the law but that which comes through faith in Christ,[h] the righteousness from God, depending on faith [10]to know him and the power of his resurrection and [the] sharing of his sufferings by being conformed to his death,[i] [11]if somehow I may attain the resurrection from the dead.[j]

Do you remember things you once considered essential for your happiness that are no longer all that important to you? What happened in your life that caused a change of attitude? Christ Jesus, I long for you to be my greatest value. May all lesser values fall away. I embrace you as my greatest good.

12[k]It is not that I have already taken hold of it or have already attained perfect maturity,* but I continue my pursuit in hope that I may possess it, since I have indeed been taken possession of by Christ [Jesus]. 13Brothers, I for my part do not consider myself to have taken possession. Just one thing: forgetting what lies behind but straining forward to what lies ahead, 14I continue my pursuit toward the goal, the prize of God’s upward calling, in Christ Jesus.[l] 15Let us, then, who are “perfectly mature” adopt this attitude. And if you have a different attitude, this too God will reveal to you. 16Only, with regard to what we have attained, continue on the same course.*

Does the race sometimes weary you? Are you often tempted to give up? Let your heart take courage as you recall in your moments of exhaustion and discouragement that the One you are trying to grasp has already grasped you.

[17]Join with others in being imitators of me,* brothers, and observe those who thus conduct themselves according to the model you have in us.[m] [18]For many, as I have often told you and now tell you even in tears, conduct themselves as enemies of the cross of Christ.[n] [19]Their end is destruction. Their God is their stomach; their glory is in their “shame.” Their minds are occupied with earthly things.[o] [20]But our citizenship* is in heaven, and from it we also await a savior, the Lord Jesus Christ.[p] [21]He will change our lowly body to conform with his glorified body by the power that enables him also to bring all things into subjection to himself.[q]

Imitation is an important Pauline concept (cf. 1 Cor 11:1; 1 Thes 1:6). Paul understands the human value of modeling good attitudes and behavior. He asserts that he imitates God (and Christ) and urges his congregations to do likewise. Actions speak louder than words.

For those of us who seem to be overly anxious about many things, these verses from Paul can be medicinal. If you can find something to rejoice in and be grateful for when you are anxious, your anxiety lessens. *VIII: FAREWELL

[21]Give my greetings to every holy one in Christ Jesus. The brothers who are with me send you their greetings; [22]*o*all the holy ones send you their greetings, especially those of Caesar's household.* [23]The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.

1:1-2 See the note on Romans 1:1-7, concerning the greeting.

1:1 Slaves: Paul usually refers to himself at the start of a letter as an apostle. Here he substitutes a term suggesting the unconditional obligation of himself and Timothy to the service of Christ, probably because, in view of the good relationship with the Philippians, he wishes to stress his status as a co-servant rather than emphasize his apostolic authority. Reference to Timothy is a courtesy: Paul alone writes the letter, as the singular verb throughout shows (1:3-26), and the reference (2:19-24) to Timothy in the third person. Overseers: the Greek term episkopos literally means "one who oversees" or "one who supervises," but since the second century it has come to designate the "bishop," the official who heads a local church. In New Testament times this office had not yet developed into the form that it later assumed, though it seems to be well on the way to such development in the Pastorals; see 1 Timothy 3:2 and Titus 1:7, where it is translated bishop. At Philippi, however (and at Ephesus, according to Acts 20:28), there was more than one episkopos, and the precise function of these officials is uncertain. In order to distinguish this office from the later stages into which it developed, the term is here translated as overseers. Ministers: the Greek term diakonoi is used frequently in the New Testament to designate "servants," "attendants," or "ministers." Paul refers to himself and to other apostles as "ministers of God" (2 Cor 6:4) or "ministers of Christ" (2 Cor 11:23). In the Pastorals (1 Tm 3:8, 12) the diakonos has become an established official in the local church; hence the term is there translated as deacon. The diakonoi at Philippi seem to represent an earlier stage of development of the office; we are uncertain about their precise functions. Hence the term is here translated as ministers. See Romans 16:1, where Phoebe is described as a diakonos (minister) of the church of Cenchreae.

1:2 The gifts come from Christ the Lord, not simply through him from the Father; compare the christology in Philippians 2:6-11.

1:3-11 As in Romans 1:8-15 and all the Pauline letters except Galatians, a thanksgiving follows, including a direct prayer for the Philippians (1:9-11); see the note on Romans 1:8. On their partnership for the gospel (1:5), cf. Philippians 1:29-30; 4:10-20. Their devotion to the faith and to Paul made them his pride and joy (4:1). The characteristics thus manifested are evidence of the community's continuing preparation for the Lord's parousia (1:6, 10). Paul's especially warm relationship with the Philippians is suggested here (1:7-8) as elsewhere in the letter. The eschatology serves to underscore a concern for ethical growth (Eph 1:9-11), which appears throughout the letter.

1:6 The day of Christ Jesus: the parousia or triumphant return of Christ, when those loyal to him will be with him and share in his eternal glory; cf. Philippians 1:10; 2:16; 3:20-21; 1 Thessalonians 4:17; 5:10; 2 Thessalonians 1:10; 1 Corinthians 1:8.

1:12-26 The body of the letter begins with an account of Paul's present situation, i.e., his imprisonment (1:12-13; see Introduction), and then goes on with advice for the Philippians (1:27–2:18). The advance of the gospel (1:12) and the progress of the Philippians in the faith (1:25) frame what is said.

1:13 Praetorium: either the praetorian guard in the city where Paul was imprisoned or the governor's official residence in a Roman province (cf. Mk 15:16; Acts 23:35). See Introduction on possible sites.

1:14-18 Although Paul is imprisoned, Christians there nonetheless go on preaching Christ. But they do so with varied motives, some with personal hostility toward Paul, others out of personal ambition.

1:18 Rejoice: a major theme in the letter; see Introduction.

1:19-25 Paul earnestly debates his prospects of martyrdom or continued missionary labor. While he may long to depart this life and thus be with Christ (1:23), his overall and final expectation is that he will be delivered from this imprisonment and continue in the service of the Philippians and of others (1:19, 25; 2:24). In either case, Christ is central (1:20-21); if to live means Christ for Paul, death means to be united with Christ in a deeper sense.

1:19 Result in deliverance for me: an echo of Job 13:16, hoping that God will turn suffering to ultimate good and deliverance from evil.

1:27-30 Ethical admonition begins at this early point in the letter, emphasizing steadfastness and congregational unity in the face of possible suffering. The opponents (1:28) are those in Philippi, probably pagans, who oppose the gospel cause. This is proof … (1:28) may refer to the whole outlook and conduct of the Philippians, turning out for their salvation but to the judgment of the opponents (cf. 2 Cor 2:15-16), or possibly the sentence refers to the opinion of the opponents, who hold that the obstinacy of the Christians points to the destruction of such people as defy Roman authority (though in reality, Paul holds, such faithfulness leads to salvation).

1:30 A reference to Paul's earlier imprisonment in Philippi (Acts 16:19-24; 1 Thes 2:2) and to his present confinement.

2:1-11 The admonition to likemindedness and unity (2:2-5) is based on the believers' threefold experience with Christ, God's love, and the Spirit. The appeal to humility (2:3) and to obedience (2:12) is rooted in christology, specifically in a statement about Christ Jesus (2:6-11) and his humbling of self and obedience to the point of death (2:8).

2:5 Have … the same attitude that is also yours in Christ Jesus: or, "that also Christ Jesus had." While it is often held that Christ here functions as a model for moral imitation, it is not the historical Jesus but the entire Christ event that Philippians 2:6-11 depict. Therefore, the appeal is to have in relations among yourselves that same relationship you have in Jesus Christ, i.e., serving one another as you serve Christ (2:4).

2:6-11 Perhaps an early Christian hymn quoted here by Paul. The short rhythmic lines fall into two parts, Philippians 2:6-8 where the subject of every verb is Christ, and Philippians 2:9-11 where the subject is God. The general pattern is thus of Christ's humiliation and then exaltation. More precise analyses propose a division into six three-line stanzas (2:6; 7abc, 7d-8, 9, 10, 11) or into three stanzas (2:6-7ab, 7cd-8, 9-11). Phrases such as even death on a cross (2:8c) are considered by some to be additions (by Paul) to the hymn, as are Philippians 2:10c, 11c.

2:6 Either a reference to Christ’s preexistence and those aspects of divinity that he was willing to give up in order to serve in human form, or to what the man Jesus refused to grasp at to attain divinity. Many see an allusion to the Genesis story: unlike Adam, Jesus, though … in the form of God (Gn 1:26-27), did not reach out for equality with God, in contrast with the first Adam in Genesis 3:5-6.

2:7 Taking the form of a slave, coming in human likeness: or “… taking the form of a slave. Coming in human likeness, and found human in appearance.” While it is common to take Philippians 2:6, 7 as dealing with Christ’s preexistence and Philippians 2:8 with his incarnate life, so that lines Philippians 2:7b, 7c are parallel, it is also possible to interpret so as to exclude any reference to preexistence (see the note on 2:6) and to take Philippians 2:6-8 as presenting two parallel stanzas about Jesus’ human state (2:6-7b; 7cd-8); in the latter alternative, coming in human likeness begins the second stanza and parallels 6a to some extent.

2:8 There may be reflected here language about the servant of the Lord, Isaiah 52:13–53:12 especially Isaiah 53:12.

2:9 The name: “Lord” (2:11), revealing the true nature of the one who is named.

2:10-11 Every knee should bend … every tongue confess: into this language of Isaiah 45:23 there has been inserted a reference to the three levels in the universe, according to ancient thought, heaven, earth, under the earth.

2:11 Jesus Christ is Lord: a common early Christian acclamation; cf. 1 Corinthians 12:3; Romans 10:9. But doxology to God the Father is not overlooked here (2:11c) in the final version of the hymn.

2:12-18 Paul goes on to draw out further ethical implications for daily life (2:14-18) from the salvation God works in Christ.

2:12 Fear and trembling: a common Old Testament expression indicating awe and seriousness in the service of God (cf. Ex 15:16; Jdt 2:28; Ps 2:11; Is 19:16).

2:15-16 Generation … as you hold on to …: or “… generation. Among them shine like lights in the world because you hold the word of life ….”

2:17 Libation: in ancient religious ritual, the pouring out on the ground of a liquid offering as a sacrifice. Paul means that he may be facing death.

2:19–3:1 The plans of Paul and his assistants for future travel are regularly a part of a Pauline letter near its conclusion; cf. Romans 15:22-29; 1 Corinthians 16:5-12.

2:19 Timothy: already known to the Philippians (Acts 16:1-15; cf. 1 Cor 4:17; 16:10).

2:24 I myself will also come soon: cf. Philippians 1:19-25 for the significance of this statement.

2:25 Epaphroditus: sent by the Philippians as their messenger (literally, “apostle”) to aid Paul in his imprisonment, he had fallen seriously ill; Paul commends him as he sends him back to Philippi.

3:1 Finally … rejoice: the adverb often signals the close of a letter; cf. Philippians 4:8; 2 Corinthians 13:11. While the verb could also be translated “good-bye” or “farewell,” although it is never so used in Greek epistolography, the theme of joy has been frequent in the letter (1:18; 2:2, 18); note also Philippians 4:4 and the addition of “always” there as evidence for the meaning “rejoice.” To write the same things may refer to what Paul has previously taught in Philippi or to what he has just written or to what follows.

3:2-21 An abrupt change in content and tone, either because Paul at this point responds to disturbing news he has just heard about a threat to the faith of the Philippians in the form of false teachers, or because part of another Pauline letter was inserted here; see Introduction. The chapter describes these teachers in strong terms as dogs. The persons meant are evidently different from the rival preachers of Philippians 1:14-18 and the opponents of Philippians 1:28. Since Philippians 3:2-4 emphasize Jewish terms like circumcision (3:2-3, 5), some relate them to the "Judaizers" of the Letter to the Galatians. Other phrases make them appear more like the false teachers of 2 Corinthians 11:12-15, the evil-workers. The latter part of the chapter depicts the many who are enemies of Christ's cross in terms that may sound more Gentile or even "gnostic" than Jewish (3:18-19). Accordingly, some see two groups of false teachers in Philippians 3, others one group characterized by a claim of having attained "perfect maturity" (3:12-15).

3:2-11 Paul sets forth the Christian claim, especially using personal, autobiographical terms that are appropriate to the situation. He presents his own experience in coming to know Christ Jesus in terms of righteousness or justification (cf. Rom 1:16-17; 3:21-5:11; Gal 2:5-11), contrasting the righteousness from God through faith and that of one's own based on the law as two exclusive ways of pleasing God.

3:2 Beware of the mutilation: literally, "incision," an ironic wordplay on "circumcision"; cf. Galatians 5:12. There may be an association with the self-inflicted mutilations of the prophets of Baal (1 Kgs 18:28) and of devotees of Cybele who slashed themselves in religious frenzy.

3:3 We are the circumcision: the true people of God, seed and offspring of Abraham (Gal 3:7, 29; 6:15). Spirit of God: some manuscripts read "worship God by the Spirit."

3:5 Circumcised on the eighth day: as the law required (Gn 17:12; Lv 12:3).

3:7 Loss: his knowledge of Christ led Paul to reassess the ways of truly pleasing and serving God. His reevaluation indicates the profound and lasting effect of his experience of the meaning of Christ on the way to Damascus some twenty years before (Gal 1:15-16; Acts 9:1-22).

3:12-16 To be taken possession of by Christ does not mean that one has already arrived at perfect spiritual maturity. Paul and the Philippians instead press on, trusting in God.

3:12 Attained perfect maturity: possibly an echo of the concept in the mystery religions of being an initiate, admitted to divine secrets.

3:16 Some manuscripts add, probably to explain Paul's cryptic phrase, "thinking alike."

3:17-21 Paul and those who live a life centered in Christ, envisaging both his suffering and resurrection, provide a model that is the opposite of opponents who reject Christ's cross (cf. 1 Cor 1:23).

3:17 Being imitators of me: not arrogance, but humble simplicity, since all his converts know that Paul is wholly dedicated to imitating Christ (1 Cor 11:1; cf. also Phil 4:9; 1 Thes 1:6; 2 Thes 3:7, 9; 1 Cor 4:6).

3:20 Citizenship: Christians constitute a colony of heaven, as Philippi was a colonia of Rome (Acts 16:12). The hope Paul expresses involves the final coming of Christ, not a status already attained, such as the opponents claim.

4:1-9 This series of ethical admonitions rests especially on the view of Christ and his coming (cf. 4:5) in Philippians 3:20-21. Paul's instructions touch on unity within the congregation, joy, prayer, and the Christian outlook on life.

4:2 Euodia … Syntyche: two otherwise unknown women in the Philippian congregation; on the advice to them, cf. Philippians 2:2-4.

4:3 Yokemate: or "comrade," although the Greek syzygos could also be a proper name. Clement: otherwise unknown, although later writers sought to identify him with Clement, bishop of Rome (Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History 3.15.1).

4:4 Rejoice: see note on Philippians 3:1.

4:5 Kindness: considerateness, forbearance, fairness. The Lord is near: most likely a reference to Christ's parousia (1:6, 10; 3:20-21; 1 Cor 16:22), although some sense an echo of Psalm 119:151 and the perpetual presence of the Lord.

4:8 The language employs terms from Roman Stoic thought.

4:9 Cf. note on Philippians 3:17.

4:10-20 Paul, more directly than anywhere else in the letter (cf. 1:3-5), here thanks the Philippians for their gift of money sent through Epaphroditus (2:25). Paul's own policy was to be self-sufficient as a missionary, supporting himself by his own labor (1 Thes 2:5-9; 1 Cor 9:15-18; cf. Acts 18:2-3). In spite of this reliance on self and on God to provide (4:11-13) Paul accepted gifts from the Philippians not only once but more than once (4:16) when he was in Thessalonica (Acts 17:1-9), as he does now, in prison (my distress, 4:14). While commercial terms appear in the passage, like an account of giving and receiving (4:15) and received full payment (4:18), Paul is most concerned about the spiritual growth of the Philippians (Phil 4:10, 17, 19); he emphasizes that God will care for their needs, through Christ.

4:15 The beginning of the gospel: it was at Philippi that Paul first preached Christ in Europe, going on from there to Thessalonica and Beroea (Acts 16:9–17:14).

4:18 Aroma … sacrifice: Old Testament cultic language (cf. Gn 8:21; Ex 29:18, 25, 41; Lv 1:9, 13; Ez 20:41) applied to the Philippians' gift; cf. Ephesians 5:2; 2 Corinthians 2:14-16.

4:21-23 On the usual greetings at the conclusion of a letter, see note on 1 Corinthians 16:19-24. Inclusion of greetings from all the holy ones in the place from which Paul writes would involve even the Christians of Philippians 1:14-18 who had their differences with Paul.

4:22 Those of Caesar's household: minor officials or even slaves and freedmen, found in Ephesus or Rome, among other places.

Colossians

The Letter to the

This letter is addressed to a congregation at Colossae in the Lycus Valley in Asia Minor, east of Ephesus. At the time of writing, Paul had not visited there, the letter says (1:4; 2:1). The community had apparently been established by Epaphras of Colossae (1:7; 4:12; Phlm 23). Problems, however, had arisen, brought on by teachers who emphasized Christ's relation to the universe (cosmos). Their teachings stressed angels (2:18; "principalities and powers," 2:15), which were connected with astral powers and cultic practices (see the note on 2:16) and rules about food and drink and ascetical disciplines (2:16, 18). These teachings, Paul insists, detract from the person and work of Christ for salvation as set forth magnificently in a hymnic passage at Colossians 1:15-20 and reiterated throughout the letter. Such teachings are but "shadows"; Christ is "reality" (2:17).

For help in dealing with these problems that the new teachers posed at Colossae, Epaphras sought out Paul, who was then imprisoned (4:10, 18) at a place that the letter does not mention. Paul, without entering into debate over the existence of angelic spirits or their function, simply affirms that Christ possesses the sum total of redemptive power (1:19) and that the spiritual renewal of the human person occurs through contact in baptism with the person of Christ, who died and rose again (2:9-14). It is unnecessary for the Christian to be concerned about placating spirits (2:15) or avoiding imagined defilement through ascetical practices in regard to food and drink (2:20-23). True Christian asceticism consists in the conquering of personal sins (3:5-10) and the practice of love of neighbor in accordance with the standard set by Christ (3:12-16).

Paul commends the community as a whole (1:3-8); this seems to indicate that, though the Colossians have been under pressure to adopt the false doctrines, they have not yet succumbed. The apostle expresses his prayerful concern for them (1:9-14). His preaching has cost him persecution, suffering, and imprisonment, but he regards these as reflective of the sufferings of Christ, a required discipline for the sake of the gospel (see the note on 1:24; cf. 1:29; 2:1). His instructions to the Christian family and to slaves and masters require a new spirit of reflection and action. Love, obedience, and service are to be rendered "in the Lord" (3:18–4:1).

SUMMARY

Colossians contains some similarities to Ephesians, in both style and content. It is a "prison letter" intended to give instruction and encouragement to the members of the church, "the household of God."

Author: Either Paul (with Timothy as co-sender, 1:1) or a disciple writing later in his name.

Date: Circa either A.D. 54–56 or 80–90, depending on authorship.

Content: Thanksgiving and prayer for progress in the faith; hymn about the exalted Christ; warnings and exhortations about the Christian life and how families should conduct themselves.

Colossians follows the outline of a typical Pauline letter. It is distinguished by the poetic lines in Colossians 1:15-20 concerning who Christ is and what Christ means in creation and redemption. This hymn may be compared with similar passages in Philippians 2:6-11; 1 Timothy 3:16; and John 1:1-18. It was apparently familiar liturgical material to the author, the audience, and the false teachers. In Colossians 1:21–2:7, however, Paul interprets the relation between the body of Christ, which he insists is the church (1:18), and the world or cosmos to be one not simply of Christ's preexistence and rule but one of missionary advance into the world by the spreading of the word (1:25, 28). In this labor of the missionary body of Christ, Paul as a minister plays a prime part in bringing Christ and the gospel as hope to the Gentiles (1:23, 25, 27). To "every creature under heaven" the word is to be proclaimed, so that everyone receives Christ, is established in faith, and walks in Christ (1:28; 2:6, 7).

Paul wrote the Letter to the Colossians while in prison, but his several imprisonments leave the specific place and date of composition uncertain. On this point the same problem exists as with Ephesians and Philippians (see the Introductions to these letters). Traditionally the house arrest at Rome, in which Paul enjoyed a certain restricted freedom in preaching (see Acts 28:16-28), or a second Roman imprisonment has been claimed as the setting. Others suggest a still earlier imprisonment at Caesarea (see Acts 23:12–27:1) or in Ephesus (see Acts 19). Still others regard the letter as the work of some pupil or follower of Paul, writing in his name. In any case, the contents are often closely paralleled by thoughts in Ephesians.

The principal divisions of the Letter to the Colossians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-14)
II. The Preeminence of Christ (1:15–2:3)
III. Warnings Against False Teachers (2:4-23)
IV. The Ideal Christian Life in the World (3:1–4:6)
V. Conclusion (4:7-18)

I: ADDRESS

Greeting*

Eph 1:1

1 [1]Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God, and Timothy our brother,[a] [2]to the holy ones and faithful brothers in Christ in Colossae: grace to you and peace from God our Father.

3 We always give thanks to God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, when we pray for you,[b] 4 for we have heard of your faith in Christ Jesus and the love that you have for all the holy ones 5 because of the hope reserved for you in heaven. Of this you have already heard through the word of truth, the gospel,[c] 6 that has come to you. Just as in the whole world it is bearing fruit and growing, so also among you, from the day you heard it and came to know the grace of God in truth, 7 [d]as you learned it from Epaphras* our beloved fellow slave, who is a trustworthy minister of Christ on your behalf 8 and who also told us of your love in the Spirit.

Prayer for Continued Progress*

[9]Therefore, from the day we heard this, we do not cease praying for you and asking that you may be filled with the knowledge of his will through all spiritual wisdom and understanding[e] [10]to live in a manner worthy of the Lord, so as to be fully pleasing, in every good work bearing fruit and growing in the knowledge of God, [11]strengthened with every power, in accord with his glorious might, for all endurance and patience, with joy [12]*giving thanks to the Father, who has made you fit to share in the inheritance of the holy ones in light.[f] [13]He delivered us from the power of darkness and transferred us to the kingdom of his beloved Son, [14]in whom we have redemption, the forgiveness of sins.[g]

II: THE PREEMINENCE OF CHRIST

His Person and Work

15*He is the image* of the invisible God,

h
Ps 89:28; Jn 1:3, 18; 2 Cor 4:4

the firstborn of all creation.[h] 16For in him* were created all things in heaven and on earth, the visible and the invisible,
whether thrones or dominions or principalities or powers;

i
1 Cor 8:6; Eph 1:10, 21

all things were created through him and for him.[i] 17He is before all things, and in him all things hold together.
18He is the head of the body, the church.*
He is the beginning, the firstborn from the dead,

j
1 Cor 11:3; 12:12, 27; 15:20; Eph 1:22-23; Rev 1:5

that in all things he himself might be preeminent.[j] 19For in him all the fullness* was pleased to dwell, 20and through him to reconcile all things for him, making peace by the blood of his cross*

k
2 Cor 5:18-19; Eph 1:10

[through him], whether those on earth or those in heaven.[k]

This Colossians hymn is so expressive of the cosmic reality of Christ that the Liturgy of the Hours employs it every Wednesday at Evening Prayer to express the primacy of Christ over all creation. In language reminiscent of OT Wisdom literature, the hymn exalts Christ's uniqueness, preeminence, all-encompassing power, and the effects of his sacrifice.

But now it has been manifested to his holy ones,[m] [27]to whom God chose to make known the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; it is Christ in you, the hope for glory.[n] [28]It is he whom we proclaim, admonishing everyone and teaching everyone with all wisdom, that we may present everyone perfect in Christ.[o] [29]For this I labor and struggle, in accord with the exercise of his power working within me.[p]

Colossae and Laodicea in Asia Minor

1:1-2 For the epistolary form used by Paul at the beginning of his letters, see the note on Romans 1:1-7. On holy ones or "God's people," see the note on Romans 1:7. Awareness of their calling helps this group to be faithful brothers and sisters in Christ, i.e., dedicated to the tasks implied in their calling.

1:3-8 On thanksgiving at the start of a letter, see the note on Romans 1:8. The apostle, recalling his own prayers for them and the good report about them he has received (1:3-4), congratulates the Colossians upon their acceptance of Christ and their faithful efforts to live the gospel (3:6-8). To encourage them he mentions the success of the gospel elsewhere (1:6) and assures them that his knowledge of their community is accurate, since he has been in personal contact with Epaphras (1:7-8), who likely had evangelized Colossae and other cities in the Lycus Valley of Asia Minor (cf. 4:12, 13; Phlm 23). On faith, love, and hope (1:4, 5, 8), see the note on 1 Corinthians 13:13; cf. 1 Thessalonians 1:3; 5:8.

1:7 Epaphras: now with Paul but a Colossian, founder of the church there.

1:9-14 Moved by Epaphras' account, the apostle has prayed and continues to pray fervently for the Colossians that, in their response to the gospel, they may be filled with the knowledge of God's will (1:9; cf. 3:10). Paul expects a mutual interaction between their life according to the gospel and this knowledge (1:10), yielding results (fruit, 1:10; cf. 1:6) in every good work: growth, strength, endurance, patience, with joy (1:11), and the further giving of thanks (1:12).

1:12-14 A summary about redemption by the Father precedes the statement in Colossians 1:15-20 about the beloved Son who is God's love in person (1:13). Christians share the inheritance … in light with the holy ones, here probably the angels (1:12). The imagery reflects the Exodus (delivered … transferred) and Jesus' theme of the kingdom. Redemption is explained as forgiveness of sins (cf. Acts 2:38; Rom 3:24-25; Eph 1:7).

1:15-20 As the poetic arrangement indicates, these lines are probably an early Christian hymn, known to the Colossians and taken up into the letter from liturgical use (cf. Phil 2:6-11; 1 Tm 3:16). They present Christ as the mediator of creation (1:15-18a) and of redemption (1:18b-20). There is a parallelism between firstborn of all creation (1:15) and firstborn from the dead (1:18). While many of the phrases were at home in Greek philosophical use and even in gnosticism, the basic ideas also reflect Old Testament themes about Wisdom found in Proverbs 8:22-31; Wisdom 7:22–8:1; and Sirach 1:4. See also the notes on what is possibly a hymn in John 1:1-18.

1:15 Image: cf. Genesis 1:27. Whereas the man and the woman were originally created in the image and likeness of God (see also Gn 1:26), Christ as image (2 Cor 4:4) of the invisible God (Jn 1:18) now shares this new nature in baptism with those redeemed (cf. Col 3:10-11).

1:16-17 Christ (though not mentioned by name) is preeminent and supreme as God's agent in the creation of all things (cf. Jn 1:3), as prior to all things (1:17; cf. Heb 1:3).

1:18 Church: such a reference seemingly belongs under "redemption" in the following lines, not under the "creation" section of the hymn. Stoic thought sometimes referred to the world as "the body of Zeus." Pauline usage is to speak of the church as the body of Christ (1 Cor 12:12-27; Rom 12:4-5). Some think that the author of Colossians has inserted the reference to the church here so as to define "head of the body" in Paul's customary way. See Colossians 1:24. Preeminent: when Christ was raised by God as firstborn from the dead (cf. Acts 26:23; Rev 1:5), he was placed over the community, the church, that he had brought into being, but he is also indicated as crown of the whole new creation, over all things. His further role is to reconcile all things (1:20) for God or possibly "to himself."

1:19 Fullness: in gnostic usage this term referred to a spiritual world of beings above, between God and the world; many later interpreters take it to refer to the fullness of the deity (2:9); the reference could also be to the fullness of grace (cf. Jn 1:16).

1:20 The blood of his cross: the most specific reference in the hymn to redemption through Christ's death, a central theme in Paul; cf. Colossians 2:14-15; 1 Corinthians 1:17, 18, 23. [Through him]: the phrase, lacking in some manuscripts, seems superfluous but parallels the reference to reconciliation through Christ earlier in the verse.

1:21-23 Paul, in applying this hymn to the Colossians, reminds them that they have experienced the reconciling effect of Christ's death. He sees the effects of the cross in the redemption of human beings, not of cosmic powers such as those referred to in Colossians 1:16, 20 (all things). Paul also urges adherence to Christ in faith and begins to point to his own role as minister (1:23), sufferer (1:24), and proclaimer (1:27-28) of this gospel.

1:24–2:3 As the community at Colossae was not personally known to Paul (see Introduction), he here invests his teaching with greater authority by presenting a brief sketch of his apostolic ministry and sufferings as they reflect those of Christ on behalf of the church (1:24). The preaching of God's word (1:25) carries out the divine plan (the mystery, 1:26) to make Christ known to the Gentiles (1:27). It teaches the God-given wisdom about Christ (1:28), whose power works mightily in the apostle (1:29). Even in those communities that do not know him personally (2:1), he can increase the perception of God in Christ, unite the faithful more firmly in love, and so bring encouragement to them (2:2). He hopes that his apostolic authority will make the Colossians perceive more readily the defects in the teaching of others who have sought to delude them, the next concern in the letter.

1:24 What is lacking: although variously interpreted, this phrase does not imply that Christ's atoning death on the cross was defective. It may refer to the apocalyptic concept of a quota of "messianic woes" to be endured before the end comes; cf. Mark 13:8, 19-20, 24 and the note on Matthew 23:29-32. Others suggest that Paul's mystical unity with Christ allowed him to call his own sufferings the afflictions of Christ.

2:1 Laodicea: chief city in Phrygia, northwest of Colossae; cf. Colossians 4:13, 16; Revelation 3:14-22.

2:4-23 In face of the threat posed by false teachers (2:4), the Colossians are admonished to adhere to the gospel as it was first preached to them (2:6), steeping themselves in it with grateful hearts (2:7). They must reject religious teachings originating in any source except the gospel (2:8) because in Christ alone will they have access to God, the deity (2:9). So fully has Christ enlightened them that they need no other source of religious knowledge or virtue (2:10). They do not require circumcision (2:11), for in baptism their whole being has been affected by Christ (2:12) through forgiveness of sin and resurrection to a new life (2:13; cf. 3:1 and Rom 6:1-11). On the cross Christ canceled the record of the debt that stood against us with all its claims (2:14), i.e., he eliminated the law (cf. Eph 2:15) that human beings could not observe—and that could not save them. He forgave sins against the law (2:14) and exposed as false and misleading (2:15) all other powers (cf. 1:16) that purport to offer salvation. Therefore, the Colossians are not to accept judgments from such teachers on food and drink or to keep certain religious festivals or engage in certain cultic practices (2:16), for the Colossians would thereby risk severing themselves from Christ (2:19). If, when they accepted the gospel, they believed in Christ as their savior, they must be convinced that their salvation cannot be achieved by appeasing ruling spirits through dietary practices or through a wisdom gained simply by means of harsh asceticism (2:20-23).

2:8 Elemental powers of the world: see the note on Galatians 4:3.

2:9 Fullness of the deity: the divine nature, not just attributes; see the note on Colossians 1:19.

2:11 A description of baptism (2:12) in symbolic terms of the Old Testament rite for entry into the community. The false teachers may have demanded physical circumcision of the Colossians.

2:14 The elaborate metaphor here about how God canceled the legal claims against us through Christ's cross depicts not Christ being nailed to the cross by men but the bond … with its legal claims being nailed to the cross by God.

2:15 The picture derives from the public spectacle and triumph of a Roman emperor's victory parade, where captives marched in subjection. The principalities and the powers are here conquered, not reconciled (cf. 1:16, 20). An alternate rendering for by it (the cross) is "by him" (Christ).

2:16 Festival or new moon or sabbath: yearly, monthly, and weekly observances determined by religious powers associated with a calendar set by the heavenly bodies, sun, moon, and stars (cf. 2:8).

2:18 Ascetic practices encouraged by the false teachers included subjection of self humbly to their rules, worship of angels, and cultivation of visions, though exact details are unclear.

3:1-4 By retaining the message of the gospel that the risen, living Christ is the source of their salvation, the Colossians will be free from false religious evaluations of the things of the world (3:1-2). They have died to these; but one day when Christ … appears, they will live with Christ in the presence of God (3:3-4).

3:5-17 In lieu of false asceticism and superstitious festivals, the apostle reminds the Colossians of the moral life that is to characterize their response to God through Christ. He urges their participation in the liturgical hymns and prayers that center upon God's plan of salvation in Christ (3:16).

3:5, 8 The two lists of five vices each are similar to enumerations at Romans 1:29-31 and Galatians 5:19-21.

3:6 The wrath of God: see the note on Romans 1:18. Many manuscripts add, as at Ephesians 5:6, "upon the disobedient."

3:8-10 Put … away; have taken off; have put on: the terms may reflect baptismal practice, taking off garments and putting on new ones after being united with Christ, here translated into ethical terms.

3:10 Image: see the note on Colossians 1:15.

3:11 Scythian: a barbarous people from north of the Black Sea.

3:18–4:6 After general recommendations that connect family life and the social condition of slavery with the service of Christ (3:18–4:1), Paul requests prayers for himself, especially in view of his imprisonment (3:2-3), and recommends friendly relations and meaningful discussions of Christian teaching with outsiders, i.e., non-Christians (3:5-6). See the note on Ephesians 5:21–6:9.

3:22-25 Slaves: within this table of duties in family and societal relations, involving wives and husbands, children and parents (3:18-21), such as also appears in Ephesians 5:22–6:9, slaves here receive special attention because of the case of Onesimus the slave returning to his master (4:9; Phlm 10-12).

4:7-18 Paul concludes with greetings and information concerning various Christians known to the Colossians.

4:7 Tychicus: Acts 20:4 mentions his role in the collection for Jerusalem; Ephesians 6:21 repeats what is said here; see also 2 Timothy 4:12; Titus 3:12.

4:10 Aristarchus: a Thessalonian who was with Paul at Ephesus and Caesarea and on the voyage to Rome (Acts 19:29; 20:4; 27:2). Mark: also referred to at Philemon 24 and 2 Timothy 4:11 and, as "John Mark," in Acts (Acts 12:12, 25; 13:13; 15:37-40). See also 1 Peter 5:13 and the note there. Traditionally the author of the second gospel.

4:11 Jesus: a then common Jewish name, the Greek form of Joshua.

4:12 Epaphras: see the notes on Colossians 1:3-8 and Colossians 1:7.

4:13 Laodicea: see the note on Colossians 2:1. Hierapolis: a city northeast of Laodicea and northwest of Colossae.

4:14 Luke: only here described as a medical doctor; cf. Philemon 24 and 2 Timothy 4:11. Traditionally the author of the third gospel. Demas: cf. Philemon 24; he later deserted Paul (2 Tm 4:10).

4:15 Nympha and … her house: some manuscripts read a masculine for the house-church leader, “Nymphas and … his house.”

4:16 The one from Laodicea: either a letter by Paul that has been lost or the Letter to the Ephesians (cf. the note on Eph 1:1 in Ephesus).

4:17 Fulfill the ministry: usually taken to mean that Archippus, the son of Philemon and Apphia (Phlm 1-2), is “pastor” at Colossae. An alternate interpretation is that Archippus, not Philemon, is the owner of the slave Onesimus and that Paul is asking Archippus to complete the service he has received in the Lord by sending Onesimus back to minister to Paul in his captivity (cf. Phlm 20).

4:18 My own hand: a postscript in Paul’s own hand was his custom; cf. Galatians 6:11-18 and 2 Thessalonians 3:17-18.

The First Letter to the Thessalonians

When Paul parted from Barnabas (Acts 15:36-41) at the beginning of what is called his second missionary journey, he chose Silvanus (Silas) as his traveling companion. Soon afterwards he took Timothy along with him (Acts 16:1-3). Paul was now clearly at the head of his own missionary band. About A.D. 50, he arrived in Greece for the first time. In making converts in Philippi and, soon afterwards, in Thessalonica, he was beset by persecution from Jews and Gentiles alike. Moving on to Beroea, he was again harassed by enemies from Thessalonica and hurriedly left for Athens (Acts 16:11–17:15). Silvanus and Timothy remained behind for a while. Paul soon sent Timothy back to Thessalonica to strengthen that community in its trials (1 Thes 3:1-5). Timothy and Silvanus finally returned to Paul when he reached Corinth (Acts 18:1-18), probably in the early summer of A.D. 51. Timothy's return with a report on conditions at Thessalonica served as the occasion for Paul's first letter (1 Thes 3:6-8).

The letter begins with a brief address (1:1) and concludes with a greeting (5:26-28). The body of the letter consists of two major parts. The first (1:2–3:13) is a set of three sections of thanksgiving connected by two apologiae (defenses) dealing, respectively, with the missionaries' previous conduct and their current concerns. Paul's thankful optimism regarding the Thessalonians' spiritual welfare is tempered by his insistence on their recognition of the selfless love shown by the missionaries. In an age of itinerant peddlers of new religions, Paul found it necessary to emphasize not only the content of his gospel but also his manner of presenting it, for both attested to God's grace as freely bestowed and powerfully effected.

The second part of the letter (4:1–5:25) is specifically hortatory or parenetic. The superabundant love for which Paul has just prayed (3:12-13) is to be shown practically by living out the norms of conduct that he has communicated to them. Specific "imperatives" of Christian life, principles for acting morally, stem from the "indicative" of one's relationship to God through Christ by the sending of the holy Spirit. Thus, moral conduct is the practical, personal expression of one's Christian faith, love, and hope.

SUMMARY

First Thessalonians, the earliest of Paul's writings, is a pastoral letter that commends the Thessalonians for their general Christian conduct, but it also exhorts them to build up one another in faith and to prepare spiritually for the second coming of Christ.

Author: Paul, with Silvanus and Timothy listed as co-senders (1:1).

Date: A.D. 50–51, the earliest writing in the NT.

Content: Thanksgiving for the Thessalonians' faith; Paul's travel plans; exhortation to maintain sound Christian moral conduct in faith, love, and hope; exhortation to work diligently; the need to live faithfully in expectation of the Lord Jesus' second coming.

The principal divisions of the First Letter to the Thessalonians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-10)
II. Previous Relations with the Thessalonians (2:1–3:13)
III. Specific Exhortations (4:1–5:25)
IV. Final Greeting (5:26-28)

Silvanus is the Latin form of the name Silas (Acts 15:22–18:5), Paul’s companion on his second missionary journey and a leader in the Jerusalem church (cf. 2 Cor 1:19).

“Grace and peace to you” is a greeting frequently used in Roman Catholic liturgy; it expresses a heartfelt wish for wholeness and well-being in God’s grace.

[2]We give thanks to God always for all of you, remembering you in our prayers, unceasingly[b] [3]calling to mind your work of faith and labor of love and endurance in hope* of our Lord Jesus Christ, before our God and Father, [4]knowing, brothers loved by God, how you were chosen.[c] [5]For our gospel did not come to you in word alone, but also in power and in the holy Spirit and [with] much conviction. You know what sort of people we were [among] you for your sake.[d] [6]And you became imitators* of us and of the Lord, receiving the word in great affliction, with joy from the holy Spirit, [7]so that you became a model for all the believers in Macedonia and in Achaia.[e] [8]For from you the word of the Lord has sounded forth not only in Macedonia and [in] Achaia, but in every place your faith in God has gone forth, so that we have no need to say anything.[f] [9]For they themselves openly declare about us what sort of reception we had among you, and how you turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God[g] [10]and to await his Son from heaven, whom he raised from [the] dead, Jesus, who delivers us from the coming wrath.[h]

Imitators: Paul frequently emphasizes the importance of good role models for faith, including himself (Phil 3:17; 2 Thes 3:9). Here he commends the Thessalonians for their good modeling for other believers in their region and beyond.

Faith, Love, and Hope: Note that Paul places “hope” last in this particular list of virtues because that is the primary theme he wishes to address to the Thessalonians, some of whom have lost hope in the face of the death of loved ones (cf. 1 Thes 2:19; 4:13; 5:8). Elsewhere he emphasizes love (1 Cor 13:13).

Wrath refers to the coming judgment of God in the end time. It is connected to God’s righteous anger over ongoing human sinfulness, seen in both the OT and the NT (cf. Ex 32:10-12; Rev 14:10).

2 [1]For you yourselves know, brothers, that our reception among you was not without effect. [2]Rather, after we had suffered and been insolently treated, as you know, in Philippi, we drew courage through our God to speak to you the gospel of God with much struggle.[a] [3]Our exhortation was not from delusion or impure motives, nor did it work through deception. [4]But as we were judged worthy* by God to be entrusted with the gospel, that is how we speak, not as trying to please human beings, but rather God, who judges our hearts.[b] [5]Nor, indeed, did we ever appear with flattering speech, as you know, or with a pretext for greed—God is witness—[6]nor did we seek praise from human beings, either from you or from others,[c] [7]although we were able to impose our weight as apostles of Christ. Rather, we were gentle* among you, as a nursing mother cares for her children. [8]With such affection for you, we were determined to share with you not only the gospel of God, but our very selves as well, so dearly beloved had you become to us. [9]You recall, brothers, our toil and drudgery. Working night and day in order not to burden any of you, we proclaimed to you the gospel of God.[d] [10]You are witnesses, and so is God, how devoutly and justly and blamelessly we behaved toward you believers. [11]As you know, we treated each one of you as a father treats his children,[e] [12]exhorting and encouraging you and insisting that you conduct yourselves as worthy of the God who calls you into his kingdom and glory.[f]

[13]And for this reason we too give thanks to God unceasingly, that, in receiving the word of God from hearing us, you received not a human word but, as it truly is, the word of God, which is now at work in you who believe. [14]*For you, brothers, have become imitators of the churches of God that are in Judea in Christ Jesus. For you suffer the same things from your compatriots as they did from the Jews, [15]*who killed both the Lord Jesus and the prophets and persecuted us; they do not please God, and are opposed to everyone,[g] [16]trying to prevent us from speaking to the Gentiles that they may be saved, thus constantly filling up the measure of their sins. But the wrath of God has finally begun to come upon them.[h]

Paul compares himself tenderly to a “nursing mother” and an attentive “father,” thus emphasizing his care and concern for his Thessalonian converts as if they were his own children.

When Paul refers to those Jews who “killed both the Lord Jesus and the prophets,” he is not making a statement about a people for all time. He is merely noting a historical fact: some Jewish leaders opposed Jesus and precipitated his death by Roman execution. Such NT passages are not anti-Semitic (Jesus and Paul were both Jews). Rather, they are a remnant of the antagonism that erupted when some Jews accepted Jesus as the long-awaited messiah. We should never apply such passages to the Jewish people as a whole, as the Catechism explicitly warns (CCC 597).

For you yourselves know that we are destined* for this. [4]For even when we were among you, we used to warn you in advance that we would undergo affliction, just as has happened, as you know.[c] [5]For this reason, when I too could bear it no longer, I sent to learn about your faith, for fear that somehow the tempter had put you to the test and our toil might come to nothing.

[6]But just now Timothy has returned to us from you, bringing us the good news of your faith and love, and that you always think kindly of us and long to see us as we long to see you. III: SPECIFIC EXHORTATIONS

General Exhortations

4 [1]Finally, brothers, we earnestly ask and exhort you in the Lord Jesus that, as you received from us how you should conduct yourselves to please God—and as you are conducting yourselves—you do so even more. [2]For you know what instructions* we gave you through the Lord Jesus.

Nevertheless we urge you, brothers, to progress even more,[d] [11]and to aspire to live a tranquil life, to mind your own affairs, and to work with your [own] hands, as we instructed you, [12]that you may conduct yourselves properly toward outsiders and not depend on anyone.

On Work

Combining lessons from both of Paul’s letters to the Thessalonians, Pope John Paul II wrote: “Paul boasts of working at his trade (he was probably a tentmaker), and thanks to that work he was able even as an Apostle to earn his own bread. ‘With toil and labor we worked night and day, that we might not burden any of you.’ Hence his instructions, in the form of exhortation and command, on the subject of work: ‘Now such persons we command and exhort in the Lord Jesus Christ to do their work in quietness and to earn their own living,’ he writes to the Thessalonians” (Laborem Exercens 26).

[14]For if we believe that Jesus died and rose, so too will God, through Jesus, bring with him those who have fallen asleep.[e] [15]Indeed, we tell you this, on the word of the Lord, that we who are alive, who are left until the coming of the Lord,* will surely not precede those who have fallen asleep.[f] [16]For the Lord himself, with a word of command, with the voice of an archangel and with the trumpet of God, will come down from heaven, and the dead in Christ will rise first.[g] [17]Then we who are alive, who are left, will be caught up together* with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air. Thus we shall always be with the Lord. [18]Therefore, console one another with these words.

Ancient Roman arch in Thessalonica

In conjunction with other NT images, some fundamentalists interpret this passage literally, as a description of the so-called rapture. They take it as a blueprint for the actions that will take place on judgment day. The evil will go to damnation, but the righteous will join the victorious Lord Jesus by ascending to glory. They believe in literally being “snatched up” by Christ in glory. Some have developed elaborate schemes of “millennial dispensationalism” to describe the thousand-year reign of Christ (Rev 20:4-7) preceded by the rapture and seven years of tribulation. Catholics and others reject such a literal reading. Instead, Paul uses stock apocalyptic imagery (loud shout, trumpet blast, clouds) to describe what is ultimately a mystery of how the last judgment will take place. Just a few verses later, Paul warns the Thessalonians not to speculate too much on such details because God alone controls them (5:1-2; see explanation at Rev 1:1 concerning apocalyptic literature).

Vigilance

2 Pt 3:10

5 1 Concerning times and seasons, brothers, you have no need for anything to be written to you.[a] 2 For you yourselves know very well that the day of the Lord will come like a thief at night.[b] 3 When people are saying, “Peace and security,” then sudden disaster comes upon them, like labor pains upon a pregnant woman, and they will not escape.

The “day of the Lord” refers to judgment day, when God will punish evildoing and reward righteousness (cf. 1 Cor 5:5; 2 Pt 3:10). Its roots are in the OT prophets who sometimes referred to coming destruction by Israel’s human enemies (Is 13:6-9) and at other times foresaw an indefinite and distant future day of judgment (Jl 2:1-2; Am 5:18-20; Zep 1:14-18). The NT associates this concept with the parousia (Greek for “coming” or “arrival”), the second coming of Jesus, that is, the time when he would return in glory to execute final judgment (Mt 24:27, 29-44).

4 But you, brothers, are not in darkness, for that day to overtake you like a thief.[c] 5 For all of you are children of the light* and children of the day. We are not of the night or of darkness. 6 Therefore, let us not sleep as the rest do, but let us stay alert and sober.[d] 7 Those who sleep go to sleep at night, and those who are drunk get drunk at night. 8 But since we are of the day, let us be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love and the helmet that is hope for salvation.[e] 9 For God did not destine us for wrath, but to gain salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ, [10]who died for us, so that whether we are awake or asleep we may live together with him.* [11]Therefore, encourage one another and build one another up, as indeed you do.[f]

The contrast between being children of light or day rather than darkness or night is not unique to the NT (cf. Lk 16:8; Jn 12:35-36; Eph 5:8). It comes from the worldview of apocalyptic literature, found in the Dead Sea Scrolls at Qumran, which date to more than one hundred years before Jesus. One part of the Rule of the Community reads: “All the children of righteousness are in the hand of the Prince of Light; they walk in the ways of light. But the children of falsehood are in the hand of the Angel of Darkness; they walk in the ways of darkness” (1 QS 3:20-21).

Concluding Prayer

2 Thes 3:16

[23] *May the God of peace himself make you perfectly holy and may you entirely, spirit, soul, and body, be preserved blameless for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.[i] [24] The one who calls you is faithful, and he will also accomplish it. [25] Brothers, pray for us [too].

IV: FINAL GREETING

[26]Greet all the brothers with a holy kiss.* [27]I adjure you by the Lord that this letter be read to all the brothers. [28]The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.

Spirit, soul, body: Nowhere else does Paul bring together these three terms that usually describe distinct aspects of human existence according to Greek categories. Hebrew thought normally conceives of the human person as a united body-soul, in contrast to the Greek distinction of body and soul. The “spirit” is yet another distinctive part of human beings, emphasizing spirituality. All three words can be used separately to mean the entire human person. Here, however, Paul uses them jointly to emphasize the wholeness of the human person. He desires that each individual becomes entirely holy and blameless in Jesus Christ. Perhaps the expression also evokes the total dedication to love enjoined on the Jews who were instructed to love God “with all your heart, with all your soul, with all your mind” (Dt 6:5; cf. Mt 22:37), that is, with all that you are.

“The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ … be with you” is regularly used by the church at Mass and other liturgies. Paul uses this formula or similar ones in his letters as a benediction, an opening or final blessing. Liturgically, it expresses a deep wish that the blessing and favor of Jesus be with the hearers to cement the bond between them and Jesus.

Structurally, there is a close relationship between 1 and 2 Thessalonians seen in the verbal similarities of some passages:

First Thessalonians	Second Thessalonians
1:1 Opening and greeting	1:1-2 Opening and greeting
1:2-4 First thanksgiving	1:3 First thanksgiving
2:13 Second thanksgiving	2:13 Second thanksgiving
3:11-13 Prayer	2:16-17 Prayer
4:1 Introduction to exhortation	3:1-6 Introduction to exhortation
5:23 Second prayer	3:16 Second prayer
5:27-28 Closing	3:17-18 Closing

Yet these similarities can be deceptive. Second Thessalonians contains numerous concepts or phrases (e.g., “give comfort,” “eternal comfort,” “comfort the heart,” “good hope,” “believe the truth”) that are foreign to Paul’s undisputed letters, supporting speculation that someone other than Paul may have copied from First Thessalonians at a later date and written in Paul’s name. Furthermore, the eschatological outlook of the two letters seems divergent, with Second Thessalonians displaying less urgency regarding the parousia than First Thessalonians. This is why some designate Second Thessalonians an example of a pseudonymous letter.

1:1 On the address, see the note on Romans 1:1-7.

1:3 Faith … love … hope: this, along with 1 Thessalonians 5:8, is the earliest mention in Christian literature of the three “theological virtues” (see 1 Cor 13:13). The order here stresses eschatological hope, in line with the letter’s emphasis on the Lord’s second, triumphal coming, or parousia (1:10; 2:12, 19; 3:13; 4:13–5:11; 5:23).

1:6 Imitators: the Pauline theme of “imitation” (see 2:14; 1 Cor 4:16; 11:1; 2 Thes 3:9) is rooted in Paul’s view of solidarity in Christ through sharing in Jesus’ cross and in the Spirit of the risen Lord.

2:4 Judged worthy: Paul regards “worthiness” not as grounded in one’s own talent or moral self-righteousness but in God’s discernment of genuinely selfless attitudes and actions (see 2 Cor 10:17-18).

2:7 Gentle: many excellent manuscripts read “infants” (nēpioi), but “gentle” (ēpioi) better suits the context here.

2:14 Luke’s picture of the persecutions at Philippi (by Gentiles) and in Thessalonica and Beroea (by Jews) seems to be considerably schematized (Acts 16:11-40; 17:1-15). Paul pictures the Thessalonian community as composed of converts from paganism (1:9) and speaks here of persecution by their (pagan) compatriots rather than by Jews.

2:15-16 Paul is speaking of historical opposition on the part of Palestinian Jews in particular and does so only some twenty years after Jesus’ crucifixion. Even so, he quickly proceeds to depict the persecutors typologically, in apocalyptic terms. His remarks give no grounds for anti-Semitism to those willing to understand him, especially in view of Paul’s pride in his own ethnic and religious background (Rom 9:1-5; 10:1; 11:1-3; Phil 3:4-6). Sinful conduct (2:16) is itself an anticipation of the ultimate wrath or judgment of God (Rom 1:18–2:5), whether or not it is perceived as such.

3:3 We are destined: the Greek phraseology and the context suggest Paul’s concern to alert his readers to difficulties he knew they would necessarily face and to enable them to see their present experience in the light of what he warned them would happen in the future. This line of thought is followed in 2 Thessalonians 2:1-15.

3:9-10 The tension between Paul’s optimism concerning the Thessalonians’ faith and his worries about their perseverance remains unresolved. Perhaps this is accounted for not only by the continuing harassment but also by the shortness of his own stay in Thessalonica (even if that were over twice as long as the conventional three weeks that Luke assigns to it, Acts 17:2).

4:2 Instructions: these include specific guidelines on the basis of the Lord’s authority, not necessarily sayings Jesus actually uttered. More profoundly, as 1 Thessalonians 4:8 implies, the instructions are practical principles that Paul worked out in accordance with his understanding of the role of the Spirit.

4:3-8 Many think that this passage deals with a variety of moral regulations (fornication, adultery, sharp business practices). It can be more specifically interpreted as bringing general norms to bear on a specific problem, namely, marriage within degrees of consanguinity (as between uncle and niece) forbidden in Jewish law but allowed according to a Greek heiress law, which would insure retention of an inheritance within the family and perhaps thereby occasion divorce. In that case, “immorality” (4:3) should be rendered as “unlawful marriage” and “this matter” (4:6) as “a lawsuit.” The phrase in 1 Thessalonians 4:4, “acquire a wife for himself,” has often been interpreted to mean “control one’s body.”

4:15 Coming of the Lord: Paul here assumes that the second coming, or parousia, will occur within his own lifetime but insists that the time or season is unknown (5:1-2). Nevertheless, the most important aspect of the parousia for him was the fulfillment of union with Christ. His pastoral exhortation focuses first on hope for the departed faithful, then (5:1-3) on the need of preparedness for those who have to achieve their goal.

4:17 Will be caught up together: literally, snatched up, carried off; cf. 2 Corinthians 12:2; Revelation 12:5. From the Latin verb here used, rapiemur, has come the idea of "the rapture," when believers will be transported away from the woes of the world; this construction combines this verse with Matthew 24:40-41 (see the note there) // Luke 17:34-35 and passages from Revelation in a scheme of millennial dispensationalism.

5:5 Children of the light: that is, belonging to the daylight of God's personal revelation and expected to achieve it (an analogous development of imagery that appears in Jn 12:36).

5:10 Characteristically, Paul plays on words suggesting ultimate and anticipated death and life. Union with the crucified and risen Lord at his parousia is anticipated in some measure in contrasted states of our temporal life. The essential element he urges is our indestructible personal union in Christ's own life (see Rom 5:1-10).

5:19-21 Paul's buoyant encouragement of charismatic freedom sometimes occasioned excesses that he or others had to remedy (see 1 Cor 14; 2 Thes 2:1-15; 2 Pt 3:1-16).

5:23 Another possible translation is, "May the God of peace himself make you perfectly holy and sanctify your spirit fully, and may both soul and body be preserved blameless for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." In either case, Paul is not offering an anthropological or philosophical analysis of human nature. Rather, he looks to the wholeness of what may be called the supernatural and natural aspects of a person's service of God.

5:26 Kiss: the holy embrace (see Rom 16:16; 1 Cor 16:20; 2 Cor 13:12; 1 Pt 5:14) was a greeting of respect and affection, perhaps given during a liturgy at which Paul's letter would have been read.

The Second Letter to the Thessalonians

This letter is addressed to the same church as the letter that precedes it in the canon and contains many expressions parallel to those in the First Letter to the Thessalonians, indeed verbatim with them. Yet other aspects of the contents of the Second Letter to the Thessalonians suggest a more impersonal tone and changed circumstances in the situation at Thessalonica.

The letter begins with an address (1:1-2) that expands only slightly on that of 1 Thessalonians 1:1. It ends with a greeting insisting on its Pauline authority in the face of false claims made in Paul's name (see note on 2:2). The body of the letter falls into three short parts, of which the second is notoriously difficult (chap. 2).

The opening thanksgiving and prayer (1:3-12) speak of the Thessalonians' increasing faith and love in the face of outside persecution. God's eventual judgment against persecutors and his salvation for the faithful are already evidenced by the very fact of persecution. The second part (2:1-17), the heart of the letter, deals with a problem threatening the faith of the community. A message involving a prophetic oracle and apparently a forged letter, possibly presented at a liturgical gathering (cf. 2:2 and 1 Cor 14:26-33), to the effect that the day of the Lord and all that it means have already come, has upset the life of the Thessalonian church.

The writer counters their preoccupation with the date of the parousia (or coming again of the Lord Jesus from heaven, 2:1) by recalling Paul's teaching concerning what must happen first and by going on to describe what will happen at the Lord's coming (2:8); he indicates the twofold process by which the "activity of Satan" and God's actions (2:9-11) are working out, namely, a growing division between believers and those who succumb to false prophecy and "the lie." He concludes by insisting on Pauline traditions and by praying for divine strength (2:13-17). The closing part of the letter (3:1-16) deals in particular with the apostle's directives and model style of life and with correction of disorderly elements within the community.

SUMMARY

Second Thessalonians warns against being deceived about the details of Christ’s second coming. It calls on the readers to pray for Paul and faithfully imitate his own example of work and conduct.

Author: Uncertain; either Paul, with Silvanus and Timothy listed as co-senders (1:1), or an anonymous later author.

Date: A.D. 51–52, if from Paul’s own hand, or A.D. 80–100 if from a later author.

Content: Instruction about Christ’s second coming; importance of prayer; warnings about “the lawless one” who can mislead the community; exhortation to work hard, imitating Paul’s own example.

Traditional opinion holds that this letter was written shortly after 1 Thessalonians. Occasionally it has been argued that 2 Thessalonians was written first or that the two letters are addressed to different segments within the church at Thessalonica (2 Thessalonians being directed to the Jewish Christians there) or even that 2 Thessalonians was originally written to some other nearby place where Paul carried out mission work, such as Philippi or Beroea. Increasingly in recent times, however, the opinion has been advanced that 2 Thessalonians is a pseudepigraph, that is, a letter written authoritatively in Paul’s name, to maintain apostolic traditions in a later period, perhaps during the last two decades of the first century.

In any case, the presumed audience of Second Thessalonians and certain features of its style and content require that it be read and studied in a Pauline context, particularly that provided by 1 Thessalonians. At the same time, and especially if the letter is regarded as not by Paul himself, its apocalyptic presentation of preconditions for the parousia (2:1-12) may profit from and require recourse to a wider biblical basis for interpretation, namely Old Testament books such as Daniel and Isaiah and especially, in the New Testament, the synoptic apocalyptic discourse (Mk 13; Mt 24–25; Lk 21:5-36) and the Book of Revelation.

The principal divisions of the Second Letter to the Thessalonians are the following:

I. Address (1:1-12)

II. Warning Against Deception Concerning the Parousia (2:1-17)
III. Concluding Exhortations (3:1-16)
IV. Final Greetings (3:17-18)

I: ADDRESS

Greeting*

1 Thes 1:1

1 [1]Paul, Silvanus, and Timothy to the church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ:[a] [2]grace to you and peace from God [our] Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

Silvanus, An Unsung Leader

Though little is known of Silvanus, he does receive mention as a minister with Paul in the greeting of both letters to the Thessalonians, and that of Second Corinthians. He is also described as a messenger in the final verses of First Peter. Most of what we know beyond these citations is found in Acts 15–18, where he is identified by his Greek name, Silas.

In Acts (15:22), Silas emerged as a "leader among the brothers" at the time the Gospel was spreading among the Gentiles. From what is written we know he was a trusted messenger delivering the news from the church's first council in Jerusalem (15:22); he was recognized as a prophet who exhorted and strengthened the community (15:32); he was chosen by Paul to travel and preach with him in Syria and Cilicia (15:40-41) and then into other parts of the empire; he was imprisoned with Paul at Philippi, but they miraculously escaped and evangelized the guards (ch. 16); Silas witnessed Paul's famous speech at the Areopagus (17:22-34).

Some leaders are like Paul, held up for all the world to see, made famous by large actions and fervent passion. Others are more like Silas, recognized as a leader by immediate contacts but not usually the subject of debate, discussion, or public praise. These unsung leaders are the day-to-day promoters of the kingdom of God.

2 [1]We ask you, brothers, with regard to the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ and our assembling with him,[a] [2]not to be shaken out of your minds suddenly, or to be alarmed either by a "spirit,"* or by an oral statement, or by a letter allegedly from us to the effect that the day of the Lord is at hand.[b] [3]Let no one deceive you in any way. For unless the apostasy comes first and the lawless one is revealed,* the one doomed to perdition, [4][c]who opposes and exalts himself above every so-called god and object of worship, so as to seat himself in the temple of God,* claiming that he is a god— [5]do you not recall that while I was still with you I told you these things? [6]And now you know what is restraining,* that he may be revealed in his time. [7]*For the mystery of lawlessness is already at work. But the one who restrains is to do so only for the present, until he is removed from the scene.[d] [8]And then the lawless one will be revealed, whom the Lord [Jesus] will kill with the breath of his mouth and render powerless by the manifestation of his coming,[e] [9]the one whose coming springs from the power of Satan in every mighty deed and in signs and wonders that lie,[f] [10]and in every wicked deceit for those who are perishing because they have not accepted the love of truth so that they may be saved. [11]Therefore, God is sending them a deceiving power so that they may believe the lie, [12]that all who have not believed the truth but have approved wrongdoing may be condemned.

Expectation of the second coming of Christ (Greek, parousia) was a prominent feature in the early church. The notion most likely is rooted in the promise of Jesus to return in glory for the sake of judgment and vindication, even though the Greek word is not used in every instance in Jesus' teaching (Mk 13:26; 14:62; Mt 24:36-44). The urgency of this expectation made a serious impact on the teaching of Paul, as can be seen in First Thessalonians.

Pseudonymity ("false name"), the act of writing in someone else's name, was an acceptable phenomenon in the ancient world. At times, disciples of famous personages would write to invoke the authority of their patron. At other times, authors used pseudonyms because they addressed similar themes or issues from earlier writers. Authenticity, however, could be an issue if the intended audience thought a letter or document was fraudulent in content or intent (cf. 2 Thes 3:17). Modern scholars are divided on whether this letter was written by Paul himself or by someone writing in his name.

Apostasy is the act of renouncing one's faith, sometimes in the face of severe persecution. It was a periodic problem in the early church, especially at times when persecutions became particularly intense. The community sometimes regarded apostates as hopelessly condemned because of their betrayal.

Sanctification by the Holy Spirit is receiving the gift of holiness from God that enables one to become truly a child of God (cf. Rom 8:14-16). It means that one is cleansed of impurities and set apart for service.

[13]But we ought to give thanks to God for you always, brothers loved by the Lord, because God chose you as the firstfruits* for salvation through sanctification by the Spirit and belief in truth.[g] [14]To this end he has [also] called you through our gospel to possess the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.[h] [15]Therefore, brothers, stand firm and hold fast to the traditions that you were taught, either by an oral statement or by a letter of ours.*

[16]May our Lord Jesus Christ himself and God our Father, who has loved us and given us everlasting encouragement and good hope through his grace, [17]encourage your hearts and strengthen them in every good deed and word.

Encouragement is like bread. It nourishes those whose spirits have been quenched. It revives the fainthearted. It sustains the spirit of life. Give generously from your well of encouragement.

[6]We instruct you, brothers, in the name of [our] Lord Jesus Christ, to shun any brother who conducts himself in a disorderly way and not according to the tradition they received from us.* [7]For you know how one must imitate us. For we did not act in a disorderly way among you, [8]nor did we eat food received free from anyone. On the contrary, in toil and drudgery, night and day we worked, so as not to burden any of you.[d] [9]Not that we do not have the right. Rather, we wanted to present ourselves as a model for you, so that you might imitate us.[e] [10]In fact, when we were with you, we instructed you that if anyone was unwilling to work, neither should that one eat.[f] [11]We hear that some are conducting themselves among you in a disorderly way, by not keeping busy but minding the business of others.[g] [12]Such people we instruct and urge in the Lord Jesus Christ to work quietly and to eat their own food. [13]But you, brothers, do not be remiss in doing good. [14]If anyone does not obey our word as expressed in this letter, take note of this person not to associate with him, that he may be put to shame. [15]Do not regard him as an enemy but admonish him as a brother.[h] [16]May the Lord of peace himself give you peace at all times and in every way. The Lord be with all of you.[i]

This line (3:10) was quoted in the national constitution of the former Soviet Union! It is here in this letter to address the concern that some in the community felt no need to work, since they thought they were already living the resurrected life. The author insists they must get back to work if they wish to be fed.

Ponder the gospels. Record moments in the life of Jesus when he was clearly revealed as a person of peace. Now look through the pages of your own life. Pray that the Lord of peace bless and enfold you in that same peace.

IV: FINAL GREETINGS

j
1 Cor 16:21; Gal 6:11

[17]This greeting is in my own hand, Paul’s. This is the sign in every letter; this is how I write.[j] [18]The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with all of you.

1:1-2 On the address, see the note on Romans 1:1-7 and cf. 1 Thessalonians 1:1.

1:3-12 On the thanksgiving, see the note on Romans 1:8 and cf. 1 Thessalonians 1:2-10. Paul’s gratitude to God for the faith and love of the Thessalonians (1:3) and his Christian pride in their faithful endurance (1:4-5) contrast with the condemnation announced for those who afflict them, a judgment to be carried out at the parousia (1:6-10), which is described in vivid language drawn from Old Testament apocalyptic. A prayer for the fulfillment of God’s purpose in the Thessalonians (1:11-12) completes the section, as is customary in a Pauline letter (cf. 1 Thes 1:2-3).

1:10 Among his holy ones: in the Old Testament, this term can refer to an angelic throng (cf. also Jude 14), but here, in parallel with among all who have believed, it can refer to the triumphant people of God.

1:12 The grace of our God and Lord Jesus Christ: the Greek can also be translated, “the grace of our God and of the Lord Jesus Christ.”

2:1-17 The Thessalonians have been shaken by a message purporting to come from Paul himself that the day of the Lord is already present. He warns against this deception in eschatology by citing a scenario of events that must first occur (2:3-12) before the end will come. The overall point Paul makes is the need to reject such lies as Satan sends; he also reaffirms the Thessalonians in their calling (2:13-14). They are to uphold what Paul himself has taught (2:15). There is a concluding prayer for their strengthening (2:16-17). As in 2 Thessalonians 1:8-10, the Old Testament provides a good deal of coloring; cf. especially Isaiah 14:13-14; 66:15, 18-21; Ezekiel 28:2-9; Daniel 11:36-37. The contents of 2 Thessalonians 2:3b-8 may come from a previously existing apocalypse. The details have been variously interpreted.

An alternative to the possibilities noted below understands that an oracular utterance, supposedly coming from a prophetic spirit (2:2-3a), has so disrupted the community’s thinking that its effects may be compared to those of the mania connected with the worship of the Greek god Dionysus. On this view, the writer seems to allude in 2 Thessalonians 2:6-8 to Dionysiac “seizure,” although, of course, ironically, somewhat as Paul alludes to witchcraft (“an evil eye”) in Galatians 3:1 in speaking of the threat to faith posed by those disturbing the Galatians (Gal 1:6-7; 5:10b). On this view of 2 Thessalonians 2, the Greek participles katechon (rendered above as what is restraining) and katechōn (the one who restrains) are to be translated “the seizing power” in 2 Thessalonians 2:6 and “the seizer” in 2 Thessalonians 2:7. They then allude to a pseudocharismatic force or spirit of Dionysiac character that has suddenly taken hold of the Thessalonian community (see 2:2). The addressees know (2:6) this force or spirit because of the problem it is causing. This pseudocharismatic force or spirit is a kind of anticipation and advance proof of the ultimate, climactic figure (the lawless one or the rebel, 2:3), of which the community has been warned (see the note on 1 Thes 3:3). It is, however, only the beginning of the end that the latter's manifestation entails; the end is not yet. For in the course of the mystery of lawlessness (2:7), false prophetism, after it ceases in the Thessalonian community, will be manifested in the world at large (2:8-12), where it will also be eliminated in turn by the Lord Jesus.

2:2 "Spirit": a Spirit-inspired utterance or ecstatic revelation. An oral statement: literally, a "word" or pronouncement, not necessarily of ecstatic origin. A letter allegedly sent by us: possibly a forged letter, so that Paul calls attention in 2 Thessalonians 3:17 to his practice of concluding a genuine letter with a summary note or greeting in his own hand, as at Galatians 6:11-18 and elsewhere.

2:3b-5 This incomplete sentence (anacoluthon, 2:4) recalls what the Thessalonians had already been taught, an apocalyptic scenario depicting, in terms borrowed especially from Daniel 11:36-37 and related verses, human self-assertiveness against God in the temple of God itself. The lawless one represents the climax of such activity in this account.

2:4 Seat himself in the temple of God: a reflection of the language in Daniel 7:23-25; 8:9-12; 9:27; 11:36-37; 12:11 about the attempt of Antiochus IV Epiphanes to set up a statue of Zeus in the Jerusalem temple and possibly of the Roman emperor Caligula to do a similar thing (Mk 13:14). Here the imagery suggests an attempt to install someone in the place of God, claiming that he is a god (cf. Ez 28:2). Usually, it is the Jerusalem temple that is assumed to be meant; on the alternative view sketched above (see the note on 2:1-17), the temple refers to the Christian community.

2:6-7 What is restraining … the one who restrains: neuter and masculine, respectively, of a force and person holding back the lawless one. The Thessalonians know what is meant (2:6), but the terms, seemingly found only in this passage and in writings dependent on it, have been variously interpreted. Traditionally, 2:6 has been applied to the Roman empire and 2:7 to the Roman emperor (in Paul's day, Nero) as bulwarks holding back chaos (cf. Rom 13:1-7). A second interpretation suggests that cosmic or angelic powers are binding Satan (2:9) and so restraining him; some relate this to an anti-Christ figure (1 Jn 2:18) or to Michael the archangel (Rev 12:7-9; 20:1-3). A more recent view suggests that it is the preaching of the Christian gospel that restrains the end, for in God's plan the end cannot come until the gospel is preached to all nations (Mk 13:10); in that case, Paul as missionary preacher par excellence is "the one who restrains," whose removal (death) will bring the end (2:7). On the alternative view (see the note on 2:1-17), the phrases should be referred to that which and to him who seizes (a prophet) in ecstasy so as to have him speak pseudo-oracles.

2:7-12 The lawless one and the one who restrains are involved in an activity or process, the mystery of lawlessness, behind which Satan stands (2:9). The action of the Lord [Jesus] in overcoming the lawless one is described in Old Testament language (with the breath of his mouth; cf. Is 11:4; Jb 4:9; Rev 19:15). His coming is literally the Lord's "parousia." The biblical concept of the "holy war," eschatologically conceived, may underlie the imagery.

2:13 As the firstfruits: there is also strong manuscript evidence for the reading, "God chose you from the beginning," thus providing a focus on God's activity from beginning to end; firstfruits is a Pauline term, however; cf. Romans 8:23; 11:16; 16:5 among other references.

2:15 Reference to an oral statement and a letter (2:2) and the content here, including a formula of conclusion (cf. 1 Cor 16:13; Gal 5:1), suggest that 2 Thessalonians 2:1-15 or even 2 Thessalonians 2:1-17 are to be taken as a literary unit, notwithstanding the incidental thanksgiving formula in 2 Thessalonians 2:13.

3:1-18 The final chapter urges the Thessalonians to pray for Paul and his colleagues (3:1-2) and reiterates confidence in the Thessalonians (3:3-5), while admonishing them about a specific problem in their community that has grown out of the intense eschatological speculation, namely, not to work but to become instead disorderly busybodies (3:6-15). A benediction (3:16) and postscript in Paul's own hand round out the letter. On 2 Thessalonians 3:17-18, cf. the note on 2 Thessalonians 2:2.

3:6 Some members of the community, probably because they regarded the parousia as imminent or the new age of the Lord to be already here (2:2), had apparently ceased to work for a living. The disciplinary problem they posed could be rooted in distorted thinking about Paul's own teaching (cf. 1 Thes 2:16; 3:3-4; 5:4-5) or, more likely, in a forged letter (2:2) and the type of teaching dealt with in 2 Thessalonians 2:1-15. The apostle's own moral teaching, reflected in his selfless labors for others, was rooted in a deep doctrinal concern for the gospel message (cf. 1 Thes 2:3-10).

The First Letter to

Timothy

The three letters, First and Second Timothy and Titus, form a distinct group within the Pauline corpus. In the collection of letters by the Apostle to the Gentiles, they differ from the others in form and contents. All three suggest they were written late in Paul’s career. The opponents are not “Judaizers” as in Galatians but false teachers stressing “knowledge” (gnōsis; see note on 6:20-21). Attention is given especially to correct doctrine and church organization. Jesus’ second coming recedes into the background compared to references in Paul’s earlier letters (though not Colossians and Ephesians). The three letters are addressed not to congregations but to those who shepherd congregations (Latin, pastores). These letters were first named “Pastoral Epistles” in the eighteenth century because they all are concerned with the work of a pastor in caring for the community or communities under his charge.

The first of the Pastorals, 1 Timothy, is presented as having been written from Macedonia. Timothy, whom Paul converted, was of mixed Jewish and Gentile parentage (Acts 16:1-3). He was the apostle’s companion on both the second and the third missionary journeys (Acts 16:3; 19:22) and was often sent by him on special missions (Acts 19:22; 1 Cor 4:17; 1 Thes 3:2). In 1 Timothy (1:3), he is described as the administrator of the entire Ephesian community.

The letter instructs Timothy on his duty to restrain false and useless teaching (1:3-11; 4:1-5; 6:3-16) and proposes principles pertaining to his relationship with the older members of the community (5:1-2) and with the presbyters (1 Tm 5:17-22). It gives rules for aid to widows (5:3-8) and their selection for charitable ministrations (5:9-16) and also deals with liturgical celebrations (2:1-15), selections for the offices of bishop and deacon (3:1-13), relation of slaves with their masters (6:1-2), and obligations of the wealthier members of the community (6:17-19). This letter also reminds Timothy of the prophetic character of his office (1:12-20) and encourages him in his exercise of it (4:6-16). The central passage of the letter (3:14-16) expresses the principal motive that should guide the conduct of Timothy—preservation of the purity of the church’s doctrine against false teaching. On this same note the letter concludes (6:20-21).

SUMMARY

In First Timothy Paul (or someone in Paul’s name) gives practical instructions to his younger colleague Timothy about how best to do his ministry. It is filled with practical advice as well as warnings and exhortations about maintaining the Christian faith in the face of tempting “false knowledge.”

Author: Either Paul or a disciple writing at a later time to Timothy.

Date: Circa A.D. 63–65 or 90–110, depending on authorship.

Content: Warnings against false doctrine and exhortation to guard the true faith; instructions for various ministers.

From the late second century to the nineteenth, Pauline authorship of the three Pastoral Epistles went unchallenged. Since then, the attribution of these letters to Paul has been questioned. Most scholars are convinced that Paul could not have been responsible for the vocabulary and style, the concept of church organization, or the theological expressions found in these letters. A second group believes, on the basis of statistical evidence, that the vocabulary and style are Pauline, even if at first sight the contrary seems to be the case. They state that the concept of church organization in the letters is not as advanced as the questioners of Pauline authorship hold since the notion of hierarchical order in a religious community existed in Israel before the time of Christ, as evidenced in the Dead Sea Scrolls. Finally, this group sees affinities between the theological thought of the Pastorals and that of the unquestionably genuine letters of Paul. Other scholars, while conceding a degree of validity to the positions mentioned above, suggest that the apostle made use of a secretary who was responsible for the composition of the letters. A fourth group of scholars believes that these letters are the work of a compiler, that they are based on traditions about Paul in his later years, and that they include, in varying amounts, actual fragments of genuine Pauline correspondence.

If Paul is considered the more immediate author, the Pastorals are to be dated between the end of his first Roman imprisonment (Acts 28:16) and his execution under Nero (A.D. 63–67); if they are regarded as only more remotely Pauline, their date may be as late as the early second century. In spite of these problems of authorship and dating, the Pastorals are illustrative of early Christian life and remain an important element of canonical scripture.

The principal divisions of the First Letter to Timothy are the following:

I. Address (1:1-2)
II. Sound Teaching (1:3-20)

1 [1]Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by command of God our savior and of Christ Jesus our hope,a [2]to Timothy, my true child in faith: grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.b

[3]*I repeat the request I made of you when I was on my way to Macedonia,[c] that you stay in Ephesus to instruct certain people not to teach false doctrines [4]*or to concern themselves with myths and endless genealogies, which promote speculations rather than the plan of God that is to be received by faith.[d] [5]The aim of this instruction is love from a pure heart, a good conscience, and a sincere faith.[e] [6]Some people have deviated from these and turned to meaningless talk,[f] [7]wanting to be teachers of the law, but without understanding either what they are saying or what they assert with such assurance.

[8]We know that the law is good, provided that one uses it as law,[g] [9]with the understanding that law is meant not for a righteous person but for the lawless and unruly, the godless and sinful, the unholy and profane, those who kill their fathers or mothers, murderers, [10]the unchaste, sodomites, kidnappers, liars, perjurers, and whatever else is opposed to sound teaching,[h] [11]according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, with which I have been entrusted.[i]

Imagine a pure, sweet fountain of bubbling water. The fountain is symbolic of your good heart, your sincere faith. Now imagine that fountain in the center of your being. It is united to the heart of Christ. Out of this fountain your love flows out into the world.

Getting It Right … What Is a Myth?

The author’s warning against myths, genealogies, and speculation in 1:4 indicates a concern over outside influences that threaten to lure people away from authentic faith. Myth here means a fabricated or untrue story. It is not to be equated with the type of “myth” found in the book of Genesis (e.g., the creation and fall stories in Gn 1–11), which expresses a profound truth enshrined in ancient tales.

As with Second Timothy and Titus, this letter shows great concern to preserve authentic faith, protecting against external—perhaps pagan—influences. Most likely, some members of the community were being attracted to new philosophical or spiritual messages that contradicted Christian belief (cf. 4:7; 6:20). This perspective reminds us how tempting novelties or allegedly new “knowledge” can be.

[12]I am grateful to him who has strengthened me, Christ Jesus our Lord, because he considered me trustworthy in appointing me to the ministry.[j] [13]I was once a blasphemer and a persecutor and an arrogant man, but I have been mercifully treated because I acted out of ignorance in my unbelief.[k] [14]Indeed, the grace of our Lord has been abundant, along with the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus.[l] [15]This saying is trustworthy* and deserves full acceptance: Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Of these I am the foremost.[m] [16]But for that reason I was mercifully treated, so that in me, as the foremost, Christ Jesus might display all his patience as an example for those who would come to believe in him for everlasting life. [17]To the king of ages,* incorruptible, invisible, the only God, honor and glory forever and ever. Amen.[n]

Your gift to me, O God, has been your infinite mercy right in the midst of my sinfulness. So much you overlook because of your love. Thank you for trusting me to minister in your name.

Prayer and Conduct

2 [1]*First of all, then, I ask that supplications, prayers, petitions, and thanksgivings be offered for everyone,[a] [2]for kings and for all in authority, that we may lead a quiet and tranquil life in all devotion and dignity. [3]This is good and pleasing to God our savior,[b] [4]who wills everyone to be saved and to come to knowledge of the truth.[c]

We have been given a conscience to discern right from wrong. When we reject the guidance of this conscience we run the risk of being marooned on the island of our egotism. It is a very lonely island.

[5]For there is one God.
There is also one mediator between God and the human race,
Christ Jesus, himself human,[d]
[6]who gave himself as ransom for all.

8 It is my wish, then, that in every place the men should pray, lifting up holy hands, without anger or argument. 9 Similarly, [too,] women should adorn themselves with proper conduct, with modesty and self-control, not with braided hairstyles and gold ornaments, or pearls, or expensive clothes,[g] 10 but rather, as befits women who profess reverence for God, with good deeds.[h] 11 A woman must receive instruction silently and under complete control.[i] 12 I do not permit a woman to teach or to have authority over a man. She must be quiet. 13 For Adam was formed first, then Eve.[j] 14 Further, Adam was not deceived, but the woman was deceived and transgressed.[k] 15 But she will be saved through motherhood, provided women persevere in faith and love and holiness, with self-control.[l]

Getting It Right … Paul and Women

Paul's views on women must be placed in the context in which they were written. In Paul's day, women and men had distinctive social roles that were a normal part of life. Women led more restrictive lives, especially in the Jewish world, while men participated more fully both in secular society and religious circles. These social constraints are not to be viewed as permanent religious teachings but as social conventions typical of Paul's day. This applies even more to First Timothy, which may have been written at a later time, when more stringent policies about women arose.

A nuanced view of Paul's relationship with women takes into account the large number of his coworkers who were women (cf. Rom 16:1-23; Prisca, Mary, Junia, Tryphaena, Tryphosa, the mother of Rufus, Julia, etc.). Some of them were likely heads of households where Christians gathered for prayer (e.g., Lydia, Acts 16:14-15). Others were formal ministers of some sort (e.g., Phoebe the deacon, Rom 16:1). More important, Paul's teaching about the new equality that comes with life in Jesus Christ is essential. In Christ, all barriers between women and men, slave and free, Jew and Gentile are broken down (Gal 3:28).

In short, Paul respected women in general and incorporated many of them in ministry.

The Pastoral Letters of Paul exhibit a distinctive division of labor among ministers in the church. These evolved over time into the hierarchical structure of holy orders: bishop, priest, and deacon. The familiar Greek terms are episkopos, presbyteros, and diakonos. These roles in the Pastoral Letters are not as clear or definitive as they became in later history. Yet First Timothy offers explicit instruction and encouragement in ch. 3 about Timothy's role as a leader in the community. When Paul moved on to another community, it was customary to ask certain coworkers to continue his ministry and to be a conduit for information between him and the community. Timothy and Titus are two such figures.

Qualifications of Various Ministers

Ti 1:6-9

b

Heb 13:5

2 Cor 8:21; 2 Tm 2:26

3 1*This saying is trustworthy:* whoever aspires to the office of bishop desires a noble task.[a] 2Therefore, a bishop must be irreproachable, married only once, temperate, self-controlled, decent, hospitable, able to teach, 3not a drunkard, not aggressive, but gentle, not contentious, not a lover of money.[b] 4He must manage his own household well, keeping his children under control with perfect dignity; 5for if a man does not know how to manage his own household, how can he take care of the church of God? 6He should not be a recent convert, so that he may not become conceited and thus incur the devil's punishment.* 7He must also have a good reputation among outsiders, so that he may not fall into disgrace, the devil's trap.[c]

8*Similarly, deacons must be dignified, not deceitful, not addicted to drink, not greedy for sordid gain, 9holding fast to the mystery of the faith with a clear conscience. 10Moreover, they should be tested first; then, if there is nothing against them, let them serve as deacons. 11Women,* similarly, should be dignified, not slanderers, but temperate and faithful in everything.[d] 12Deacons may be married only once and must manage their children and their households well. 13Thus those who serve well as deacons gain good standing and much confidence in their faith in Christ Jesus.

The Mystery of Our Religion*

Eph 2:19-22

[14]I am writing you about these matters, although I hope to visit you soon. [15]But if I should be delayed, you should know how to behave in the household of God, which is the church of the living God, the pillar and foundation of truth.[e] [16]Undeniably great is the mystery of devotion,

Who* was manifested in the flesh, vindicated in the spirit,
seen by angels,
proclaimed to the Gentiles, believed in throughout the world, taken up in glory.[f]

f
Jn 1:14; Rom 1:3-4

The church uses this doxology (3:16) in praise of Christ during Evening Prayer in the Liturgy of the Hours for the feasts of the Transfiguration and Epiphany. It succinctly summarizes Christ’s significance for the whole world.

False Asceticism*

4 [1]Now the Spirit explicitly says that in the last times some will turn away from the faith by paying attention to deceitful spirits and demonic instructions[a] [2]through the hypocrisy of liars with branded consciences. [3]They forbid marriage and require abstinence from foods that God created to be received with thanksgiving by those who believe and know the truth.[b] [4]For everything created by God is good, and nothing is to be rejected when received with thanksgiving,[c] [5]for it is made holy by the invocation of God in prayer.*

Train yourself for devotion,[d] 8for, while physical training is of limited value, devotion is valuable in every respect, since it holds a promise of life both for the present and for the future.[e] 9This saying is trustworthy and deserves full acceptance.[f] 10For this we toil and struggle,* because we have set our hope on the living God, who is the savior of all, especially of those who believe.[g]

11*Command and teach these things. 12Let no one have contempt for your youth,* but set an example for those who believe, in speech, conduct, love, faith, and purity.[h] 13Until I arrive, attend to the reading,* exhortation, and teaching. 14Do not neglect the gift you have, which was conferred on you through the prophetic word* with the imposition of hands of the presbyterate.[i] 15Be diligent in these matters, be absorbed in them, so that your progress may be evident to everyone. 16Attend to yourself and to your teaching; persevere in both tasks, for by doing so you will save both yourself and those who listen to you.

IV: DUTIES TOWARD OTHERS

Lv 19:32; Ti 2:2

5 [1] *Do not rebuke an older man, but appeal to him as a father. Treat younger men as brothers,[a] [2] older women as mothers, and younger women as sisters with complete purity.

Rules for Widows

Jer 49:11; Lk 2:37; 18:7

[3]Honor widows who are truly widows. [4]But if a widow has children or grandchildren, let these first learn to perform their religious duty to their own family and to make recompense to their parents, for this is pleasing to God. [5]The real widow, who is all alone, has set her hope on God and continues in supplications and prayers night and day.[b] [6]But the one who is self-indulgent is dead while she lives. [7]Command this, so that they may be irreproachable. [8]And whoever does not provide for relatives and especially family members has denied the faith and is worse than an unbeliever.

There are indications in this text and in some church documents of the early centuries that there may have been an officially recognized ministry of widows on behalf of the church. The language of enrollment and the listing of qualifications (vv. 9-10) lead some scholars to believe that these women were recognized at least for those things mentioned in the passage: lives of prayer, care for other women, perhaps even teaching (cf. Ti 2). While many passages of Scripture remind us of the duty of the community to care for widows, the Pastoral Letters remind us that in some circumstances widows themselves contributed to building up the church.

Jn 13:14; Heb 13:2

d

2 Thes 3:11

1 Cor 7:9

[9]Let a widow be enrolled if she is not less than sixty years old, married only once, [10]with a reputation for good works, namely, that she has raised children, practiced hospitality, washed the feet of the holy ones, helped those in distress, involved herself in every good work.[c] [11]But exclude younger widows, for when their sensuality estranges them from Christ, they want to marry [12]and will incur condemnation for breaking their first pledge. [13]And furthermore, they learn to be idlers, going about from house to house, and not only idlers but gossips and busybodies as well, talking about things that ought not to be mentioned.[d] [14]So I would like younger widows to marry, have children, and manage a home, so as to give the adversary no pretext for maligning us.[e] [15]For some have already turned away to follow Satan. [16]If any woman believer* has widowed relatives, she must assist them; the church is not to be burdened, so that it will be able to help those who are truly widows.

4:14; 2 Tm 1:6

[17]Presbyters who preside well deserve double honor, especially those who toil in preaching and teaching.[f] [18]For the scripture says, “You shall not muzzle an ox when it is threshing,” and, “A worker deserves his pay.”[g] [19]Do not accept an accusation against a presbyter unless it is supported by two or three witnesses.[h] [20]Reprimand publicly those who do sin, so that the rest also will be afraid.[i] [21]I charge you before God and Christ Jesus and the elect angels to keep these rules without prejudice, doing nothing out of favoritism. [22]Do not lay hands too readily on anyone, and do not share in another’s sins. Keep yourself pure.[j] [23]Stop drinking only water, but have a little wine for the sake of your stomach and your frequent illnesses.

[24]Some people’s sins are public, preceding them to judgment; but other people are followed by their sins. [25]Similarly, good works are also public; and even those that are not cannot remain hidden.

Catholic social teaching is also concerned about justice in regard to wages and work. Rerum Novarum described the duties of the worker according to contractual justice: “To perform entirely and conscientiously whatever work has been voluntarily and equitably agreed upon” (30). The duties of the employer according to contractual justice are: “to give every worker what is justly due him” (32). Later church documents insist that the terms of work contracts must be just.

Teach and urge these things.* [3]Whoever teaches something different and does not agree with the sound words of our Lord Jesus Christ and the religious teaching[c] [4]is conceited, understanding nothing, and has a morbid disposition for arguments and verbal disputes. From these come envy, rivalry, insults, evil suspicions, [5]and mutual friction among people with corrupted minds, who are deprived of the truth, supposing religion to be a means of gain.[d] [6]Indeed, religion with contentment is a great gain.[e] [7]For we brought nothing into the world, just as we shall not be able to take anything out of it.[f] [8]If we have food and clothing, we shall be content with that.[g] [9]Those who want to be rich are falling into temptation and into a trap and into many foolish and harmful desires, which plunge them into ruin and destruction.[h] [10]For the love of money is the root of all evils, and some people in their desire for it have strayed from the faith and have pierced themselves with many pains.

11 But you, man of God,* avoid all this. Instead, pursue righteousness, devotion, faith, love, patience, and gentleness.[i] 12 Compete well for the faith. Lay hold of eternal life, to which you were called when you made the noble confession in the presence of many witnesses.[j] 13 I charge [you] before God, who gives life to all things, and before Christ Jesus, who gave testimony under Pontius Pilate for the noble confession,[k] 14 to keep the commandment without stain or reproach until the appearance of our Lord Jesus Christ 15 that the blessed and only ruler will make manifest at the proper time, the King of kings and Lord of lords,[l] 16 who alone has immortality, who dwells in unapproachable light, and whom no human being has seen or can see. To him be honor and eternal power. Amen.[m]

Money in and of itself is not an evil but an instrument of personal and communal livelihood. Catholic social teaching maintains that money should promote the common good. For example, charitable giving provides access to the goods of the earth for those without such access, and capital expenditures invest in job production. Gaudium et Spes describes the common good as “the sum total of social conditions which allow people, either as groups or as individuals, to reach their fulfillment more fully and more easily. The resulting rights and obligations are consequently the concern of the entire human race. Every group must take into account the needs and legitimate aspirations of every other group, and even those of the human family as a whole” (26).

*VI: FINAL RECOMMENDATION AND WARNING

2 Tm 1:14 / 1 Tm 4:7

20O Timothy, guard what has been entrusted to you. Avoid profane babbling and the absurdities of so-called knowledge.[p] 21By professing it, some people have deviated from the faith.

q
1:6; 2 Tm 2:18

Grace be with all of you.[q]

1:1-2 For the Pauline use of the conventional epistolary form, see the note on Romans 1:1-7.

1:3-7 Here Timothy's initial task in Ephesus (cf. Acts 20:17-35) is outlined: to suppress the idle religious speculations, probably about Old Testament figures (1:3-4, but see the note on 6:20-21), which do not contribute to the development of love within the community (1:5) but rather encourage similar useless conjectures (1:6-7).

1:4 The plan of God that is to be received by faith: the Greek may also possibly mean "God's trustworthy plan" or "the training in faith that God requires."

1:8-11 Those responsible for the speculations that are to be suppressed by Timothy do not present the Old Testament from the Christian viewpoint. The Christian values the Old Testament not as a system of law but as the first stage in God's revelation of his saving plan, which is brought to fulfillment in the good news of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ.

1:10 Sodomites: see 1 Corinthians 6:9 and the note there.

1:12-17 Present gratitude for the Christian apostleship leads Paul to recall an earlier time when he had been a fierce persecutor of the Christian communities (cf. Acts 26:9-11) until his conversion by intervention of divine mercy through the appearance of Jesus. This and his subsequent apostolic experience testify to the saving purpose of Jesus' incarnation. The fact of his former ignorance of the truth has not kept the apostle from regarding himself as having been the worst of sinners (1:15). Yet he was chosen to be an apostle, that God might manifest his firm will to save sinful humanity through Jesus Christ (1:16). The recounting of so great a mystery leads to a spontaneous outpouring of adoration (1:17).

1:15 This saying is trustworthy: this phrase regularly introduces in the Pastorals a basic truth of early Christian faith; cf. 1 Timothy 3:1; 4:9; 2 Timothy 2:11; Titus 3:8.

1:17 King of ages: through Semitic influence, the Greek expression could mean "everlasting king"; it could also mean "king of the universe."

1:18-20 Timothy is to be mindful of his calling, which is here compared to the way Barnabas and Saul were designated by Christ as prophets for missionary service; cf. Acts 13:1-3. Such is probably the sense of the allusion to the prophetic words (1:18).

His task is not to yield, whether in doctrine or in conduct, to erroneous opinions, taking warning from what has already happened at Ephesus in the case of Hymenaeus and Alexander (1:19-20).

1:18 The prophetic words once spoken about you: the Greek may also be translated, “the prophecies that led (me) to you.” It probably refers to testimonies given by charismatic figures in the Christian communities. Fight a good fight: this translation preserves the play on words in Greek. The Greek terms imply a lengthy engagement in battle and might well be translated “wage a good campaign.”

1:20 Hymenaeus: mentioned in 2 Timothy 2:17 as saying that the resurrection has already taken place (in baptism). Alexander: probably the Alexander mentioned in 2 Timothy 4:14 as the coppersmith who “did me a great deal of harm.” Whom I have handed over to Satan: the same terms are used in the condemnation of the incestuous man in 1 Corinthians 5:5.

2:1-7 This marked insistence that the liturgical prayer of the community concern itself with the needs of all, whether Christian or not, and especially of those in authority, may imply that a disposition existed at Ephesus to refuse prayer for pagans. In actuality, such prayer aids the community to achieve peaceful relationships with non-Christians (2:2) and contributes to salvation, since it derives its value from the presence within the community of Christ, who is the one and only savior of all (2:3-6). The vital apostolic mission to the Gentiles (2:7) reflects Christ’s purpose of universal salvation. 1 Timothy 2:5 contains what may well have been a very primitive creed. Some interpreters have called it a Christian version of the Jewish shema: “Hear, O Israel, the LORD is our God, the LORD alone …” (Dt 6:4-5). The assertion in 1 Timothy 2:7, “I am speaking the truth, I am not lying,” reminds one of similar affirmations in Romans 9:1; 2 Corinthians 11:31; and Galatians 1:20.

2:6 The testimony: to make sense of this overly concise phrase, many manuscripts supply “to which” (or “to whom”); two others add “was given.” The translation has supplied “this was.”

2:8-15 The prayer of the community should be unmarred by internal dissension (2:8); cf. Matthew 5:21-26; 6:14; Mark 11:25. At the liturgical assembly the dress of women should be appropriate to the occasion (1 Tm 2:9); their chief adornment is to be reputation for good works (1 Tm 2:10). Women are not to take part in the charismatic activity of the assembly (2:11-12; cf. 1 Cor 14:34) or exercise authority; their conduct there should reflect the role of man’s helpmate (1 Tm 2:13; cf. Gn 2:18) and not the later relationship of Eve to Adam (1 Tm 2:14; cf. Gn 3:6-7). As long as women perform their role as wives and mothers in faith and love, their salvation is assured (1 Tm 2:15).

2:12 A man: this could also mean “her husband.”

3:1-7 The passage begins by commending those who aspire to the office of bishop (episkopos; see the note on Phil 1:1) within the community, but this first sentence (3:1) may also imply a warning about the great responsibilities involved. The writer proceeds to list the qualifications required: personal stability and graciousness; talent for teaching (3:2); moderation in habits and temperament (3:3); managerial ability (3:4); and experience in Christian living (3:5-6). Moreover, the candidate’s previous life should provide no grounds for the charge that he did not previously practice what he now preaches. No list of qualifications for presbyters appears in 1 Timothy. The presbyter-bishops here and in Titus (see the note on Ti 1:5-9) lack certain functions reserved here for Paul and Timothy.

3:1 This saying is trustworthy: the saying introduced is so unlike others after this phrase that some later Western manuscripts read, “This saying is popular.” It is understood by some interpreters as concluding the preceding section (2:8-15). Bishop: literally, “overseer”; see the note on Philippians 1:1.

3:6 The devil’s punishment: this phrase could mean the punishment once incurred by the devil (objective genitive) or a punishment brought about by the devil (subjective genitive).

3:8-13 Deacons, besides possessing the virtue of moderation (3:8), are to be outstanding for their faith (3:9) and well respected within the community (3:10). Women in the same role, although some interpreters take them to mean wives of deacons, must be dignified, temperate, dedicated, and not given to malicious talebearing (3:11). Deacons must have shown stability in marriage and have a good record with their families (3:12), for such experience prepares them well for the exercise of their ministry on behalf of the community (3:13). See further the note on Philippians 1:1.

3:11 Women: this seems to refer to women deacons but may possibly mean wives of deacons. The former is preferred because the word is used absolutely; if deacons’ wives were meant, a possessive “their” would be expected. Moreover, they are also introduced by the word “similarly,” as in 1 Timothy 3:8; this parallel suggests that they too exercised ecclesiastical functions.

3:14-16 In case there is some delay in the visit to Timothy at Ephesus planned for the near future, the present letter is being sent on ahead to arm and enlighten him in his task of preserving sound Christian conduct in the Ephesian church. The care he must exercise over this community is required by the profound nature of Christianity. It centers in Christ, appearing in human flesh, vindicated by the holy Spirit; the mystery of his person was revealed to the angels, announced to the Gentiles, and accepted by them in faith. He himself was taken up (through his resurrection and ascension) to the divine glory (3:16). This passage apparently includes part of a liturgical hymn used among the Christian communities in and around Ephesus. It consists of three couplets in typical Hebrew balance: flesh-spirit (contrast), seen-proclaimed (complementary), world-glory (contrast).

3:16 Who: the reference is to Christ, who is himself “the mystery of our devotion.” Some predominantly Western manuscripts read “which,” harmonizing the gender of the pronoun with that of the Greek word for mystery; many later (eighth/ninth century on), predominantly Byzantine manuscripts read “God,” possibly for theological reasons.

4:1-5 Doctrinal deviations from the true Christian message within the church have been prophesied, though the origin of the prophecy is not specified (4:1-2); cf. Acts 20:29-30. The letter warns against a false asceticism that prohibits marriage and regards certain foods as forbidden, though they are part of God’s good creation (4:3).

4:5 The invocation of God in prayer: literally, “the word of God and petition.” The use of “word of God” without an article in Greek suggests that it refers to the name of God being invoked in blessing rather than to the “word of God” proclaimed to the community.

4:6-10 Timothy is urged to be faithful, both in his teaching and in his own life, as he looks only to God for salvation.

4:10 Struggle: other manuscripts and patristic witnesses read “suffer reproach.”

4:11-16 Timothy is urged to preach and teach with confidence, relying on the gifts and the mission that God has bestowed on him.

4:12 Youth: some commentators find this reference a sign of pseudepigraphy. Timothy had joined Paul as a missionary already in A.D. 49, some fifteen years before the earliest supposed date of composition.

4:13 Reading: the Greek word refers to private or public reading. Here, it probably designates the public reading of scripture in the Christian assembly.

4:14 Prophetic word: this may mean the utterance of a Christian prophet designating the candidate or a prayer of blessing accompanying the rite. Imposition of hands: this gesture was used in the Old Testament to signify the transmission of authority from Moses to Joshua (Nm 27:18-23; Dt 34:9). The early Christian community used it as a symbol of installation into an office: the Seven (Acts 6:6) and Paul and Barnabas (Acts 13:3). Of the presbyterate: this would mean that each member of the college of presbyters imposed hands and appears to contradict 2 Timothy 1:6, in which Paul says that he imposed hands on Timothy. This latter text, however, does not exclude participation by others in the rite. Some prefer to translate "for the presbyterate," and thus understand it to designate the office into which Timothy was installed rather than the agents who installed him.

5:1-16 After a few words of general advice based on common sense (5:1-2), the letter takes up, in its several aspects, the subject of widows. The first responsibility for their care belongs to the family circle, not to the Christian community as such (5:3-4, 16). The widow left without the aid of relatives may benefit the community by her prayer, and the community should consider her material sustenance its responsibility (5:5-8). Widows who wish to work directly for the Christian community should not be accepted unless they are well beyond the probability of marriage, i.e., sixty years of age, married only once, and with a reputation for good works (5:9-10). Younger widows are apt to be troublesome and should be encouraged to remarry (5:11-15).

5:16 Woman believer: some early Latin manuscripts and Fathers have a masculine here, while most later manuscripts and patristic quotations conflate the two readings, perhaps to avoid unfair restriction to women.

5:17-25 The function of presbyters is not exactly the same as that of the episkopos, "bishop" (3:1); in fact, the relation of the two at the time of this letter is obscure (but cf. the note on Ti 1:5-9). The Pastorals seem to reflect a transitional stage that developed in many regions of the church into the monarchical episcopate of the second and third centuries. The presbyters possess the responsibility of preaching and teaching, for which functions they are supported by the community (5:17-18). The realization that their position subjects them to adverse criticism is implied in the direction to Timothy (5:19-20) to make sure of the truth of any accusation against them before public reproof is given. He must be as objective as possible in weighing charges against presbyters (5:21), learning from his experience to take care in selecting them (5:22). Some scholars take 1 Timothy 5:22 as a reference not to ordination of presbyters but to reconciliation of public sinners. The letter now sounds an informal note of personal concern in its advice to Timothy not to be so ascetic that he even avoids wine (5:23). Judgment concerning the fitness of candidates to serve as presbyters is easy with persons of open conduct, more difficult and prolonged with those of greater reserve (5:24-25).

6:1-2 Compare the tables for household duties, such as that of Colossians 3:18–4:1. Domestic relationships derive new meaning from the Christian faith.

6:1 Our teaching: this refers to the teaching of the Christian community.

6:2b-10 Timothy is exhorted to maintain steadfastly the position outlined in this letter, not allowing himself to be pressured into any other course. He must realize that false teachers can be discerned by their pride, envy, quarrelsomeness, and greed for material gain. 1 Timothy 6:6 is rather obscure and is interpreted, and therefore translated, variously. The suggestion seems to be that the important gain that religion brings is spiritual, but that there is material gain, too, up to the point of what is needed for physical sustenance (cf. 6:17-19).

6:6 Contentment: the word autarkeia is a technical Greek philosophical term for the virtue of independence from material goods (Aristotle, Cynics, Stoics).

6:11-16 Timothy's position demands total dedication to God and faultless witness to Christ (6:11-14) operating from an awareness, through faith, of the coming revelation in Jesus of the invisible God (6:15-16).

6:11 Man of God: a title applied to Moses and the prophets (Dt 33:1; 1 Sm 2:27; 1 Kgs 12:22; 13:1; etc.).

6:17-19 Timothy is directed to instruct the rich, advising them to make good use of their wealth by aiding the poor.

6:20-21 A final solemn warning against the heretical teachers, with what seems to be a specific reference to gnosticism, the great rival and enemy of the church for two centuries and more (the Greek word for "knowledge" is gnōsis). If gnosticism is being referred to here, it is probable that the warnings against "speculations" and "myths and genealogies" (cf. especially 1:4; Ti 3:9) involve allusions to that same kind of heresy. Characteristic of the various gnostic systems of speculation was an elaborate mythology of innumerable superhuman intermediaries, on a descending scale ("genealogies"), between God and the world. Thus would be explained the emphasis upon Christ's being the one mediator (as in 2:5). Although fully developed gnosticism belonged to the second and later centuries, there are signs that incipient forms of it belonged to Paul's own period.

The Second Letter to Timothy

The authorship and date of this letter, as one of the Pastoral Epistles, are discussed in the Introduction to the First Letter to Timothy.

The tone here is more personal than in First Timothy, for this letter addresses Timothy in vivid terms (1:6-14; 2:1-13) and depicts Paul's courage and hope in the face of discouragements late in the course of his apostolic ministry (1:15-18; 3:10-17; 4:9-18). Indeed, the letter takes on the character of a final exhortation and testament from Paul to the younger Timothy (4:1-8). Paul is portrayed as a prisoner (1:8, 16; 2:9) in Rome (1:17), and there is a hint that Timothy may be in Ephesus (2:17). The letter reveals that, with rare exceptions, Christians have not rallied to Paul's support (1:15-18) and takes a pessimistic view of the outcome of his case (4:6). It describes Paul as fully aware of what impends, looking to God, not to human beings, for his deliverance (4:3-8, 18). It recalls his mission days with Timothy (1:3-5; cf. Acts 16:1-4). It points to his preaching of the gospel as the reason for his imprisonment and offers Timothy, as a motive for steadfastness, his own example of firmness in faith despite adverse circumstances (1:6-14). The letter suggests that Timothy should prepare others to replace himself as Paul has prepared Timothy to replace him (2:1-2). Paul urges him not to desist out of fear from preserving and spreading the Christian message (2:3-7). It presents the resurrection of Jesus and his messianic role as the heart of the gospel for which Paul has been ready to lay down his life (2:8-9) and thus not only to express his own conviction fully but to support the conviction of others (2:10-13).

This letter, like the preceding one, urges Timothy to protect the community from the inevitable impact of false teaching (2:14–3:9), without fear of the personal attacks that may result (3:10-13). It recommends that he rely on the power of the scriptures, on proclamation of the word, and on sound doctrine (3:14–4:2), without being troubled by those who do not accept him (4:3-5). The letter poignantly observes in passing that Paul has need of his reading materials and his cloak (4:13) and, what will be best of all, a visit from Timothy.

SUMMARY

Second Timothy contains instructions to Paul's trusted companion to protect the faith, not to get involved with false disputes, and to continue to follow Paul's example of fidelity to the truth in Jesus Christ.

Author: Either Paul himself or a later author writing in Paul's name to Timothy.

Date: If from Paul, ca. A.D. 63–67; if from a later author, perhaps early second century.

Content: The nature of true ministry in the church; Paul's example of faithful ministry as preacher, apostle, and teacher; the eternal value of Scripture for training in righteousness.

On the theory of authorship by Paul himself, Second Timothy appears to be the last of the three Pastoral Epistles. The many scholars who argue that the Pastorals are products of the Pauline school often incline toward Second Timothy as the earliest of the three and the one most likely to have actual fragments of material from Paul himself.

The principal divisions of the Second Letter to Timothy are the following:

I. Address (1:1-5)
II. Exhortations to Timothy (1:6–2:13)
III. Instructions Concerning False Teaching (2:14–4:8)
IV. Personal Requests and Final Greetings (4:9-22)

I: ADDRESS

Greeting*

1 Tm 4:8

1 [1]Paul, an apostle of Christ Jesus by the will of God[a] for the promise of life in Christ Jesus,* [2]to Timothy, my dear child: grace, mercy, and peace from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

1 Tm 1:5 / Acts 16:1

3[b]I am grateful to God, whom I worship with a clear conscience as my ancestors did,* as I remember you constantly in my prayers, night and day. 4*I yearn to see you again, recalling your tears, so that I may be filled with joy, 5as I recall your sincere faith that first lived in your grandmother Lois and in your mother Eunice and that I am confident lives also in you.[c]

Eunice and Lois, Handing on a Living Faith

Few people would come to faith without the influence of some person or group of people who model the joy of knowing Jesus and then being transformed by him. Two women who have only a brief mention in Scripture are credited with a sincere faith that no doubt helped to mold Timothy.

This living faith, passed on from a faithful grandmother and mother, becomes the foundation for a young man's faithful witness and missionary zeal. We know little about either woman, though we do know that Eunice was a Jewish believer, married to a Greek nonbeliever. We know that she raised Timothy in the Greek city of Lystra, originally founded as a military colony to ward off Roman invaders.

The ones who pass on faith, modern versions of Eunice and Lois, could be our grandmothers, our mothers … they could be any friends in whom faith lives. Each of us could be a Eunice or a Lois in our families as well, alive with a faith that draws others to know Jesus, bearers of good news in our words and deeds.

In Lois and Eunice we are reminded of Paul's words to the Romans (10:14-15): "How can they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how can they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how can they hear without someone to preach? … How beautiful are the feet of those who bring the good news."

[9]*He saved us and called us to a holy life, not according to our works but according to his own design and the grace bestowed on us in Christ Jesus before time began,[g] [10]but now made manifest through the appearance of our savior Christ Jesus, who destroyed death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel,[h] [11]*for which I was appointed preacher and apostle[i] and teacher. [12]*On this account I am suffering these things; but I am not ashamed,[j] for I know him in whom I have believed and am confident that he is able to guard what has been entrusted to me until that day. [13]Take as your norm the sound words that you heard from me, in the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus.[k] [14]Guard this rich trust with the help of the holy Spirit that dwells within us.[l]

The self-designation of Paul as preacher, apostle, and teacher is noteworthy. All three terms emphasize the evangelical nature of Paul’s mission. He is to go forth and proclaim the Gospel. In the undisputed Pauline letters, Paul notes that he was called to be an apostle (Rom 1:1; 1 Cor 1:1; Gal 1:1), that is, a personal representative of Jesus Christ sent out on mission. He tends to put this designation first in the hierarchy of distinct ministries (1 Cor 12:28). The designation of Paul as herald and teacher is unique here in Second Timothy. Both terms, however, aptly apply to Paul’s evangelical mission.

[15]*[m]You know that everyone in Asia deserted me, including Phygelus and Hermogenes. [16]May the Lord grant mercy to the family of Onesiphorus[n] because he often gave me new heart and was not ashamed of my chains. [17]But when he came to Rome, he promptly searched for me and found me. [18]May the Lord grant him to find mercy from the Lord on that day. And you know very well the services he rendered in Ephesus.[o]

Our Christian faith is part of our inheritance. It is a heritage to be cherished and protected. Although we carry this faith in the tiny vessel of our lives, we have been given the gift of the indwelling Spirit to help us guard this treasure.

[3]Bear your share of hardship along with me like a good soldier of Christ Jesus.[a] [4]To satisfy the one who recruited him, a soldier does not become entangled in the business affairs of life.[b] [5]Similarly, an athlete cannot receive the winner’s crown except by competing according to the rules.[c] [6]The hardworking farmer ought to have the first share of the crop.[d] [7]Reflect on what I am saying, for the Lord will give you understanding in everything.[e]

Like anyone else in the Roman Empire, Christians held occupations that allowed them to provide for the needs of their families and communities. The work mentioned most often in the Bible is farming, especially true once the nomadic existence of the tribes became more sedentary and stable. Farmers sowed seed after the fall rains had softened the earth, and then they depended heavily on rain to produce a harvest. Because of the variety of crops, harvesting could occupy half of the year or more. Raising sheep and goats was usually part of the farmer’s task as well. Though often associated with male images, both farming and animal production were attended by women as well as men (especially when harvesting crops and attending to milking chores). Though not mentioned in this passage, other common occupations included fishing and carpentry. In most instances, one’s occupation, and therefore one’s status, was passed on to one’s oldest son and his family.

8*Remember Jesus Christ, raised from the dead, a descendant of David: such is my gospel,[f] 9for which I am suffering, even to the point of chains, like a criminal. But the word of God is not chained.[g] 10Therefore, I bear with everything for the sake of those who are chosen, so that they too may obtain the salvation that is in Christ Jesus, together with eternal glory.[h] 11This saying is trustworthy:

If we have died with him

we shall also live with him;[i] 12if we persevere
we shall also reign with him.
But if we deny him

The image of the unchained word of God (2:9) is a powerful one that is reminiscent of the effective and powerful word of God described by Second Isaiah (Is 55:10-13). Nothing can prevent the Word from accomplishing its task. Leonard Bernstein (d. 1991) tried to capture this in his famous Mass (1971) when he used this passage for an inspiring hymn that contrasted imprisoning the proclaimer but being unable to chain God’s word.

Let us not claim the name Christian lightly. If we are to live with Christ we must pattern our life after his prophetic way of living, and that, of course, means creative daily dying. What does it mean for you to die with Christ? Ask some of your Christian friends this question.

Among them are Hymenaeus and Philetus,[o] 18who have deviated from the truth by saying that [the] resurrection has already taken place and are upsetting the faith of some.[p] 19Nevertheless, God's solid foundation stands, bearing this inscription, "The Lord knows those who are his"; and, "Let everyone who calls upon the name of the Lord avoid evil."[q]

We have been asked to proclaim the Word in good times and in hard times. Look at the word proclaim. Underline claim. Before we can truly proclaim the Word we must claim it. We claim it through study, prayer, life. As its treasure unfolds in our lives we share it with others. Like Jeremiah the prophet we are compelled to proclaim it. We cannot hold back (Jer 20:9).

1:1-2 For the formula of address and greeting, see the note on Romans 1:1-7.

1:1 The promise of life in Christ Jesus: that God grants through union with Christ in faith and love; cf. Colossians 3:4; 1 Timothy 4:8.

1:3 As my ancestors did: this emphasizes the continuity of Judaism and Christianity; for a similar view, see Romans 9:3-5; Philippians 3:4-6.

1:4-5 Purportedly written from prison in Rome (1:8, 17; 4:6-8) shortly before the writer's death, the letter recalls the earlier sorrowful parting from Timothy, commending him for his faith and expressing the longing to see him again.

1:6 The gift of God: the grace resulting from the conferral of an ecclesiastical office. The imposition of my hands: see the note on 1 Timothy 4:14.

1:8 Do not be ashamed of your testimony to our Lord: i.e., of preaching and suffering for the sake of the gospel.

1:9-10 Redemption from sin and the call to holiness of life are not won by personal deeds but are freely and graciously bestowed according to God's eternal plan; cf. Ephesians 1:4.

1:11 Teacher: the overwhelming majority of manuscripts and Fathers read "teacher of the nations," undoubtedly a harmonization with 1 Timothy 2:7.

1:12 He is able to guard … until that day: the intervening words can also be translated "what I have entrusted to him" (i.e., the fruit of his ministry) as well as "what has been entrusted to me" (i.e., the faith). The same difficult term occurs in 2 Timothy 1:14, where it is modified by the adjective "rich" and used without a possessive.

1:15 Keen disappointment is expressed, here and later (4:16), that the Christians of the province of Asia, especially Phygelus and Hermogenes, should have abandoned the writer and done nothing to defend his case in court.

1:16-18 The family of Onesiphorus because he … of my chains: Onesiphorus seems to have died before this letter was written. His family is mentioned twice (here and in 4:19), though it was Onesiphorus himself who was helpful to Paul in prison and rendered much service to the community of Ephesus. Because the apostle complains of abandonment by all in Asia during his second imprisonment and trial, the assistance of Onesiphorus seems to have been given to Paul during his first Roman imprisonment (A.D. 61–63).

1:18 Lord … Lord: the first "Lord" here seems to refer to Christ, the second "Lord" to the Father.

2:1-7 This passage manifests a characteristic deep concern for safeguarding the faith and faithfully transmitting it through trustworthy people (2:1-2; cf. 1:14; 1 Tm 6:20; Ti 1:9). Comparisons to the soldier's detachment, the athlete's sportsmanship, and the farmer's arduous work as the price of recompense (2:4-6) emphasize the need of singleness of purpose in preaching the word, even at the cost of hardship, for the sake of Christ (2:3).

2:8-13 The section begins with a sloganlike summary of Paul's gospel about Christ (2:8) and concludes with what may be part of an early Christian hymn (2:11b-12a; most exegetes include the rest of 2:12 and all of 2:13 as part of the quotation). The poetic lines suggest that through baptism Christians die spiritually with Christ and hope to live with him and reign with him forever, but the Christian life includes endurance, witness, and even suffering, as the final judgment will show and as Paul's own case makes clear; while he is imprisoned for preaching the gospel (2:9), his sufferings are helpful to the elect for obtaining the salvation and glory available in Christ (2:10), who will be true to those who are faithful and will disown those who deny him (2:12-13).

2:14-19 For those who dispute about mere words (cf. 2:23-24) and indulge in irreligious talk to the detriment of their listeners (2:16-19), see the notes on 1 Timothy 1:3-7; 6:20-21. Hymenaeus and Philetus (2:17), while accepting the Christian's mystical death and resurrection in Christ through baptism, claimed that baptized Christians are already risen with Christ in this life and thus that there is no future bodily resurrection or eternal glory to come. The first quotation in 2 Timothy 2:19 is from Numbers 16:5; the other quotation is from some unidentified Jewish or Christian writing.

2:14 Before God: many ancient manuscripts read "before the Lord."

2:22 Those who call on the Lord: those who believe in Christ and worship him as Lord, i.e., Christians (Acts 9:14-16, 20-21; Rom 10:12-13; cf. 2 Tm 2:19, literally, "Everyone who names the name of the Lord").

2:26 Some interpreters would render this passage, "Thus they may come to their senses and, forced to do his (i.e., God's) will, may escape the devil's trap." This interpretation of the Greek is possible, but the one accepted in the text seems more likely.

3:1-9 The moral depravity and false teaching that will be rampant in the last days are already at work (3:1-5). The frivolous and superficial, too, devoid of the true spirit of religion, will be easy victims of those who pervert them by falsifying the truth (3:6-8), just as Jannes and Jambres, Pharaoh's magicians of Egypt (Ex 7:11-12, 22), discredited the truth in Moses' time. Exodus does not name the magicians, but the two names are widely found in much later Jewish, Christian, and even pagan writings. Their origins are legendary.

3:10-17 Paul's example for Timothy includes persecution, a frequent emphasis in the Pastorals. Timothy is to be steadfast to what he has been taught and to scripture. The scriptures are the source of wisdom, i.e., of belief in and loving fulfillment of God's word revealed in Christ, through whom salvation is given.

3:16-17 Useful for teaching … every good work: because as God's word the scriptures share his divine authority. It is exercised through those who are ministers of the word.

3:16 All scripture is inspired by God: this could possibly also be translated, "All scripture inspired by God is useful for …." In this classic reference to inspiration, God is its principal author, with the writer as the human collaborator. Thus the scriptures are the word of God in human language. See also 2 Peter 1:20-21.

4:1-5 The gravity of the obligation incumbent on Timothy to preach the word can be gauged from the solemn adjuration: in the presence of God, and of Christ coming as universal judge, and by his appearance and his kingly power (4:1). Patience, courage, constancy, and endurance are required despite the opposition, hostility, indifference, and defection of many to whom the truth has been preached (4:2-5).

4:3 Insatiable curiosity: literally, "with itching ears."

4:6 The apostle recognizes his death through martyrdom to be imminent. He regards it as an act of worship in which his blood will be poured out in sacrifice; cf. Exodus 29:38-40; Philippians 2:17.

4:7 At the close of his life Paul could testify to the accomplishment of what Christ himself foretold concerning him at the time of his conversion, "I will show him what he will have to suffer for my name" (Acts 9:16).

4:8 When the world is judged at the parousia, all who have eagerly looked for the Lord's appearing and have sought to live according to his teachings will be rewarded. The crown is a reference to the laurel wreath placed on the heads of victorious athletes and conquerors in war; cf. 2 Timothy 2:5; 1 Corinthians 9:25.

4:9-13 Demas either abandoned the work of the ministry for worldly affairs or, perhaps, gave up the faith itself (4:10). Luke (4:11) may have accompanied Paul on parts of his second and third missionary journeys (Acts 16:10-12; 20:5-7). Notice the presence of the first personal pronoun "we" in these Acts passages, suggesting to some that Luke (or at least some traveling companion of Paul's) was the author of Acts. Mark, once rejected by Paul (Acts 13:13; 15:39), is now to render him a great service (2 Tm 4:11); cf. Colossians 4:10; Philemon 24. For Tychicus, see Ephesians 6:21; cf. also Acts 20:4; Colossians 4:7.

4:10 Galatia: some manuscripts read "Gaul" or "Gallia."

4:14-18 Alexander: an opponent of Paul's preaching (4:14-15), perhaps the one who is mentioned in 1 Timothy 1:20. Despite Paul's abandonment by his friends in the province of Asia (cf. 1:15-16), the divine assistance brought this first trial to a successful issue, even to the point of making the gospel message known to those who participated in or witnessed the trial (4:16-17).

4:19 Prisca and Aquila: they assisted Paul in his ministry in Corinth (Acts 18:2-3) and Ephesus (Acts 18:19, 26; 1 Cor 16:19). They risked death to save his life, and all the Gentile communities are indebted to them (Rom 16:3-5).

4:20 Erastus: he was the treasurer of the city of Corinth (Rom 16:24); cf. also Acts 19:22. Trophimus: from the province of Asia, he accompanied Paul from Greece to Troas (Acts 20:4-5).

4:21 Linus: Western tradition sometimes identified this Linus with the supposed successor of Peter as bishop of Rome, and Claudia as the mother of Linus (Apostolic Constitutions, fourth century).

Titus

The Letter to

The third of the Pastoral Epistles in the New Testament is addressed to a different co-worker of Paul than are First and Second Timothy. The situation is different, too, for Titus is addressed as the person in charge of developing the church on the large Mediterranean island of Crete (1:5), a place Paul had never, according to the New Testament, visited. The tone is closer to that of First Timothy as three topics of church life and structure are discussed: presbyter-bishops (see note on 1:5-9), groups with which one must work in the church (2:1-10), and admonitions for conduct based on the grace and love of God that appeared in Jesus Christ (2:11–3:10). The warmer personal tone of Second Timothy is replaced by emphasis on church office and on living in the society of the day, in which deceivers and heretics abound (1:10-16; 3:9-10).

The Pauline assistant who is addressed, Titus, was a Gentile Christian, but we are nowhere informed of his place of birth or residence. He went from Antioch with Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem (Gal 2:1; cf. Acts 15:2). According to 2 Corinthians (2 Cor 2:13; 7:6, 13-14), he was with Paul on his third missionary journey; his name, however, does not appear in Acts. Besides being the bearer of Paul’s severe letter to the Corinthians (2 Cor 7:6-8), he had the responsibility of taking up the collection in Corinth for the Christian community of Jerusalem (2 Cor 8:6, 16-19, 23). In the present letter (1:5), he is mentioned as the administrator of the Christian community in Crete, charged with the task of organizing it through the appointment of presbyters and bishops (1:5-9; here the two terms refer to the same personages).

The letter instructs Titus about the character of the assistants he is to choose in view of the pastoral difficulties peculiar to Crete (1:5-16). It suggests the special individual and social virtues that the various age groups and classes in the Christian community should be encouraged to acquire (2:1-10). The motivation for transformation of their lives comes from christology, especially the redemptive sacrifice of Christ and his future coming, as applied through baptism and justification (2:11-14; 3:4-8). The community is to serve as a leaven for Christianizing the social world about it (3:1-3). Good works are to be the evidence of their faith in God (3:8); those who engage in religious controversy are, after suitable warning, to be ignored (3:9-11).

SUMMARY

Titus is a small Pauline letter containing instructions in the care of choosing ministers for the community. It encourages all believers to hold fast to sound doctrine and to live up to their specific responsibilities in accordance with God's grace.

Author: Either Paul himself or a later author writing in Paul's name to Titus.

Date: If from Paul, ca. A.D. 63–67; if from a later author, perhaps early second century.

Content: Qualities of those charged with ministry in the church; ethical instruction for all in the Christian community; plea to respect lawful authorities; warning to avoid fanciful and deceptive teachings.

The authorship and date of the Letter to Titus are discussed in the Introduction to 1 Timothy. Those who assume authorship by Paul himself usually place Titus after 1 Timothy and before 2 Timothy. Others see it as closely related to 1 Timothy, in a growing emphasis on church structure and opposition to heresy, later than the letters of Paul himself and 2 Timothy. It has also been suggested that, if the three Pastorals once circulated as a literary unit, Titus was meant to be read ahead of 1 and 2 Timothy.

The principal divisions of the Letter to Titus are the following:

I. Address (1:1-4)
II. Pastoral Charge (1:5-16)
III. Teaching the Christian Life (2:1–3:15)

5*For this reason I left you in Crete so that you might set right what remains to be done and appoint presbyters in every town, as I directed you, 6[e]on condition that a man be blameless, married only once, with believing children who are not accused of licentiousness or rebellious. 7For a bishop as God's steward must be blameless, not arrogant, not irritable, not a drunkard, not aggressive, not greedy for sordid gain, 8but hospitable, a lover of goodness, temperate, just, holy, and self-controlled, 9holding fast to the true message as taught so that he will be able both to exhort with sound doctrine and to refute opponents.[f] 10*For there are also many rebels, idle talkers and deceivers, especially the Jewish Christians.* 11It is imperative to silence them, as they are upsetting whole families by teaching for sordid gain what they should not. 12One of them, a prophet of their own, once said, "Cretans have always been liars, vicious beasts, and lazy gluttons."* 13That testimony is true. Therefore, admonish them sharply, so that they may be sound in the faith,[g] 14instead of paying attention to Jewish myths and regulations of people who have repudiated the truth.[h] 15To the clean all things are clean, but to those who are defiled and unbelieving nothing is clean; in fact, both their minds and their consciences are tainted.[i] [16]They claim to know God, but by their deeds they deny him. They are vile and disobedient and unqualified for any good deed.

The qualities of a bishop in 1:7-9 (Greek, episkopos, “overseer”) underline the importance of choosing both capable and upright leaders. Analogously, the church has applied these qualities to priests as well. John Paul II’s 1992 papal exhortation on priestly formation (PDV 26) explicitly quotes this passage with reference to the formation of priests (Greek, presbyteroi, “elders”), in the sense of being true elders of the community.

2 [1]As for yourself, you must say what is consistent with sound doctrine, namely,[a] [2]that older men should be temperate, dignified, self-controlled, sound in faith, love, and endurance. [3]Similarly, older women should be reverent in their behavior, not slanderers, not addicted to drink, teaching what is good, [4]so that they may train younger women to love their husbands and children, [5]to be self-controlled, chaste, good homemakers, under the control of their husbands, so that the word of God may not be discredited.[b]

The mention of sound doctrine is an indication that by the time the Letter to Titus was written, faith had become focused on content more than relationship. Christian faith, as it evolved over the centuries, began to proclaim and clarify doctrines, essential teachings or beliefs that emphasize the fidelity with which the church's faith is to be preserved (cf. 1 Tm 1:10; 2 Tm 4:3).

[6]Urge the younger men, similarly, to control themselves, [7]showing yourself as a model of good deeds in every respect, with integrity in your teaching, dignity, [8]and sound speech that cannot be criticized, so that the opponent will be put to shame without anything bad to say about us.

h

1 Tm 4:12

15 Say these things. Exhort and correct with all authority. Let no one look down on you.[h]

How does God’s grace appear in your life? Name some personal moments of encounter with grace. How have you been transformed by these encounters? What are some of the godless ways you have rejected because of the workings of grace in your life?

The church reads this passage (2:11-14) as the second reading of Christmas Midnight Mass. It emphasizes the “appearance” of salvation in the world in the person of Jesus Christ.

Compare Titus 3:1 and Romans 13:1-7. Early Catholic social teaching urged Catholics to obey legitimate civil authorities because they had a share in God's own authority. Later teachings recognized that civic leaders needed to act for the common good and not personal gain (See GS 74). When civic leaders did not have the good of the society at heart, they lost the ability to rule even though they may still hold a political position. In such situations, opposing those who hold political power may be justified. The call to end the Vietnam War (1960s), to ban capital punishment (1990s), and to overturn abortion legislation are examples of resisting the political positions of civic leaders. Civil disobedience in the face of disregard for the common good can be, in such instances, consistent with Catholic social teaching.

8 This saying is trustworthy.

This passage (3:4-7) is read as the second reading for the Christmas Mass at Dawn. It poetically reflects on the gift and mystery of the incarnation of Christ.

1:1-4 On the epistolary form, see the note on Romans 1:1-7. The apostolate is the divinely appointed mission to lead others to the true faith and through it to eternal salvation (Ti 1:1-3).

1:5-9 This instruction on the selection and appointment of presbyters, substantially identical with that in 1 Timothy 3:1-7 on a bishop (see the note there), was aimed at strengthening the authority of Titus by apostolic mandate; cf. Titus 2:15. In Titus 1:5, 7 and Acts 20:17, 28, the terms episkopos and presbyteros ("bishop" and "presbyter") refer to the same persons. Deacons are not mentioned in Titus. See also the note on Philippians 1:1.

1:10-16 This adverse criticism of the defects within the community is directed especially against certain Jewish Christians, who busy themselves with useless speculations over persons mentioned in the Old Testament, insist on the observance of Jewish ritual purity regulations, and thus upset whole families by teaching things they have no right to teach; cf. Titus 3:9; 1 Timothy 1:3-10.

1:10 Jewish Christians: literally, "those of the circumcision."

1:12 Cretans … gluttons: quoted from Epimenides, a Cretan poet of the sixth century B.C.

2:1-10 One of Titus' main tasks in Crete is to become acquainted with the character of the Cretans and thereby learn to cope with its deficiencies (see 1:12). The counsel is not only for Titus himself but for various classes of people with whom he must deal: older men and women (2:2-4), younger women and men (2:4-7), and slaves (2:9-10); cf. Ephesians 6:1-9; Colossians 3:18–4:1.

2:11-15 Underlying the admonitions for moral improvement in Titus 2:1-10 as the moving force is the constant appeal to God's revelation of salvation in Christ, with its demand for transformation of life.

2:13 The blessed hope, the appearance: literally, "the blessed hope and appearance," but the use of a single article in Greek strongly suggests an epexegetical, i.e., explanatory sense. Of the great God and of our savior Jesus Christ: another possible translation is "of our great God and savior Jesus Christ."

3:1-8 The list of Christian duties continues from Titus 2:9-10, undergirded again as in Titus 2:11-13 by appeal to what God in Christ has done (2:4-7; cf. 2:11-14). The spiritual renewal of the Cretans, signified in God's merciful gift of baptism (3:4-7), should be reflected in their improved attitude toward civil authority and in their Christian relationship with all (3:1-3).

3:1 Magistrates and authorities: some interpreters understand these terms as referring to the principalities and powers of the heavenly hierarchy. To be open to every good enterprise: this implies being good citizens. It could also be translated "ready to do every sort of good work" (as Christians); cf. Titus 3:14.

3:8-11 In matters of good conduct and religious doctrine, Titus is to stand firm.

3:9 See the note on 1 Timothy 6:20-21.

3:12-15 Artemas or Tychicus (2 Tm 4:12) is to replace Titus, who will join Paul in his winter sojourn at Nicopolis in Epirus, on the western coast of Greece.

The Letter to Philemon

This short letter addressed to three specific individuals was written by Paul during an imprisonment, perhaps in Rome between A.D. 61 and 63 (see the Introduction to Colossians for other possible sites). It concerns Onesimus, a slave from Colossae (Col 4:9), who had run away from his master, perhaps guilty of theft in the process (Phlm 18). Onesimus was converted to Christ by Paul (10). Paul sends him back to his master (12) with this letter asking that he be welcomed willingly by his old master (8-10, 14, 17) not just as a slave but as a brother in Christ (16). Paul uses very strong arguments (especially 19) in his touching appeal on behalf of Onesimus. It is unlikely that Paul is subtly hinting that he would like to retain Onesimus as his own slave, lent to Paul by his master. Rather, he suggests he would like to have Onesimus work with him for the gospel (13, 20-21). There is, however, little evidence connecting this Onesimus with a bishop of Ephesus of the same name mentioned by Ignatius of Antioch (ca. A.D. 110).

Paul's letter deals with an accepted institution of antiquity, human slavery. But Paul breathes into this letter the spirit of Christ and of equality within the Christian community. He does not attack slavery directly, for this is something the Christian communities of the first century were in no position to do, and the expectation that Christ would soon come again militated against social reforms. Yet Paul, by presenting Onesimus as "brother, beloved … to me, but even more so to you" (16), voiced an idea revolutionary in that day and destined to break down worldly barriers of division "in the Lord."

SUMMARY

Philemon, the shortest and perhaps the most intimate of Paul's letters, records Paul's instructions to Philemon to take back one of his slaves whom Paul converted, Onesimus, as a brother follower of Jesus Christ rather than as a slave.

Author: Paul, with Timothy listed as a co-sender (v. 1), to Philemon, a coworker.

Date: Between A.D. 61–63, during Paul’s imprisonment, most likely in Rome.

Content: Thanksgiving for partnership in faith; plea for Onesimus to be accepted back as a fellow believer; Paul’s travel plans.

[7]For I have experienced much joy and encouragement* from your love, because the hearts of the holy ones have been refreshed by you, brother.[f] [8]Therefore, although I have the full right* in Christ to order you to do what is proper, [9]I rather urge you out of love, being as I am, Paul, an old man,* and now also a prisoner for Christ Jesus.[g] [10]I urge you on behalf of my child Onesimus, whose father I have become in my imprisonment,[h] [11]who was once useless to you but is now useful* to [both] you and me. [12]I am sending him, that is, my own heart, back to you. [13]I should have liked to retain him for myself, so that he might serve* me on your behalf in my imprisonment for the gospel,[i] [14]but I did not want to do anything without your consent, so that the good you do might not be forced but voluntary.[j] [15]Perhaps this is why he was away from* you for a while, that you might have him back forever, [16]no longer as a slave but more than a slave, a brother, beloved especially to me, but even more so to you, as a man* and in the Lord.[k] [17]So if you regard me as a partner, welcome him as you would me. [18]*And if he has done you any injustice or owes you anything, charge it to me. [19]I, Paul, write this in my own hand: I will pay. May I not tell you that you owe me your very self.[l] [20]Yes, brother, may I profit from you in the Lord. Refresh my heart in Christ.

Imprisonment in the Greco-Roman World

Paul lists numerous imprisonments during his career (2 Cor 11:23; Phil 1:7, 13-14), most of which were likely in Roman prisons. Imprisonment could be for a variety of reasons, such as being in debt or being caught in a crime; but conditions varied somewhat, depending on the status of the person. Roman citizens might enjoy a kind of “house arrest,” which allowed them to continue a modified lifestyle (e.g., Paul in Acts 28:30-31). Harsher conditions awaited hardened criminals, the poor, and runaway slaves. Prisons were generally dark, gloomy, filled with rats and other vermin, and lacking basic hygiene and ventilation. Men and women were not segregated in prison, and conditions were usually overcrowded and fostered disease. Prisoners were often kept shackled in chains, so that “chains” became synonymous with imprisonment. Some Roman officials tried to reform prison conditions because of the tendency to abuse prisoners. Early Christians were exhorted to visit the imprisoned as an act of mercy (Mt 25:36; Heb 13:3).

Listen to Paul’s deep sentiments of gratitude and joy toward a small faith community who has been instrumental in enriching the hearts of God’s people. If you were to sing gratefully about someone who has brought fresh joy and hope to you, who would that be?

Slavery in the Greco-Roman World

Paul proudly calls himself a “slave” of Christ as an ironic designation (Rom 1:1; Gal 1:10). The reality of slavery, however, was simply a given in his cultural world. In NT times masters generally treated their slaves fairly well because they were valuable property. They were viewed as members of the family, and many became trusted nannies or instructors for the master’s children. Slaves could eventually win freedom (manumission), either by saving enough money or performing heroic service. Runaway slaves, however, could be severely punished by imprisonment, flogging, mutilation by branding or cutting, being sold to a harsher master, or even sentenced to death. The NT nowhere condemns slavery. Indeed, slaves are instructed to be obedient to their masters (Eph 6:5-8; 1 Tm 6:1). But Paul recognizes that baptism changes even a slave’s relationship to the rest of the Christian family, as they become brothers and sisters in Christ (Gal 3:28; Phlm 16).

[23]Epaphras,[*] my fellow prisoner in Christ Jesus, greets you,[n] [24]as well as Mark, Aristarchus, Demas, and Luke, my co-workers. [25]The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit.[o]

Paul recognizes the dignity of both the owner and the slave, although he never condemned slavery as such. Human dignity is a foundational theme in Catholic social teaching on racism and slavery. Gaudium et Spes offers one summary of dignity and its implications:

[W]hile there are just differences between people, their equal dignity as persons demands that we strive for fairer and more humane conditions. Excessive economic and social disparity between individuals and peoples of the one human race is a source of scandal and militates against social justice, equity, human dignity, as well as social and international peace. It is for public and private organizations to be at the service of the dignity and destiny of humanity; let them spare no effort to banish every vestige of social and political slavery and to safeguard basic human rights under every political system. (29; cf. 12–22)

1 Prisoner: as often elsewhere (cf. Romans, 1 Corinthians, Galatians especially), the second word in Greek enunciates the theme and sets the tone of the letter. Here it is the prisoner appealing rather than the apostle commanding.

2 Apphia our sister: sister is here used (like brother) to indicate a fellow Christian. The church at your house: your here is singular. It more likely refers to Philemon than to the last one named, Archippus; Philemon is then the owner of the slave Onesimus (10). An alternate view is that the actual master of the slave is Archippus and that the one to whom the letter is addressed, Philemon, is the most prominent Christian there; see the note on Colossians 4:17.

3 Grace … and peace: for this greeting, which may be a combination of Greek and Aramaic epistolary formulae, see the note on Romans 1:1-7.

4 In my prayers: literally, “at the time of my prayers.”

5 Holy ones: a common term for members of the Christian community (so also v. 7).

6 In us: some good ancient manuscripts have in you (plural). That leads to Christ: leads to translates the Greek preposition eis, indicating direction or purpose.

7 Encouragement: the Greek word paraklēsis is cognate with the verb translated "urge" in Philemon 9, 10, and serves as an introduction to Paul's plea. Hearts: literally, "bowels," expressing in Semitic fashion the seat of the emotions, one's "inmost self." The same Greek word is used in Philemon 12 and again in Philemon 20, where it forms a literary inclusion marking off the body of the letter.

8 Full right: often translated "boldness," the Greek word parrēsia connotes the full franchise of speech, as the right of a citizen to speak before the body politic, claimed by the Athenians as their privilege (Euripides).

9 Old man: some editors conjecture that Paul here used a similar Greek word meaning "ambassador" (cf. Eph 6:20). This conjecture heightens the contrast with "prisoner" but is totally without manuscript support.

11 Useless … useful: here Paul plays on the name Onesimus, which means "useful" or "beneficial." The verb translated "profit" in Philemon 20 is cognate.

13 Serve: the Greek diakoneō could connote a ministry.

15 Was away from: literally, "was separated from," but the same verb means simply "left" in Acts 18:1. It is a euphemism for his running away.

16 As a man: literally, "in the flesh." With this and the following phrase, Paul describes the natural and spiritual orders.

18-19 Charge it to me … I will pay: technical legal and commercial terms in account keeping and acknowledgment of indebtedness.

23-24 Epaphras: a Colossian who founded the church there (Col 1:7) and perhaps also in Laodicea and Hierapolis (Col 2:1; 4:12-13). Aristarchus: a native of Thessalonica and fellow worker of Paul (Acts 19:29; 20:4; 27:2). For Mark, Demas, and Luke, see 2 Timothy 4:9-13 and the note there.

The Letter to the Hebrews

As early as the second century, this treatise, which is of great rhetorical power and force in its admonition to faithful pilgrimage under Christ's leadership, bore the title "To the Hebrews." It was assumed to be directed to Jewish Christians. Usually Hebrews was attached in Greek manuscripts to the collection of letters by Paul. Although no author is mentioned (for there is no address), a reference to Timothy (13:23) suggested connections to the circle of Paul and his assistants. Yet the exact audience, the author, and even whether Hebrews is a letter have long been disputed.

The author saw the addressees in danger of apostasy from their Christian faith. This danger was due not to any persecution from outsiders but to a weariness with the demands of Christian life and a growing indifference to their calling (2:1; 4:14; 6:1-12; 10:23-32). The author's main theme, the priesthood and sacrifice of Jesus (chaps. 3–10), is not developed for its own sake but as a means of restoring their lost fervor and strengthening them in their faith. Another important theme of the letter is that of the pilgrimage of the people of God to the heavenly Jerusalem (Heb 11:10; 12:1-3, 18-29; 13:14). This theme is intimately connected with that of Jesus' ministry in the heavenly sanctuary (9:11–10:22).

The author calls this work a "message of encouragement" (13:22), a designation that is given to a synagogue sermon in Acts 13:15. Hebrews is probably therefore a written homily, to which the author gave an epistolary ending (13:22-25).

The author begins with a reminder of the preexistence, incarnation, and exaltation of Jesus (1:3) that proclaimed him the climax of God's word to humanity (1:1-3). He dwells upon the dignity of the person of Christ, superior to the angels (1:4–2:2). Christ is God's final word of salvation communicated (in association with accredited witnesses to his teaching: cf. 2:3-4) not merely by word but through his suffering in the humanity common to him and to all others (2:5-16). This enactment of salvation went beyond the pattern known to Moses, faithful prophet of God’s word though he was, for Jesus as high priest expiated sin and was faithful to God with the faithfulness of God’s own Son (2:17–3:6).

SUMMARY

Hebrews, which is more like a sermon than a letter, reviews the history of Israel to demonstrate how Jesus Christ fulfills and even surpasses all the hopes expressed in the OT. It presents Jesus as the unique High Priest who is simultaneously the one who offers sacrifice to God and is himself the sacrifice.

Author: Unknown, but has been attributed in history to Paul, Barnabas, Apollos, or Priscilla and Aquila.

Date: Unknown, but perhaps between A.D. 65–90.

Content: Description of exaltation of Jesus Christ as superior to all that came before; Jesus as the compassionate High Priest; the contrast between the new and old covenants; the witness and faith of the ancestors; exhortations to be disciplined and faithful.

Main Characters: Jesus Christ as Son of God and High Priest, Moses, Melchizedek.

Just as the infidelity of the people thwarted Moses’ efforts to save them, so the infidelity of any Christian may thwart God’s plan in Christ (Heb 3:6–4:13). Christians are to reflect that it is their humanity that Jesus took upon himself, with all its defects save sinfulness, and that he bore the burden of it until death out of obedience to God. God declared this work of his Son to be the cause of salvation for all (4:14–5:10). Although Christians recognize this fundamental teaching, they may grow weary of it and of its implications, and therefore require other reflections to stimulate their faith (Heb 5:11–6:20).

Therefore, the author presents to the readers for their reflection the everlasting priesthood of Christ (7:1-28), a priesthood that fulfills the promise of the Old Testament (8:1-13). It also provides the meaning God ultimately intended in the sacrifices of the Old Testament (9:1-28): these pointed to the unique sacrifice of Christ, which alone obtains forgiveness of sins (10:1-18). The trial of faith experienced by the readers should resolve itself through their consideration of Christ’s ministry in the heavenly sanctuary and his perpetual intercession there on their behalf (7:25; 8:1-13). They should also be strengthened by the assurance of his foreordained parousia, and by the fruits of faith that they have already enjoyed (10:19-39).

It is in the nature of faith to recognize the reality of what is not yet seen and is the object of hope, and the saints of the Old Testament give striking example of that faith (11:1-40). The perseverance to which the author exhorts the readers is shown forth in the early life of Jesus. Despite the afflictions of his ministry and the supreme trial of his suffering and death, he remained confident of the triumph that God would bring him (12:1-3). The difficulties of human life have meaning when they are accepted as God’s discipline (12:4-13), and if Christians persevere in fidelity to the word in which they have believed, they are assured of possessing forever the unshakable kingdom of God (12:14-29).

The letter concludes with specific moral commandments (13:1-17), in the course of which the author recalls again his central theme of the sacrifice of Jesus and the courage needed to associate oneself with it in faith (13:9-16).

As early as the end of the second century, the church of Alexandria in Egypt accepted Hebrews as a letter of Paul, and that became the view commonly held in the East. Pauline authorship was contested in the West into the fourth century, but then accepted. In the sixteenth century, doubts about that position were again raised, and the modern consensus is that the letter was not written by Paul. There is, however, no widespread agreement on any of the other suggested authors, e.g., Barnabas, Apollos, or Prisc(ill)a and Aquila. The document itself has no statement about its author.

Among the reasons why Pauline authorship has been abandoned are the great difference of vocabulary and style between Hebrews and Paul’s letters, the alternation of doctrinal teaching with moral exhortation, the different manner of citing the Old Testament, and the resemblance between the thought of Hebrews and that of Alexandrian Judaism. The Greek of the letter is in many ways the best in the New Testament.

Since the letter of Clement of Rome to the Corinthians, written about A.D. 96, most probably cites Hebrews, the upper limit for the date of composition is reasonably certain. While the letter’s references in the present tense to the Old Testament sacrificial worship do not necessarily show that temple worship was still going on, many older commentators and a growing number of recent ones favor the view that it was and that the author wrote before the destruction of the temple of Jerusalem in A.D. 70. In that case, the argument of the letter is more easily explained as directed toward Jewish Christians rather than those of Gentile origin, and the persecutions they have suffered in the past (cf. 10:32-34) may have been connected with the disturbances that preceded the expulsion of the Jews from Rome in A.D. 49 under the emperor Claudius. These were probably caused by disputes between Jews who accepted Jesus as the Messiah and those who did not.

The principal divisions of the Letter to the Hebrews are the following:

I. Introduction (1:1-4)
II. The Son Higher Than the Angels (1:5–2:18)
III. Jesus, Faithful and Compassionate High Priest (3:1–5:10)
IV. Jesus’ Eternal Priesthood and Eternal Sacrifice (5:11–10:39)
V. Examples, Discipline, Disobedience (11:1–12:29)
VI. Final Exhortation, Blessing, Greetings (13:1-25)

II: THE SON HIGHER THAN THE ANGELS

Messianic Enthronement*

5For to which of the angels did God ever say:

d
Ps 2:7 / 2 Sm 7:14

“You are my son; this day I have begotten you”?[d]

Or again:

“I will be a father to him, and he shall be a son to me”?

6And again, when he leads* the first-born into the world, he says:

e
Dt 32:43 LXX; Ps 97:7

“Let all the angels of God worship him.”[e]

7Of the angels he says:

f
Ps 104:4 LXX

“He makes his angels winds and his ministers a fiery flame”;[f]

8but of the Son:

g
Ps 45:7-8

“Your throne, O God,* stands forever and ever; and a righteous scepter is the scepter of your kingdom.[g] 9You loved justice and hated wickedness;
therefore God, your God, anointed you with the oil of gladness above your companions”;

10and:

h
Ps 102:26-28

“At the beginning, O Lord, you established the earth,[h] and the heavens are the works of your hands.
11They will perish, but you remain;
and they will all grow old like a garment.
12You will roll them up like a cloak, and like a garment they will be changed.
But you are the same, and your years will have no end.”

13But to which of the angels has he ever said:

i
Ps 110:1

“Sit at my right hand until I make your enemies your footstool”?[i]

j
Ps 91:11; Dn 7:10

14Are they not all ministering spirits sent to serve, for the sake of those who are to inherit salvation?[j]

Exhortation to Faithfulness*

c

2 [1]Therefore, we must attend all the more to what we have heard, so that we may not be carried away. [2]For if the word announced through angels proved firm, and every transgression and disobedience received its just recompense,[a] [3]how shall we escape if we ignore so great a salvation? Announced originally through the Lord, it was confirmed for us by those who had heard.[b] [4]God added his testimony by signs, wonders, various acts of power, and distribution of the gifts of the holy Spirit according to his will.[c]

Exaltation Through Abasement*

5For it was not to angels that he subjected the world to come, of which we are speaking. 6Instead, someone has testified somewhere:

“What is man that you are mindful of him,

d

Ps 8:5-7

or the son of man that you care for him?[d] 7You made him for a little while lower than the angels;
you crowned him with glory and honor, 8subjecting all things under his feet.”

e

Mt 28:18; 1 Cor 15:25-28; Eph 1:20-23; Phil 3:21; 1 Pt 3:22

f

Phil 2:6-11

In “subjecting” all things [to him], he left nothing not “subject to him.” Yet at present we do not see “all things subject to him,”[e] 9but we do see Jesus “crowned with glory and honor” because he suffered death, he who “for a little while” was made “lower than the angels,” that by the grace of God he might taste death for everyone.[f]

g

12:2; Is 53:4 / Rom 11:36; 1 Cor 8:6

10For it was fitting that he, for whom and through whom all things exist, in bringing many children to glory, should make the leader to their salvation perfect through suffering.[g] 11He who consecrates and those who are being consecrated all have one origin. Therefore, he is not ashamed to call them “brothers,” 12saying:

“I will proclaim your name to my brothers,

h

Ps 22:23

in the midst of the assembly I will praise you”;[h]

13and again:

“I will put my trust in him”;

and again:

i

Is 8:17, 18

“Behold, I and the children God has given me.”[i]

4:15; 5:1-3

14Now since the children share in blood and flesh, he likewise shared in them, that through death he might destroy the one who has the power of death, that is, the devil,[j] 15and free those who through fear of death had been subject to slavery all their life. 16Surely he did not help angels but rather the descendants of Abraham; 17therefore, he had to become like his brothers in every way, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest before God to expiate the sins of the people.[k] 18Because he himself was tested through what he suffered, he is able to help those who are being tested.

III: JESUS, FAITHFUL AND COMPASSIONATE HIGH PRIEST

Jesus, Superior to Moses*

a

Nm 12:7

b

2 Cor 3:7-8

10:21; Eph 2:19; 1 Tm 3:15; 1 Pt 4:17

3 [1]Therefore, holy “brothers,” sharing in a heavenly calling, reflect on Jesus, the apostle and high priest of our confession, [2]who was faithful to the one who appointed him, just as Moses was “faithful in [all] his house.”[a] [3]But he is worthy of more “glory” than Moses, as the founder of a house has more “honor” than the house itself.[b] [4]Every house is founded by someone, but the founder of all is God. [5]Moses was “faithful in all his house” as a “servant” to testify to what would be spoken, [6]*[c]but Christ was faithful as a son placed over his house. We are his house, if [only] we hold fast to our confidence and pride in our hope.

Israel’s Infidelity a Warning

[7]*Therefore, as the holy Spirit says:

[d] Ps 95:7-11

“Oh, that today you would hear his voice,[d]
[8]‘Harden not your hearts as at the rebellion in the day of testing in the desert, [9]where your ancestors tested and tried me and saw my works[e] [10]for forty years.
Because of this I was provoked with that generation and I said, “They have always been of erring heart, and they do not know my ways.”
[11]As I swore in my wrath,
“They shall not enter into my rest.”’”

[e] Ex 17:7; Nm 20:2-5

Hebrews is the sole book in the NT to refer to Jesus as the High Priest. In Jewish tradition the high priest was the main cultic figure and leader of the Sanhedrin, the chief legal body in Judaism at the time of Jesus. Although this position was sometimes inherited, it also became a politically important position at the time when Rome ruled the Holy Land. The origins of the high priesthood are obscure, most likely originating in the postexilic period of Israel’s history.

[f] Rom 8:17

[12]Take care, brothers, that none of you may have an evil and unfaithful heart, so as to forsake the living God. [13]Encourage yourselves daily while it is still “today,” so that none of you may grow hardened by the deceit of sin. [14]We have become partners of Christ if only we hold the beginning of the reality firm until the end,[f] [15]for it is said:

“Oh, that today you would hear his voice:

g

Ps 95:7-8

‘Harden not your hearts as at the rebellion.’”[g]

h

Nm 14:1-38; Dt 1:19-40

i

Nm 14:29

j

Nm 14:22-23; Dt 1:35

[16][h]Who were those who rebelled when they heard? Was it not all those who came out of Egypt under Moses? [17]With whom was he “provoked for forty years”? Was it not those who had sinned, whose corpses fell in the desert?[i] [18]And to whom did he “swear that they should not enter into his rest,” if not to those who were disobedient?[j] [19]And we see that they could not enter for lack of faith.

The Sabbath Rest

3:11; Ps 95:11

4 [1]Therefore, let us be on our guard while the promise of entering into his rest remains, that none of you seem to have failed. [2]For in fact we have received the good news just as they did. But the word that they heard did not profit them, for they were not united in faith with those who listened. [3]For we who believed enter into [that] rest, just as he has said:[a]

> “As I swore in my wrath,
> ‘They shall not enter into my rest,’”

b
c
Ps 95:11

and yet his works were accomplished at the foundation of the world. [4]For he has spoken somewhere about the seventh day in this manner, “And God rested on the seventh day from all his works”;[b] [5]and again, in the previously mentioned place, “They shall not enter into my rest.”[c] [6]Therefore, since it remains that some will enter into it, and those who formerly received the good news did not enter because of disobedience, [7]he once more set a day, “today,” when long afterwards he spoke through David, as already quoted:[d]

> “Oh, that today you would hear his voice:
> ‘Harden not your hearts.’”

e
Dt 31:7; Jos 22:4

[8]Now if Joshua had given them rest, he would not have spoken afterwards of another day.[e] 9Therefore, a sabbath rest still remains for the people of God. 10And whoever enters into God’s rest, rests from his own works as God did from his. 11Therefore, let us strive to enter into that rest, so that no one may fall after the same example of disobedience.

Jb 34:21-22; Pss 90:8; 139:2-4

12Indeed, the word of God is living and effective, sharper than any two-edged sword, penetrating even between soul and spirit, joints and marrow, and able to discern reflections and thoughts of the heart.[f] 13No creature is concealed from him, but everything is naked and exposed to the eyes of him to whom we must render an account.[g]

Although we delight in a word of God that gives comfort, we cringe just a bit when we learn of its cutting edge. The word of God slices through the soul and pierces the heart making us vulnerable to the truth. How have you experienced the living power of God’s word in your life?

The Sabbath is the OT day of rest, the seventh day of creation (Gn 2:2-3). Originally, Christians (many of whom were Jews) observed the traditional Jewish Sabbath on Saturday but also commemorated Sunday as the “day of the Lord”—the day Jesus rose from the dead. In time, Sunday became the Christian Sabbath, with all the customs associated with a feast day or a day abstaining from work.

IV: JESUS' ETERNAL PRIESTHOOD AND ETERNAL SACRIFICE

Exhortation to Spiritual Renewal

1 Cor 3:1-3

[11]*About this we have much to say, and it is difficult to explain, for you have become sluggish in hearing. [12]Although you should be teachers by this time, you need to have someone teach you again the basic elements of the utterances of God. You need milk, [and] not solid food.[i] [13]Everyone who lives on milk lacks experience of the word of righteousness, for he is a child. [14]But solid food is for the mature, for those whose faculties are trained by practice to discern good and evil.

The author of Hebrews makes a distinction between milk and solid food in teaching about the need to mature in our faith. Are you still drinking the milk of infants? What is the solid food of your spiritual life?

6 [1]Therefore, let us leave behind the basic teaching about Christ and advance to maturity, without laying the foundation all over again:

repentance from dead works and faith in God,[a] 2instruction about baptisms* and laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment.[b] 3And we shall do this, if only God permits. 4For it is impossible in the case of those who have once been enlightened and tasted the heavenly gift* and shared in the holy Spirit[c] 5and tasted the good word of God and the powers of the age to come,* 6and then have fallen away, to bring them to repentance again, since they are recrucifying the Son of God for themselves* and holding him up to contempt.[d] 7Ground that has absorbed the rain falling upon it repeatedly and brings forth crops useful to those for whom it is cultivated receives a blessing from God.[e] 8But if it produces thorns and thistles, it is rejected; it will soon be cursed and finally burned.[f]

[17]So when God wanted to give the heirs of his promise an even clearer demonstration of the immutability of his purpose, he intervened with an oath,[l] [18]so that by two immutable things,* in which it was impossible for God to lie, we who have taken refuge might be strongly encouraged to hold fast to the hope that lies before us.[m] [19]This we have as an anchor of the soul,[n] sure and firm, which reaches into the interior behind the veil,* [20]where Jesus has entered on our behalf as forerunner, becoming high priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek.[o]

Melchizedek, a Type of Christ

4:14; 6:6; 10:29

7 [1]This “Melchizedek, king of Salem and priest of God Most High,” “met Abraham as he returned from his defeat of the kings” and “blessed him.”[a] [2]And Abraham apportioned to him “a tenth of everything.” His name first means righteous king, and he was also “king of Salem,” that is, king of peace. [3]Without father, mother, or ancestry, without beginning of days or end of life, thus made to resemble the Son of God, he remains a priest forever.[b]

Melchizedek is an obscure figure in the OT who was said to be the king of Salem (maybe shalom, which means “peace”) and some sort of priest (Gn 14:18; cf. Ps 110:4). The author of Hebrews uses him as model of a high priest and makes of him the OT prefigurement of the priesthood of Jesus Christ, established in the NT (cf. Heb 5:10). By analogy the church employs this figure in its ritual of the ordination of priests.

d

Nm 18:21 / Gn 35:11

[4]See how great he is to whom the patriarch “Abraham [indeed] gave a tenth” of his spoils.[c] [5]The descendants of Levi who receive the office of priesthood have a commandment according to the law to exact tithes from the people, that is, from their brothers, although they also have come from the loins of Abraham.[d] [6]But he who was not of their ancestry received tithes from Abraham and blessed him who had received the promises. [7]Unquestionably, a lesser person is blessed by a greater. [8]In the one case, mortal men receive tithes; in the other, a man of whom it is testified that he lives on. [9]One might even say that Levi* himself, who receives tithes, was tithed through Abraham,

[10]for he was still in his father’s loins when Melchizedek met him.

[11]If, then, perfection came through the levitical priesthood, on the basis of which the people received the law, what need would there still have been for another priest to arise according to the order of Melchizedek, and not reckoned according to the order of Aaron?[e] [12]When there is a change of priesthood, there is necessarily a change of law as well. [13]Now he of whom these things are said belonged to a different tribe, of which no member ever officiated at the altar. [14]It is clear that our Lord arose from Judah,* and in regard to that tribe Moses said nothing about priests.[f] [15]It is even more obvious if another priest is raised up after the likeness of Melchizedek, [16]who has become so, not by a law expressed in a commandment concerning physical descent but by the power of a life that cannot be destroyed. [17]For it is testified:

“You are a priest forever

g

5:6; Ps 110:4

according to the order of Melchizedek.”[g]

h

10:1

[18]On the one hand, a former commandment is annulled because of its weakness and uselessness,[h] [19]for the law brought nothing to perfection; on the other hand, a better hope* is introduced, through which we draw near to God. [20]And to the degree that this happened not without the taking of an oath—for others became priests without an oath, [21]but he with an oath, through the one who said to him:

i

[26] [m]It was fitting that we should have such a high priest: holy, innocent, undefiled, separated from sinners, higher than the heavens.* [27] He has no need, as did the high priests, to offer sacrifice day after day,*[n] first for his own sins and then for those of the people; he did that once for all when he offered himself. [28] For the law appoints men subject to weakness to be high priests, but the word of the oath, which was taken after the law, appoints a son, who has been made perfect forever.[o]

8 [1]The main point of what has been said is this: we have such a high priest, who has taken his seat at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in heaven,[a] [2]a minister of the sanctuary* and of the true tabernacle that the Lord, not man, set up.[b] [3]Now every high priest is appointed to offer gifts and sacrifices; thus the necessity for this one also to have something to offer.[c] [4]If then he were on earth, he would not be a priest, since there are those who offer gifts according to the law.[d] [5]They worship in a copy and shadow of the heavenly sanctuary, as Moses was warned when he was about to erect the tabernacle. For he says, “See that you make everything according to the pattern shown you on the mountain.”[e] [6]Now he has obtained so much more excellent a ministry as he is mediator of a better covenant, enacted on better promises.[f]

Old and New Covenants*

7For if that first covenant had been faultless, no place would have been sought for a second one. 8But he finds fault with them and says:*

g
Jer 31:31-34

“Behold, the days are coming, says the Lord,[g] when I will conclude a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah.
9It will not be like the covenant I made with their fathers the day I took them by the hand to lead them forth from the land of Egypt; for they did not stand by my covenant and I ignored them, says the Lord.
10But this is the covenant I will establish with the house of Israel after those days, says the Lord:
I will put my laws in their minds and I will write them upon their hearts.
I will be their God,

h
10:16-17

and they shall be my people.[h] 11And they shall not teach, each one his fellow citizen and kinsman, saying, ‘Know the Lord,’ for all shall know me,
from least to greatest.
12For I will forgive their evildoing and remember their sins no more.”

Getting It Right … The Two Covenants

Hebrews explicitly contrasts the new and old covenants. The author finds the old covenant inferior in every way, when compared to the new covenant established in Jesus Christ and predicted in Jeremiah (Jer 31:31-34). One must be cautious, however, not to conclude that the first covenant no longer has any value. Indeed, the Catechism says that “the Old Covenant has never been revoked” (CCC 121). The Catholic Church teaches that God’s covenant with Israel still abides. Vatican Council II noted: “the apostle Paul maintains that the Jews remain very dear to God, for the sake of the patriarchs, since God does not take back the gifts he bestowed or the choice he made" (NA 4). For this reason, although the church sees the old covenant as a preparation for the new, God continues to relate to the Jewish people as a chosen race called to be faithful to the God whose love for them has never ceased and whose covenant with them remains in effect.

[2]For a tabernacle was constructed, the outer one,* in which were the lampstand, the table, and the bread of offering; this is called the Holy Place.[a] [3]Behind the second veil was the tabernacle called the Holy of Holies,[b] [4]in which were the gold altar of incense and the ark of the covenant entirely covered with gold. In it were the gold jar containing the manna, the staff of Aaron that had sprouted, and the tablets of the covenant.[c] [5]Above it were the cherubim of glory overshadowing the place of expiation. Now is not the time to speak of these in detail.[d] proclaimed by Moses to all the people according to the law, he took the blood of calves [and goats], together with water and crimson wool and hyssop, and sprinkled both the book itself and all the people,[m] 20saying, “This is ‘the blood of the covenant which God has enjoined upon you.’”[n] 21In the same way, he sprinkled also the tabernacle and all the vessels of worship with blood.[o] 22*According to the law almost everything is purified by blood,[p] and without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness.

6With these arrangements for worship, the priests, in performing their service,* go into the outer tabernacle repeatedly,[e] 7but the high priest alone goes into the inner one once a year, not without blood* that he offers for himself and for the sins of the people.[f] 8In this way the holy Spirit shows that the way into the sanctuary had not yet been revealed while the outer tabernacle still had its place. 9This is a symbol of the present time,* in which gifts and sacrifices are offered that cannot perfect the worshiper in conscience 10but only in matters of food and drink and various ritual washings: regulations concerning the flesh, imposed until the time of the new order.[g]

23*Therefore, it was necessary for the copies of the heavenly things to be purified by these rites, but the heavenly things themselves by better sacrifices than these.[q] 24For Christ did not enter into a sanctuary made by hands, a copy of the true one, but heaven itself, that he might now appear before God on our behalf.[r] 25Not that he might offer himself repeatedly, as the high priest enters each year into the sanctuary with blood that is not his own; 26if that were so, he would have had to suffer repeatedly from the foundation of the world. But now once for all he has appeared at the end of the ages* to take away sin by his sacrifice.[s] 27Just as it is appointed that human beings die once, and after this the judgment,[t] 28so also Christ, offered once to take away the sins of many,* will appear a second time, not to take away sin but to bring salvation to those who eagerly await him.[u]

10 [1]Since the law has only a shadow of the good things to come, and not the very image of them, it can never make perfect those who come to worship by the same sacrifices that they offer continually each year.[a] [2]Otherwise, would not the sacrifices have ceased to be offered, since the worshipers, once cleansed, would no longer have had any consciousness of sins? [3]But in those sacrifices there is only a yearly remembrance of sins,[b] [4]for it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats take away sins.[c] [5]For this reason, when he came into the world, he said:*

11 * [1]Faith is the realization of what is hoped for and evidence* of things not seen.[a] [2]Because of it the ancients were well attested. [3][b]By faith we understand that the universe was ordered by the word of God,* so that what is visible came into being through the invisible. [4]*By faith Abel offered to God a sacrifice greater than Cain’s. Through this he was attested to be righteous, God bearing witness to his gifts, and through this, though dead, he still speaks.[c] [5]By faith Enoch was taken up so that he should not see death, and “he was found no more because God had taken him.” Before he was taken up, he was attested to have pleased God.[d] [6]*But without faith it is impossible to please him,[e] for anyone who approaches God must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who seek him. [7]By faith Noah, warned about what was not yet seen, with reverence built an ark for the salvation of his household. Through this he condemned the world and inherited the righteousness that comes through faith.[f]

Carefully, with reverence and gratitude, read this touching tribute to the faith of our biblical ancestors. Then write your own story of the faith you have seen in your family history.

32What more shall I say? I have not time to tell of Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, of David and Samuel and the prophets,[a] 33who by faith conquered kingdoms, did what was righteous, obtained the promises; they closed the mouths of lions,[b] 34put out raging fires, escaped the devouring sword; out of weakness they were made powerful, became strong in battle, and turned back foreign invaders.[c] 35Women received back their dead through resurrection. Some were tortured and would not accept deliverance, in order to obtain a better resurrection.[d] 36Others endured mockery, scourging, even chains and imprisonment.[e] 37They were stoned, sawed in two, put to death at sword's point; they went about in skins of sheep or goats, needy, afflicted, tormented.[f] 38The world was not worthy of them. They wandered about in deserts and on mountains, in caves and in crevices in the earth.[g]

39Yet all these, though approved because of their faith, did not receive what had been promised. [40]God had foreseen something better for us, so that without us they should not be made perfect.*

1:1-4 The letter opens with an introduction consisting of a reflection on the climax of God's revelation to the human race in his Son. The divine communication was initiated and maintained during Old Testament times in fragmentary and varied ways through the prophets (1:1), including Abraham, Moses, and all through whom God spoke. But now in these last days (1:2) the final age, God's revelation of his saving purpose is achieved through a son, i.e., one who is Son, whose role is redeemer and mediator of creation. He was made heir of all things through his death and exaltation to glory, yet he existed before he appeared as man; through him God created the universe. Hebrews 1:3-4, which may be based upon a liturgical hymn, assimilate the Son to the personified Wisdom of the Old Testament as refulgence of God's glory and imprint of his being (1:3; cf. Wis 7:26). These same terms are used of the Logos in Philo. The author now turns from the cosmological role of the preexistent Son to the redemptive work of Jesus: he brought about purification from sins and has been exalted to the right hand of God (see Ps 110:1). The once-humiliated and crucified Jesus has been declared God's Son, and this name shows his superiority to the angels. The reason for the author's insistence on that superiority is, among other things, that in some Jewish traditions angels were mediators of the old covenant (see Acts 7:53; Gal 3:19). Finally, Jesus' superiority to the angels emphasizes the superiority of the new covenant to the old because of the heavenly priesthood of Jesus.

1:5-14 Jesus' superiority to the angels is now demonstrated by a series of seven Old Testament texts. Some scholars see in the stages of Jesus' exaltation an order corresponding to that of enthronement ceremonies in the ancient Near East, especially in Egypt, namely, elevation to divine status (1:5-6); presentation to the angels and proclamation of everlasting lordship (1:7-12); enthronement and conferral of royal power (1:13). The citations from the Psalms in Hebrews 1:5, 13 were traditionally used of Jesus' messianic sonship (cf. Acts 13:33) through his resurrection and exaltation (cf. Acts 2:33-35); those in Hebrews 1:8, 10-12 are concerned with his divine kingship and his creative function. The central quotation in Hebrews 1:7 serves to contrast the angels with the Son. The author quotes it according to the Septuagint translation, which is quite different in meaning from that of the Hebrew ("You make the winds your messengers, and flaming fire your ministers"). The angels are only sent to serve … those who are to inherit salvation (1:14).

1:6 And again, when he leads: the Greek could also be translated "And when he again leads" in reference to the parousia.

1:8-12 O God: the application of the name "God" to the Son derives from the preexistence mentioned in Hebrews 1:2-3; the psalmist had already used it of the Hebrew king in the court style of the original. See the note on Psalm 45:7. It is also important for the author's christology that in Hebrews 1:10-12 an Old Testament passage addressed to God is redirected to Jesus.

2:1-4 The author now makes a transition into exhortation, using an a fortiori argument (as at 7:21-22; 9:13-14; 10:28-29; 12:25). The word announced through angels (2:2), the Mosaic law, is contrasted with the more powerful word that Christians have received (2:3-4). Christ's supremacy strengthens Christians against being carried away from their faith.

2:5-18 The humanity and the suffering of Jesus do not constitute a valid reason for relinquishing the Christian faith. Psalm 8:6-7 is also applied to Jesus in 1 Corinthians 15:27; Ephesians 1:22; and probably 1 Peter 3:22. This christological interpretation, therefore, probably reflects a common early Christian tradition, which may have originated in the expression the son of man (2:6). The psalm contrasts God's greatness with man's relative insignificance but also stresses the superiority of man to the rest of creation, of which he is lord. Hebrews applies this christologically: Jesus lived a truly human existence, lower than the angels, in the days of his earthly life, particularly in his suffering and death; now, crowned with glory and honor, he is raised above all creation. The author considers all things as already subject to him because of his exaltation (2:8-9), though we do not see this yet. The reference to Jesus as leader (2:10) sounds the first note of an important leitmotif in Hebrews: the journey of the people of God to the sabbath rest (4:9), the heavenly sanctuary, following Jesus, their "forerunner" (6:20). It was fitting that God should make him perfect through suffering, consecrated by obedient suffering. Because he is perfected as high priest, Jesus is then able to consecrate his people (2:11); access to God is made possible by each of these two consecrations. If Jesus is able to help human beings, it is because he has become one of us; we are his "brothers." The author then cites three Old Testament texts as proofs of this unity between ourselves and the Son. Psalm 22:23 is interpreted so as to make Jesus the singer of this lament, which ends with joyful praise of the Lord in the assembly of "brothers." The other two texts are from Isaiah 8:17, 18. The first of these seems intended to display in Jesus an example of the trust in God that his followers should emulate. The second curiously calls these followers "children"; probably this is to be understood to mean children of Adam, but the point is our solidarity with Jesus. By sharing human nature, including the ban of death, Jesus broke the power of the devil over death (2:14); the author shares the view of Hellenistic Judaism that death was not intended by God and that it had been introduced into the world by the devil. The fear of death (2:15) is a religious fear based on the false conception that death marks the end of a person's relations with God (cf. Ps 115:17-18; Is 38:18). Jesus deliberately allied himself with the descendants of Abraham (2:16) in order to be a merciful and faithful high priest. This is the first appearance of the central theme of Hebrews, Jesus the great high priest expiating the sins of the people (2:17), as one who experienced the same tests as they (2:18).

3:1-6 The author now takes up the two qualities of Jesus mentioned in Hebrews 2:17, but in inverse order: faithfulness (3:1–4:13) and mercy (4:14–5:10). Christians are called holy "brothers" because of their common relation to him (2:11), the apostle, a designation for Jesus used only here in the New Testament (cf. Jn 13:16; 17:3), meaning one sent as God's final word to us (1:2). He is compared with Moses probably because he is seen as mediator of the new covenant (9:15) just as Moses was of the old (9:19-22, including his sacrifice). But when the author of Hebrews speaks of Jesus' sacrifice, he does not consider Moses as the Old Testament antitype, but rather the high priest on the Day of Atonement (9:6-15). Moses' faithfulness "in [all] his house" refers back to Numbers 12:7, on which this section is a midrashic commentary. In Hebrews 3:3-6, the author does not indicate that he thinks of either Moses or Christ as the founder of the household. His house (3:2, 5, 6) means God's house, not that of Moses or Christ; in the case of Christ, compare Hebrews 3:6 with Hebrews 10:21. The house of Hebrews 3:6 is the Christian community; the author suggests its continuity with Israel by speaking not of two houses but of only one. Hebrews 3:6 brings out the reason why Jesus is superior to Moses: the latter was the faithful servant laboring in the house founded by God, but Jesus is God's son, placed over the house.

3:6 The majority of manuscripts add "firm to the end," but these words are not found in the three earliest and best witnesses and are probably an interpolation derived from Hebrews 3:14.

3:7–4:13 The author appeals for steadfastness of faith in Jesus, basing his warning on the experience of Israel during the Exodus. In the Old Testament the Exodus had been invoked as a symbol of the return of Israel from the Babylonian exile (Is 42:9; 43:16-21; 51:9-11). In the New Testament the redemption was similarly understood as a new exodus, both in the experience of Jesus himself (Lk 9:31) and in that of his followers (1 Cor 10:1-4). The author cites Psalm 95:7-11, a salutary example of hardness of heart, as a warning against the danger of growing weary and giving up the journey. To call God living (3:12) means that he reveals himself in his works (cf. Jos 3:10; Jer 10:11). The rest (3:11) into which Israel was to enter was only a foreshadowing of that rest to which Christians are called. They are to remember the example of Israel's revolt in the desert that cost a whole generation the loss of the promised land (3:15-19; cf. Nm 14:20-29). In Hebrews 4:1-11, the symbol of rest is seen in deeper dimension: because the promise to the ancient Hebrews foreshadowed that given to Christians, it is good news; and because the promised land was the place of rest that God provided for his people, it was a share in his own rest, which he enjoyed after he had finished his creative work (3:3-4; cf. Gn 2:2). The author attempts to read this meaning of God's rest into Psalm 95:7-11 (3:6-9). The Greek form of the name of Joshua, who led Israel into the promised land, is Jesus (3:8). The author plays upon the name but stresses the superiority of Jesus, who leads his followers into heavenly rest. Hebrews 3:12, 13 are meant as a continuation of the warning, for the word of God brings judgment as well as salvation. Some would capitalize the word of God and see it as a personal title of Jesus, comparable to that of John 1:1-18.

4:14-16 These verses, which return to the theme first sounded in Hebrews 2:16–3:1, serve as an introduction to the section that follows. The author here alone calls Jesus a great high priest (4:14), a designation used by Philo for the Logos; perhaps he does so in order to emphasize Jesus' superiority over the Jewish high priest. He has been tested in every way, yet without sin (4:15); this indicates an acquaintance with the tradition of Jesus' temptations, not only at the beginning (as in Mk 1:13) but throughout his public life (cf. Lk 22:28). Although the reign of the exalted Jesus is a theme that occurs elsewhere in Hebrews, and Jesus' throne is mentioned in Hebrews 1:8, the throne of grace (4:16) refers to the throne of God. The similarity of Hebrews 4:16 to Hebrews 10:19-22 indicates that the author is thinking of our confident access to God, made possible by the priestly work of Jesus.

5:1-10 The true humanity of Jesus (see the note on 2:5-18) makes him a more rather than a less effective high priest to the Christian community. In Old Testament tradition, the high priest was identified with the people, guilty of personal sin just as they were (5:1-3). Even so, the office was of divine appointment (5:4), as was also the case with the sinless Christ (5:5). For Hebrews 5:6, see the note on Psalm 110:4. Although Jesus was Son of God, he was destined as a human being to learn obedience by accepting the suffering he had to endure (5:8). Because of his perfection through this experience of human suffering, he is the cause of salvation for all (5:9), a high priest according to the order of Melchizedek (5:10; cf. 5:6 and 7:3).

5:1 To offer gifts and sacrifices for sins: the author is thinking principally of the Day of Atonement rite, as is clear from Hebrews 9:7. This ritual was celebrated to atone for “all the sins of the Israelites” (Lv 16:34).

5:2 Deal patiently: the Greek word metriopathein occurs only here in the Bible; this term was used by the Stoics to designate the golden mean between excess and defect of passion. Here it means rather the ability to sympathize.

5:6-8 The author of Hebrews is the only New Testament writer to cite Psalm 110:4, here and in Hebrews 7:17, 21, to show that Jesus has been called by God to his role as priest. Hebrews 5:7-8 deal with his ability to sympathize with sinners, because of his own experience of the trials and weakness of human nature, especially fear of death. In his present exalted state, weakness is foreign to him, but he understands what we suffer because of his previous earthly experience.

5:7 He offered prayers … to the one who was able to save him from death: at Gethsemane (cf. Mk 14:35), though some see a broader reference (see the note on Jn 12:27).

5:8 Son though he was: two different though not incompatible views of Jesus’ sonship coexist in Hebrews, one associating it with his exaltation, the other with his preexistence. The former view is the older one (cf. Rom 1:4).

5:11–6:20 The central section of Hebrews (5:11–10:39) opens with a reprimand and an appeal. Those to whom the author directs his teaching about Jesus’ priesthood, which is difficult to explain, have become sluggish in hearing and forgetful of even the basic elements (5:12). But rather than treating of basic teachings, the author apparently believes that the challenge of more advanced ones may shake them out of their inertia (therefore, 6:1). The six examples of basic teaching in Hebrews 6:1-3 are probably derived from a traditional catechetical list. No effort is made to address apostates, for their very hostility to the Christian message cuts them off completely from Christ (6:4-8). This harsh statement seems to rule out repentance after apostasy, but perhaps the author deliberately uses hyperbole in order to stress the seriousness of abandoning Christ. With Hebrews 6:9 a milder tone is introduced, and the criticism of the community (6:1-3, 9) is now balanced by an expression of confidence that its members are living truly Christian lives, and that God will justly reward their efforts (6:10). The author is concerned especially about their persevering (6:11-12), citing in this regard the achievement of Abraham, who relied on God’s promise and on God’s oath (6:13-18; cf. Gn 22:16), and proposes to them as a firm anchor of Christian hope the high priesthood of Christ, who is now living with God (6:19-20).

6:2 Instruction about baptisms: not simply about Christian baptism but about the difference between it and similar Jewish rites, such as proselyte baptism, John’s baptism, and the washings of the Qumran sectaries. Laying on of hands: in Acts 8:17; 19:6 this rite effects the infusion of the holy Spirit; in Acts 6:6; 13:3; 1 Timothy 4:14; 5:22; 2 Timothy 1:6 it is a means of conferring some ministry or mission in the early Christian community.

6:4 Enlightened and tasted the heavenly gift: this may refer to baptism and the Eucharist, respectively, but more probably means the neophytes’ enlightenment by faith and their experience of salvation.

6:5 Tasted the good word of God and the powers of the age to come: the proclamation of the word of God was accompanied by signs of the Spirit’s power (1 Thes 1:5; 1 Cor 2:4).

6:6 They are recrucifying the Son of God for themselves: a colorful description of the malice of apostasy, which is portrayed as again crucifying and deriding the Son of God.

6:12 Imitators of those … inheriting the promises: the author urges the addressees to imitate the faith of the holy people of the Old Testament, who now possess the promised goods of which they lived in hope. This theme will be treated fully in Hebrews 6:11.

6:13 He swore by himself: God’s promise to Abraham, which he confirmed by an oath (“I swear by myself,” Gn 22:16) was the basis for the hope of all Abraham’s descendants.

6:15 He obtained the promise: this probably refers not to Abraham’s temporary possession of the land but to the eschatological blessings that Abraham and the other patriarchs have now come to possess.

6:18 Two immutable things: the promise and the oath, both made by God.

6:19 Anchor … into the interior behind the veil: a mixed metaphor. The Holy of Holies, beyond the veil that separates it from the Holy Place (Ex 26:31-33), is seen as the earthly counterpart of the heavenly abode of God. This theme will be developed in Hebrews 9.

7:1-3 Recalling the meeting between Melchizedek and Abraham described in Genesis 14:17-20, the author enhances the significance of this priest by providing the popular etymological meaning of his name and that of the city over which he ruled (7:2). Since Genesis gives no information on the parentage or the death of Melchizedek, he is seen here as a type of Christ, representing a priesthood that is unique and eternal (7:3).

7:1 The author here assumes that Melchizedek was a priest of the God of Israel (cf. Gn 14:22 and the note there).

7:2 In Genesis 14, the Hebrew text does not state explicitly who gave tithes to whom. The author of Hebrews supplies Abraham as the subject, according to a contemporary interpretation of the passage. This supports the argument of the midrash and makes it possible to see in Melchizedek a type of Jesus. The messianic blessings of righteousness and peace are foreshadowed in the names “Melchizedek” and “Salem.”

7:3 Without father, mother, or ancestry, without beginning of days or end of life: this is perhaps a quotation from a hymn about Melchizedek. The rabbis maintained that anything not mentioned in the Torah does not exist. Consequently, since the Old Testament nowhere mentions Melchizedek’s ancestry, birth, or death, the conclusion can be drawn that he remains … forever.

7:4-10 The tithe that Abraham gave to Melchizedek (7:4), a practice later followed by the levitical priesthood (7:5), was a gift (7:6) acknowledging a certain superiority in Melchizedek, the foreign priest (7:7). This is further indicated by the fact that the institution of the levitical priesthood was sustained by hereditary succession in the tribe of Levi, whereas the absence of any mention of Melchizedek’s death in Genesis implies that his personal priesthood is permanent (7:8). The levitical priesthood itself, through Abraham, its ancestor, paid tithes to Melchizedek, thus acknowledging the superiority of his priesthood over its own (7:9-10).

7:7 A lesser person is blessed by a greater: though this sounds like a principle, there are some examples in the Old Testament that do not support it (cf. 2 Sm 14:22; Jb 31:20). The author may intend it as a statement of a liturgical rule.

7:9 Levi: for the author this name designates not only the son of Jacob mentioned in Genesis but the priestly tribe that was thought to be descended from him.

7:11-14 The levitical priesthood was not typified by the priesthood of Melchizedek, for Psalm 110:4 speaks of a priesthood of a new order, the order of Melchizedek, to arise in messianic times (7:11). Since the levitical priesthood served the Mosaic law, a new priesthood (7:12) would not come into being without a change in the law itself. Thus Jesus was not associated with the Old Testament priesthood, for he was a descendant of the tribe of Judah, which had never exercised the priesthood (7:13-14).

7:13 He of whom these things are said: Jesus, the priest “according to the order of Melchizedek.” According to the author’s interpretation, Psalm 110 spoke prophetically of Jesus.

7:14 Judah: the author accepts the early Christian tradition that Jesus was descended from the family of David (cf. Mt 1:1-2, 16, 20; Lk 1:27; 2:4; Rom 1:3). The Qumran community expected two Messiahs, one descended from Aaron and one from David; Hebrews shows no awareness of this view or at least does not accept it. Our author’s view is not attested in contemporaneous Judaism.

7:15-19 Jesus does not exercise a priesthood through family lineage but through his immortal existence (Heb 7:15-16), fulfilling Psalm 110:4 (7:17; cf. 7:3). Thus he abolishes forever both the levitical priesthood and the law it serves, because neither could effectively sanctify people (7:18) by leading them into direct communication with God (7:19).

7:16 A life that cannot be destroyed: the life to which Jesus has attained by virtue of his resurrection; it is his exaltation rather than his divine nature that makes him priest. The Old Testament speaks of the Aaronic priesthood as eternal (see Ex 40:15); our author does not explicitly consider this possible objection to his argument but implicitly refutes it in Hebrews 7:23-24.

7:19 A better hope: this hope depends upon the sacrifice of the Son of God; through it we “approach the throne of grace” (4:16); cf. Hebrews 6:19, 20.

7:20-25 As was the case with the promise to Abraham (6:13), though not with the levitical priesthood, the eternal priesthood of the order of Melchizedek was confirmed by God’s oath (7:20-21); cf. Psalm 110:4. Thus Jesus becomes the guarantee of a permanent covenant (7:22) that does not require a succession of priests as did the levitical priesthood (7:23) because his high priesthood is eternal and unchangeable (7:24). Consequently, Jesus is able to save all who draw near to God through him since he is their ever-living intercessor (7:25).

7:20 An oath: God’s oath in Psalm 110:4.

7:22 An [even] better covenant: better than the Mosaic covenant because it will be eternal, like the priesthood of Jesus upon which it is based. Hebrews 7:12 argued that a change of priesthood involves a change of law; since “law” and “covenant” are used correlatively, a new covenant is likewise instituted.

7:25 To make intercession: the intercession of the exalted Jesus, not the sequel to his completed sacrifice but its eternal presence in heaven; cf. Romans 8:34.

7:26-28 Jesus is precisely the high priest whom the human race requires, holy and sinless, installed far above humanity (7:26); one having no need to offer sacrifice daily for sins but making a single offering of himself (7:27) once for all. The law could only appoint high priests with human limitations, but the fulfillment of God’s oath regarding the priesthood of Melchizedek (Ps 110:4) makes the Son of God the perfect priest forever (7:28).

7:26 This verse with its list of attributes is reminiscent of Hebrews 7:3 and is perhaps a hymnic counterpart to it, contrasting the exalted Jesus with Melchizedek.

7:27 Such daily sacrifice is nowhere mentioned in the Mosaic law; only on the Day of Atonement is it prescribed that the high priest must offer sacrifice … for his own sins and then for those of the people (Lv 16:11-19). Once for all: this translates the Greek words ephapax/hapax that occur eleven times in Hebrews.

8:1-6 The Christian community has in Jesus the kind of high priest described in Hebrews 7:26-28. In virtue of his ascension Jesus has taken his place at God's right hand in accordance with Psalm 110:1 (8:1), where he presides over the heavenly sanctuary established by God himself (8:2). Like every high priest, he has his offering to make (8:3; cf. 9:12, 14), but it differs from that of the levitical priesthood in which he had no share (8:4) and which was in any case but a shadowy reflection of the true offering in the heavenly sanctuary (8:5). But Jesus' ministry in the heavenly sanctuary is that of mediator of a superior covenant that accomplishes what it signifies (8:6).

8:2 The sanctuary: the Greek term could also mean "holy things" but bears the meaning "sanctuary" elsewhere in Hebrews (9:8, 12, 24, 25; 10:19; 13:11). The true tabernacle: the heavenly tabernacle that the Lord … set up is contrasted with the earthly tabernacle that Moses set up in the desert. True means "real" in contradistinction to a mere "copy and shadow" (8:5); compare the Johannine usage (e.g., Jn 1:9; 6:32; 15:1). The idea that the earthly sanctuary is a reflection of a heavenly model may be based upon Exodus 25:9, but probably also derives from the Platonic concept of a real world of which our observable world is merely a shadow.

8:7-13 Since the first covenant was deficient in accomplishing what it signified, it had to be replaced (8:7), as Jeremiah (Jer 31:31-34) had prophesied (Heb 8:8-12). Even in the time of Jeremiah, the first covenant was antiquated (8:13). In Hebrews 7:22-24, the superiority of the new covenant was seen in the permanence of its priesthood; here the superiority is based on better promises, made explicit in the citation of Jeremiah 31:31-34 (LXX: 38), namely, in the immediacy of the people's knowledge of God (8:11) and in the forgiveness of sin (8:12).

8:8-12 In citing Jeremiah the author follows the Septuagint; some apparent departures from it may be the result of a different Septuagintal text rather than changes deliberately introduced.

8:13 Close to disappearing: from the prophet's perspective, not that of the author of Hebrews.

9:1-10 The regulations for worship under the old covenant permitted all the priests to enter the Holy Place (2:6), but only the high priest to enter the Holy of Holies and then only once a year (9:3-5, 7). The description of the sanctuary and its furnishings is taken essentially from Exodus 25–26. This exclusion of the people from the Holy of Holies signified that they were not allowed to stand in God's presence (9:8) because their offerings and sacrifices, which were merely symbols of their need of spiritual renewal (9:10), could not obtain forgiveness of sins (9:9).

9:2 The outer one: the author speaks of the outer tabernacle (9:6) and the inner one (9:7) rather than of one Mosaic tabernacle divided into two parts or sections.

9:3 The second veil: what is meant is the veil that divided the Holy Place from the Holy of Holies. It is here called the second, because there was another veil at the entrance to the Holy Place, or "outer tabernacle" (Ex 26:36).

9:4 The gold altar of incense: Exodus 30:6 locates this altar in the Holy Place, i.e., the first tabernacle, rather than in the Holy of Holies. Neither is there any Old Testament support for the assertion that the jar of manna and the staff of Aaron were in the ark of the covenant. For the tablets of the covenant, see Exodus 25:16.

9:5 The place of expiation: the gold "mercy seat" (Greek hilastērion, as in Rom 3:25), where the blood of the sacrificial animals was sprinkled on the Day of Atonement (Lv 16:14-15). This rite achieved "expiation" or atonement for the sins of the preceding year.

9:6 In performing their service: the priestly services that had to be performed regularly in the Holy Place or outer tabernacle included burning incense on the incense altar twice each day (Ex 30:7), replacing the loaves on the table of the bread of offering once each week (Lv 24:8), and constantly caring for the lamps on the lampstand (Ex 27:21).

9:7 Not without blood: blood was essential to Old Testament sacrifice because it was believed that life was located in the blood. Hence blood was especially sacred, and its outpouring functioned as a meaningful symbol of cleansing from sin and reconciliation with God. Unlike Hebrews, the Old Testament never says that the blood is "offered." The author is perhaps retrojecting into his description of Mosaic ritual a concept that belongs to the New Testament antitype, as Paul does when he speaks of the Israelites' passage through the sea as a "baptism" (1 Cor 10:2).

9:9 The present time: this expression is equivalent to the "present age," used in contradistinction to the "age to come."

9:11-14 Christ, the high priest of the spiritual blessings foreshadowed in the Old Testament sanctuary, has actually entered the true sanctuary of heaven that is not of human making (9:11). His place there is permanent, and his offering is his own blood that won eternal redemption (9:12). If the sacrifice of animals could bestow legal purification (9:13), how much more effective is the blood of the sinless, divine Christ who spontaneously offered himself to purge the human race of sin and render it fit for the service of God (9:14).

9:11 The good things that have come to be: the majority of later manuscripts here read "the good things to come"; cf. Hebrews 10:1.

9:13 A heifer's ashes: ashes from a red heifer that had been burned were mixed with water and used for the cleansing of those who had become ritually defiled by touching a corpse; see Numbers 19:9, 14-21.

9:14 Through the eternal spirit: this expression does not refer either to the holy Spirit or to the divine nature of Jesus but to the life of the risen Christ, "a life that cannot be destroyed" (7:16).

9:15-22 Jesus' role as mediator of the new covenant is based upon his sacrificial death (cf. 8:6). His death has effected deliverance from transgressions, i.e., deliverance from sins committed under the old covenant, which the Mosaic sacrifices were incapable of effacing. Until this happened, the eternal inheritance promised by God could not be obtained (9:15). This effect of his work follows the human pattern by which a last will and testament becomes effective only with the death of the testator (9:16-17). The Mosaic covenant was also associated with death, for Moses made use of blood to seal the pact between God and the people (9:18-21). In Old Testament tradition, guilt could normally not be remitted without the use of blood (9:22; cf. Lv 17:11).

9:16-17 A will … death of the testator: the same Greek word diathēkē, meaning "covenant" in Hebrews 9:15, 18, is used here with the meaning will. The new covenant, unlike the old, is at the same time a will that requires the death of the testator. Jesus as eternal Son is the one who established the new covenant together with his Father, author of both covenants; at the same time he is the testator whose death puts his will into effect.

9:19-20 A number of details here are different from the description of this covenant rite in Exodus 24:5-8. Exodus mentions only calves ("young bulls," NAB), not goats (but this addition in Hebrews is of doubtful authenticity), says nothing of the use of water and crimson wool and hyssop (these features probably came from a different rite; cf. Lv 14:3-7; Nm 19:6-18), and describes Moses as splashing blood on the altar, whereas Hebrews says he sprinkled it on the book (but both book and altar are meant to symbolize the agreement of God). The words of Moses are also slightly different from those in Exodus and are closer to the words of Jesus at the Last Supper in Mark 14:24 // Matthew 26:28.

9:21 According to Exodus, the tabernacle did not yet exist at the time of the covenant rite. Moreover, nothing is said of sprinkling it with blood at its subsequent dedication (Ex 40:9-11).

9:22 Without the shedding of blood there is no forgiveness: in fact, ancient Israel did envisage other means of obtaining forgiveness; the Old Testament mentions contrition of heart (Ps 51:17), fasting (Jl 2:12), and almsgiving (Sir 3:29). The author is limiting his horizon to the sacrificial cult, which did always involve the shedding of blood for its expiatory and unitive value.

9:23-28 Since the blood of animals became a cleansing symbol among Old Testament prefigurements, it was necessary that the realities foreshadowed be brought into being by a shedding of blood that was infinitely more effective by reason of its worth (9:23). Christ did not simply prefigure the heavenly realities (9:24) by performing an annual sacrifice with a blood not his own (9:25); he offered the single sacrifice of himself as the final annulment of sin (9:26). Just as death is the unrepeatable act that ends a person's life, so Christ's offering of himself for all is the unrepeatable sacrifice that has once for all achieved redemption (9:27-28).

9:26 At the end of the ages: the use of expressions such as this shows that the author of Hebrews, despite his interest in the Platonic concept of an eternal world above superior to temporal reality here below, nevertheless still clings to the Jewish Christian eschatology with its sequence of "the present age" and "the age to come."

9:28 To take away the sins of many: the reference is to Isaiah 53:12. Since the Greek verb anapherō can mean both "to take away" and "to bear," the author no doubt intended to play upon both senses: Jesus took away sin by bearing it himself. See the similar wordplay in John 1:29. Many is used in the Semitic meaning of "all" in the inclusive sense, as in Mark 14:24. To those who eagerly await him: Jesus will appear a second time at the parousia, as the high priest reappeared on the Day of Atonement, emerging from the Holy of Holies, which he had entered to take away sin. This dramatic scene is described in Sirach 50:5-11.

10:1-10 Christian faith now realizes that the Old Testament sacrifices did not effect the spiritual benefits to come but only prefigured them (10:1). For if the sacrifices had actually effected the forgiveness of sin, there would have been no reason for their constant repetition (10:2). They were rather a continual reminder of the people's sins (10:3). It is not reasonable to suppose that human sins could be removed by the blood of animal sacrifices (10:4). Christ, therefore, is here shown to understand his mission in terms of Psalm 40:6-8, cited according to the Septuagint (10:5-7). Jesus acknowledged that the Old Testament sacrifices did not remit the sins of the people and so, perceiving the will of God, offered his own body for this purpose (10:8-10).

10:1 A shadow of the good things to come: the term shadow was used in Hebrews 8:5 to signify the earthly counterpart of the Platonic heavenly reality. But here it means a prefiguration of what is to come in Christ, as it is used in the Pauline literature; cf. Colossians 2:17.

10:5-7 A passage from Psalm 40:7-9 is placed in the mouth of the Son at his incarnation. As usual, the author follows the Septuagint text. There is a notable difference in Hebrews 10:5 (Ps 40:6), where the Masoretic text reads “ears you have dug for me” (“ears open to obedience you gave me,” NAB), but most Septuagint manuscripts have “a body you prepared for me,” a reading obviously more suited to the interpretation of Hebrews.

10:8 Sacrifices and offerings, holocausts and sin offerings: these four terms taken from the preceding passage of Psalm 40 (with the first two changed to plural forms) are probably intended as equivalents to the four principal types of Old Testament sacrifices: peace offerings (Lv 3, here called sacrifices); cereal offerings (Lv 2, here called offerings); holocausts (Lv 1); and sin offerings (Lv 4–5). This last category includes the guilt offerings of Leviticus 5:14-19.

10:11-18 Whereas the levitical priesthood offered daily sacrifices that were ineffectual in remitting sin (10:11), Jesus offered a single sacrifice that won him a permanent place at God’s right hand. There he has only to await the final outcome of his work (10:12-13; cf. Ps 110:1). Thus he has brought into being in his own person the new covenant prophesied by Jeremiah (Jer 31:33-34) that has rendered meaningless all other offerings for sin (Heb 10:14-18).

10:13 Until his enemies are made his footstool: Psalm 110:1 is again used; the reference here is to the period of time between the enthronement of Jesus and his second coming. The identity of the enemies is not specified; cf. 1 Corinthians 15:25-27.

10:15-17 The testimony of the scriptures is now invoked to support what has just preceded. The passage cited is a portion of the new covenant prophecy of Jeremiah 31:31-34, which the author previously used in Hebrews 8:8-12.

10:17 He also says: these words are not in the Greek text, which has only kai, “also,” but the expression “after saying” in Hebrews 10:15 seems to require such a phrase to divide the Jeremiah text into two sayings. Others understand “the Lord says” of Hebrews 10:16 (here rendered says the Lord) as outside the quotation and consider Hebrews 10:16b as part of the second saying. Two ancient versions and a number of minuscules introduce the words “then he said” or a similar expression at the beginning of Hebrews 10:17.

10:19-39 Practical consequences from these reflections on the priesthood and the sacrifice of Christ should make it clear that Christians may now have direct and confident access to God through the person of Jesus (10:19-20), who rules God’s house as high priest (10:21). They should approach God with sincerity and faith, in the knowledge that through baptism their sins have been remitted (10:22), reminding themselves of the hope they expressed in Christ at that event (10:23). They are to encourage one another to Christian love and activity (10:24), not refusing, no matter what the reason, to participate in the community’s assembly, especially in view of the parousia (10:25; cf. 1 Thes 4:13-18). If refusal to participate in the assembly indicates rejection of Christ, no sacrifice exists to obtain forgiveness for so great a sin (10:26); only the dreadful judgment of God remains (10:27). For if violation of the Mosaic law could be punished by death, how much worse will be the punishment of those who have turned their backs on Christ by despising his sacrifice and disregarding the gifts of the holy Spirit (10:28-29). Judgment belongs to the Lord, and he enacts it by his living presence (10:30-31). There was a time when the spirit of their community caused them to welcome and share their sufferings (10:32-34). To revitalize that spirit is to share in the courage of the Old Testament prophets (cf. Is 26:20; Heb

2:3-4), the kind of courage that must distinguish the faith of the Christian (10:35-39).

10:20 Through the veil, that is, his flesh: the term flesh is used pejoratively. As the temple veil kept people from entering the Holy of Holies (it was rent at Christ's death, Mk 15:38), so the flesh of Jesus constituted an obstacle to approaching God.

10:21 The house of God: this refers back to Hebrews 3:6, "we are his house."

10:22 With our hearts sprinkled clean from an evil conscience: as in Hebrews 9:13 (see the note there), the sprinkling motif refers to the Mosaic rite of cleansing from ritual impurity. This could produce only an external purification, whereas sprinkling with the blood of Christ (9:14) cleanses the conscience. Washed in pure water: baptism is elsewhere referred to as a washing; cf. 1 Corinthians 6:11; Ephesians 5:26.

10:25 Our assembly: the liturgical assembly of the Christian community, probably for the celebration of the Eucharist. The day: this designation for the parousia also occurs in the Pauline letters, e.g., Romans 2:16; 1 Corinthians 3:13; 1 Thessalonians 5:2.

10:26 If we sin deliberately: verse 29 indicates that the author is here thinking of apostasy; cf. Hebrews 3:12; 6:4-8.

10:28 Rejects the law of Moses: evidently not any sin against the law, but idolatry. Deuteronomy 17:2-7 prescribed capital punishment for idolaters who were convicted on the testimony of two or three witnesses.

10:32 After you had been enlightened: "enlightenment" is an ancient metaphor for baptism (cf. Eph 5:14; Jn 9:11), but see Hebrews 6:4 and the note there.

10:37-38 In support of his argument, the author uses Hb 2:3-4 in a wording almost identical with the text of the Codex Alexandrinus of the Septuagint but with the first and second lines of Hebrews 10:4 inverted. He introduces it with a few words from Isaiah 26:20: after just a brief moment. Note the Pauline usage of Hb 2:4 in Romans 1:17; Galatians 3:11.

11:1-40 This chapter draws upon the people and events of the Old Testament to paint an inspiring portrait of religious faith, firm and unyielding in the face of any obstacles that confront it. These pages rank among the most eloquent and lofty to be found in the Bible. They expand the theme announced in Hebrews 6:12, to which the author now returns (10:39). The material of this chapter is developed chronologically. Hebrews 11:3-7 draw upon the first nine chapters of Genesis (Gn 1–9); Hebrews 11:8-22, upon the period of the patriarchs; Hebrews 11:23-31, upon the time of Moses; Hebrews 11:32-38, upon the history of the judges, the prophets, and the Maccabean martyrs. The author gives the most extensive description of faith provided in the New Testament, though his interest does not lie in a technical, theological definition. In view of the needs of his audience he describes what authentic faith does, not what it is in itself. Through faith God guarantees the blessings to be hoped for from him, providing evidence in the gift of faith that what he promises will eventually come to pass (11:1). Because they accepted in faith God's guarantee of the future, the biblical personages discussed in Hebrews 11:3-38 were themselves commended by God (11:2). Christians have even greater reason to remain firm in faith since they, unlike the Old Testament men and women of faith, have perceived the beginning of God's fulfillment of his messianic promises (11:39-40).

11:1 Faith is the realization … evidence: the author is not attempting a precise definition. There is dispute about the meaning of the Greek words hypostasis and elenchos, here translated realization and evidence, respectively. Hypostasis usually means "substance," "being" (as translated in 1:3), or "reality" (as translated in 3:14);

here it connotes something more subjective, and so realization has been chosen rather than “assurance” (RSV). Elenchos, usually “proof,” is used here in an objective sense and so translated evidence rather than the transferred sense of “(inner) conviction” (RSV).

11:3 By faith … God: this verse does not speak of the faith of the Old Testament men and women but is in the first person plural. Hence it seems out of place in the sequence of thought.

11:4 The “Praise of the Ancestors” in Sirach 44:1–50:21 gives a similar list of heroes. The Cain and Abel narrative in Genesis 4:1-16 does not mention Abel’s faith. It says, however, that God “looked with favor on Abel and his offering” (Gn 4:4); in view of Heb 11:6 the author probably understood God’s favor to have been activated by Abel’s faith. Though dead, he still speaks: possibly because his blood “cries out to me from the soil” (Gn 4:10), but more probably a way of saying that the repeated story of Abel provides ongoing witness to faith.

11:6 One must believe not only that God exists but that he is concerned about human conduct; the Old Testament defines folly as the denial of this truth; cf. Psalm 52:2.

11:19 As a symbol: Isaac’s “return from death” is seen as a symbol of Christ’s resurrection. Others understand the words en parabolē to mean “in figure,” i.e., the word dead is used figuratively of Isaac, since he did not really die. But in the one other place that parabolē occurs in Hebrews, it means symbol (9:9).

11:20-22 Each of these three patriarchs, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, had faith in the future fulfillment of God’s promise and renewed this faith when near death.

11:24-27 The reason given for Moses’ departure from Egypt differs from the account in Exodus 2:11-15. The author also gives a christological interpretation of his decision to share the trials of his people.

11:40 So that without us they should not be made perfect: the heroes of the Old Testament obtained their recompense only after the saving work of Christ had been accomplished. Thus they already enjoy what Christians who are still struggling do not yet possess in its fullness.

12:1-13 Christian life is to be inspired not only by the Old Testament men and women of faith (12:1) but above all by Jesus. As the architect of Christian faith, he had himself to endure the cross before receiving the glory of his triumph (12:2). Reflection on his sufferings should give his followers courage to continue the struggle, if necessary even to the shedding of blood (12:3-4). Christians should regard their own sufferings as the affectionate correction of the Lord, who loves them as a father loves his children.

12:1 That clings to us: the meaning is uncertain, since the Greek word euperistatos, translated cling, occurs only here. The papyrus P46 and one minuscule read euperispastos, “easily distracting,” which also makes good sense.

12:15-17 Esau serves as an example in two ways: his profane attitude illustrates the danger of apostasy, and his inability to secure a blessing afterward illustrates the impossibility of repenting after falling away (see 6:4-6).

12:18-29 As a final appeal for adherence to Christian teaching, the two covenants, of Moses and of Christ, are compared. The Mosaic covenant, the author argues, is shown to have originated in fear of God and threats of divine punishment (12:18-21). The covenant in Christ gives us direct access to God (12:22), makes us members of the Christian community, God’s children, a sanctified people (12:23), who have Jesus as mediator to speak for us (12:24). Not to heed the voice of the risen Christ is a graver sin than the rejection of the word of Moses (12:25-26). Though Christians fall away, God's kingdom in Christ will remain and his justice will punish those guilty of deserting it (12:28-29).

12:18 This remarkably beautiful passage contrasts two great assemblies of people: that of the Israelites gathered at Mount Sinai for the sealing of the old covenant and the promulgation of the Mosaic law, and that of the followers of Jesus gathered at Mount Zion, the heavenly Jerusalem, the assembly of the new covenant. This latter scene, marked by the presence of countless angels and of Jesus with his redeeming blood, is reminiscent of the celestial liturgies of the Book of Revelation.

12:23 The assembly of the firstborn enrolled in heaven: this expression may refer to the angels of Hebrews 12:22, or to the heroes of the Old Testament (see Heb 11), or to the entire assembly of the new covenant.

12:24 Speaks more eloquently: the blood of Abel, the first human blood to be shed, is contrasted with that of Jesus. Abel's blood cried out from the earth for vengeance, but the blood of Jesus has opened the way for everyone, providing cleansing and access to God (10:19).

13:1-16 After recommendations on social and moral matters (13:1-6), the letter turns to doctrinal issues. The fact that the original leaders are dead should not cause the recipients of this letter to lose their faith (13:7), for Christ still lives and he remains always the same (13:8). They must not rely for their personal sanctification on regulations concerning foods (13:9), nor should they entertain the notion that Judaism and Christianity can be intermingled (13:10; cf. the notes on Gal 2:11-14; 2:15-21). As Jesus died separated from his own people, so must the Christian community remain apart from the religious doctrines of Judaism (13:11-14). Christ must be the heart and center of the community (13:15-16).

13:9 Strange teaching: this doctrine about foods probably refers to the Jewish food laws; in view of Hebrews 13:10, however, the author may be thinking of the Mosaic sacrificial banquets.

13:10 We have an altar: this does not refer to the Eucharist, which is never clearly mentioned in Hebrews, but to the sacrifice of Christ.

13:17-25 Recommending obedience to the leaders of the community, the author asks for prayers (13:17-19). The letter concludes with a blessing (13:20-21), a final request for the acceptance of its message (13:22), information regarding Timothy (13:23), and general greetings (13:24-25).

13:20-21 These verses constitute one of the most beautiful blessings in the New Testament. The resurrection of Jesus is presupposed throughout Hebrews, since it is included in the author's frequently expressed idea of his exaltation, but this is the only place where it is explicitly mentioned.

The Catholic Letters

In addition to the thirteen letters attributed to Paul and the Letter to the Hebrews, the New Testament contains seven other letters. Three of these are attributed to John, two to Peter, and one each to James and Jude, all personages of the apostolic age. The term “catholic letter” first appears, with reference only to 1 John, in the writings of Apollonius of Ephesus, a second-century apologist, known only from a citation in Eusebius’s Ecclesiastical History. Eusebius himself (A.D. 260–340) used the term to refer to all seven letters.

The reason for the term “catholic,” which means “universal,” was the perception that these letters, unlike those of Paul, which were directed to a particular local church, were apparently addressed more generally to the universal church. This designation is not entirely accurate, however. On the one hand, Hebrews has no specifically identified addressees, and originally this was probably true of Ephesians as well. On the other hand, 3 John is addressed to a named individual, 2 John to a specific, though unnamed, community, and 1 Peter to a number of churches that are specified as being located in Asia Minor.

While all seven of these writings begin with an epistolary formula, several of them do not appear to be real letters in the modern sense of the term. In the ancient world it was not unusual to cast an exhortation in the form of a letter for literary effect, a phenomenon comparable to the “open letter” that is sometimes used today.

With the exception of 1 Peter and 1 John, the ancient church showed reluctance to include the catholic letters in the New Testament canon. The reason for this was widespread doubt whether they had actually been written by the apostolic figures to whom they are attributed. The early Christians saw the New Testament as the depository of apostolic faith; therefore, they wished to include only the testimony of apostles. Today we distinguish more clearly between the authorship of a work and its canonicity: even though written by other, later witnesses than those whose names they bear, these writings nevertheless testify to the apostolic faith and constitute canonical scripture. By the late fourth or early fifth centuries, most objections had been overcome in both the Greek and Latin churches (though not in the Syriac), and all seven of the catholic letters have since been acknowledged as canonical.

The Letter of James

The person to whom this letter is ascribed can scarcely be one of the two members of the Twelve who bore the name James (see Mt 10:2-3; Mk 3:17-18; Lk 6:14-15), for he is not identified as an apostle but only as “slave of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ” (1:1). This designation most probably refers to the third New Testament personage named James, a relative of Jesus who is usually called “brother of the Lord” (see Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3). He was the leader of the Jewish Christian community in Jerusalem whom Paul acknowledged as one of the “pillars” (Gal 2:9). In Acts he appears as the authorized spokesman for the Jewish Christian position in the early Church (Acts 12:17; 15:13-21). According to the Jewish historian Josephus (Antiquities 20:201–203), he was stoned to death by the Jews under the high priest Ananus II in A.D. 62.

The letter is addressed to “the twelve tribes in the dispersion.” In Old Testament terminology the term “twelve tribes” designates the people of Israel; the “dispersion” or “diaspora” refers to the non-Palestinian Jews who had settled throughout the Greco-Roman world (see Jn 7:35). Since in Christian thought the church is the new Israel, the address probably designates the Jewish Christian churches located in Palestine, Syria, and elsewhere. Or perhaps the letter is meant more generally for all Christian communities, and the “dispersion” has the symbolic meaning of exile from our true home, as it has in the address of 1 Peter (1 Pt 1:1). The letter is so markedly Jewish in character that some scholars have regarded it as a Jewish document subsequently “baptized” by a few Christian insertions, but such an origin is scarcely tenable in view of the numerous contacts discernible between the Letter of James and other New Testament literature.

From the viewpoint of its literary form, James is a letter only in the most conventional sense; it has none of the characteristic features of a real letter except the address. It belongs rather to the genre of parenesis or exhortation and is concerned almost exclusively with ethical conduct. It therefore falls within the tradition of Jewish wisdom literature, such as can be found in the Old Testament (Proverbs, Sirach) and in the extracanonical Jewish literature (Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Books of Enoch, the Manual of Discipline found at Qumran). More specifically, it consists of sequences of didactic proverbs, comparable to Tobit 4:5-19, to many passages in Sirach, and to sequences of sayings in the synoptic gospels. Numerous passages in James treat of subjects that also appear in the synoptic sayings of Jesus, especially in Matthew’s Sermon on the Mount, but the correspondences are too general to establish any literary dependence. James represents a type of early Christianity that emphasized sound teaching and responsible moral behavior. Ethical norms are derived not primarily from christology, as in Paul, but from a concept of salvation that involves conversion, baptism, forgiveness of sin, and expectation of judgment (1:17; 4:12).

SUMMARY

James is a short exhortation on the themes of faith and good works, true wisdom, and the need for the rich to care for the poor. It has a somewhat Jewish style in its teaching, presented in practical ways.

Author: Unknown late first-century Christian but attributed to James, the brother of the Lord (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3).

Date: Either before A.D. 70 or between 90–100, depending on authorship.

Content: The need of perseverance; the true relationship between faith and works; practical advice about controlling one’s language, wisdom, impartiality, pride, and other ethical issues.

Paradoxically, this very Jewish work is written in an excellent Greek style, which ranks among the best in the New Testament and appears to be the work of a trained Hellenistic writer. Those who continue to regard James of Jerusalem as its author are therefore obliged to suppose that a secretary must have put the letter into its present literary form. This assumption is not implausible in the light of ancient practice. Some regard the letter as one of the earliest writings in the New Testament and feel that its content accurately reflects what we would expect of the leader of Jewish Christianity. Moreover, they argue that the type of Jewish Christianity reflected in the letter cannot be situated historically after the fall of Jerusalem in A.D. 70.

Others, however, believe it more likely that James is a pseudonymous work of a later period. In addition to its Greek style, they observe further that (a) the prestige that the writer is assumed to enjoy points to the later legendary reputation of James; (b) the discussion of the importance of good works seems to presuppose a debate subsequent to that in Paul's own day; (c) the author does not rely upon prescriptions of the Mosaic law, as we would expect from the historical James; (d) the letter contains no allusions to James's own history and to his relationship with Jesus or to the early Christian community of Jerusalem. For these reasons, many recent interpreters assign James to the period A.D. 90–100.

The principal divisions of the Letter of James are the following:

I. Address (1:1)

II. The Value of Trials and Temptation (1:2-18)

III. Exhortations and Warnings (1:19–5:12)

IV. The Power of Prayer (5:13-20)

d

Mt 7:7; Mk 11:24

2[b]Consider it all joy, my brothers, when you encounter various trials,* 3for you know that the testing* of your faith produces perseverance. 4And let perseverance be perfect, so that you may be perfect and complete, lacking in nothing. 5But if any of you lacks wisdom,* he should ask God who gives to all generously and ungrudgingly, and he will be given it.[c] 6But he should ask in faith, not doubting, for the one who doubts is like a wave of the sea that is driven and tossed about by the wind.[d] 7For that person must not suppose that he will receive anything from the Lord, 8since he is a man of two minds, unstable in all his ways.

e

Is 40:6-7

9The brother in lowly circumstances* should take pride in his high standing,[e] 10and the rich one in his lowliness, for he will pass away “like the flower of the field.”[f] 11For the sun comes up with its scorching heat and dries up the grass, its flower droops, and the beauty of its appearance vanishes. So will the rich person fade away in the midst of his pursuits.

Temptation

Sir 15:11-20; 1 Cor 10:13

12[g]Blessed is the man who perseveres in temptation,* for when he has been proved he will receive the crown of life that he promised to those who love him. 13*No one experiencing temptation should say, “I am being tempted by God”; for God is not subject to temptation to evil, and he himself tempts no one.[h] 14Rather, each person is tempted when he is lured and enticed by his own desire. 15Then desire conceives and brings forth sin, and when sin reaches maturity it gives birth to death.

i

Jn 1:12-13; 1 Pt 1:23

16*Do not be deceived, my beloved brothers: 17all good giving and every perfect gift* is from above, coming down from the Father of lights, with whom there is no alteration or shadow caused by change. 18[i]He willed to give us birth by the word of truth that we may be a kind of firstfruits of his creatures.*

There is a subtle temptation to use our favorite Scripture texts in our teaching and preaching, to quote these passages to others and inscribe them on our walls without inscribing them on our hearts. That is why time for intimate reflection on the Word is so important. Only then can the Word become active and living in us.

Col 3:8

19Know this, my dear brothers: everyone should be quick to hear,* slow to speak, slow to wrath,[j] 20for the wrath of a man does not accomplish the righteousness of God.[k] 21Therefore, put away all filth and evil excess and humbly welcome the word that has been planted in you and is able to save your souls.[l]

p
Ex 22:21

26*If anyone thinks he is religious and does not bridle his tongue* but deceives his heart, his religion is vain.[o] 27Religion that is pure and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to care for orphans and widows* in their affliction and to keep oneself unstained by the world.[p]

Sin of Partiality*

2 [1]My brothers, show no partiality as you adhere to the faith in our glorious Lord Jesus Christ. [2]For if a man with gold rings on his fingers and in fine clothes comes into your assembly, and a poor person in shabby clothes also comes in, [3]and you pay attention to the one wearing the fine clothes and say, “Sit here, please,” while you say to the poor one, “Stand there,” or “Sit at my feet,” [4]have you not made distinctions among yourselves and become judges with evil designs?*

The author of this letter challenges a believing community to integrate faith and action. This teaching presupposes the incarnation of Jesus and a sacramental worldview. Because God became human in Jesus and because material things like oil, water, bread, and wine bear the divine presence, human well-being is an integral dimension of Christian faith. The Second Vatican Council exhorted Christians “to perform their duties faithfully in the spirit of the Gospel. It is a mistake to think that, because we have here no lasting city, but seek the city which is to come, we are entitled to evade our earthly responsibilities; this is to forget that because of our faith we are all the more bound to fulfill these responsibilities according to each one’s vocation … One of the gravest errors of our time is the dichotomy between the faith which many profess and their day-to-day conduct” (GS 43).

[5]Listen, my beloved brothers. Did not God choose those who are poor* in the world to be rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom that he promised to those who love him?[a] [6]But you dishonored the poor person. Are not the rich oppressing you? And do they themselves not haul you off to court? [7]Is it not they who blaspheme the noble name that was invoked over you?[b] [8]However, if you fulfill the royal* law according to the scripture, “You shall love your neighbor as yourself,” you are doing well.[c] [9]But if you show partiality, you commit sin, and are convicted by the law as transgressors.[d] [10]For whoever keeps the whole law, but falls short in one particular, has become guilty in respect to all of it.[e] [11]For he who said, “You shall not commit adultery,” also said, “You shall not kill.”[f] Even if you do not commit adultery but kill, you have become a transgressor of the law. [12][g]So speak and so act as people who will be judged by the law of freedom.* [13]For the judgment is merciless to one who has not shown mercy; mercy triumphs over judgment.[h]

Mt 25:31-46; Gal 5:6

1 Jn 3:17

[14]What good is it, my brothers, if someone says he has faith but does not have works? Can that faith save him?i [15]If a brother or sister has nothing to wear and has no food for the day, [16]and one of you says to them, "Go in peace, keep warm, and eat well," but you do not give them the necessities of the body, what good is it?j [17]So also faith of itself, if it does not have works, is dead.

See "Getting It Right … Faith and Good Works" (at Gal 2:15-21) for an explanation of the relationship between faith and works.

[18]Indeed someone may say, "You have faith and I have works." Demonstrate your faith to me without works, and I will demonstrate my faith to you from my works. [19]You believe that God is one. You do well. Even the demons believe that and tremble. [20]Do you want proof, you ignoramus, that faith without works is useless? [21]Was not Abraham our father justified by works when he offered his son Isaac upon the altar?k [22]You see that faith was active along with his works, and faith was completed by the works. [23]Thus the scripture was fulfilled that says, "Abraham believed God, and it was credited to him as righteousness," and he was called "the friend of God."l [24]See how a person is justified by works and not by faith alone. [25]And in the same way, was not Rahab the harlot also justified by works when she welcomed the messengers and sent them out by a different route?m

[26]For just as a body without a spirit is dead, so also faith without works is dead.

Power of the Tongue*

1:26; Prv 13:3; Sir 28:12-26

3 [1]Not many of you should become teachers, my brothers, for you realize that we will be judged more strictly, [2]for we all fall short in many respects. If anyone does not fall short in speech, he is a perfect man, able to bridle his whole body also.[a] [3]If we put bits into the mouths of horses to make them obey us, we also guide their whole bodies. [4]It is the same with ships: even though they are so large and driven by fierce winds, they are steered by a very small rudder wherever the pilot’s inclination wishes. [5]In the same way the tongue is a small member and yet has great pretensions.

b

Mt 7:16-17

Consider how small a fire can set a huge forest ablaze. [6]The tongue is also a fire. It exists among our members as a world of malice, defiling the whole body and setting the entire course of our lives on fire, itself set on fire by Gehenna. [7]For every kind of beast and bird, of reptile and sea creature, can be tamed and has been tamed by the human species, [8]but no human being can tame the tongue. It is a restless evil, full of deadly poison.[b] [9]With it we bless the Lord and Father, and with it we curse human beings who are made in the likeness of God. [10]From the same mouth come blessing and cursing. This need not be so, my brothers. [11]Does a spring gush forth from the same opening both pure and brackish water? [12]Can a fig tree, my brothers, produce olives, or a grapevine figs? Neither can salt water yield fresh.[c]

True Wisdom*

e

1:17; Wis 7:22-23

Mt 5:9

[13]Who among you is wise and understanding? Let him show his works by a good life in the humility that comes from wisdom.[d] [14]But if you have bitter jealousy and selfish ambition in your hearts, do not boast and be false to the truth. [15]Wisdom of this kind does not come down from above but is earthly, unspiritual, demonic. [16]For where jealousy and selfish ambition exist, there is disorder and every foul practice. [17]But the wisdom from above is first of all pure, then peaceable, gentle, compliant, full of mercy and good fruits, without inconstancy or insincerity.[e] [18]And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace for those who cultivate peace.[f]

Many scholars consider James to be influenced by OT Wisdom literature and perhaps by Hellenistic philosophy as well. James often quotes from or alludes to the OT (e.g., 1:10; 2:8, 11, 21, 23, 25; 3:8; 4:6; 5:4; etc.). It thus has a Jewish outlook, yet one influenced by Christian thought. Much of the letter's advice is simply good moral advice. Martin Luther denigrated this letter because it has so little overt reference to Jesus Christ.

You kill and envy but you cannot obtain; you fight and wage war. You do not possess because you do not ask. [3]You ask but do not receive, because you ask wrongly, to spend it on your passions. [4]Adulterers!* Do you not know that to be a lover of the world means enmity with God? Therefore, whoever wants to be a lover of the world makes himself an enemy of God.[b] [5]Or do you suppose that the scripture speaks without meaning when it says, "The spirit that he has made to dwell in us tends toward jealousy"?* [6]But he bestows a greater grace; therefore, it says:[c]

Make your hearts firm, because the coming of the Lord is at hand.[g] [9]Do not complain, brothers, about one another, that you may not be judged. Behold, the Judge is standing before the gates. [10]Take as an example of hardship and patience, brothers, the prophets who spoke in the name of the Lord. [11]Indeed we call blessed those who have persevered. You have heard of the perseverance of Job, and you have seen the purpose of the Lord, because “the Lord is compassionate and merciful.”[h]

[12][i]But above all, my brothers, do not swear, either by heaven or by earth or with any other oath, but let your “Yes” mean “Yes” and your “No” mean “No,” that you may not incur condemnation.*

The NT sometimes displays hints of the origin of the sacraments as they developed later in church history. This passage forms the basis of the sacrament of the anointing of the sick and the sacrament of reconciliation (see also Jn 20:22-23; 2 Cor 5:18).

IV: THE POWER OF PRAYER

Anointing of the Sick

j
Mk 6:13

13Is anyone among you suffering? He should pray. Is anyone in good spirits? He should sing praise. 14Is anyone among you sick?* He should summon the presbyters of the church, and they should pray over him and anoint [him] with oil in the name of the Lord,[j] 15and the prayer of faith will save the sick person, and the Lord will raise him up. If he has committed any sins, he will be forgiven.*

Confession and Intercession

1 Kgs 17:1; Lk 4:25

1 Kgs 18:45

16Therefore, confess your sins to one another and pray for one another, that you may be healed. The fervent prayer of a righteous person is very powerful. 17Elijah was a human being like us; yet he prayed earnestly that it might not rain, and for three years and six months it did not rain upon the land.[k] 18Then he prayed again, and the sky gave rain and the earth produced its fruit.[l]

Conversion of Sinners

m

Mt 18:15; Gal 6:1

n

Prv 10:12; 1 Pt 4:8

[19][m]My brothers, if anyone among you should stray from the truth and someone bring him back, [20][n]he should know that whoever brings back a sinner from the error of his way will save his soul from death and will cover a multitude of sins.*

It is so much easier to think of someone else as the sinner, the one who strays. Have you ever been brought back, even in some very small way, to God? The best way to bring back one who has strayed is through prayer and love. Is there someone you need to reach out to in love?

1:1 James, a slave of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ: a declaration of the writer’s authority for instructing the Christian communities; cf. Romans 1:1. Regarding the identity of the author, see Introduction. Dispersion: see Introduction.

1:2 Consider it all joy … various trials: a frequent teaching of the New Testament derived from the words and sufferings of Jesus (Mt 5:10-12; Jn 10:11; Acts 5:41).

1:3-8 The sequence of testing, perseverance, and being perfect and complete indicates the manner of attaining spiritual maturity and full preparedness for the coming of Christ (5:7-12; cf. 1 Pt 1:6-7; Rom 5:3-5). These steps require wisdom (1:5).

1:5 Wisdom: a gift that God readily grants to all who ask in faith and that sustains the Christian in times of trial. It is a kind of knowledge or understanding not accessible to the unbeliever or those who doubt, which gives the recipient an understanding of the real importance of events. In this way a Christian can deal with adversity with great calm and hope (cf. 1 Cor 2:6-12).

1:9-11 Throughout his letter (see 2:5; 4:10, 13-16; 5:1-6), the author reaffirms the teaching of Jesus that worldly prosperity is not necessarily a sign of God’s favor but can even be a hindrance to proper humility before God (cf. Lk 6:20-25; 12:16-21; 16:19-31).

1:12 Temptation: the Greek word used here is the same one used for “trials” in James 1:2. The crown of life: in ancient Palestine, crowns or wreaths of flowers were worn at festive occasions as signs of joy and honor. In the Hellenistic world, wreaths were given as a reward to great statesmen, soldiers, athletes. Life: here means eternal life. He promised: some manuscripts read “God” or “the Lord,” while the best witnesses do not specify the subject of “promised.”

1:13-15 It is contrary to what we know of God for God to be the author of human temptation (1:13). In the commission of a sinful act, one is first beguiled by passion (1:14), then consent is given, which in turn causes the sinful act. When sin permeates the entire person, it incurs the ultimate penalty of death (1:15).

1:16-18 The author here stresses that God is the source of all good and of good alone, and the evil of temptation does not come from him.

1:17 All good giving and every perfect gift may be a proverb written in hexameter. Father of lights: God is here called the Father of the heavenly luminaries, i.e., the stars, sun, and moon that he created (Gn 1:14-18). Unlike orbs moving from nadir to zenith, he never changes or diminishes in brightness.

1:18 Acceptance of the gospel message, the word of truth, constitutes new birth (Jn 3:5-6) and makes the recipient the firstfruits (i.e., the cultic offering of the earliest grains, symbolizing the beginning of an abundant harvest) of a new creation; cf. 1 Corinthians 15:20; Romans 8:23.

1:19-25 To be quick to hear the gospel is to accept it readily and to act in conformity with it, removing from one's soul whatever is opposed to it, so that it may take root and effect salvation (1:19-21). To listen to the gospel message but not practice it is failure to improve oneself (1:22-24). Only conformity of life to the perfect law of true freedom brings happiness (1:25).

1:25 Peers into the perfect law: the image of a person doing this is paralleled to that of hearing God's word. The perfect law applies the Old Testament description of the Mosaic law to the gospel of Jesus Christ that brings freedom.

1:26-27 A practical application of James 1:22 is now made.

1:26 For control of the tongue, see the note on James 3:1-12.

1:27 In the Old Testament, orphans and widows are classical examples of the defenseless and oppressed.

2:1-13 In the Christian community there must be no discrimination or favoritism based on status or wealth (2:2-4; cf. Mt 5:3; 11:5; 23:6; 1 Cor 1:27-29). Divine favor rather consists in God's election and promises (2:5). The rich who oppress the poor blaspheme the name of Christ (2:6-7). By violating one law of love of neighbor, they offend against the whole law (2:8-11). On the other hand, conscious awareness of the final judgment helps the faithful to fulfill the whole law (2:12).

2:4 When Christians show favoritism to the rich they are guilty of the worst kind of prejudice and discrimination. The author says that such Christians set themselves up as judges who judge not by divine law but by the basest, self-serving motives.

2:5 The poor, "God's poor" of the Old Testament, were seen by Jesus as particularly open to God for belief in and reliance on him alone (Lk 6:20). God's law cannot tolerate their oppression in any way (Jas 2:9).

2:8 Royal: literally, "kingly"; because the Mosaic law came from God, the universal king. There may be an allusion to Jesus' uses of this commandment in his preaching of the kingdom of God (Mt 22:39; Mk 12:31; Lk 10:27).

2:12-13 The law upon which the last judgment will be based is the law of freedom. As Jesus taught, mercy (which participates in God's own loving mercy) includes forgiveness of those who wrong us (see Mt 6:12, 14-15).

2:14-26 The theme of these verses is the relationship of faith and works (deeds). It has been argued that the teaching here contradicts that of Paul (see especially Rom 4:5-6). The problem can only be understood if the different viewpoints of the two authors are seen. Paul argues against those who claim to participate in God's salvation because of their good deeds as well as because they have committed themselves to trust in God through Jesus Christ (Paul's concept of faith). Paul certainly understands, however, the implications of true faith for a life of love and generosity (see Gal 5:6, 13-15). The author of James is well aware that proper conduct can only come about with an authentic commitment to God in faith (2:18, 26). Many think he was seeking to correct a misunderstanding of Paul's view.

3:1-12 The use and abuse of the important role of teaching in the church (3:1) are here related to the good and bad use of the tongue (3:9-12), the instrument through which teaching was chiefly conveyed (see Sir 5:11–6:1; 28:12-26).

3:13-18 This discussion of true wisdom is related to the previous reflection on the role of the teacher as one who is in control of his speech. The qualities of the wise man endowed from above are detailed (3:17-18; cf. Gal 5:22-23), in contrast to the qualities of earthbound wisdom (3:14-16; cf. 2 Cor 12:20).

4:1-12 The concern here is with the origin of conflicts in the Christian community. These are occasioned by love of the world, which means enmity with God (Jas 4:4). Further, the conflicts are bound up with failure to pray properly (cf. Mt 7:7-11; Jn 14:13; 15:7; 16:23), that is, not asking God at all or using God's kindness only for one's pleasure (4:2-3). In contrast, the proper dispositions are submission to God, repentance, humility, and resistance to evil (4:7-10).

4:1-3 Passions: the Greek word here (literally, "pleasures") does not indicate that pleasure is evil. Rather, as the text points out (4:2-3), it is the manner in which one deals with needs and desires that determines good or bad. The motivation for any action can be wrong, especially if one does not pray properly but seeks only selfish enjoyment (4:3).

4:4 Adulterers: a common biblical image for the covenant between God and his people is the marriage bond. In this image, breaking the covenant with God is likened to the unfaithfulness of adultery.

4:5 The meaning of this saying is difficult because the author of James cites, probably from memory, a passage that is not in any extant manuscript of the Bible. Other translations of the text with a completely different meaning are possible: "The Spirit that he (God) made to dwell in us yearns (for us) jealously," or, "He (God) yearns jealously for the spirit that he has made to dwell in us." If this last translation is correct, the author perhaps had in mind an apocryphal religious text that echoes the idea that God is zealous for his creatures; cf. Exodus 20:5; Deuteronomy 4:24; Zechariah 8:2.

4:6 The point of this whole argument is that God wants the happiness of all, but that selfishness and pride can make that impossible. We must work with him in humility (4:10).

4:11 Slander of a fellow Christian does not break just one commandment but makes mockery of the authority of law in general and therefore of God.

4:13-17 The uncertainty of life (4:14), its complete dependence on God, and the necessity of submitting to God's will (4:15) all help one know and do what is right (4:17). To disregard this is to live in pride and arrogance (4:16); failure to do what is right is a sin (4:17).

4:14 Some important Greek manuscripts here have, "You who have no idea what tomorrow will bring. Why, what is your life?"

4:15 If the Lord wills it: often in piety referred to as the "conditio Jacobaea," the condition James says we should employ to qualify all our plans.

4:17 It is a sin: those who live arrogantly, forgetting the contingency of life and our dependence on God (4:13-16), are guilty of sin.

5:1-6 Continuing with the theme of the transitory character of life on earth, the author points out the impending ruin of the godless. He denounces the unjust rich, whose victims cry to heaven for judgment on their exploiters (5:4-6). The decay and corrosion of the costly garments and metals, which symbolize wealth, prove them worthless and portend the destruction of their possessors (5:2-3).

5:6 The author does not have in mind any specific crime in his readers' communities but rather echoes the Old Testament theme of the harsh oppression of the righteous poor (see Prv 1:11; Wis 2:10, 12, 20).

5:7-11 Those oppressed by the unjust rich are reminded of the need for patience, both in bearing the sufferings of human life (5:9) and in their expectation of the coming of the Lord. It is then that they will receive their reward (5:7-8, 10-11; cf. Heb 10:25; 1 Jn 2:18).

5:7 The early and the late rains: an expression related to the agricultural season in ancient Palestine (see Dt 11:14; Jer 5:24; Jl 2:23).

5:12 This is the threat of condemnation for the abuse of swearing oaths (cf. Mt 5:33-37). By heaven or by earth: these words were substitutes for the original form of an oath, to circumvent its binding force and to avoid pronouncing the holy name of God (see Ex 22:10).

5:14 In case of sickness a Christian should ask for the presbyters of the church, i.e., those who have authority in the church (cf. Acts 15:2, 22-23; 1 Tm 5:17; Ti 1:5). They are to pray over the person and anoint with oil; oil was used for medicinal purposes in the ancient world (see Is 1:6; Lk 10:34). In Mark 6:13, the Twelve anoint the sick with oil on their missionary journey. In the name of the Lord: by the power of Jesus Christ.

5:15 The results of the prayer and anointing are physical health and forgiveness of sins. The Roman Catholic Church (Council of Trent, Session 14) declared that this anointing of the sick is a sacrament "instituted by Christ and promulgated by blessed James the apostle."

5:20 When a Christian is instrumental in the conversion of a sinner, the result is forgiveness of sins and a reinstatement of the sinner to the life of grace.

The First Letter of Peter

This letter begins with an address by Peter to Christian communities located in five provinces of Asia Minor (1:1), including areas evangelized by Paul (Acts 16:6-7; 18:23). Christians there are encouraged to remain faithful to their standards of belief and conduct in spite of threats of persecution. Numerous allusions in the letter suggest that the churches addressed were largely of Gentile composition (1:14, 18; 2:9-10; 4:3-4), though considerable use is made of the Old Testament (1:24; 2:6-7, 9-10, 22; 3:10-12).

The contents following the address both inspire and admonish these "chosen sojourners" (1:1) who, in seeking to live as God's people, feel an alienation from their previous religious roots and the society around them. Appeal is made to Christ's resurrection and the future hope it provides (1:3-5) and to the experience of baptism as new birth (1:3, 23-25; 3:21). The suffering and death of Christ serve as both source of salvation and example (1:19; 2:21-25; 3:18). What Christians are in Christ, as a people who have received mercy and are to proclaim and live according to God's call (2:9-10), is repeatedly spelled out for all sorts of situations in society (2:11-17), work (even as slaves, 2:18-20), the home (3:1-7), and general conduct (3:8-12; 4:1-11). But over all hangs the possibility of suffering as a Christian (3:13-17). In 1 Peter 4:12-19 persecution is described as already occurring, so that some have supposed the letter was addressed both to places where such a "trial by fire" was already present and to places where it might break out.

The letter constantly mingles moral exhortation (paraklēsis) with its catechetical summaries of mercies in Christ. Encouragement to fidelity in spite of suffering is based upon a vision of the meaning of Christian existence. The emphasis on baptism and allusions to various features of the baptismal liturgy suggest that the author has incorporated into his exposition numerous homiletic, credal, hymnic, and sacramental elements of the baptismal rite that had become traditional at an early date.

SUMMARY

First Peter resembles a sermon on baptism. It is filled with moral exhortations about living out one’s baptismal promises in a properly upright, faith-filled manner, especially in the face of suffering and persecution.

Author: An anonymous disciple of Peter but usually attributed to Simon Peter.

Date: Circa A.D. 70–90.

Content: Christian baptism as a call; Christian conduct in the world; perseverance and fidelity in the face of persecution.

From Irenaeus in the late second century until modern times, Christian tradition regarded Peter the apostle as author of this document. Since he was martyred at Rome during the persecution of Nero between A.D. 64 and 67, it was supposed that the letter was written from Rome shortly before his death. This is supported by its reference to “Babylon” (5:13), a code name for Rome in the early church.

Some modern scholars, however, on the basis of a number of features that they consider incompatible with Petrine authenticity, regard the letter as the work of a later Christian writer. Such features include the cultivated Greek in which it is written, difficult to attribute to a Galilean fisherman, together with its use of the Greek Septuagint translation when citing the Old Testament; the similarity in both thought and expression to the Pauline literature; and the allusions to widespread persecution of Christians, which did not occur until at least the reign of Domitian (A.D. 81–96). In this view the letter would date from the end of the first century or even the beginning of the second, when there is evidence for persecution of Christians in Asia Minor (the letter of Pliny the Younger to Trajan, A.D. 111–12).

Other scholars believe, however, that these objections can be met by appeal to use of a secretary, Silvanus, mentioned in 1 Peter 5:12. Such secretaries often gave literary expression to the author’s thoughts in their own style and language. The persecutions may refer to local harassment rather than to systematic repression by the state. Hence there is nothing in the document incompatible with Petrine authorship in the 60s.

Still other scholars take a middle position. The many literary contacts with the Pauline literature, James, and 1 John suggest a common fund of traditional formulations rather than direct dependence upon Paul. Such liturgical and catechetical traditions must have been very ancient and in some cases of Palestinian origin.

Yet it is unlikely that Peter addressed a letter to the Gentile churches of Asia Minor while Paul was still alive. This suggests a period after the death of the two apostles, perhaps A.D. 70–90. The author would be a disciple of Peter in Rome, representing a Petrine group that served as a bridge between the Palestinian origins of Christianity and its flowering in the Gentile world. The problem addressed would not be official persecution but the difficulty of living the Christian life in a hostile, secular environment that espoused different values and subjected the Christian minority to ridicule and oppression.

The principal divisions of the First Letter of Peter are the following:

I. Address (1:1-2)
II. The Gift and Call of God in Baptism (1:3–2:10)
III. The Christian in a Hostile World (2:11–4:11)
IV. Advice to the Persecuted (4:12–5:11)
V. Conclusion (5:12-14)

[3]*Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who in his great mercy gave us a new birth to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead,[c] [4]to an inheritance that is imperishable, undefiled, and unfading, kept in heaven for you[d] [5]who by the power of God are safeguarded through faith, to a salvation that is ready to be revealed in the final time. [6]*In this you rejoice, although now for a little while you may have to suffer through various trials,[e] [7]so that the genuineness of your faith, more precious than gold that is perishable even though tested by fire, may prove to be for praise, glory, and honor at the revelation of Jesus Christ.[f] [8]Although you have not seen him you love him; even though you do not see him now yet believe in him, you rejoice with an indescribable and glorious joy,[g] [9]as you attain the goal of [your] faith, the salvation of your souls.

First Peter is full of images of baptism (“new birth”). Early Christians practiced the ritual of immersion in pools, similar to the practice of ritual baths used by some Jewish groups. Baptismal pools were often designed in the form of a cross. One descended into the water on one side and emerged on the other side, clothed with a new white robe symbolic of rebirth in Jesus Christ.

Is 52:13–53:12; Dn 9:24

[10]*Concerning this salvation, prophets who prophesied about the grace that was to be yours searched and investigated it, [11]investigating the time and circumstances that the Spirit of Christ within them indicated when it testified in advance to the sufferings destined for Christ and the glories to follow them.[h] 12It was revealed to them that they were serving not themselves but you with regard to the things that have now been announced to you by those who preached the good news to you [through] the holy Spirit sent from heaven, things into which angels longed to look.

13*Therefore, gird up the loins of your mind,* live soberly, and set your hopes completely on the grace to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. 14Like obedient children, do not act in compliance with the desires of your former ignorance* 15but, as he who called you is holy, be holy yourselves in every aspect of your conduct,[i] 16for it is written, “Be holy because I [am] holy.”[j]

[17]Now if you invoke as Father him who judges impartially according to each one’s works, conduct yourselves with reverence during the time of your sojourning,[k] [18]realizing that you were ransomed from your futile conduct, handed on by your ancestors, not with perishable things like silver or gold[l] [19]but with the precious blood of Christ[m] as of a spotless unblemished lamb.* [20]He was known before the foundation of the world but revealed in the final time for you, [21]who through him believe in God who raised him from the dead and gave him glory, so that your faith and hope are in God.

Mutual Love*

22 Since you have purified yourselves by obedience to the truth for sincere mutual love, love one another intensely from a [pure] heart.[n] 23 You have been born anew,[o] not from perishable but from imperishable seed, through the living and abiding word of God,* 24 for:

“All flesh is like grass, and all its glory like the flower of the field;
the grass withers,
    and the flower wilts;[p]
25 but the word of the Lord remains forever.”

p

Is 40:6-8

This is the word that has been proclaimed to you.

Through the enduring seed of the word of God we have been born anew. Because of this new birth our hearts have become pure vessels from which we pour forth love to one another. We praise you, O God, for your life-giving word which creates us anew.

Jesus, Living Stone, Cornerstone, you are the support and foundation of my life. Make of me a living-stone, solid and firm in my faith. Build me up in your Spirit that I may be a support to the little ones who are so often rejected by the powerful of this world.

“Behold, I am laying a stone in Zion, but now you have received mercy.[i]

In Exodus 19:4-6 the people are reminded that they have been borne up on eagle wings as God’s special possession. Now in the First Letter of Peter we hear again a reminder of our holiness and our priestly call. Through Christ we have been claimed as God’s priestly people. Let us pray for the grace to remember who we are.

But if you are patient when you suffer for doing what is good, this is a grace before God. 21For to this you have been called, because Christ also suffered* for you, leaving you an example that you should follow in his footsteps.[o]

3 1 *Likewise, you wives should be subordinate to your husbands so that, even if some disobey the word, they may be won over without a word by their wives' conduct 2 when they observe your reverent and chaste behavior.[a] 3 Your adornment should not be an external one: braiding the hair, wearing gold jewelry, or dressing in fine clothes,[b] 4 but rather the hidden character of the heart, expressed in the imperishable beauty of a gentle and calm disposition, which is precious in the sight of God. 5 For this is also how the holy women who hoped in God once used to adorn themselves and were subordinate to their husbands; 6 thus Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him "lord." You are her children when you do what is good and fear no intimidation.

On the roles of spouses see comment in Ephesians (at 5:21-33).

c

Christian Conduct*

d

Mt 5:44; Lk 6:28; Rom 12:14

8Finally, all of you, be of one mind, sympathetic, loving toward one another, compassionate, humble. 9Do not return evil for evil, or insult for insult; but, on the contrary, a blessing, because to this you were called, that you might inherit a blessing.[d] 10For:

e

“Whoever would love life[e] and see good days must keep the tongue from evil and the lips from speaking deceit, 11must turn from evil and do good,
seek peace and follow after it.
12For the eyes of the Lord are on the righteous and his ears turned to their prayer, but the face of the Lord is against evildoers.”

Christian Suffering

f

Is 8:12

[13]*Now who is going to harm you if you are enthusiastic for what is good? [14]But even if you should suffer because of righteousness, blessed are you. Do not be afraid or terrified with fear of them, [15]but sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts. Always be ready to give an explanation to anyone who asks you for a reason for your hope,[f] [16]but do it with gentleness and reverence, keeping your conscience clear, so that, when you are maligned, those who defame your good conduct in Christ may themselves be put to shame. [17]For it is better to suffer for doing good, if that be the will of God, than for doing evil.

Above all the Gospel must be proclaimed by witness. Take a Christian or a handful of Christians who, in the midst of their own community, show their capacity for understanding and acceptance, their sharing of life and destiny with other people, their solidarity with the efforts of all for whatever is noble and good. Let us suppose that, in addition, they radiate in an altogether simple and unaffected way their faith in values that go beyond current values, and their hope in something that is not seen and that one would not dare to imagine. Through this wordless witness these Christians stir up irresistible questions in the hearts of those who see how they live: Why are they like this? Why do they live in this way? What or who is it that inspires them? Why are they in our midst? Such a witness is already a silent proclamation of the Good News and a very powerful and effective one. Here we have an initial act of evangelization (EN 21).

Put to death in the flesh, he was brought to life in the spirit.[g] [19]In it he also went to preach to the spirits in prison,* [20]who had once been disobedient while God patiently waited in the days of Noah during the building of the ark, in which a few persons, eight in all, were saved through water.[h] 21 This prefigured baptism, which saves you now. It is not a removal of dirt from the body but an appeal to God* for a clear conscience, through the resurrection of Jesus Christ,[i] 22 who has gone into heaven and is at the right hand of God, with angels, authorities, and powers subject to him.[j]

4 [1]Therefore, since Christ suffered in the flesh, arm yourselves also with the same attitude (for whoever suffers in the flesh has broken with sin), [2]so as not to spend what remains of one’s life in the flesh on human desires, but on the will of God. [3]For the time that has passed is sufficient for doing what the Gentiles like to do: living in debauchery, evil desires, drunkenness, orgies, carousing, and wanton idolatry.[a] [4]They are surprised that you do not plunge into the same swamp of profligacy, and they vilify you; [5]but they will give an account to him who stands ready to judge the living and the dead. [6]For this is why the gospel was preached even to the dead* that, though condemned in the flesh in human estimation, they might live in the spirit in the estimation of God.[b]

[12]Beloved, do not be surprised that a trial by fire is occurring among you, as if something strange were happening to you.[g] [13]But rejoice to the extent that you share in the sufferings of Christ, so that when his glory is revealed you may also rejoice exultantly.[h] [14]If you are insulted for the name of Christ, blessed are you, for the Spirit of glory and of God rests upon you.[i] [15]But let no one among you be made to suffer as a murderer, a thief, an evildoer, or as an intriguer. [16]But whoever is made to suffer as a Christian should not be ashamed but glorify God because of the name. 5 [1]So I exhort the presbyters* among you, as a fellow presbyter and witness to the sufferings of Christ and one who has a share in the glory to be revealed. [2]Tend the flock of God in your midst, [overseeing] not by constraint but willingly, as God would have it, not for shameful profit but eagerly.[a] [3]Do not lord it over those assigned to you, but be examples to the flock. [4][b]And when the chief Shepherd is revealed, you will receive the unfading crown of glory.*

This passage (5:1-4) blends the image of the priest (literally, “presbyter” or “elder”) with that of the shepherd. Those charged with formal ministry should care for their flock as any good shepherd does the sheep (cf. Jn 21:15-17). Pope John Paul II used this image prominently in his Apostolic Exhortation on Priestly Formation, Pastores Dabo Vobis (1993).

Advice to the Community

V: CONCLUSION

h

Rom 16:16; 1 Cor 16:20; 2 Cor 13:12

[12]I write you this briefly through Silvanus,* whom I consider a faithful brother, exhorting you and testifying that this is the true grace of God. Remain firm in it. [13]The chosen one* at Babylon sends you greeting, as does Mark, my son. [14]Greet one another with a loving kiss. Peace to all of you who are in Christ.[h]

Appropriately, the church often uses 5:8-11 as part of Night Prayer (Compline) in the daily Liturgy of the Hours.

1:1-2 The introductory formula names Peter as the writer (but see Introduction). In his comments to the presbyters (5:1), the author calls himself a “fellow presbyter.” He addresses himself to the Gentile converts of Asia Minor. Their privileged status as a chosen and sanctified people makes them worthy of God’s grace and peace. In contrast is their actual existence as aliens and sojourners, scattered among pagans, far from their true country.

1:1 Dispersion: literally, diaspora; see James 1:1 and Introduction to that letter. Pontus … Bithynia: five provinces in Asia Minor, listed in clockwise order from the north, perhaps in the sequence in which a messenger might deliver the letter.

1:3-5 A prayer of praise and thanksgiving to God who bestows the gift of new life and hope in baptism (new birth, 1:3) through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. The new birth is a sign of an imperishable inheritance (1:4), of salvation that is still in the future (to be revealed in the final time, 1:5).

1:6-9 As the glory of Christ’s resurrection was preceded by his sufferings and death, the new life of faith that it bestows is to be subjected to many trials (1:6) while achieving its goal: the glory of the fullness of salvation (1:9) at the coming of Christ (1:7).

1:10-12 The Spirit of Christ (1:11) is here shown to have been present in the prophets, moving them to search, investigate, and prophesy about the grace of salvation that was to come (1:10), and in the apostles impelling them to preach the fulfillment of salvation in the message of Christ’s sufferings and glory (1:12).

1:13-25 These verses are concerned with the call of God’s people to holiness and to mutual love by reason of their redemption through the blood of Christ (1:18-21).

1:13 Gird up the loins of your mind: a figure reminiscent of the rite of Passover when the Israelites were in flight from their oppressors (Ex 12:11), and also suggesting the vigilance of the Christian people in expectation of the parousia of Christ (Lk 12:35).

1:14-16 The ignorance here referred to (1:14) was their former lack of knowledge of God, leading inevitably to godless conduct. Holiness (1:15-16), on the contrary, is the result of their call to the knowledge and love of God.

1:19 Christians have received the redemption prophesied by Isaiah (Is 52:3), through the blood (Jewish symbol of life) of the spotless lamb (Is 53:7, 10; Jn 1:29; Rom 3:24-25; cf. 1 Cor 6:20).

1:22-25 The new birth of Christians (1:23) derives from Christ, the imperishable seed or sowing that produces a new and lasting existence in those who accept the gospel (1:24-25), with the consequent duty of loving one another (1:22).

1:23 The living and abiding word of God: or, "the word of the living and abiding God."

2:1-3 Growth toward salvation is seen here as two steps: first, stripping away all that is contrary to the new life in Christ; second, the nourishment (pure spiritual milk) that the newly baptized have received.

2:3 Tasted that the Lord is good: cf. Psalm 34:9.

2:4-8 Christ is the cornerstone (cf. Is 28:16) that is the foundation of the spiritual edifice of the Christian community (2:5). To unbelievers, Christ is an obstacle and a stumbling block on which they are destined to fall (2:8); cf. Romans 11:11.

2:5 Let yourselves be built: the form of the Greek word could also be indicative passive, "you are being built" (cf. 1 Pt 2:9).

2:9-10 The prerogatives of ancient Israel mentioned here are now more fully and fittingly applied to the Christian people: "a chosen race" (cf. Is 43:20-21) indicates their divine election (Eph 1:4-6); "a royal priesthood" (cf. Ex 19:6) to serve and worship God in Christ, thus continuing the priestly functions of his life, passion, and resurrection; "a holy nation" (Ex 19:6) reserved for God, a people he claims for his own (cf. Mal 3:17) in virtue of their baptism into his death and resurrection. This transcends all natural and national divisions and unites the people into one community to glorify the one who led them from the darkness of paganism to the light of faith in Christ. From being "no people" deprived of all mercy, they have become the very people of God, the chosen recipients of his mercy (cf. Hos 1:9; 2:25).

2:11–3:12 After explaining the doctrinal basis for the Christian community, the author makes practical applications in terms of the virtues that should prevail in all the social relationships of the members of the community: good example to Gentile neighbors (2:11-12); respect for human authority (2:13-17); obedience, patience, and endurance of hardship in domestic relations (2:18-25); Christian behavior of husbands and wives (3:1-7); mutual charity (3:8-12).

2:11 Aliens and sojourners: no longer signifying absence from one's native land (Gn 23:4), this image denotes rather their estrangement from the world during their earthly pilgrimage (see also 1 Pt 1:1, 17).

2:13-17 True Christian freedom is the result of being servants of God (1 Pt 2:16; see the note on 2:18-23). It includes reverence for God, esteem for every individual, and committed love for fellow Christians (2:17). Although persecution may threaten, subjection to human government is urged (2:13, 17) and concern for the impact of Christians' conduct on those who are not Christians (2:12, 15).

2:18-21 Most of the labor in the commercial cities of first-century Asia Minor was performed by a working class of slaves. The sense of freedom contained in the gospel undoubtedly caused great tension among Christian slaves: witness the special advice given concerning them here and in 1 Corinthians 7:21-24; Ephesians 6:5-8; Colossians 3:22-25; Phlm. The point made here does not have so much to do with the institution of slavery, which the author does not challenge, but with the nonviolent reaction (2:20) of slaves to unjust treatment. Their patient suffering is compared to that of Jesus (2:21), which won righteousness for all humanity.

2:21 Suffered: some ancient manuscripts and versions read “died” (cf. 3:18).

2:22-25 After the quotation of Isaiah 53:9b, the passage describes Jesus’ passion with phrases concerning the Suffering Servant from Isaiah 53:4-12, perhaps as employed in an early Christian confession of faith; cf. 1 Peter 1:18-21 and 1 Peter 3:18-22.

2:25 The shepherd and guardian of your souls: the familiar shepherd and flock figures express the care, vigilance, and love of God for his people in the Old Testament (Ps 23; Is 40:11; Jer 23:4-5; Ez 34:11-16) and of Jesus for all humanity in the New Testament (Mt 18:10-14; Lk 15:4-7; Jn 10:1-16; Heb 13:20).

3:1-6 The typical marital virtues of women of the ancient world, obedience, reverence, and chastity (3:1-2), are outlined here by the author, who gives them an entirely new motivation: Christian wives are to be virtuous so that they may be instrumental in the conversion of their husbands. In imitation of holy women in the past (3:5) they are to cultivate the interior life (3:4) instead of excessive concern with their appearance (3:3).

3:7 Husbands who do not respect their wives will have as little success in prayer as those who, according to Paul, have no love: their prayers will be “a resounding gong or a clashing cymbal” (1 Cor 13:1). Consideration for others is shown as a prerequisite for effective prayer also in Matthew 5:23-24; 1 Corinthians 11:20-22; James 4:3. After all, whatever the social position of women in the world and in the family, they are equal recipients of the gift of God’s salvation. Paul is very clear on this point, too (see 1 Cor 11:11-12; Gal 3:28).

3:8-12 For the proper ordering of Christian life in its various aspects as described in 1 Peter 2:11–3:9, there is promised the blessing expressed in Psalm 34:13-17. In the Old Testament this refers to longevity and prosperity; here, it also refers to eternal life.

3:13-22 This exposition, centering on 1 Peter 3:17, runs as follows: by his suffering and death Christ the righteous one saved the unrighteous (3:18); by his resurrection he received new life in the spirit, which he communicates to believers through the baptismal bath that cleanses their consciences from sin. As Noah’s family was saved through water, so Christians are saved through the waters of baptism (3:19-22). Hence they need not share the fear of sinners; they should rather rejoice in suffering because of their hope in Christ. Thus their innocence disappoints their accusers (3:13-16; cf. Mt 10:28; Rom 8:35-39).

3:18 Suffered: very many ancient manuscripts and versions read “died.” Put to death in the flesh: affirms that Jesus truly died as a human being. Brought to life in the spirit: that is, in the new and transformed existence freed from the limitations and weaknesses of natural human life (cf. 1 Cor 15:45).

3:19 The spirits in prison: it is not clear just who these spirits are. They may be the spirits of the sinners who died in the flood, or angelic powers, hostile to God, who have been overcome by Christ (cf. 3:22; Gn 6:4; Enoch 6–36, especially 21:6; 2 Enoch 7:1-5).

3:21 Appeal to God: this could also be translated “pledge,” that is, a promise on the part of Christians to live with a good conscience before God, or a pledge from God of forgiveness and therefore a good conscience for us.

4:1-6 Willingness to suffer with Christ equips the Christian with the power to conquer sin (1 Pt 4:1). Christ is here portrayed as the judge to whom those guilty of pagan vices must render an account (4:5; cf. Jn 5:22-27; Acts 10:42; 2 Tm 4:1).

4:6 The dead: these may be the sinners of the flood generation who are possibly referred to in 1 Peter 3:19. But many scholars think that there is no connection between these two verses, and that the dead here are Christians who have died since hearing the preaching of the gospel.

4:7-11 The inner life of the eschatological community is outlined as the end (the parousia of Christ) and the judgment draws near in terms of seriousness, sobriety, prayer, and love expressed through hospitality and the use of one's gifts for the glory of God and of Christ.

4:8 Love covers a multitude of sins: a maxim based on Proverbs 10:12; see also Psalm 32:1; James 5:20.

4:11 Some scholars feel that this doxology concludes the part of the homily addressed specifically to the newly baptized, begun in 1 Peter 1:3; others that it concludes a baptismal liturgy. Such doxologies do occur within a New Testament letter, e.g., Romans 9:5. Some propose that 1 Peter 4:11 was an alternate ending, with 1 Peter 4:12–5:14 being read in places where persecution was more pressing. But such doxologies usually do not occur at the end of letters (the only examples are 2 Pt 3:18, Jude 25, and Rom 16:27, the last probably a liturgical insertion).

4:12-19 The suffering to which the author has already frequently referred is presented in more severe terms. This has led some scholars to see these verses as referring to an actual persecution. Others see the heightening of the language as only a rhetorical device used at the end of the letter to emphasize the suffering motif.

5:1-4 In imitation of Christ, the chief shepherd, those entrusted with a pastoral office are to tend the flock by their care and example.

5:1 Presbyters: the officially appointed leaders and teachers of the Christian community (cf. 1 Tm 5:17-18; Ti 1:5-8; Jas 5:14).

5:4 See the note on 1 Peter 2:25.

5:5-11 The community is to be subject to the presbyters and to show humility toward one another and trust in God's love and care (5:5-7). With sobriety, alertness, and steadfast faith they must resist the evil one; their sufferings are shared with Christians everywhere (5:8-9). They will be strengthened and called to eternal glory (5:10-11).

5:5 Younger members: this may be a designation for office-holders of lesser rank.

5:12 Silvanus: the companion of Paul (see 2 Cor 1:19; 1 Thes 1:1; 2 Thes 1:1). Jews and Jewish Christians, like Paul, often had a Hebrew name (Saoul, Silas) and a Greek or Latin name (Paul, Silvanus). On Silvanus's possible role as amanuensis, see Introduction.

5:13 The chosen one: feminine, referring to the Christian community (ekklēsia) at Babylon, the code name for Rome in Revelation 14:8; 17:5; 18:2. Mark, my son: traditionally a prominent disciple of Peter and co-worker at the church in Rome, perhaps the John Mark referred to in Acts 12:12, 25; 13:5, 13; and in Acts 15:37-39, a companion of Barnabas. Perhaps this is the same Mark mentioned as Barnabas's cousin in Colossians 4:10, a co-worker with Paul in Philemon 24 (see also 2 Tm 4:11).

Peter

The Second Letter of

This letter can be appreciated both for its positive teachings and for its earnest warnings. It seeks to strengthen readers in faith (1:1), hope for the future (3:1-10), knowledge (1:2, 6, 8), love (1:7), and other virtues (1:5-6). This aim is carried out especially by warning against false teachers, the condemnation of whom occupies the long central section of the letter (2:1-22). A particular crisis is the claim by "scoffers" that there will be no second coming of Jesus, a doctrine that the author vigorously affirms (3:1-10). The concept of God's "promises" is particularly precious in the theology of 2 Peter (1:4; 3:4, 9, 13). Closing comments at 2 Peter 3:17-18 well sum up the twin concerns: that you not "be led into" error and "fall" but instead "grow in grace" and "knowledge" of Jesus Christ.

Second Peter is clearly structured in its presentation of these points. It reminds its readers of the divine authenticity of Christ's teaching (1:3-4), continues with reflections on Christian conduct (1:5-15), then returns to the exalted dignity of Jesus by incorporating into the text the apostolic witness to his transfiguration (1:16-18). It takes up the question of the interpretation of scripture by pointing out that it is possible to misunderstand the sacred writings (1:19-21) and that divine punishment will overtake false teachers (2:1-22). It proclaims that the parousia is the teaching of the Lord and of the apostles and is therefore an eventual certainty (3:1-13). At the same time, it warns that the meaning of Paul's writings on this question should not be distorted (3:14-18).

In both content and style this letter is very different from 1 Peter, which immediately precedes it in the canon. The opening verse attributes it to "Symeon Peter, a slave and apostle of Jesus Christ." Moreover, the author in 2 Peter 3:1 calls his work a "second letter," referring probably to 1 Peter as his first, and in 2 Peter 1:18 counts himself among those present at the transfiguration of Jesus.

SUMMARY

Second Peter is likely the latest book in the NT. It contains strong warnings and exhortations to avoid false teachings and to maintain proper ethical conduct while awaiting the second coming of Jesus Christ.

Author: An anonymous Christian, but attributed to Simon Peter.

Date: Circa A.D. 100–25.

Content: Exhortations to Christian virtue; warnings against false teachers; exhortation to be faithful in awaiting the second coming of Christ.

Nevertheless, acceptance of 2 Peter into the New Testament canon met with great resistance in the early church. The oldest certain reference to it comes from Origen in the early third century. While he himself accepted both Petrine letters as canonical, he testifies that others rejected 2 Peter. As late as the fifth century some local churches still excluded it from the canon, but eventually it was universally adopted. The principal reason for the long delay was the persistent doubt that the letter stemmed from the apostle Peter.

Among modern scholars there is wide agreement that 2 Peter is a pseudonymous work, i.e., one written by a later author who attributed it to Peter according to a literary convention popular at the time. It gives the impression of being more remote in time from the apostolic period than 1 Peter; indeed, many think it is the latest work in the New Testament and assign it to the first or even the second quarter of the second century.

The principal reasons for this view are the following. The author refers to the apostles and “our ancestors” as belonging to a previous generation, now dead (3:2-4). A collection of Paul’s letters exists and appears to be well known, but disputes have arisen about the interpretation of them (3:14-16). The passage about false teachers (2:1-18) contains a number of literary contacts with Jude 4-16, and it is generally agreed that 2 Peter depends upon Jude, not vice versa. Finally, the principal problem exercising the author is the false teaching of “scoffers” who have concluded from the delay of the parousia that the Lord is not going to return. This could scarcely have been an issue during the lifetime of Simon Peter.

The Christians to whom the letter is addressed are not identified, though it may be the intent of 2 Peter 3:1 to identify them with the churches of Asia Minor to which 1 Peter was sent. Except for the epistolary greeting in 2 Peter 1:1-2, 2 Peter does not have the features of a genuine letter at all, but is rather a general exhortation cast in the form of a letter. The author must have been a Jewish Christian of the dispersion for, while his Jewish heritage is evident in various features of his thought and style, he writes in the rather stilted literary Greek of the Hellenistic period. He appeals to tradition against the twin threat of doctrinal error and moral laxity, which appear to reflect an early stage of what later developed into full-blown gnosticism. Thus he forms a link between the apostolic period and the church of subsequent ages.

The principal divisions of the Second Letter of Peter are the following:

I. Address (1:1-2)
II. Exhortation to Christian Virtue (1:3-21)
III. Condemnation of the False Teachers (2:1-22)
IV. The Delay of the Second Coming (3:1-16)
V. Final Exhortation and Doxology (3:17-18)

I: ADDRESS

Greeting

1 [1]Symeon Peter, a slave and apostle of Jesus Christ, to those who have received a faith of equal value to ours through the righteousness of our God and savior Jesus Christ: [2]may grace and peace be yours in abundance through knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord.

[3]His divine power has bestowed on us everything that makes for life and devotion, through the knowledge of him[a] who called us by his own glory and power.* [4]Through these, he has bestowed on us the precious and very great promises, so that through them you may come to share in the divine nature, after escaping from the corruption that is in the world because of evil desire.[b] [5]*For this very reason, make every effort to supplement your faith with virtue, virtue with knowledge,[c] [6]knowledge with self-control, self-control with endurance, endurance with devotion, [7]devotion with mutual affection, mutual affection with love. [8]If these are yours and increase in abundance, they will keep you from being idle or unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. [9][d]Anyone who lacks them is blind and shortsighted, forgetful of the cleansing of his past sins. [10]*Therefore, brothers, be all the more eager to make your call and election firm, for, in doing so, you will never stumble. [11]For, in this way, entry into the eternal kingdom of our Lord and savior Jesus Christ will be richly provided for you.

You will do well to be attentive to it, as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until day dawns and the morning star rises in your hearts. [20][*]Know this first of all, that there is no prophecy of scripture that is a matter of personal interpretation, [21]for no prophecy ever came through human will; but rather human beings moved by the holy Spirit spoke under the influence of God.

On myths, see Getting It Right … What Is a Myth? (at 1 Tm 1:4).

This passage (1:19-21) addresses personal interpretation of Scripture. Fundamentalists use it as a proof for inspiration because of the mention of the Holy Spirit. Yet the text does not define inspiration. It actually warns against individuals interpreting the Bible on their own. The Holy Spirit is the true guide to interpretation, but the Spirit works through human beings who must carefully explore the Scriptures in their historical and literary contexts. Everyone needs some assistance to understand God’s word properly, since it can always be subject to misinterpretation and misuse. Catholics believe that the church, the community of believers under the guidance of the pope and bishops, also provides an important guide for interpreting the Scriptures.

Jude 8

4*For if God did not spare the angels when they sinned, but condemned them to the chains of Tartarus* and handed them over to be kept for judgment;[d] 5*and if he did not spare the ancient world, even though he preserved Noah, a herald of righteousness, together with seven others, when he brought a flood upon the godless world;[e] 6and if he condemned the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah [to destruction], reducing them to ashes, making them an example for the godless [people] of what is coming;[f] 7and if he rescued Lot, a righteous man oppressed by the licentious conduct of unprincipled people 8(for day after day that righteous man living among them was tormented in his righteous soul at the lawless deeds that he saw and heard), 9then the Lord knows how to rescue the devout from trial and to keep the unrighteous under punishment for the day of judgment,[g] 10and especially those who follow the flesh with its depraved desire and show contempt for lordship.[h]

Bold and arrogant, they are not afraid to revile glorious beings,* [11]whereas angels,[i] despite their superior strength and power, do not bring a reviling judgment against them from the Lord. [12]But these people, like irrational animals born by nature for capture and destruction, revile things that they do not understand, and in their destruction they will also be destroyed,[j] [13]suffering wrong as payment for wrongdoing. Thinking daytime revelry a delight, they are stains and defilements as they revel in their deceits while carousing with you.[k] [14]Their eyes are full of adultery and insatiable for sin. They seduce unstable people, and their hearts are trained in greed. Accursed children! [15]Abandoning the straight road, they have gone astray, following the road of Balaam, the son of Bosor,* who loved payment for wrongdoing,[l] [16]but he received a rebuke for his own crime: a mute beast spoke with a human voice and restrained the prophet's madness.[m]

Second Peter warns against listening to dissenters who make promises they cannot keep. The most important promise is Jesus' promise to return in judgment and in glory (cf. 3:4, 13). The delay in Jesus' coming (parousia) caused great consternation for the early Christians. As the early disciples began dying off, some wondered whether Jesus was truly faithful to his promise. As with other NT authors, the author of Second Peter urges his readers to stand firm and await the "new heavens and new earth" that will come one day.

Live as though Christ is coming at every moment, for indeed he is. Thus we are to walk in loving devotion and holiness at every moment. This is always the best way to live.

Rom 8:19; Jude 24

14Therefore, beloved, since you await these things, be eager to be found without spot or blemish before him, at peace. 15And consider the patience of our Lord as salvation, as our beloved brother Paul, according to the wisdom given to him, also wrote to you,[m] 16speaking of these things* as he does in all his letters. In them there are some things hard to understand that the ignorant and unstable distort to their own destruction, just as they do the other scriptures.

This (3:15) is the earliest evidence that Paul's letters could cause misunderstanding because of their complexity. The author warns against personal interpretation of Paul's writings (cf. 1:19-21) by those less qualified than himself. The passage hints that Paul's letters may already have circulated widely among Christians as important documents to preserve, thus providing the impetus for the formation of the NT itself.

[17]Therefore, beloved, since you are forewarned, be on your guard not to be led into the error of the unprincipled and to fall from your own stability.[n] [18]But grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory now and to the day of eternity. [Amen.][o]

Many houses have elaborate security systems to protect both their possessions and the household dwellers. We Christians also need to be on guard, lest the faith life that we cherish be stolen from us. In the spiritual life our best security system is a life of prayer and a few healthy friends. Watchfulness is, perhaps, an unproclaimed virtue. In your spiritual life, what would you like to see upheld and protected?

1:1 Symeon Peter: on the authorship of 2 Peter, see Introduction; on the spelling here of the Hebrew name Šimʿôn, cf. Acts 15:14. The greeting is especially similar to those in 1 Peter and Jude. The words translated our God and savior Jesus Christ could also be rendered “our God and the savior Jesus Christ”; cf. 2 Peter 1:11; 2:20; 3:2, 18.

1:2 Knowledge: a key term in the letter (1:3, 8; 2:20; 3:18), perhaps used as a Christian emphasis against gnostic claims.

1:3-4 Christian life in its fullness is a gift of divine power effecting a knowledge of Christ and the bestowal of divine promises (3:4, 9). To share in the divine nature, escaping from a corrupt world, is a thought found elsewhere in the Bible but expressed only here in such Hellenistic terms, since it is said to be accomplished through knowledge (1:3); cf. 2 Peter 1:2; 2:20; but see also John 15:4; 17:22-23; Romans 8:14-17; Hebrews 3:14; 1 John 1:3; 3:2.

1:3 By his own glory and power: the most ancient papyrus and the best codex read “through glory and power.”

1:5-9 Note the climactic gradation of qualities (1:5-7), beginning with faith and leading to the fullness of Christian life, which is love; cf. Romans 5:3-4; Galatians 5:6, 22 for a similar series of “virtues,” though the program and sense here are different than in Paul. The fruit of these is knowledge of Christ (1:8) referred to in 2 Peter 1:3; their absence is spiritual blindness (1:9).

1:10-11 Perseverance in the Christian vocation is the best preventative against losing it and the safest provision for attaining its goal, the kingdom. Kingdom of …

Christ, instead of "God," is unusual; cf. Colossians 1:13 and Matthew 13:41, as well as the righteousness of … Christ (1:1).

1:12-19 The purpose in writing is to call to mind the apostle's witness to the truth, even as he faces the end of his life (1:12-15), his eyewitness testimony to Christ (1 Pt 1:16-18), and the true prophetic message (2 Pt 1:19) through the Spirit in scripture (1:20-21), in contrast to what false teachers are setting forth (chap. 2).

1:13 Tent: a biblical image for transitory human life (Is 38:12), here combined with a verb that suggests not folding or packing up a tent but its being discarded in death (cf. 2 Cor 5:1-4).

1:16 Coming: in Greek parousia, used at 2 Peter 3:4, 12 of the second coming of Christ. The word was used in the extrabiblical writings for the visitation of someone in authority; in Greek cult and Hellenistic Judaism it was used for the manifestation of the divine presence. That the apostles made known has been interpreted to refer to Jesus' transfiguration (1:17) or to his entire first coming or to his future coming in power (chap. 3).

1:17 The author assures the readers of the reliability of the apostolic message (including Jesus' power, glory, and coming; cf. the note on 1:16) by appeal to the transfiguration of Jesus in glory (cf. Mt 17:1-8 and parallels) and by appeal to the prophetic message (2 Pt 1:19; perhaps Nm 24:17). Here, as elsewhere, the New Testament insists on continued reminders as necessary to preserve the historical facts about Jesus and the truths of the faith; cf. 2 Peter 3:1-2; 1 Corinthians 11:2; 15:1-3. My Son, my beloved: or, "my beloved Son."

1:18 We: at Jesus' transfiguration, referring to Peter, James, and John (Mt 17:1).

1:20-21 Often cited, along with 2 Timothy 3:16, on the "inspiration" of scripture or against private interpretation, these verses in context are directed against the false teachers of 2 Peter 2 and clever tales (1:16). The prophetic word in scripture comes admittedly through human beings (1:21), but moved by the holy Spirit, not from their own interpretation, and is a matter of what the author and Spirit intended, not the personal interpretation of false teachers. Instead of under the influence of God, some manuscripts read "holy ones of God."

2:1-3 The pattern of false prophets among the Old Testament people of God will recur through false teachers in the church. Such destructive opinions of heretical sects bring loss of faith in Christ, contempt for the way of salvation (cf. 2:21), and immorality.

2:4-6 The false teachers will be punished just as surely and as severely as were the fallen angels (2:4; cf. Jude 6; Gn 6:1-4), the sinners of Noah's day (2:5; Gn 7:21-23), and the inhabitants of the cities of the Plain (2:6; Jude 7; Gn 19:25). Whereas there are three examples in Jude 5-7 (Exodus and wilderness; rebellious angels; Sodom and Gomorrah), 2 Peter omitted the first of these, has inserted a new illustration about Noah (2:5) between Jude's second and third examples, and listed the resulting three examples in their Old Testament order (Gn 6; 7; 19).

2:4 Chains of Tartarus: cf. Jude 6; other manuscripts in 2 Peter read "pits of Tartarus." Tartarus: a term borrowed from Greek mythology to indicate the infernal regions.

2:5-10a Although God did not spare the sinful, he kept and saved the righteous, such as Noah (2:5) and Lot (2:7), and he knows how to rescue the devout (2:9), who are contrasted with the false teachers of the author's day. On Noah, cf. Genesis 5:32–9:29, especially 7:1. On Lot, cf. Genesis 13 and 19.

2:10b-22 Some take 2 Peter 2:10b, 11 with the preceding paragraph. Others begin the new paragraph with 2 Peter 2:10a, supplying from 2 Peter 2:9 The Lord knows how … to keep … under punishment, with reference to God and probably specifically Christ (2:1). The conduct of the false teachers is described and condemned in language similar to that of Jude 8-16. This arrogance knows no bounds; animal-like, they are due to be caught and destroyed. They seduce even those who have knowledge of Christ (2:20).

2:10b Glorious beings: literally, "glories"; cf. Jude 8. While some think that illustrious personages are meant or even political officials behind whom (fallen) angels stand, it is more likely that the reference is to glorious angelic beings (cf. Jude 9).

2:11 From the Lord: some manuscripts read "before the Lord"; cf. Jude 9.

2:13 Suffering wrong: some manuscripts read "receiving a reward." In their deceits: some manuscripts read "in their love feasts" (Jude 12).

2:15 Balaam, the son of Bosor: in Numbers 22:5, Balaam is said to be the son of Beor, and it is this name that turns up in a few ancient Greek manuscripts by way of "correction" of the text. Balaam is not portrayed in such a bad light in Numbers 22. His evil reputation and his madness (2:16), and possibly his surname Bosor, may have come from a Jewish tradition about him in the first/second century, of which we no longer have any knowledge.

2:18 Barely escaped: some manuscripts read "really escaped."

2:21 Commandment handed down: cf. 2 Peter 3:2 and Jude 3.

2:22 The second proverb is of unknown origin, while the first appears in Proverbs 26:11.

3:1-4 The false teachers not only flout Christian morality (cf. Jude 8-19); they also deny the second coming of Christ and the judgment (3:4; cf. 3:7). They seek to justify their licentiousness by arguing that the promised return of Christ has not been realized and the world is the same, no better than it was before (3:3-4). The author wishes to strengthen the faithful against such errors by reminding them in this second letter of the instruction in 1 Peter and of the teaching of the prophets and of Christ, conveyed through the apostles (3:1-2; cf. Jude 17); cf. 1 Peter 1:10-12, 16-21, especially 2 Peter 3:16-21; Ephesians 2:20.

3:3 Scoffers: cf. Jude 18, where, however, only the passions of the scoffers are mentioned, not a denial on their part of Jesus' parousia.

3:4-7 The false teachers tried to justify their immorality by pointing out that the promised coming (parousia) of the Lord has not yet occurred, even though early Christians expected it in their day. They thus insinuate that God is not guiding the world's history anymore, since nothing has changed and the first generation of Christians, our ancestors (3:4), has all died by this time. The author replies that, just as God destroyed the earth by water in the flood (3:5-6, cf. 2:5), so he will destroy it along with the false teachers on judgment day (2 Pt 3:7). The word of God, which called the world into being (Gn 1; Ps 33:6) and destroyed it by the waters of a flood, will destroy it again by fire on the day of judgment (3:5-7).

3:5 Formed out of water and through water: Genesis 1:2, 6-8 is reflected as well as Greek views that water was the basic element from which all is derived.

3:6 Destroyed, deluged with water: cf. 2 Peter 2:5; Genesis 7:11–8:2.

3:8-10 The scoffers' objection (3:4) is refuted also by showing that delay of the Lord's second coming is not a failure to fulfill his word but rather a sign of his patience: God is giving time for repentance before the final judgment (cf. Wis

11:23-26; Ez 18:23; 33:11).

3:8 Cf. Psalm 90:4.

3:10 Like a thief: Matthew 24:43; 1 Thessalonians 5:2; Revelation 3:3. Will be found out: cf. 1 Corinthians 3:13-15. Some few versions read, as the sense may demand, “will not be found out”; many manuscripts read “will be burned up”; there are further variants in other manuscripts, versions, and Fathers. Total destruction is assumed (3:11).

3:11-16 The second coming of Christ and the judgment of the world are the doctrinal bases for the moral exhortation to readiness through vigilance and a virtuous life; cf. Matthew 24:42, 50-51; Luke 12:40; 1 Thessalonians 5:1-11; Jude 20-21.

3:12 Flames … fire: although this is the only New Testament passage about a final conflagration, the idea was common in apocalyptic and Greco-Roman thought. Hastening: eschatology is here used to motivate ethics (3:11), as elsewhere in the New Testament. Jewish sources and Acts 3:19-20 assume that proper ethical conduct can help bring the promised day of the Lord; cf. 2 Peter 3:9. Some render the phrase, however, “desiring it earnestly.”

3:13 New heavens and a new earth: cf. Isaiah 65:17; 66:22. The divine promises will be fulfilled after the day of judgment will have passed. The universe will be transformed by the reign of God’s righteousness or justice; cf. Isaiah 65:17-18; Acts 3:21; Romans 8:18-25; Revelation 21:1.

3:16 These things: the teachings of this letter find parallels in Paul, e.g., God’s will to save (Rom 2:4; 9:22-23; 1 Cor 1:7-8), the coming of Christ (1 Thes 4:16-17; 1 Cor 15:23-52), and preparedness for the judgment (Col 1:22-23; Eph 1:4-14; 4:30; 5:5-14). Other scriptures: used to guide the faith and life of the Christian community. The letters of Paul are thus here placed on the same level as books of the Old Testament. Possibly other New Testament writings could also be included.

3:17-18: To avoid the dangers of error and loss of stability, Christians are forewarned to be on guard and to grow in grace and knowledge (1:2) of Christ. The doxology (3:18) recalls 1 Peter 4:11. Some manuscripts add Amen.

The First Letter of John

Early Christian tradition identified this work as a letter of John the apostle. Because of its resemblance to the fourth gospel in style, vocabulary, and ideas, it is generally agreed that both works are the product of the same school of Johannine Christianity. The terminology and the presence or absence of certain theological ideas in 1 John suggest that it was written after the gospel; it may have been composed as a short treatise on ideas that were developed more fully in the fourth gospel. To others, the evidence suggests that 1 John was written after the fourth gospel as part of a debate on the proper interpretation of that gospel. Whatever its relation to the gospel, 1 John may be dated toward the end of the first century. Unlike 2 and 3 John, it lacks in form the salutation and epistolary conclusion of a letter. These features, its prologue, and its emphasis on doctrinal teaching make it more akin to a theological treatise than to most other New Testament letters.

The purpose of the letter is to combat certain false ideas, especially about Jesus, and to deepen the spiritual and social awareness of the Christian community (3:17). Some former members (2:19) of the community refused to acknowledge Jesus as the Christ (2:22) and denied that he was a true man (4:2). The specific heresy described in this letter cannot be identified exactly, but it is a form of docetism or gnosticism; the former doctrine denied the humanity of Christ to insure that his divinity was untainted, and the latter viewed the appearance of Christ as a mere stepping-stone to higher knowledge of God. These theological errors are rejected by an appeal to the reality and continuity of the apostolic witness to Jesus. The author affirms that authentic Christian love, ethics, and faith take place only within the historical revelation and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. The fullness of Christian life as fellowship with the Father must be based on true belief and result in charitable living; knowledge of God and love for one another are inseparable, and error in one area inevitably affects the other. Although the author recognizes that Christian doctrine presents intangible mysteries of faith about Christ, he insists that the concrete Christian life brings to light the deeper realities of the gospel.

SUMMARY

First John is a short treatise of themes found in the Gospel of John. It only loosely preserves the letter format as it instructs readers to live in love and remain in God.

Author: Unknown, but attributed to John the apostle.

Date: Circa A.D. 100.

Content: Poem on the word of life; instructions on God as life, love, and truth; warnings about antichrists and those who have left the community; exhortations to love one another.

The structure and language of the letter are straightforward yet repetitious. The author sets forth the striking contrasts between light and darkness, Christians and the world, and truth and error to illustrate the threats and responsibilities of Christian life. The result is not one of theological argument but one of intense religious conviction expressed in simple truths. The letter is of particular value for its declaration of the humanity and divinity of Christ as an apostolic teaching and for its development of the intrinsic connection between Christian moral conduct and Christian doctrine.

The principal divisions of the First Letter of John are the following:

I. Prologue (1:1-4)
II. God as Light (1:5–3:10)
III. Love for One Another (3:11–5:12)
IV. Epilogue (5:13-21)

The Word of Life*

1 [1]What was from the beginning,
what we have heard,
what we have seen with our eyes, what we looked upon and touched with our hands concerns the Word of life—[a] [2]for the life was made visible;
we have seen it and testify to it and proclaim to you the eternal life that was with the Father and was made visible to us—[b] [3]what we have seen and heard
we proclaim now to you,
so that you too may have fellowship with us;
for our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ.[c]

[4]We are writing this so that our joy may be complete.[d]

The prologue of First John, which parallels somewhat the prologue of the Gospel of John, is a poetic reflection on the testimony of those who have received the faith in Jesus Christ. The church uses this passage, especially in the Easter season, as a profound testimony to the resurrection.

First John explicitly speaks of opponents who were former members of the community. They were likely apostates who either opposed the authority of the Johannine community leaders or (more likely) distorted the Gospel message. The most famous scholarly attempt to reconstruct the history of the Johannine community is Raymond E. Brown’s Community of the Beloved Disciple (Paulist Press, 1979). His hypothesis proposed several distinct groups within the community who fought over the correct interpretation of the Gospel of John.

Eventually, certain groups left the community and went their own way. While such reconstructions remain hypothetical, First John sadly indicates serious dissension and strife in a community that was called to love one another.

Their desertion shows that none of them was of our number. 20But you have the anointing that comes from the holy one,* and you all have knowledge.[o] 21I write to you not because you do not know the truth but because you do, and because every lie is alien to the truth.[p] 22*Who is the liar? Whoever denies that Jesus is the Christ. Whoever denies the Father and the Son, this is the antichrist.[q] 23No one who denies the Son has the Father, but whoever confesses the Son has the Father as well.[r]

24[s]Let what you heard from the beginning remain in you. If what you heard from the beginning remains in you, then you will remain in the Son and in the Father.* 25And this is the promise that he made us: eternal life.[t] 26I write you these things about those who would deceive you. 27As for you, the anointing that you received from him remains in you, so that you do not need anyone to teach you. But his anointing teaches you about everything and is true and not false; just as it taught you, remain in him.

Children of God

[28]*And now, children, remain in him, so that when he appears we may have confidence and not be put to shame by him at his coming. [29]If you consider that he is righteous, you also know that everyone who acts in righteousness is begotten by him.

3 [1]See what love the Father has bestowed on us that we may be called the children of God. Yet so we are. The reason the world does not know us is that it did not know him.[a] [2]Beloved, we are God's children now; what we shall be has not yet been revealed. We do know that when it is revealed we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is.[b] [3]Everyone who has this hope based on him makes himself pure, as he is pure.[c]

In our finite human condition it is easy to get used to or take for granted profound truths and divine gifts. Do you consider it an honor to be named among the children of God? How might your life be different if you would consciously live the truth of being a child of God?

Avoiding Sin

Jn 8:44; 12:31-32

[4]Everyone who commits sin commits lawlessness, for sin is lawlessness.* [5]You know that he was revealed to take away sins, and in him there is no sin.[d] [6]No one who remains in him sins; no one who sins has seen him or known him. [7]Children, let no one deceive you. The person who acts in righteousness is righteous, just as he is righteous. [8]Whoever sins belongs to the devil, because the devil has sinned from the beginning. Indeed, the Son of God was revealed to destroy the works of the devil.[e] [9]No one who is begotten by God commits sin, because God's seed remains in him; he cannot sin because he is begotten by God.* [10]In this way, the children of God and the children of the devil are made plain; no one who fails to act in righteousness belongs to God, nor anyone who does not love his brother.

The devil is the NT's most common designation for God's (and Jesus') cosmic evil opponent. See Getting It Right … Who or What Is "Satan"? (at Jb 1:6).

Whoever does not love remains in death.[i] 15 Everyone who hates his brother is a murderer, and you know that no murderer has eternal life remaining in him.[j] 16 The way we came to know love was that he laid down his life for us; so we ought to lay down our lives for our brothers.[k] 17 If someone who has worldly means sees a brother in need and refuses him compassion, how can the love of God remain in him?[l] 18 Children, let us love not in word or speech but in deed and truth.[m]

4 [1]Beloved, do not trust every spirit but test the spirits to see whether they belong to God, because many false prophets have gone out into the world.[a] [2]This is how you can know the Spirit of God: every spirit that acknowledges Jesus Christ come in the flesh belongs to God,[b] [3]and every spirit that does not acknowledge Jesus* does not belong to God. This is the spirit of the antichrist that, as you heard, is to come, but in fact is already in the world.[c] [4]You belong to God, children, and you have conquered them, for the one who is in you is greater than the one who is in the world. [5]They belong to the world; accordingly, their teaching belongs to the world, and the world listens to them.[d] [6]We belong to God, and anyone who knows God listens to us, while anyone who does not belong to God refuses to hear us. This is how we know the spirit of truth and the spirit of deceit.[e]

The antichrist is a late NT designation for the final, evil opponent of Jesus Christ who tries to mislead his followers (cf. 2 Jn 7). The term is sometimes identified with “the lawless one” (2 Thes 2:3-10) or the “beast” of Revelation (Rev 16:13, etc.). 1 John 2:18 uses the plural expression, hinting at numerous human opponents, probably opposing leaders, who are threatening his community with false teachings and practices.

God’s Love and Christian Life

g

Rom 5:8

h

Jn 1:18; 1 Tm 6:16

[7]*Beloved, let us love one another, because love is of God; everyone who loves is begotten by God and knows God. [8]Whoever is without love does not know God, for God is love. [9]In this way the love of God was revealed to us: God sent his only Son into the world so that we might have life through him.[f] [10]In this is love: not that we have loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son as expiation for our sins.[g] [11]Beloved, if God so loved us, we also must love one another. [12]No one has ever seen God. Yet, if we love one another, God remains in us, and his love is brought to perfection in us.[h]

In a world where love is often cheapened or misunderstood, take these words from the First Letter of John deep into your heart space. Our power to love comes from being loved by God. At the end of our life, St. John of the Cross declares, we will be judged on love. At the end of each day ask yourself, How well did I love today?

The statement that “no one has ever seen God” is startling. The Johannine tradition emphasizes that Jesus alone reveals God. That is the essence of the incarnation. In the OT, seeing God was generally presumed to lead to death; God’s glory was considered too bright for people to tolerate (Ex 33:20). Thus, the prophet Isaiah expresses grave concern about being taken into God’s presence in the divine court; he presumes he will die (Is 6:5). Few people in the OT are reputed to have seen God. Moses is the most prominent and is said to have spoken with God face-to-face and yet lived (Ex 33:11; Dt 34:10), but the encounter also transformed his appearance (Ex 34:29-35).

[13]*This is how we know that we remain in him and he in us, that he has given us of his Spirit. [14]Moreover, we have seen and testify that the Father sent his Son as savior of the world. [15]Whoever acknowledges that Jesus is the Son of God, God remains in him and he in God. [16]We have come to know and to believe in the love God has for us.

God is love, and whoever remains in love remains in God and God in him. [17]In this is love brought to perfection among us, that we have confidence on the day of judgment because as he is, so are we in this world.[i] [18]There is no fear in love, but perfect love drives out fear because fear has to do with punishment, and so one who fears is not yet perfect in love. [19]We love because he first loved us. [20]If anyone says, “I love God,” but hates his brother, he is a liar; for whoever does not love a brother whom he has seen cannot love God* whom he has not seen.[j] [21]This is the commandment we have from him: whoever loves God must also love his brother.[k]

Fear must make an exit from our lives if we are to love like God. In his Rule for monks, St. Benedict reminds them that perfect love casts out fear. If this is true then perfect fear casts out love as well. Love and fear cannot room together. If God is Love and we belong to God then, we, too, are to be love.

Now the testimony of God is this, that he has testified on behalf of his Son.[g] [10]Whoever believes in the Son of God has this testimony within himself.

Whoever does not believe God has made him a liar by not believing the testimony God has given about his Son.[h] 11 And this is the testimony: God gave us eternal life, and this life is in his Son.[i] 12 Whoever possesses the Son has life; whoever does not possess the Son of God does not have life.

Jer 24:7; Jn 17:3; Eph 1:17

18 We know that no one begotten by God sins; but the one begotten by God he protects, and the evil one cannot touch him. 19 We know that we belong to God, and the whole world is under the power of the evil one. 20 We also know that the Son of God has come and has given us discernment to know the one who is true. And we are in the one who is true, in his Son Jesus Christ. He is the true God and eternal life.m 21 Children, be on your guard against idols.

1:1-4 There is a striking parallel to the prologue of the gospel of John (Jn 1:1-18), but the emphasis here is not on the preexistent Word but rather on the apostles' witness to the incarnation of life by their experience of the historical Jesus. He is the Word of life (1:1; cf. Jn 1:4), the eternal life that was with the Father and was made visible (1:2; cf. Jn 1:14), and was heard, seen, looked upon, and touched by the apostles. The purpose of their teaching is to share that life, called fellowship … with the Father and with his Son, Jesus Christ, with those who receive their witness (1:3; Jn 1:14, 16).

1:5-7 Light is to be understood here as truth and goodness; darkness here is error and depravity (cf. Jn 3:19-21; 17:17; Eph 5:8). To walk in light or darkness is to live according to truth or error, not merely intellectual but moral as well. Fellowship with God and with one another consists in a life according to the truth as found in God and in Christ.

1:8-10 Denial of the condition of sin is self-deception and even contradictory of divine revelation; there is also the continual possibility of sin's recurrence. Forgiveness and deliverance from sin through Christ are assured through acknowledgment of them and repentance.

2:1 Children: like the term "beloved," this is an expression of pastoral love (cf. Jn 13:33; 21:5; 1 Cor 4:14). Advocate: for the use of the term, see John 14:16. Forgiveness of sin is assured through Christ's intercession and expiation or "offering"; the death of Christ effected the removal of sin.

2:3-6 The way we may be sure: to those who claim, "I have known Christ and therefore I know him," our author insists on not mere intellectual knowledge but obedience to God's commandments in a life conformed to the example of Christ; this confirms our knowledge of him and is the love of God … perfected. Disparity between moral life and the commandments proves improper belief.

2:7-11 The author expresses the continuity and freshness of mutual charity in Christian experience. Through Christ the commandment of love has become the light defeating the darkness of evil in a new age. All hatred as darkness is incompatible with the light and Christian life. Note also the characteristic Johannine polemic in which a positive assertion is emphasized by the negative statement of its opposite.

2:8 Which holds true in him and among you: literally, "a thing that holds true in him and in you."

2:12-17 The Christian community that has experienced the grace of God through forgiveness of sin and knowledge of Christ is armed against the evil one.

2:12 For his name's sake: because of Christ our sins are forgiven.

2:15 The world: all that is hostile toward God and alienated from him. Love of the world and love of God are thus mutually exclusive; cf. James 4:4.

2:16 Sensual lust: literally, "the lust of the flesh," inordinate desire for physical gratification. Enticement for the eyes: literally, "the lust of the eyes," avarice or covetousness; the eyes are regarded as the windows of the soul. Pretentious life: literally, "pride of life," arrogance or ostentation in one's earthly style of life that reflects a willful independence from God and others.

2:18 It is the last hour: literally, "a last hour," the period between the death and resurrection of Christ and his second coming. The antichrist: opponent or adversary of Christ; the term appears only in 1 John–2 John, but "pseudochrists" (translated "false messiahs") in Matthew 24:24 and Mark 13:22, and Paul's "lawless one" in 2 Thessalonians 2:3, are similar figures. Many antichrists: Matthew, Mark, and Revelation seem to indicate a collectivity of persons, here related to the false teachers.

2:19 Not really of our number: the apostate teachers only proved their lack of faith by leaving the community.

2:20 The anointing that comes from the holy one: this anointing is in the Old Testament sense of receiving the Spirit of God. The holy one probably refers to Christ. True knowledge is the gift of the Spirit (cf. Is 11:2), and the function of the Spirit is to lead Christians to the truth (Jn 14:17, 26; 16:13).

2:22-23 Certain gnostics denied that the earthly Jesus was the Christ; to deny knowledge of the Son is to deny the Father, since only through the Son has God been fully revealed (Jn 1:18; 14:8-9).

2:24 Continuity with the apostolic witness as proclaimed in the prologue is the safeguard of right belief.

2:28-29 Our confidence at his judgment is based on the daily assurance of salvation. Our actions reflect our true relation to him.

3:1-3 The greatest sign of God’s love is the gift of his Son (Jn 3:16) that has made Christians true children of God. This relationship is a present reality and also part of the life to come; true knowledge of God will ultimately be gained, and Christians prepare themselves now by virtuous lives in imitation of the Son.

3:2 When it is revealed: or “when he is revealed” (the subject of the verb could be Christ).

3:4 Lawlessness: a reference to the activity of the antichrist, so it is expressed as hostility toward God and a rejection of Christ. The author goes on to contrast the states of sin and righteousness. Christians do not escape sin but realize that when they sin they cease to have fellowship with God. Virtue and sin distinguish the children of God from the children of the devil.

3:9 A habitual sinner is a child of the devil, while a child of God, who by definition is in fellowship with God, cannot sin. Seed: Christ or the Spirit who shares the nature of God with the Christian.

3:11-18 Love, even to the point of self-sacrifice, is the point of the commandment. The story of Cain and Abel (3:12-15; Gn 4:1-16) presents the rivalry of two brothers, in a contrast of evil and righteousness, where envy led to murder. For Christians, proof of deliverance is love toward others, after the example of Christ. This includes concrete acts of charity, out of our material abundance.

3:19-24 Living a life of faith in Jesus and of Christian love assures us of abiding in God no matter what our feelings may at times tell us. Our obedience gives us confidence in prayer and trust in God’s judgment. This obedience includes our belief in Christ and love for one another.

3:19b-20 This difficult passage may also be translated “we shall be at peace before him in whatever our hearts condemn, for …” or “and before God we shall convince our hearts, if our hearts condemn us, that God is greater than our hearts.”

4:1-6 Deception is possible in spiritual phenomena and may be tested by its relation to Christian doctrine (cf. 1 Cor 12:3): those who fail to acknowledge Jesus Christ in the flesh are false prophets and belong to the antichrist. Even though these false prophets are well received in the world, the Christian who belongs to God has a greater power in the truth.

4:3 Does not acknowledge Jesus: some ancient manuscripts add “Christ” and/or “to have come in the flesh” (cf. 4:2), and others read “every spirit that annuls (or severs) Jesus.”

4:7-12 Love as we share in it testifies to the nature of God and to his presence in our lives. One who loves shows that one is a child of God and knows God, for God’s very being is love; one without love is without God. The revelation of the nature of God’s love is found in the free gift of his Son to us, so that we may share life with God and be delivered from our sins. The love we have for one another must be of the same sort: authentic, merciful; this unique Christian love is our proof that we know God and can “see” the invisible God.

4:13-21 The testimony of the Spirit and that of faith join the testimony of love to confirm our knowledge of God. Our love is grounded in the confession of Jesus as the Son of God and the example of God’s love for us. Christian life is founded on the knowledge of God as love and on his continuing presence that relieves us from fear of judgment (4:16-18). What Christ is gives us confidence, even as we live and love in this world. Yet Christian love is not abstract but lived in the concrete manner of love for one another.

4:20 Cannot love God: some ancient manuscripts read “how can he love …?”

5:1-5 Children of God are identified not only by their love for others (4:7-9) and for God (5:1-2) but by their belief in the divine sonship of Jesus Christ. Faith, the acceptance of Jesus in his true character and the obedience in love to God’s commands (5:3), is the source of the Christian’s power in the world and conquers the world of evil (5:4-5), even as Christ overcame the world (Jn 16:33).

5:6-12 Water and blood (5:6) refers to Christ’s baptism (Mt 3:16-17) and to the shedding of his blood on the cross (Jn 19:34). The Spirit was present at the baptism (Mt 3:16; Mk 1:10; Lk 3:22; Jn 1:32, 34). The testimony to Christ as the Son of God is confirmed by divine witness (5:7-9), greater by far than the two legally required human witnesses (Dt 17:6). To deny this is to deny God’s truth; cf. John 8:17-18. The gist of the divine witness or testimony is that eternal life (5:11-12) is given in Christ and nowhere else. To possess the Son is not acceptance of a doctrine but of a person who lives now and provides life.

5:13-21 As children of God we have confidence in prayer because of our intimate relationship with him (5:14-15). In love, we pray (5:16-17) for those who are in sin, but not in deadly sin (literally, “sin unto death”), probably referring to apostasy or activities brought on under the antichrist; cf. Mark 3:29; Hebrews 6:4-6; 10:26-31. Even in the latter case, however, prayer, while not enjoined, is not forbidden. The letter concludes with a summary of the themes of the letter (5:18-20). There is a sharp antithesis between the children of God and those belonging to the world and to the evil one. The Son reveals the God of truth; Christians dwell in the true God, in his Son, and have eternal life. The final verse (5:21) voices a perennial warning about idols, any type of rival to God.

John

The Second Letter of

Written in response to similar problems, the Second and Third Letters of John are of the same length, perhaps determined by the practical consideration of the writing space on one piece of papyrus. In each letter the writer calls himself “the Presbyter,” and their common authorship is further evidenced by internal similarities in style and wording, especially in the introductions and conclusions. The literary considerations that link 2 John and 3 John also link them with the First Letter and the Gospel of John. The concern with “truth,” christology, mutual love, the new commandment, antichrist, and the integrity of witness to the earthly Jesus mark these works as products of the Johannine school. The identity of the Presbyter is problematic. The use of the title implies more than age, and refers to his position of leadership in the early church. The absence of a proper name indicates that he was well known and acknowledged in authority by the communities to which he writes. Although traditionally attributed to John the apostle, these letters were probably written by a disciple or scribe of an apostle. The traditional place and date of composition, Ephesus at the end of the first century, are plausible for both letters.

The Second Letter is addressed to “the chosen Lady” and “to her children.” This literary image of a particular Christian community reflects the specific destination and purpose of the letter. Unlike 1 John, this brief letter is not a theological treatise but a reply to problems within the church. The Johannine themes of love and truth are used to support practical advice on Christian living. The Presbyter encourages community members to show their Christianity by adhering to the great commandment of mutual love and to the historical truth about Jesus. The false teaching present among them is a spiritualizing christology that may tempt some members to discount teachings about the incarnation and death of Jesus the Christ; cf. 1 John 4:2. For their protection the Presbyter forbids hospitality toward unknown or “progressive” Christians to prevent their infiltration of the community. The Second Letter preserves the Johannine concerns of doctrinal purity and active love in the form of pastoral advice to a threatened community.

SUMMARY

Second John is a very short letter to an unknown “chosen Lady” and her children (v. 1), warning her not to be enticed away from the authentic message of Christ by certain deceivers who have left the community.

Author: Unknown author who identifies himself as “the Presbyter,” but attributed to John the apostle.

Date: Perhaps ca. A.D. 100 from Ephesus.

Content: Exhortation to love one another; warning against false teachers.

1 The chosen Lady: literally, "elected"; this could also be translated "Kyria (a woman's name) chosen (by God)" or "the lady Electa" or "Electa Kyria." The adjective "chosen" is applied to all Christians at the beginning of other New Testament letters (1 Pt 1:1; Ti 1:1). The description is of a specific community with "children" who are its members. The truth: the affirmation of Jesus in the flesh and in contrast to false teaching (2 Jn 7).

3 Grace, mercy, and peace: like 1 Timothy and 2 Timothy this letter addsmercy to the terms used frequently in a salutation to describe Christian blessing; it appears only here in the Johannine writings. The author also puts the blessing in relation to truth and love, the watchwords of the Johannine teaching. The Father's Son: the title that affirms the close relationship of Christ to God; similar variations of this title occur elsewhere (Jn 1:14; 3:35), but the precise wording is not found elsewhere in the New Testament.

4 Some of your children: this refers to those whom the Presbyter has recently encountered, but it may also indicate the presence of false doctrine in the community: the Presbyter encourages those who have remained faithful. Walking in the truth: an expression used in the Johannine writings to describe a way of living in which the Christian faith is visibly expressed; cf. 1 John 1:6-7; 2:6, 11; 3 John 3.

6 His commandments: cf. 1 John 3:23; 2:7-8; 4:21; obedience to the commandment of faith and love includes all others.

7 The antichrist: see 1 John 2:18-19, 22; 4:3.

8 You (plural): it is not certain whether this means the Christians addressed or includes the Presbyter, since some of the ancient Greek manuscripts and Greek Fathers have "we."

9 Anyone who is so "progressive": literally, "Anyone who goes ahead." Some gnostic groups held the doctrine of the Christ come in the flesh to be a first step in belief, which the more advanced and spiritual believer surpassed and abandoned in his knowledge of the spiritual Christ. The author affirms that fellowship with God may be gained only by holding to the complete doctrine of Jesus Christ (1 Jn 2:22-23; 4:2; 5:5-6).

10-11 At this time false teachers were considered so dangerous and divisive as to be shunned completely. From this description they seem to be wandering preachers. We see here a natural suspicion of early Christians concerning such itinerants and can envisage the problems faced by missionaries such as those mentioned in 3 John 10.

12 Our joy: a number of other Greek manuscripts read "your joy."

13 Chosen sister: the community of which the Presbyter is now a part greets you (singular), the community of the Lady addressed.

The Third Letter of

John

The Third Letter of John preserves a brief glimpse into the problems of missionary activity and local autonomy in the early church. In contrast to the other two letters of John, this work was addressed to a specific individual, Gaius. This letter is less theological in content and purpose. The author's goal was to secure hospitality and material support for his missionaries, and the Presbyter is writing to another member of the church who has welcomed missionaries in the past. The Presbyter commends Gaius for his hospitality and encourages his future help. He indicates he may come to challenge the policy of Diotrephes that is based on evil gossip.

The problems of the Presbyter in this short letter provide us with valuable evidence of the flexible and personal nature of authority in the early church. The Presbyter writes to Gaius, whom perhaps he had converted or instructed, on the basis of their personal links. The brothers have also confirmed him as a loyal Christian in action and belief. Gaius accepted the missionaries from the Presbyter and presumably will accept Demetrius on the Presbyter's recommendation. In contrast, Diotrephes refuses to receive either letters or friends of the Presbyter. Although he is portrayed as ambitious and hostile, he perhaps exemplifies the cautious and sectarian nature of early Christianity; for its own protection the local community mistrusted missionaries as false teachers. Most interestingly, Diotrephes seems comfortable in ignoring the requests of the Presbyter. The Presbyter seems to acknowledge that only a personal confrontation with Diotrephes will remedy the situation (10). The division, however, may also rest on doctrinal disagreement in which Gaius and the other "friends" accept the teaching of the Presbyter, and Diotrephes does not; the missionaries are not received for suspicion of theological error. Diotrephes has thus been viewed by some as an overly ambitious local upstart trying to thwart the advance of orthodox Christianity, by others as an orthodox church official suspicious of the teachings of the Presbyter and those in the Johannine school who think as he does, or by still others as a local leader anxious to keep the debates in the Johannine community out of his own congregation.

SUMMARY

Third John, which is closely related to Second John, is the shortest letter in the NT. It is written to an unknown "Gaius" about divisions in the church and the need to adhere to the testimony of authentic faith.

Author: Unknown author who identifies himself as "the Presbyter," but attributed to John the apostle.

Date: Perhaps ca. A.D. 100 from Ephesus.

Content: Praise for those who testify to and walk in the truth; exhortation not to imitate evil.

This brief letter and the situation that it mirrors show us how little we know about some details of early development in the church: schools of opinion existed around which questions of faith and life were discussed, and personal ties as well as doctrine and authority played a role in what happened amid divisions and unity.

1 Beloved Gaius: a frequent form of address for fellow Christians in New Testament epistolary literature.

3 The brothers: in this letter, the term may refer to Christians who have been missionaries and received hospitality from Gaius (5-6). Walk in the truth: the common Johannine term to describe Christian living; this description presents Gaius as following the teachings of the Presbyter in contrast to Diotrephes.

5 You are faithful in all you do: Gaius's aid to the missionaries is a manifestation of his true Christian faith.

6 Help them … to continue their journey: the Presbyter asks Gaius not only to continue to welcome the missionaries to his community but also to equip them for further travels.

7 The Name: of Jesus Christ (cf. Acts 5:41; 1 Jn 2:12; 3:23; 5:13). Accepting nothing: not expecting support from the pagans to whom they preach the gospel, so that they will not be considered as beggars; they required support from other Christians; cf. Paul's complaints to the Corinthians (1 Cor 9:3-12).

9 Who loves to dominate: the Presbyter does not deny Diotrephes' place as leader but indicates that his ambition may have caused him to disregard his letter and his influence.

10 If I come: the Presbyter may visit the community to challenge the actions of Diotrephes toward himself and the missionaries. Will not receive the brothers: Diotrephes may have been critical of the teachings of the Presbyter and sought to maintain doctrinal purity; cf. 1 John 2:19 and 2 John 10-11.

11 Do not imitate evil: Gaius should not be influenced by the behavior of Diotrephes.

12 Demetrius: because of the fear of false teachers, Demetrius, perhaps the bearer of the letter, is provided with a recommendation from the Presbyter; cf. 2 Corinthians 3:1; Romans 16:1. Even from the truth itself: this refers probably to the manner of Demetrius's life that testifies to his true belief; cf. Gaius above (3).

15 Friends: although a Johannine term for Christians (Jn 15:15), the word here may refer to those in the community loyal to the Presbyter and to Gaius.

Jude

The Letter of

This letter is by its address attributed to "Jude, a slave of Jesus Christ and brother of James" (Jude 1). Since he is not identified as an apostle, this designation can hardly be meant to refer to the Jude or Judas who is listed as one of the Twelve (Lk 6:16; Acts 1:13; cf. Jn 14:22). The person intended is almost certainly the other Jude, named in the gospels among the relatives of Jesus (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3), and the James who is listed there as his brother is the one to whom the Letter of James is attributed (see the Introduction to James). Nothing else is known of this Jude, and the apparent need to identify him by reference to his better-known brother indicates that he was a rather obscure personage in the early church.

The letter is addressed in the most general terms to "those who are called, beloved in God the Father and kept safe for Jesus Christ" (Jude 1), hence apparently to all Christians. But since its purpose is to warn the addressees against false teachers, the author must have had in mind one or more specific Christian communities located in the unidentified region where the errors in question constituted a danger. While the letter contains some Semitic features, there is nothing to identify the addressees specifically as Jewish Christians; indeed, the errors envisaged seem to reflect an early form of gnosticism, opposed to law, that points rather to the cultural context of the Gentile world. Like James and 2 Peter, the Letter of Jude manifests none of the typical features of the letter form except the address.

There is so much similarity between Jude and 2 Peter, especially Jude 4-16 and 2 Peter 2:1-18, that there must be a literary relationship between them. Since there is no evidence for the view that both authors borrowed from the same source, it is usually supposed that one of them borrowed from the other. Most scholars believe that Jude is the earlier of the two, principally because he quotes two apocryphal Jewish works, the Assumption of Moses (Jude 9) and the Book of Enoch (Jude 14-15) as part of his structured argument, whereas 2 Peter omits both references. Since there was controversy in the early church about the propriety of citing noncanonical literature that included legendary material, it is more probable that a later writer would omit such references than that he would add them.

SUMMARY

Jude is a short letter written to exhort readers to learn the appropriate lessons from the OT in order to avoid the false teachings that are current and could lead them astray.

Author: Either an anonymous late first-century author or Jude (Judas, son of James) the apostle (Lk 6:16; Acts 1:13).

Date: Circa A.D. 80 or 100–10, depending on authorship.

Content: Warning against intruders; fate of false teachers as witnessed by OT figures; exhortation not to waiver in the face of challenges.

Many interpreters today consider Jude a pseudonymous work dating from the end of the first century or even later. In support of this view they adduce the following arguments: (a) the apostles are referred to as belonging to an age that has receded into the past (17-18); (b) faith is understood as a body of doctrine handed down by a process of tradition (3); (c) the author’s competent Greek style shows that he must have had a Hellenistic cultural formation; (d) the gnostic character of the errors envisaged fits better into the early second century than into a period several decades earlier. While impressive, these arguments are not entirely compelling and do not completely rule out the possibility of composition around the year A.D. 80, when the historical Jude may still have been alive.

This little letter is an urgent note by an author who intended to write more fully about salvation to an unknown group of readers, but who was forced by dangers from false teachers worming their way into the community (3-4) to dash off a warning against them (5-16) and to deliver some pressing Christian admonitions (17-23). The letter is justly famous for its majestic closing doxology (Jude 24-25).

Getting It Right … Jude or Judas?

Judas (Greek form of Hebrew, Judah) is another common name in the NT that can provide some unintentional confusion. Jude is a shorter form of the Greek name. Although the authority of the Letter of Jude is likely intended to rest upon its alleged origin from Judas, son of James, one of the twelve apostles (Lk 6:16; Jn 14:22; Acts 1:13), this is highly unlikely. The author's identity is not certain. The NT mentions three others known as Judas: Judas Iscariot (Mt 10:4, etc.); Judas called Barsabbas (Acts 15:22); and Judas, the "brother" of Jesus (Mt 13:55; Mk 6:3; Lk 3:30). One cannot be certain about which Judas is meant as the author of this letter, despite the designation in v. 1, "a slave of Jesus Christ and brother of James."

A doxology is a loving outburst of praise to God. It often comes at the end of a hymn or Christian discourse. It flows out of the realization that God deserves this praise—and even more than we are capable of offering. Read aloud the doxology at the end of Jude’s epistle. Write your own doxology—your own loving outburst of praise to God.

1 Jude … brother of James: for the identity of the author of this letter, see Introduction. To those who are called: the vocation to the Christian faith is God's free gift to those whom he loves and whom he safely protects in Christ until the Lord's second coming.

3-4 Our common salvation: the teachings of the Christian faith derived from the apostolic preaching and to be kept by the Christian community.

5 For this first example of divine punishment on those who had been saved but did not then keep faith, see Numbers 14:28-29 and the note there. Some manuscripts have the word "once" (hapax as at Jude 3) after "you know"; some commentators have suggested that it means "knowing one thing" or "you know all things once for all." Instead of "[the] Lord" manuscripts vary, having "Jesus," "God," or no subject stated.

6 This second example draws on Genesis 6:1-4 as elaborated in the apocryphal Book of Enoch (cf. Jude 14): heavenly beings came to earth and had sexual intercourse with women. God punished them by casting them out of heaven into darkness and bondage.

7 Practiced unnatural vice: literally, "went after alien flesh." This example derives from Genesis 19:1-25, especially Jude 4-11, when the townsmen of Sodom violated both hospitality and morality by demanding that Lot's two visitors (really messengers of Yahweh) be handed over to them so that they could abuse them sexually. Unnatural vice: this refers to the desire for intimacies by human beings with angels (the reverse of the example in Jude 6). Sodom (whence "sodomy") and Gomorrah became proverbial as object lessons for God's punishment on sin (Is 1:9; Jer 50:40; Am 4:11; Mt 10:15; 2 Pt 2:6).

8 Dreamers: the writer returns to the false teachers of Jude 4, applying charges from the three examples in Jude 5, 6, 7. This may apply to claims they make for revelations they have received by night (to the author, hallucinations). Defile the flesh: this may mean bodily pollutions from the erotic dreams of sexual license (Jude 7). Lordship … glorious beings: these may reflect the Lord (5; Jesus, 4) whom they spurn and the angels (6; cf. the note on 2 Pt 2:10, here, as there, literally, "glories").

9 The archangel Michael … judgment: a reference to an incident in the apocryphal Assumption of Moses. Deuteronomy 34:6 had said of Moses, literally in Greek, "they buried him" or "he (God?) buried him" (taken to mean "he was buried").

The later account tells how Michael, who was sent to bury him, was challenged by the devil’s interest in the body. Our author draws out the point that if an archangel refrained from reviling even the devil, how wrong it is for mere human beings to revile glorious beings (angels).

11 Cain … Balaam … Korah: examples of rebellious men and of the punishment their conduct incurred; cf. Genesis 4:8-16; Numbers 16:1-35; 31:16. See note on 2 Peter 2:15.

12 Blemishes on your love feasts: or “hidden rocks” or “submerged reefs” (cf. 13). The opponents engaged in scandalous conduct in connection with community gatherings called love feasts (agape meals), which were associated with eucharistic celebrations at certain stages of early Christian practice; cf. 1 Corinthians 11:18-34 and note on 2 Peter 2:13.

14-15 Cited from the apocryphal Book of Enoch 1:9.

18 This is the substance of much early Christian preaching rather than a direct quotation of any of the various New Testament passages on this theme (see Mk 13:22; Acts 20:30; 1 Tm 4:1-3; 2 Pt 3:3).

22 Have mercy: some manuscripts read “convince,” “confute,” or “reprove.” Others have “even though you waver” or “doubt” instead of who waver.

23 With fear: some manuscripts connect the phrase “with fear” with the imperative “save” or with the participle “snatching.” Other manuscripts omit the phrase “on others have mercy,” so that only two groups are envisioned. Rescue of those led astray and caution in the endeavor are both enjoined. Outer garment stained by the flesh: the imagery may come from Zechariah 3:3-5, just as that of snatching … out of the fire comes from Zechariah 3:2; the very garments of the godless are to be abhorred because of their contagion.

24-25 With this liturgical statement about the power of God to keep the faithful from stumbling, and praise to him through Jesus Christ, the letter reaches its conclusion by returning to the themes with which it began (1-2).

The Book of Revelation

The Apocalypse, or Revelation to John, the last book of the Bible, is one of the most difficult to understand because it abounds in unfamiliar and extravagant symbolism, which at best appears unusual to the modern reader. Symbolic language, however, is one of the chief characteristics of apocalyptic literature, of which this book is an outstanding example. Such literature enjoyed wide popularity in both Jewish and Christian circles from ca. 200 B.C. to A.D. 200.

This book contains an account of visions in symbolic and allegorical language borrowed extensively from the Old Testament, especially Ezekiel, Zechariah, and Daniel. Whether or not these visions were real experiences of the author or simply literary conventions employed by him is an open question.

This much, however, is certain: symbolic descriptions are not to be taken as literal descriptions, nor is the symbolism meant to be pictured realistically. One would find it difficult and repulsive to visualize a lamb with seven horns and seven eyes; yet Jesus Christ is described in precisely such words (5:6). The author used these images to suggest Christ's universal (seven) power (horns) and knowledge (eyes). A significant feature of apocalyptic writing is the use of symbolic colors, metals, garments (1:13-16; 3:18; 4:4; 6:1-8; 17:4; 19:8), and numbers (four signifies the world, six imperfection, seven totality or perfection, twelve Israel's tribes or the apostles, one thousand immensity). Finally the vindictive language in the book (6:9-10; 18:1–19:4) is also to be understood symbolically and not literally. The cries for vengeance on the lips of Christian martyrs that sound so harsh are in fact literary devices the author employed to evoke in the reader and hearer a feeling of horror for apostasy and rebellion that will be severely punished by God.

SUMMARY

The book of Revelation appropriately ends the NT, for it portrays the events that will happen at the time of the ultimate victory of God’s kingdom over evil. It is filled with symbols and apocalyptic imagery of angels, beasts, and fantastic events that are common to the biblical literature that developed in times of persecution.

Author: Unknown author who calls himself John, exiled on the island of Patmos, but attributed to John the apostle.

Date: Circa A.D. 90–96.

Content: Letters to the seven churches of Asia; vision of God and the victorious Lamb in heaven; various visions of the events of God’s victory over evil; the thousand-year reign; the establishment of the new heaven and new earth; the new Jerusalem.

Main Characters: Christ, the victorious Lamb of God; the woman and the red dragon; the blasphemous beasts and harlot.

The lurid descriptions of the punishment of Jezebel (2:22) and of the destruction of the great harlot, Babylon (16:9–19:2), are likewise literary devices. The metaphor of Babylon as harlot would be wrongly construed if interpreted literally. On the other hand, the stylized figure of the woman clothed with the sun (12:1-6), depicting the New Israel, may seem to be a negative stereotype. It is necessary to look beyond the literal meaning to see that these images mean to convey a sense of God’s wrath at sin in the former case and trust in God’s providential care over the church in the latter.

The Book of Revelation cannot be adequately understood except against the historical background that occasioned its writing. Like Daniel and other apocalypses, it was composed as resistance literature to meet a crisis. The book itself suggests that the crisis was ruthless persecution of the early church by the Roman authorities; the harlot Babylon symbolizes pagan Rome, the city on seven hills (17:9). The book is, then, an exhortation and admonition to Christians of the first century to stand firm in the faith and to avoid compromise with paganism, despite the threat of adversity and martyrdom; they are to await patiently the fulfillment of God’s mighty promises. The triumph of God in the world of men and women remains a mystery, to be accepted in faith and longed for in hope. It is a triumph that unfolded in the history of Jesus of Nazareth and continues to unfold in the history of the individual Christian who follows the way of the cross, even, if necessary, to a martyr's death.

Though the perspective is eschatological—ultimate salvation and victory are said to take place at the end of the present age when Christ will come in glory at the parousia—the book presents the decisive struggle of Christ and his followers against Satan and his cohorts as already over. Christ's overwhelming defeat of the kingdom of Satan ushered in the everlasting reign of God (11:15; 12:10). Even the forces of evil unwittingly carry out the divine plan (17:17), for God is the sovereign Lord of history.

The Book of Revelation had its origin in a time of crisis, but it remains valid and meaningful for Christians of all time. In the face of apparently insuperable evil, either from within or from without, all Christians are called to trust in Jesus' promise, "Behold, I am with you always, until the end of the age" (Mt 28:20). Those who remain steadfast in their faith and confidence in the risen Lord need have no fear. Suffering, persecution, even death by martyrdom, though remaining impenetrable mysteries of evil, do not comprise an absurd dead end. No matter what adversity or sacrifice Christians may endure, they will in the end triumph over Satan and his forces because of their fidelity to Christ the victor. This is the enduring message of the book; it is a message of hope and consolation and challenge for all who dare to believe.

The author of the book calls himself John (1:1, 4, 9; 22:8), who because of his Christian faith has been exiled to the rocky island of Patmos, a Roman penal colony. Although he never claims to be John the apostle, whose name is attached to the fourth gospel, he was so identified by several of the early church Fathers, including Justin, Irenaeus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Cyprian, and Hippolytus. This identification, however, was denied by other Fathers, including Denis of Alexandria, Eusebius of Caesarea, Cyril of Jerusalem, Gregory Nazianzen, and John Chrysostom. Indeed, vocabulary, grammar, and style make it doubtful that the book could have been put into its present form by the same person(s) responsible for the fourth gospel. Nevertheless, there are definite linguistic and theological affinities between the two books. The tone of the letters to the seven churches (1:4–3:22) is indicative of the great authority the author enjoyed over the Christian communities in Asia. It is possible, therefore, that he was a disciple of John the apostle, who is traditionally associated with that part of the world. The date of the book in its present form is probably near the end of the reign of Domitian (A.D. 81–96), a fierce persecutor of the Christians.

The principal divisions of the Book of Revelation are the following:

I. Prologue (1:1-3)
II. Letters to the Churches of Asia (1:4–3:22)
III. God and the Lamb in Heaven (4:1–5:14)
IV. The Seven Seals, Trumpets, and Plagues, with Interludes (6:1–16:21)
V. The Punishment of Babylon and the Destruction of Pagan Nations (17:1–20:15)
VI. The New Creation (21:1–22:5)
VII. Epilogue (22:6-21)

Revelation is the NT's prime example of apocalyptic literature. It shows affinity with the OT book of Daniel and certain extra-biblical works (e.g., 1 Enoch; 2 Esdras, etc.). Revelation is essentially one long, complex vision of God's ultimate victory over evil. It is filled with code language for the audience who live in a time of persecution by Roman authorities. The symbolic images would have been familiar to the original audience but, which under the influence of later fundamentalist and overly literal interpretations, have wrongly been applied to modern times (e.g., at the turn of the third Christian millennium). The chart lists some of these symbols (see also the chart at 4:6).

Symbols	Reference
Four living creatures representing the noblest, strongest, wisest, and swiftest in the universe	4:7
Twenty-four elders representing the twelve tribes of Israel and the twelve apostles	4:4
Four angels at the four corners of the earth holding back the four winds	7:1
Two witnesses, to fulfill requirement of Deuteronomy 19:15	11:3
Beast with the number 666, most likely representing Caesar Nero (see NAB footnote on 13:18)	13:18
144,000 of the elect who are ransomed, representing the twelve tribes of Israel	7:4; 14:3
Red dragon representing Satan, evil personified	12:3

Beast from the sea representing the Roman Empire and its emperors	13:1
Woman adorned with the sun, the moon, and stars, most likely representing the new people of Israel (the church); Roman Catholics see in her the image of the Virgin Mary	12:1
Babylon, symbolic of Rome	14:8; 16:19; 17:5; 18:2
The harlot, representing Babylon (Rome); OT background of harlotry as idolatry (e.g., Hos 1:2; 2:4-15)	17:1-18
The victorious slain Lamb representing Jesus Christ	5:6-14; 21:23

[7]Behold, he is coming amid the clouds, and every eye will see him,
  even those who pierced him.
All the peoples of the earth will lament him.

Heb 4:12

[9]I, John, your brother, who share with you the distress, the kingdom, and the endurance we have in Jesus, found myself on the island called Patmos* because I proclaimed God’s word and gave testimony to Jesus. [10]I was caught up in spirit on the Lord’s day* and heard behind me a voice as loud as a trumpet, [11]which said, “Write on a scroll* what you see and send it to the seven churches: to Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamum, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea.” [12]Then I turned to see whose voice it was that spoke to me, and when I turned, I saw seven gold lampstands [13]and in the midst of the lampstands one like a son of man, wearing an ankle-length robe, with a gold sash around his chest.[h] [14]The hair of his head was as white as white wool or as snow,* and his eyes were like a fiery flame. [15]His feet were like polished brass refined in a furnace,* and his voice was like the sound of rushing water. [16]In his right hand he held seven stars.* A sharp two-edged sword came out of his mouth, and his face shone like the sun at its brightest.[i]

[4]Yet I hold this against you: you have lost the love you had at first. [5]Realize how far you have fallen. Repent, and do the works you did at first. Otherwise, I will come to you and remove your lampstand from its place, unless you repent. [6]But you have this in your favor: you hate the works of the Nicolaitans,* which I also hate.

Vision of Heavenly Worship*

Is 6:1 / Ez 1:26-28
b
Is 24:23
Ex 24:10

4 [1]After this I had a vision of an open door* to heaven, and I heard the trumpetlike voice that had spoken to me before, saying, "Come up here and I will show you what must happen afterwards." [2]At once I was caught up in spirit.[a] A throne was there in heaven, and on the throne sat [3]one whose appearance sparkled like jasper and carnelian. Around the throne was a halo as brilliant as an emerald. [4]Surrounding the throne I saw twenty-four other thrones on which twenty-four elders sat, dressed in white garments and with gold crowns on their heads.[b] [5]From the throne came flashes of lightning, rumblings, and peals of thunder.* Seven flaming torches burned in front of the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. [6][c]In front of the throne was something that resembled a sea of glass like crystal.*

The number seven is of great symbolic significance in Revelation. Some suggest it may be a key to the structure of the book. In Hebraic thought, seven is the perfect number; it represents wholeness and completeness. Also in Hebraic thought, the chief opponent of the number seven is six, since it always falls short of perfection. Therefore 666 (13:18; Hebrew superlative form) is the symbolic identity of the beast!

Very early in the Christian tradition, these four images of the human being, lion, calf, and eagle (taken from Ez 10:14) were assigned to represent the four canonical gospels, although that is not the meaning in the text (see the NAB footnote on 4:7). The human being is Matthew, the lion is Mark, the calf (or ox) is Luke, and the eagle is John.

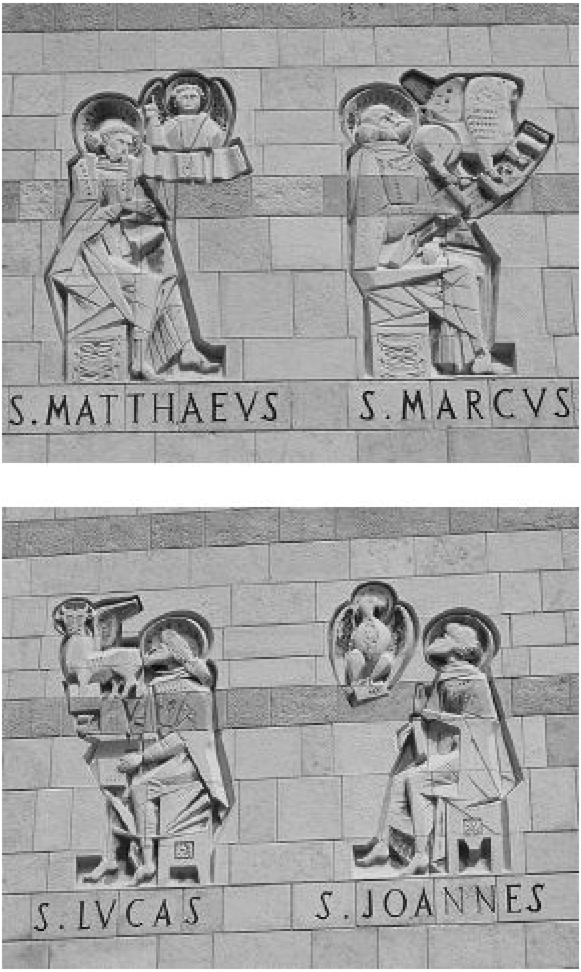
In the center and around the throne, there were four living creatures covered with eyes in front and in back. [7]The first creature resembled a lion, the second was like a calf, the third had a face like that of a human being, and the fourth looked like an eagle* in flight. [8]The four living creatures, each of them with six wings,* were covered with eyes inside and out. Day and night they do not stop exclaiming:

“Holy, holy, holy is the Lord God almighty,

d

Is 6:2-3 / 1:4, 8; 11:17; 16:5

who was, and who is, and who is to come.”[d]



Images of the gospel writers at the Church of the Annunciation in Nazareth

[9]Whenever the living creatures give glory and honor and thanks to the one who sits on the throne, who lives forever and ever, [10]the twenty-four elders fall down before the one who sits on the throne and worship him, who lives forever and ever. They throw down their crowns before the throne, exclaiming:

[11]“Worthy are you, Lord our God, to receive glory and honor and power,
for you created all things;
because of your will they came to be and were created.”[e]

e

Rom 4:17; 16:27

Holy, holy, holy is the superlative form in Hebrew meaning “holiest.” Words or numbers repeated in triplicate express the highest degree. The quotation here is from the call of Isaiah, where the angelic choruses are described as giving the highest praise to God as Lord of the universe (Is 6:2-3). The church uses this expression at every Mass at the end of the preface, to praise and honor God.

The words of praise beginning with “Worthy are you, Lord our God …” are used by the church during Tuesday evening prayer in the Liturgy of the Hours. They are coupled with another canticle, “Worthy is the Lamb …” (Rev 5:9) to form one hymn of praise.

The Scroll and the Lamb*

Is 11:1, 10; Rom 15:12

5 [1]I saw a scroll* in the right hand of the one who sat on the throne. It had writing on both sides and was sealed with seven seals.[a] [2]Then I saw a mighty angel who proclaimed in a loud voice, “Who is worthy to open the scroll and break its seals?” [3]But no one in heaven or on earth or under the earth was able to open the scroll or to examine it. [4]I shed many tears because no one was found worthy to open the scroll or to examine it. [5]One of the elders said to me, “Do not weep. The lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David,* has triumphed, enabling him to open the scroll with its seven seals.”[b]

c

Jn 1:29

[6]Then I saw standing in the midst of the throne and the four living creatures and the elders, a Lamb* that seemed to have been slain. He had seven horns and seven eyes; these are the [seven] spirits of God sent out into the whole world.[c] [7]He came and received the scroll from the right hand of the one who sat on the throne. [8]When he took it, the four living creatures and the twenty-four elders fell down before the Lamb. Each of the elders held a harp and gold bowls filled with incense, which are the prayers of the holy ones. [9]They sang a new hymn:

“Worthy are you to receive the scroll and to break open its seals, for you were slain and with your blood you purchased for God those from every tribe and tongue, people and nation.
[10]You made them a kingdom and priests for our God,

e

Dn 7:10; Jude 14-15

[11]I looked again and heard the voices of many angels who surrounded the throne and the living creatures and the elders. They were countless* in number,[e]

[12]and they cried out in a loud voice:

“Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power and riches, wisdom and strength, honor and glory and blessing.”

[13]Then I heard every creature in heaven and on earth and under the earth and in the sea, everything in the universe, cry out:

“To the one who sits on the throne and to the Lamb be blessing and honor, glory and might, forever and ever.”

[14]The four living creatures answered, “Amen,” and the elders fell down and worshiped.

IV: THE SEVEN SEALS, TRUMPETS, AND PLAGUES, WITH INTERLUDES[*]

The First Six Seals

Zec 1:8-10; 6:1-3

6[] [1]Then I watched while the Lamb broke open the first of the seven seals, and I heard one of the four living creatures cry out in a voice like thunder, "Come forward."[] [2]I looked, and there was a white horse, and its rider had a bow.[*] He was given a crown, and he rode forth victorious to further his victories.[a]

b

[3]When he broke open the second seal, I heard the second living creature cry out, "Come forward." [4][*][b]Another horse came out, a red one. Its rider was given power to take peace away from the earth, so that people would slaughter one another. And he was given a huge sword.

c

Lv 26:26; Ez 4:16-17

[5]When he broke open the third seal, I heard the third living creature cry out, "Come forward." I looked, and there was a black horse,[] and its rider held a scale in his hand. [6]I heard what seemed to be a voice in the midst of the four living creatures. It said, "A ration of wheat costs a day's pay,[] and three rations of barley cost a day's pay. But do not damage the olive oil or the wine."[c]

d

[7]When he broke open the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living creature cry out, "Come forward." [8]I looked, and there was a pale green[*] horse. Its rider was named Death, and Hades accompanied him. They were given authority over a quarter of the earth, to kill with sword, famine, and plague, and by means of the beasts of the earth.[d]

[9]When he broke open the fifth seal, I saw underneath the altar* the souls of those who had been slaughtered because of the witness they bore to the word of God. [10]They cried out in a loud voice, “How long will it be, holy and true master,* before you sit in judgment and avenge our blood on the inhabitants of the earth?” [11]Each of them was given a white robe, and they were told to be patient a little while longer until the number was filled of their fellow servants and brothers who were going to be killed as they had been.

[14]Then the sky was divided* like a torn scroll curling up, and every mountain and island was moved from its place.[f] [15]The kings of the earth, the nobles,* the military officers, the rich, the powerful, and every slave and free person hid themselves in caves and among mountain crags. [16]They cried out to the mountains and the rocks, “Fall on us and hide us from the face of the one who sits on the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb,[g] [17]because the great day of their* wrath has come and who can withstand it?”

7* 1After this I saw four angels standing at the four corners of the earth,* holding back the four winds of the earth so that no wind could blow on land or sea or against any tree.[a] 2Then I saw another angel come up from the East,* holding the seal of the living God. He cried out in a loud voice to the four angels who were given power to damage the land and the sea, 3"Do not damage the land or the sea or the trees until we put the seal on the foreheads of the servants of our God."[b] 4I heard the number of those who had been marked with the seal, one hundred and forty-four thousand marked* from every tribe of the Israelites:[c] 5twelve thousand were marked from the tribe of Judah,* twelve thousand from the tribe of Reuben, twelve thousand from the tribe of Gad, 6twelve thousand from the tribe of Asher, twelve thousand from the tribe of Naphtali, twelve thousand from the tribe of Manasseh, 7twelve thousand from the tribe of Simeon, twelve thousand from the tribe of Levi, twelve thousand from the tribe of Issachar, 8twelve thousand from the tribe of Zebulun, twelve thousand from the tribe of Joseph, and twelve thousand were marked from the tribe of Benjamin.

Triumph of the Elect

9After this I had a vision of a great multitude, which no one could count, from every nation, race, people, and tongue. They stood before the throne and before the Lamb, wearing white robes and holding palm branches* in their hands. 10They cried out in a loud voice:

“Salvation comes from* our God, who is seated on the throne, and from the Lamb.”

11All the angels stood around the throne and around the elders and the four living creatures. They prostrated themselves before the throne, worshiped God, 12and exclaimed:

“Amen. Blessing and glory, wisdom and thanksgiving, honor, power, and might be to our God forever and ever. Amen.”

This doxology at 7:12 (from Greek meaning “prayer of praise”) contains ancient liturgical terms (Amen, blessing, glory) expressive of praise and gratitude, which is used as a reading on the Solemnity of All Saints.

d
Mt 24:21

13Then one of the elders spoke up and said to me, “Who are these wearing white robes, and where did they come from?” 14I said to him, “My lord, you are the one who knows.” He said to me, “These are the ones who have survived the time of great distress;* they have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.[d]

15“For this reason they stand before God’s throne and worship him day and night in his temple.
The one who sits on the throne will shelter them.
16They will not hunger or thirst anymore,
nor will the sun or any heat strike them.[e]

[3]Another angel came and stood at the altar,* holding a gold censer. He was given a great quantity of incense to offer, along with the prayers of all the holy ones, on the gold altar that was before the throne.[c] [4]The smoke of the incense along with the prayers of the holy ones went up before God from the hand of the angel. [5]Then the angel took the censer, filled it with burning coals from the altar, and hurled it down to the earth. There were peals of thunder, rumblings, flashes of lightning, and an earthquake.[d]

The First Four Trumpets

16:1-21

6The seven angels who were holding the seven trumpets prepared to blow them.[e]

7When the first one blew his trumpet, there came hail and fire mixed with blood, which was hurled down to the earth. A third of the land was burned up, along with a third of the trees and all green grass.*

f

Ex 7:20

8*When the second angel blew his trumpet, something like a large burning mountain was hurled into the sea. A third of the sea turned to blood,[f] 9a third of the creatures living in the sea* died, and a third of the ships were wrecked.

g

It fell on a third of the rivers and on the springs of water.[g] 11The star was called "Wormwood,"* and a third of all the water turned to wormwood. Many people died from this water, because it was made bitter.[h]

i

Ex 10:21-23

12When the fourth angel blew his trumpet, a third of the sun, a third of the moon, and a third of the stars were struck, so that a third of them became dark. The day lost its light for a third of the time, as did the night.[i]

Jb 3:21

9 1Then the fifth angel blew his trumpet, and I saw a star* that had fallen from the sky to the earth. It was given the key for the passage to the abyss. 2It opened the passage to the abyss,[a] and smoke came up out of the passage like smoke from a huge furnace. The sun and the air were darkened by the smoke from the passage.[b] 3Locusts came out of the smoke onto the land, and they were given the same power as scorpions* of the earth.[c] 4They were told not to harm the grass of the earth or any plant or any tree, but only those people who did not have the seal of God on their foreheads. 5They were not allowed to kill them but only to torment them for five months;* the torment they inflicted was like that of a scorpion when it stings a person. 6During that time these people will seek death but will not find it, and they will long to die but death will escape them.[d]

e

Jl 1:6

7*The appearance of the locusts was like that of horses ready for battle. On their heads they wore what looked like crowns of gold; their faces were like human faces,[e] 8and they had hair like women’s hair. Their teeth were like lions’ teeth,[f] 9and they had chests like iron breastplates. The sound of their wings was like the sound of many horse-drawn chariots racing into battle. 10They had tails like scorpions, with stingers; with their tails they had power to harm people for five months. 11They had as their king the angel of the abyss, whose name in Hebrew is Abaddon* and in Greek Apollyon.

12The first woe has passed, but there are two more to come.

The Sixth Trumpet*

Ex 30:1-3

Jb 41:10-13

13Then the sixth angel blew his trumpet, and I heard a voice coming from the [four]* horns of the gold altar before God,[g] 14telling the sixth angel who held the trumpet, “Release the four angels* who are bound at the banks of the great river Euphrates.” 15So the four angels were released, who were prepared for this hour, day, month, and year to kill a third of the human race. 16The number of cavalry troops was two hundred million; I heard their number. 17Now in my vision this is how I saw the horses and their riders. They wore red, blue, and yellow breastplates,* and the horses’ heads were like heads of lions, and out of their mouths came fire, smoke, and sulfur.[h] 18By these three plagues of fire, smoke, and sulfur that came out of their mouths a third of the human race was killed. 19For the power of the horses is in their mouths and in their tails; for their tails are like snakes, with heads that inflict harm.

Ps 135:15-17; Is 17:8; Dn 5:4

20The rest of the human race, who were not killed by these plagues, did not repent of the works of their hands,* to give up the worship of demons and idols made from gold, silver, bronze, stone, and wood, which cannot see or hear or walk.[i] 21Nor did they repent of their murders, their magic potions, their unchastity, or their robberies.

10 [1]Then I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven wrapped in a cloud, with a halo around his head; his face was like the sun and his feet were like pillars of fire. [2]In his hand he held a small scroll that had been opened. He placed his right foot on the sea and his left foot on the land, [3]and then he cried out in a loud voice as a lion roars. When he cried out, the seven thunders* raised their voices, too.[a] [4]When the seven thunders had spoken, I was about to write it down; but I heard a voice from heaven say, “Seal up what the seven thunders have spoken, but do not write it down.” [5]Then the angel I saw standing on the sea and on the land raised his right hand to heaven [6]and swore by the one who lives forever and ever, who created heaven and earth and sea* and all that is in them, “There shall be no more delay.[b] [7]At the time when you hear the seventh angel blow his trumpet, the mysterious plan of God* shall be fulfilled, as he promised to his servants the prophets.”[c]

[8]Then the voice that I had heard from heaven spoke to me again and said, “Go, take the scroll that lies open in the hand of the angel who is standing on the sea and on the land.” [9]So I went up to the angel and told him to give me the small scroll. He said to me, “Take and swallow it. It will turn your stomach sour, but in your mouth it will taste as sweet* as honey.” [10]I took the small scroll from the angel’s hand and swallowed it. In my mouth it was like sweet honey, but when I had eaten it, my stomach turned sour.[d] [11]Then someone said to me, “You must prophesy again about many peoples, nations, tongues, and kings.”*

11 [1][a]Then I was given a measuring rod like a staff and I was told, "Come and measure the temple of God and the altar, and count those who are worshiping in it. [2]But exclude the outer court of the temple; do not measure it, for it has been handed over to the Gentiles, who will trample the holy city for forty-two months. [3]I will commission my two witnesses* to prophesy for those twelve hundred and sixty days, wearing sackcloth." [4][b]These are the two olive trees and the two lampstands* that stand before the Lord of the earth. [5]*If anyone wants to harm them, fire comes out of their mouths and devours their enemies. In this way, anyone wanting to harm them is sure to be slain. [6]They have the power to close up the sky so that no rain can fall during the time of their prophesying. They also have power to turn water into blood and to afflict the earth with any plague as often as they wish.[c]

2 Kgs 2:11

[7]When they have finished their testimony, the beast that comes up from the abyss* will wage war against them and conquer them and kill them.[d] [8]Their corpses will lie in the main street of the great city,* which has the symbolic names "Sodom" and "Egypt," where indeed their Lord was crucified. [9]Those from every people, tribe, tongue, and nation will gaze on their corpses for three and a half days, and they will not allow their corpses to be buried. [10]The inhabitants of the earth will gloat over them and be glad and exchange gifts because these two prophets tormented the inhabitants of the earth. [11]But after the three and a half days, a breath of life from God entered them. When they stood on their feet, great fear fell on those who saw them.[e] [12]Then they heard a loud voice from heaven say to them, “Come up here.” So they went up to heaven in a cloud as their enemies looked on.[f] 13At that moment there was a great earthquake, and a tenth of the city fell in ruins. Seven thousand people were killed during the earthquake; the rest were terrified and gave glory to the God of heaven.

14The second woe has passed, but the third is coming soon.

The Seventh Trumpet*

15Then the seventh angel blew his trumpet. There were loud voices in heaven, saying, “The kingdom of the world now belongs to our Lord and to his Anointed, and he will reign forever and ever.” 16The twenty-four elders who sat on their thrones before God prostrated themselves and worshiped God 17and said:

“We give thanks to you, Lord God almighty, who are and who were.
For you have assumed your great power and have established your reign.
18The nations raged,
  but your wrath has come,
  and the time for the dead to be judged,
and to recompense your servants, the prophets, and the holy ones and those who fear your name,
  the small and the great alike, and to destroy those who destroy the earth.”[g]

19Then God’s temple in heaven was opened, and the ark of his covenant could be seen in the temple. There were flashes of lightning, rumblings, and peals of thunder, an earthquake, and a violent hailstorm.

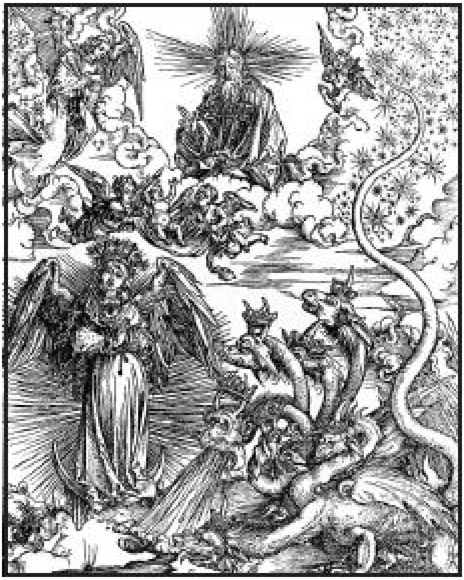
12 [1]A great sign appeared in the sky, a woman clothed with the sun, with the moon under her feet, and on her head a crown of twelve stars.[a] [2]She was with child and wailed aloud in pain as she labored to give birth.* [3]Then another sign appeared in the sky; it was a huge red dragon,* with seven heads and ten horns, and on its heads were seven diadems.[b] [4]Its tail swept away a third of the stars in the sky and hurled them down to the earth. Then the dragon stood before the woman about to give birth, to devour her child when she gave birth.[c] [5]She gave birth to a son, a male child, destined to rule all the nations with an iron rod.* Her child was caught up to God and his throne.[d] [6]The woman herself fled into the desert where she had a place prepared by God, that there she might be taken care of for twelve hundred and sixty days.*

This symbolic woman represents Israel of old, now renewed as a heavenly woman in the image of Eve (Gn 3). She is pregnant with the Messiah but must wrestle with the dragon (evil). Later Catholic tradition identified her as Mary, mother of Jesus, because of her unique role in salvation history. Many artistic images of Mary portray her accordingly with the moon and the stars at her feet, victoriously stepping on a dragon or serpent, the image of evil.



The woman and the dragon

Gn 3:1-4; Lk 10:18

7*Then war broke out in heaven; Michael* and his angels battled against the dragon. The dragon and its angels fought back, 8but they did not prevail and there was no longer any place for them in heaven. 9The huge dragon, the ancient serpent,* who is called the Devil and Satan, who deceived the whole world, was thrown down to earth, and its angels were thrown down with it.[e] 10Then I heard a loud voice in heaven say:

“Now have salvation and power come,
and the kingdom of our God and the authority of his Anointed.
For the accuser* of our brothers is cast out, who accuses them before our God day and night.
11They conquered him by the blood of the Lamb and by the word of their testimony;
love for life did not deter them from death.
12Therefore, rejoice, you heavens, and you who dwell in them.
But woe to you, earth and sea,
for the Devil has come down to you in great fury, for he knows he has but a short time.”

The church uses this poetic prayer of praise as part of its Thursday evening prayer in the Liturgy of the Hours. It expresses the awesome power of salvation achieved in Christ.

13When the dragon saw that it had been thrown down to the earth, it pursued the woman who had given birth to the male child.[f] 14But the woman was given the two wings of the great eagle,* so that she could fly to her place in the desert, where, far from the serpent, she was taken care of for a year, two years, and a half-year.[g] 15The serpent,* however, spewed a torrent of water out of his mouth after the woman to sweep her away with the current. 16But the earth helped the woman and opened its mouth and swallowed the flood that the dragon spewed out of its mouth. 17Then the dragon became angry with the woman and went off to wage war against the rest of her offspring, those who keep God’s commandments and bear witness to Jesus.* 18It took its position* on the sand of the sea.[h]

The sound I heard was like that of harpists playing their harps. [3]They were singing [what seemed to be] a new hymn before the throne, before the four living creatures and the elders. No one could learn this hymn except the hundred and forty-four thousand who had been ransomed from the earth.[b] [4]These are they who were not defiled with women; they are virgins* and these are the ones who follow the Lamb wherever he goes. The Three Angels*

Worship him who made heaven and earth and sea and springs of water.”[e] 8A second angel followed, saying:

[14]Then I looked and there was a white cloud, and sitting on the cloud one who looked like a son of man, with a gold crown on his head and a sharp sickle in his hand.[j] [15]Another angel came out of the temple, crying out in a loud voice to the one sitting on the cloud, “Use your sickle and reap the harvest, for the time to reap has come, because the earth’s harvest is fully ripe.”[k] [16]So the one who was sitting on the cloud swung his sickle over the earth, and the earth was harvested.

[17]Then another angel came out of the temple in heaven who also had a sharp sickle. [18]Then another angel [came] from the altar,* [who] was in charge of the fire, and cried out in a loud voice to the one who had the sharp sickle, “Use your sharp sickle and cut the clusters from the earth’s vines, for its grapes are ripe.” [19]So the angel swung his sickle over the earth and cut the earth’s vintage. He threw it into the great wine press of God’s fury.[l] [20]The wine press was trodden outside the city and blood poured out of the wine press to the height of a horse’s bridle for two hundred miles.*

The Seven Last Plagues

15 [1]Then I saw in heaven another sign, great and awe-inspiring: seven angels with the seven last plagues, for through them God’s fury is accomplished.

7:9, 14; 13:15-18

[2]Then I saw something like a sea of glass mingled with fire.* On the sea of glass were standing those who had won the victory over the beast and its image and the number that signified its name. They were holding God’s harps,[a] [3]and they sang the song of Moses,* the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb:

“Great and wonderful are your works,
Lord God almighty.
Just and true are your ways,

b

Pss 92:6; 98:1 / Dt 32:4; Ps 145:17

The prayer of praise is a joyful proclamation of something wonderful and true that needs our grateful recognition. Consider making praise a part of your daily prayer. A moment of praise doesn’t require an abundance of time or words so much as the wealth of your awareness and presence. Praise, gratitude, joy, and wonder are all kindred spirits.

The Seven Bowls*

16 1 I heard a loud voice speaking from the temple to the seven angels, “Go and pour out the seven bowls of God’s fury upon the earth.”

I will show you the judgment on the great harlot* who lives near the many waters.[a] [2]The kings of the earth have had intercourse with her,[b] and the inhabitants of the earth became drunk on the wine of her harlotry.” [3]Then he carried me away in spirit to a deserted place where I saw a woman seated on a scarlet beast that was covered with blasphemous names, with seven heads and ten horns.[c] [4]The woman was wearing purple and scarlet and adorned with gold, precious stones, and pearls.[d] She held in her hand a gold cup that was filled with the abominable and sordid deeds of her harlotry. [5]On her forehead was written a name, which is a mystery, “Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and of the abominations of the earth.” [6]*I saw that the woman was drunk on the blood of the holy ones and on the blood of the witnesses to Jesus.

When I saw her I was greatly amazed. [7]The angel said to me, “Why are you amazed? I will explain to you the mystery of the woman and of the beast that carries her, the beast with the seven heads and the ten horns. [8][e]The beast that you saw existed once but now exists no longer. It will come up from the abyss and is headed for destruction. The inhabitants of the earth whose names have not been written in the book of life from the foundation of the world shall be amazed when they see the beast, because it existed once but exists no longer, and yet it will come again. [9]Here is a clue for one who has wisdom. The seven heads represent seven hills upon which the woman sits. They also represent seven kings:[f] [10]five have already fallen, one still lives, and the last has not yet come,* and when he comes he must remain only a short while. [11]The beast* that existed once but exists no longer is an eighth king, but really belongs to the seven and is headed for destruction. [12]The ten horns that you saw represent ten kings who have not yet been crowned;* they will receive royal authority along with the beast for one hour.[g] [13]They are of one mind and will give their power and authority to the beast. [14]They will fight with the Lamb, but the Lamb will conquer them, for he is Lord of lords and king of kings, and those with him are called, chosen, and faithful.”[h]

Ez 16:37-41; 23:25-29

[15]Then he said to me, “The waters that you saw where the harlot lives represent large numbers of peoples, nations, and tongues. [16]The ten horns* that you saw and the beast will hate the harlot; they will leave her desolate and naked; they will eat her flesh and consume her with fire.[i] [17]For God has put it into their minds to carry out his purpose and to make them come to an agreement to give their kingdom to the beast until the words of God are accomplished. woman whom you saw represents the great city that has sovereignty over the kings of the earth.”

she will be consumed by fire.
For mighty is the Lord God who judges her.”

9The kings of the earth who had intercourse with her in their wantonness will weep and mourn over her when they see the smoke of her pyre. 10They will keep their distance for fear of the torment inflicted on her, and they will say:

“Alas, alas, great city,
Babylon, mighty city.
In one hour your judgment has come.”

11The merchants of the earth will weep and mourn for her, because there will be no more markets* for their cargo: 12their cargo of gold, silver, precious stones, and pearls; fine linen, purple silk, and scarlet cloth; fragrant wood of every kind, all articles of ivory and all articles of the most expensive wood, bronze, iron, and marble; 13cinnamon, spice,* incense, myrrh, and frankincense; wine, olive oil, fine flour, and wheat; cattle and sheep, horses and chariots, and slaves, that is, human beings.

14“The fruit you craved has left you.

All your luxury and splendor are gone,

h
Hos 10:5 / Am 6:7

never again will one find them.”[h]

[15]The merchants who deal in these goods, who grew rich from her, will keep their distance for fear of the torment inflicted on her. Weeping and mourning, [16]they cry out:

“Alas, alas, great city,
wearing fine linen, purple and scarlet, adorned [in] gold, precious stones, and pearls.[i] [17]In one hour this great wealth has been ruined.”

j
Ez 27:27-32

Every captain of a ship, every traveler at sea, sailors, and seafaring merchants stood at a distance [18]and cried out when they saw the smoke of her pyre, “What city could compare with the great city?” [19][j]They threw dust on their heads and cried out, weeping and mourning:

“Alas, alas, great city,
in which all who had ships at sea grew rich from her wealth.
In one hour she has been ruined.
[20]Rejoice over her, heaven, you holy ones, apostles, and prophets.

19 [1]After this I heard what sounded like the loud voice of a great multitude in heaven, saying:

“Alleluia!*
Salvation, glory, and might belong to our God,
[2]for true and just are his judgments.
He has condemned the great harlot who corrupted the earth with her harlotry.

3 They said a second time:

4 The twenty-four elders and the four living creatures fell down and worshiped God who sat on the throne, saying, “Amen. Alleluia.”

6Then I heard something like the sound of a great multitude or the sound of rushing water or mighty peals of thunder, as they said:

“Alleluia!
The Lord has established his reign,
[our] God, the almighty.
7Let us rejoice and be glad and give him glory.

prophet* who had performed in its sight the signs by which he led astray those who had accepted the mark of the beast and those who had worshiped its image. The two were thrown alive into the fiery pool burning with sulfur.[o] [21]The rest were killed by the sword that came out of the mouth of the one riding the horse, and all the birds gorged themselves on their flesh.

The thousand-year reign has fascinated interpreters for generations and has fueled a movement known as millenarianism (or millennialism). Although its roots go back to the early church, modern versions of it exist among some Evangelical Christians. Protestant fundamentalists have evolved several different versions of millennialism based upon their literal interpretation of Revelation. Premillennialists hold that the millennium of peace will follow the second coming of Christ (parousia). They are divided on whether this will take place on earth or in heaven. Postmillennialists believe that the thousand years of peace will happen prior to Christ's coming, which will occur only after righteousness extends over the earth and has prepared the way for him. Most interpreters (including the Catholic Church) recognize that the thousand-year image is not meant to be taken literally but to represent a suitably long period of time. God will one day be victorious and establish a kingdom of justice and peace.

20 [1]Then I saw an angel come down from heaven, holding in his hand the key to the abyss and a heavy chain.[a] [2]He seized the dragon, the ancient serpent, which is the Devil or Satan,* and tied it up for a thousand years[b] [3]and threw it into the abyss, which he locked over it and sealed, so that it could no longer lead the nations astray until the thousand years are completed. After this, it is to be released for a short time.

Mt 19:28

[4]Then I saw thrones; those who sat on them were entrusted with judgment. I also saw the souls of those who had been beheaded for their witness to Jesus and for the word of God, and who had not worshiped the beast or its image nor had accepted its mark* on their foreheads or hands. They came to life and they reigned with Christ for a thousand years.[c] [5]The rest of the dead did not come to life until the thousand years were over. This is the first resurrection. [6]Blessed* and holy is the one who shares in the first resurrection. The second death has no power over these; they will be priests of God and of Christ, and they will reign with him for [the] thousand years.

Ez 38:22

[7]When the thousand years are completed, Satan will be released from his prison. [8]He will go out to deceive the nations at the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them for battle; their number is like the sand of the sea.[d] [9]They invaded the breadth of the earth* and surrounded the camp of the holy ones and the beloved city. But fire came down from heaven and consumed them.[e] [10]The Devil who had led them astray was thrown into the pool of fire and sulfur, where the beast and the false prophet were. There they will be tormented day and night forever and ever.

Its radiance was like that of a precious stone, like jasper, clear as crystal.[j] 12It had a massive, high wall, with twelve gates where twelve angels were stationed and on which names were inscribed, [the names] of the twelve tribes of the Israelites. 13There were three gates facing east, three north, three south, and three west.[k] 14The wall of the city had twelve courses of stones as its foundation, on which were inscribed the twelve names of the twelve apostles* of the Lamb.[l]

Is 54:11-12

15*The one who spoke to me held a gold measuring rod to measure the city, its gates, and its wall. 16The city was square, its length the same as [also] its width. He measured the city with the rod and found it fifteen hundred miles* in length and width and height. 17He also measured its wall: one hundred and forty-four cubits* according to the standard unit of measurement the angel used. 18*The wall was constructed of jasper, while the city was pure gold, clear as glass. 19The foundations of the city wall were decorated with every precious stone; the first course of stones was jasper, the second sapphire, the third chalcedony, the fourth emerald,[m] 20the fifth sardonyx, the sixth carnelian, the seventh chrysolite, the eighth beryl, the ninth topaz, the tenth chrysoprase, the eleventh hyacinth, and the twelfth amethyst. 21The twelve gates were twelve pearls, each of the gates made from a single pearl; and the street of the city was of pure gold, transparent as glass.

Getting It Right … Damnation

Revelation is a book about God’s ultimate victory over evil. Christ, the victorious Lamb, will conquer all evil and establish an endless reign of justice and peace. Revelation, however, does not offer a naive, milquetoast kind of vision. The message of victory is accompanied by a warning: those who do not repent of their sinfulness here and now may face eternal condemnation, “second death” (cf. 2:11). This warning is not unique to Revelation. Jesus’ message in the gospels contains numerous calls for repentance and conversion so as to avoid eternal damnation (e.g., Mt 5:21-26; cf. 3:7-12).

The image of fiery condemnation most likely originates in the reality of the garbage dump outside the city walls of Jerusalem (known as Gehenna; Mt 10:28; 23:33). By NT times, the smelly, fiery, smoldering reality became the primary symbol for the place of eternal punishment and life without God’s presence, that is, hell. Like it or not, part of the biblical message espoused by Revelation includes a dire warning that the next life can bring salvation or damnation. What we do with our lives here and now makes a difference with the life to come (Mt 25:31-46).

Only those will enter whose names are written in the Lamb’s book of life.[q]

22 1 Then the angel showed me the river of life-giving water,* sparkling like crystal, flowing from the throne of God and of the Lamb[a] 2down the middle of its street. On either side of the river grew the tree of life* that produces fruit twelve times a year, once each month; the leaves of the trees serve as medicine for the nations. 3Nothing accursed will be found there anymore. The throne of God and of the Lamb will be in it, and his servants will worship him. 4They will look upon his face,* and his name will be on their foreheads. 5Night will be no more, nor will they need light from lamp or sun, for the Lord God shall give them light, and they shall reign forever and ever.[b]

The great challenge today is to live as one awake to grace flowing everywhere. Even today there’s an angel in your life ready to show you the life-giving river. The medicinal nature of the earth is slowly being revealed in these days. Reflect on Ezekiel 47:6-12.

On Maranatha, see the NAB footnote on 1 Corinthians 16:22.

1:1-3 This prologue describes the source, contents, and audience of the book and forms an inclusion with the epilogue (22:6-21), with its similar themes and expressions.

1:3 Blessed is the one: this is the first of seven beatitudes in this book; the others are in Revelation 14:13; 16:15; 19:9; 20:6; 22:7, 14. This prophetic message: literally, "the words of the prophecy"; so Revelation 22:7, 10, 18, 19 by inclusion. The appointed time: when Jesus will return in glory; cf. Revelation 1:7; 3:11; 22:7, 10, 12, 20.

1:4-8 Although Revelation begins and ends (22:21) with Christian epistolary formulae, there is nothing between Revelation 4 and 22 resembling a letter. The author here employs the standard word order for greetings in Greek letter writing: "N. to N., greetings …"; see the note on Romans 1:1.

1:4 Seven churches in Asia: Asia refers to the Roman province of that name in western Asia Minor (modern Turkey); these representative churches are mentioned by name in Revelation 1:11, and each is the recipient of a message (2:1–3:22). Seven is the biblical number suggesting fullness and completeness; thus the seer is writing for the whole church.

1:5 Freed us: the majority of Greek manuscripts and several early versions read "washed us"; but "freed us" is supported by the best manuscripts and fits well with Old Testament imagery, e.g., Isaiah 40:2.

1:8 The Alpha and the Omega: the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet. In Revelation 22:13 the same words occur together with the expressions "the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End"; cf. Revelation 1:17; 2:8; 21:6; Isaiah 41:4; 44:6.

1:9-20 In this first vision, the seer is commanded to write what he sees to the seven churches (1:9-11). He sees Christ in glory, whom he depicts in stock apocalyptic imagery (1:12-16), and hears him describe himself in terms meant to encourage Christians by emphasizing his victory over death (1:17-20).

1:9 Island called Patmos: one of the Sporades islands in the Aegean Sea, some fifty miles south of Ephesus, used by the Romans as a penal colony. Because I proclaimed God's word: literally, "on account of God's word."

1:10 The Lord's day: Sunday. As loud as a trumpet: the imagery is derived from the theophany at Sinai (Ex 19:16, 19; cf. Heb 12:19 and the trumpet in other eschatological settings in Is 27:13; Jl 2:1; Mt 24:31; 1 Cor 15:52; 1 Thes 4:16).

1:11 Scroll: a papyrus roll.

1:12-16 A symbolic description of Christ in glory. The metaphorical language is not to be understood literally; cf. Introduction.

1:13 Son of man: see note on Mark 8:31. Ankle-length robe: Christ is priest; cf. Exodus 28:4; 29:5; Wisdom 18:24; Zechariah 3:4. Gold sash: Christ is king; cf. Exodus 28:4; 1 Maccabees 10:89; 11:58; Daniel 10:5.

1:14 Hair … as white as white wool or as snow: Christ is eternal, clothed with the dignity that belonged to the "Ancient of Days"; cf. Revelation 1:18; Daniel 7:9. His eyes were like a fiery flame: Christ is portrayed as all-knowing; cf. Revelation 2:23; Psalm 7:10; Jeremiah 17:10; and similar expressions in Revelation 2:18; 19:12; cf. Daniel 10:6.

1:15 His feet … furnace: Christ is depicted as unchangeable; cf. Ezekiel 1:27; Daniel 10:6. The Greek word translated "refined" is unconnected grammatically with any other word in the sentence. His voice … water: Christ speaks with divine authority; cf. Ezekiel 1:24.

1:16 Seven stars: in the pagan world, Mithras and the Caesars were represented with seven stars in their right hand, symbolizing their universal dominion. A sharp two-edged sword: this refers to the word of God (cf. Eph 6:17; Heb 4:12) that will destroy unrepentant sinners; cf. Revelation 2:16; 19:15; Wisdom 18:15; Isaiah 11:4; 49:2. His face … brightest: this symbolizes the divine majesty of Christ; cf. Revelation 10:1; 21:23; Judges 5:31; Isaiah 60:19; Matthew 17:2.

1:17 It was an Old Testament belief that for sinful human beings to see God was to die; cf. Exodus 19:21; 33:20; Judges 6:22-23; Isaiah 6:5.

1:18 Netherworld: Greek Hades, Hebrew Sheol, the abode of the dead; cf. Revelation 20:13-14; Numbers 16:33.

1:19 What you have seen, and what is happening, and what will happen afterwards: the three parts of the Book of Revelation, the vision (1:10-20), the situation in the seven churches (chaps. 2–3), and the events of Revelation 6–22.

1:20 Secret meaning: literally, “mystery.” Angels: these are the presiding spirits of the seven churches. Angels were thought to be in charge of the physical world (cf. 7:1; 14:18; 16:5) and of nations (Dn 10:13; 12:1), communities (the seven churches), and individuals (Mt 18:10; Acts 12:15). Some have seen in the “angel” of each of the seven churches its pastor or a personification of the spirit of the congregation.

2:1–3:22 Each of the seven letters follows the same pattern: address; description of the exalted Christ; blame and/or praise for the church addressed; threat and/or admonition; final exhortation and promise to all Christians.

2:1-7 The letter to Ephesus praises the members of the church there for their works and virtues, including discerning false teachers (2:2-3), but admonishes them to repent and return to their former devotion (2:4-5). It concludes with a reference to the Nicolaitans (see the note on 2:6) and a promise that the victor will have access to eternal life (2:7).

2:1 Ephesus: this great ancient city had a population of ca. 250,000; it was the capital of the Roman province of Asia and the commercial, cultural, and religious center of Asia. The other six churches were located in the same province, situated roughly in a circle; they were selected for geographical reasons rather than for the size of their Christian communities. Walks in the midst of the seven gold lampstands: this signifies that Christ is always present in the church; see the note on Revelation 1:4.

2:2 Who call themselves … impostors: this refers to unauthorized and perverse missionaries; cf. Acts 20:29-30.

2:6 Nicolaitans: these are perhaps the impostors of Revelation 2:2; see the note on Revelation 2:14-15. There is little evidence for connecting this group with Nicolaus, the proselyte from Antioch, mentioned in Acts 6:5.

2:7 Victor: referring to any Christian individual who holds fast to the faith and does God’s will in the face of persecution. The tree of life that is in the garden of God: this is a reference to the tree in the primeval paradise (Gn 2:9); cf. Revelation 22:2, 14, 19. The decree excluding humanity from the tree of life has been revoked by Christ.

2:8-11 The letter to Smyrna encourages the Christians in this important commercial center by telling them that although they are impoverished, they are nevertheless rich, and calls those Jews who are slandering them members of the assembly of Satan (2:9). There is no admonition; rather, the Christians are told that they will suffer much, even death, but the time of tribulation will be short compared to their eternal reward (2:10), and they will thus escape final damnation (2:11).

2:8 Smyrna: modern Izmir, ca. thirty miles north of Ephesus, and the chief city of Lydia, with a temple to the goddess Roma. It was renowned for its loyalty to Rome, and it also had a large Jewish community very hostile toward Christians.

2:9-10 The church in Smyrna was materially poor but spiritually rich. Accusations made by Jewish brethren there occasioned the persecution of Christians; cf. Acts 14:2, 19; 17:5, 13.

2:11 The second death: this refers to the eternal death, when sinners will receive their final punishment; cf. Revelation 20:6, 14-15; 21:8.

2:12-17 The letter to Pergamum praises the members of the church for persevering in their faith in Christ even in the midst of a pagan setting and in face of persecution and martyrdom (2:13). But it admonishes them about members who advocate an unprincipled morality (2:14; cf. 2 Pt 2:15; Jude 11) and others who follow the teaching of the Nicolaitans (2:15; see the note there). It urges them to repent (2:16) and promises them the hidden manna and Christ's amulet (2:17).

2:12 Pergamum: modern Bergama, ca. forty-five miles northeast of Smyrna, a center for various kinds of pagan worship. It also had an outstanding library (the word parchment is derived from its name).

2:13 Satan's throne: the reference is to emperor worship and other pagan practices that flourished in Pergamum, perhaps specifically to the white marble altar erected and dedicated to Zeus by Eumenes II (197–160 B.C.).

2:14-15 Like Balaam, the biblical prototype of the religious compromiser (cf. Nm 25:1-3; 31:16; 2 Pt 2:15; Jude 11), the Nicolaitans in Pergamum and Ephesus (Rev 2:6) accommodated their Christian faith to paganism. They abused the principle of liberty enunciated by Paul (1 Cor 9:19-23).

2:17 The hidden manna: this is the food of life; cf. Psalm 78:24-25. White amulet: literally, "white stone," on which was written a magical name, whose power could be tapped by one who knew the secret name. It is used here as a symbol of victory and joy; cf. Revelation 3:4-5. New name: this is a reference to the Christian's rebirth in Christ; cf. Revelation 3:12; 19:12; Isaiah 62:2; 65:15.

2:18-29 The letter to Thyatira praises the progress in virtue of this small Christian community (2:19) but admonishes them for tolerating a false prophet who leads them astray (2:20). Her fate is sealed, but there is hope of repentance for her followers (2:21-22). Otherwise, they too shall die (2:23). They are warned against Satanic power or knowledge (2:24-25). Those who remain faithful will share in the messianic reign, having authority over nations (2:26-27), and will in fact possess Christ himself (Rev 2:28).

2:18 Thyatira: modern Akhisar, ca. forty miles southeast of Pergamum, a frontier town famous for its workers' guilds (cf. Acts 16:14), membership in which may have involved festal meals in pagan temples.

2:20 The scheming and treacherous Jezebel of old (cf. 1 Kgs 19:1-2; 21:1-14; 2 Kgs 9:22, 30-34) introduced pagan customs into the religion of Israel; this new Jezebel was doing the same to Christianity.

2:23 Children: spiritual descendants.

2:24 The so-called deep secrets of Satan: literally, "the deep things of Satan," a scathing reference to the perverse teaching of the Nicolaitans (2:15).

2:26-28 The Christian who perseveres in faith will share in Christ's messianic authority (cf. Ps 2:8-9) and resurrection victory over death, symbolized by the morning star; cf. Revelation 22:16.

2:26 Who keeps to my ways: literally, “who keeps my works.”

3:1-6 The letter to Sardis does not praise the community but admonishes its members to watchfulness, mutual support, and repentance (3:2-3). The few who have remained pure and faithful will share Christ’s victory and will be inscribed in the book of life (3:4-5).

3:1 Sardis: this city, located ca. thirty miles southeast of Thyatira, was once the capital of Lydia, known for its wealth at the time of Croesus (6th century B.C.). Its citadel, reputed to be unassailable, was captured by surprise, first by Cyrus and later by Antiochus. The church is therefore warned to be on guard.

3:5 In white: white is a sign of victory and joy as well as resurrection; see the note on Revelation 2:17. The book of life: the roll in which the names of the redeemed are kept; cf. Revelation 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15; 21:27; Philippians 4:3; Daniel 12:1. They will be acknowledged by Christ in heaven; cf. Matthew 10:32.

3:7-13 The letter to Philadelphia praises the Christians there for remaining faithful even with their limited strength (3:8). Members of the assembly of Satan are again singled out (3:9; see 2:9). There is no admonition; rather, the letter promises that they will be kept safe at the great trial (3:10-11) and that the victors will become pillars of the heavenly temple, upon which three names will be inscribed: God, Jerusalem, and Christ (3:12).

3:7 Philadelphia: modern Alasehir, ca. thirty miles southeast of Sardis, founded by Attalus II Philadelphus of Pergamum to be an “open door” (3:8) for Greek culture; it was destroyed by an earthquake in A.D. 17. Rebuilt by money from the Emperor Tiberius, the city was renamed Neo-Caesarea; this may explain the allusions to “name” in Revelation 3:12. Key of David: to the heavenly city of David (cf. Is 22:22), “the new Jerusalem” (3:12), over which Christ has supreme authority.

3:8 An open door: opportunities for sharing and proclaiming the faith; cf. Acts 14:27; 1 Corinthians 16:9; 2 Corinthians 2:12.

3:10 My message of endurance: this does not refer to a saying of Jesus about patience but to the example of Christ’s patient endurance. The inhabitants of the earth: literally, “those who live on the earth.” This expression, which also occurs in Revelation 6:10; 8:13; 11:10; 13:8, 12, 14; 17:2, 8, always refers to the pagan world.

3:12 Pillar: this may be an allusion to the rebuilding of the city; see the note on v. 7. New Jerusalem: it is described in Revelation 21:10–22:5.

3:14-22 The letter to Laodicea reprimands the community for being lukewarm (3:15-16), but no particular faults are singled out. Their material prosperity is contrasted with their spiritual poverty, the violet tunics that were the source of their wealth with the white robe of baptism, and their famous eye ointment with true spiritual perception (3:17-18). But Christ’s chastisement is inspired by love and a desire to be allowed to share the messianic banquet with his followers in the heavenly kingdom (3:19-21).

3:14 Laodicea: ca. forty miles southeast of Philadelphia and ca. eighty miles east of Ephesus, a wealthy industrial and commercial center, with a renowned medical school. It exported fine woolen garments and was famous for its eye salves. It was so wealthy that it was proudly rebuilt without outside aid after the devastating earthquake of A.D. 60/61. The Amen: this is a divine title (cf. Hebrew text of Is 65:16) applied to Christ; cf. 2 Corinthians 1:20. Source of God’s creation: literally, “the beginning of God’s creation,” a concept found also in John 1:3; Colossians 1:16-17;

Hebrews 1:2; cf. Proverbs 8:22-31; Wisdom 9:1-2.

3:15-16 Halfhearted commitment to the faith is nauseating to Christ; cf. Romans 12:11.

3:16 Spit: literally, “vomit.” The image is that of a beverage that should be either hot or cold. Perhaps there is an allusion to the hot springs of Hierapolis across the Lycus river from Laodicea, which would have been lukewarm by the time they reached Laodicea.

3:17 Economic prosperity occasioned spiritual bankruptcy.

3:18 Gold … fire: God’s grace. White garments: symbol of an upright life; the city was noted for its violet/purple cloth. Ointment … eyes: to remove spiritual blindness; one of the city’s exports was eye ointment (see the note on 3:14).

3:20 Christ invites all to the messianic banquet in heaven; cf. Isaiah 25:6; Luke 14:15; 22:30.

4:1-11 The seer now describes a vision of the heavenly court in worship of God enthroned. He reverently avoids naming or describing God but pictures twenty-four elders in priestly and regal attire (4:4) and God’s throne and its surroundings made of precious gems and other symbols that traditionally express the majesty of God (4:5-6). Universal creation is represented by the four living creatures (4:6-7). Along with the twenty-four elders, they praise God unceasingly in humble adoration (4:8-11).

4:1 The ancients viewed heaven as a solid vault, entered by way of actual doors.

4:2-8 Much of the imagery here is taken from Ezekiel 1:10.

4:4 Twenty-four elders: these represent the twelve tribes of Israel and the twelve apostles; cf. Revelation 21:12-14.

4:5 Flashes of lightning, rumblings, and peals of thunder: as in other descriptions of God’s appearance or activity; cf. Revelation 8:5; 11:19; 16:18; Exodus 19:16; Ezekiel 1:4, 13. The seven spirits of God: the seven “angels of the presence” as in Revelation 8:2 and Tobit 12:15.

4:6 A sea of glass like crystal: an image adapted from Ezekiel 1:22-26. Four living creatures: these are symbols taken from Ezekiel 1:5-21; they are identified as cherubim in Ezekiel 10:20. Covered with eyes: these suggest God’s knowledge and concern.

4:7 Lion … calf … human being … eagle: these symbolize, respectively, what is noblest, strongest, wisest, and swiftest in creation. Calf: traditionally translated “ox,” the Greek word refers to a heifer or young bull. Since the second century, these four creatures have been used as symbols of the evangelists Mark, Luke, Matthew, and John, respectively.

4:8 Six wings: like the seraphim of Isaiah 6:2.

5:1-14 The seer now describes a papyrus roll in God’s right hand (5:1) with seven seals indicating the importance of the message. A mighty angel asks who is worthy to open the scroll, i.e., who can accomplish God’s salvific plan (5:2). There is despair at first when no one in creation can do it (5:3-4). But the seer is comforted by an elder who tells him that Christ, called the lion of the tribe of Judah, has won the right to open it (5:5). Christ then appears as a Lamb, coming to receive the scroll from God (5:6-7), for which he is acclaimed as at a coronation (5:8-10). This is followed by a doxology of the angels (5:11-12) and then finally by the heavenly church united with all of creation (5:13-14).

5:1 A scroll: a papyrus roll possibly containing a list of afflictions for sinners (cf.

Ez 2:9-10) or God's plan for the world. Sealed with seven seals: it is totally hidden from all but God. Only the Lamb (5:7-9) has the right to carry out the divine plan.

5:5 The lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David: these are the messianic titles applied to Christ to symbolize his victory; cf. Revelation 22:16; Genesis 49:9; Isaiah 11:1, 10; Matthew 1:1.

5:6 Christ is the Paschal Lamb without blemish, whose blood saved the new Israel from sin and death; cf. Exodus 12; Isaiah 53:7; John 1:29, 36; Acts 8:32; 1 Peter 1:18-19. This is the main title for Christ in Revelation, used twenty-eight times. Seven horns and seven eyes: Christ has the fullness (see the note on 1:4) of power (horns) and knowledge (eyes); cf. Zechariah 4:7. [Seven] spirits: as in Revelation 1:4; 3:1; 4:5.

5:11 Countless: literally, "100,000,000 plus 1,000,000," used by the author to express infinity.

6:1–16:21 A series of seven disasters now begins as each seal is broken (6:1–8:1), followed by a similar series as seven trumpets sound (8:2–11:19) and as seven angels pour bowls on the earth causing plagues (15:1–16:21). These gloomy sequences are interrupted by longer or shorter scenes suggesting the triumph of God and his witnesses (e.g., 7; 10; 11; 12; 13; 14).

6:1-17 This chapter provides a symbolic description of the contents of the sealed scroll. The breaking of the first four seals reveals four riders. The first rider (of a white horse) is a conquering power (6:1-2), the second (red horse) a symbol of bloody war (6:3-4), the third (black horse) a symbol of famine (6:5-6), the fourth (pale green horse) a symbol of Death himself, accompanied by Hades (the netherworld) as his page (6:7-8). Revelation 6:8b summarizes the role of all four riders. The breaking of the fifth seal reveals Christian martyrs in an attitude of sacrifice as blood poured out at the foot of an altar begging God for vindication, which will come only when their quota is filled; but they are given a white robe symbolic of victory (6:9-11). The breaking of the sixth seal reveals typical apocalyptic signs in the sky and the sheer terror of all people at the imminent divine judgment (6:12-17).

6:1-8 The imagery is adapted from Zechariah 1:8-10; 6:1-8.

6:2 White horse … bow: this may perhaps allude specifically to the Parthians on the eastern border of the Roman empire. Expert in the use of the bow, they constantly harassed the Romans and won a major victory in A.D. 62; see the note on Revelation 9:13-21. But the Old Testament imagery typifies the history of oppression of God's people at all times.

6:4 Huge sword: this is a symbol of war and violence; cf. Ezekiel 21:14-17.

6:5 Black horse: this is a symbol of famine, the usual accompaniment of war in antiquity; cf. Leviticus 26:26; Ezekiel 4:12-13. The scale is a symbol of shortage of food with a corresponding rise in price.

6:6 A day's pay: literally, "a denarius," a Roman silver coin that constitutes a day's wage in Matthew 20:2. Because of the famine, food was rationed and sold at an exorbitant price. A liter of flour was considered a day's ration in the Greek historians Herodotus and Diogenes Laertius. Barley: food of the poor (Jn 6:9, 13; cf. 2 Kgs 7:1, 16, 18); it was also used to feed animals; cf. 1 Kings 5:8. Do not damage: the olive and the vine are to be used more sparingly in time of famine.

6:8 Pale green: symbol of death and decay; cf. Ezekiel 14:21.

6:9 The altar: this altar corresponds to the altar of holocausts in the temple in Jerusalem; see also Revelation 11:1. Because of the witness … word of God: literally, "because of the word of God and the witness they had borne."

6:10 Holy and true master: Old Testament usage as well as the context indicates that this is addressed to God rather than to Christ.

6:12-14 Symbolic rather than literal description of the cosmic upheavals attending the day of the Lord when the martyrs' prayer for vindication (6:10) would be answered; cf. Amos 8:8-9; Isaiah 34:4; 50:3; Joel 2:10; 3:3-4; Matthew 24:4-36; Mark 13:5-37; Luke 21:8-36.

6:12 Dark sackcloth: for mourning, sackcloth was made from the skin of a black goat.

6:13 Unripe figs: literally, "summer (or winter) fruit."

6:14 Was divided: literally, "was split," like a broken papyrus roll torn in two, each half then curling up to form a roll on either side.

6:15 Nobles: literally, "courtiers," "grandees." Military officers: literally, "commanders of 1,000 men," used in Josephus and other Greek authors as the equivalent of the Roman tribunus militum. The listing of various ranks of society represents the universality of terror at the impending doom.

6:17 Their: this reading is attested in the best manuscripts, but the vast majority read "his" in reference to the wrath of the Lamb in the preceding verse.

7:1-17 An interlude of two visions precedes the breaking of the seventh seal, just as two more will separate the sixth and seventh trumpets (chap. 10). In the first vision (7:1-8), the elect receive the seal of the living God as protection against the coming cataclysm; cf. Revelation 14:1; Ezekiel 9:4-6; 2 Corinthians 1:22; Ephesians 1:13; 4:30. The second vision (7:9-17) portrays the faithful Christians before God's throne to encourage those on earth to persevere to the end, even to death.

7:1 The four corners of the earth: the earth is seen as a table or rectangular surface.

7:2 East: literally, "rising of the sun." The east was considered the source of light and the place of paradise (Gn 2:8). Seal: whatever was marked by the impression of one's signet ring belonged to that person and was under his protection.

7:4-9 One hundred and forty-four thousand: the square of twelve (the number of Israel's tribes) multiplied by a thousand, symbolic of the new Israel (cf. 14:1-5; Gal 6:16; Jas 1:1) that embraces people from every nation, race, people, and tongue (7:9).

7:5-8 Judah is placed first because of Christ; cf. "the Lion of the tribe of Judah" (5:5). Dan is omitted because of a later tradition that the antichrist would arise from it.

7:9 White robes … palm branches: symbols of joy and victory; see the note on Revelation 3:5.

7:10 Salvation comes from: literally, "(let) salvation (be ascribed) to." A similar hymn of praise is found at the fall of the dragon (12:10) and of Babylon (19:1).

7:14 Time of great distress: fierce persecution by the Romans; cf. Introduction.

7:17 Life-giving water: literally, "the water of life," God's grace, which flows from Christ; cf. Revelation 21:6; 22:1, 17; John 4:10, 14.

8:1-13 The breaking of the seventh seal produces at first silence and then seven symbolic disasters, each announced by a trumpet blast, of which the first four form a unit as did the first four seals. A minor liturgy (8:3-5) is enclosed by a vision of seven angels (8:2, 6). Then follow the first four trumpet blasts, each heralding catastrophes modeled on the plagues of Egypt affecting the traditional prophetic third (cf. Ez 5:12) of the earth, sea, fresh water, and stars (8:7-12). Finally, there is a vision of an eagle warning of the last three trumpet blasts (8:13).

8:1 Silence in heaven: as in Zephaniah 1:7, a prelude to the eschatological woes that are to follow; cf. Introduction.

8:3 Altar: there seems to be only one altar in the heavenly temple, corresponding to the altar of holocausts in Revelation 6:9, and here to the altar of incense in Jerusalem; cf. also Revelation 9:13; 11:1; 14:18; 16:7.

8:7 This woe resembles the seventh plague of Egypt (Ex 9:23-24); cf. Joel 3:3.

8:8-11 The background of these two woes is the first plague of Egypt (Ex 7:20-21).

8:9 Creatures living in the sea: literally, “creatures in the sea that had souls.”

8:11 Wormwood: an extremely bitter and malignant plant symbolizing the punishment God inflicts on the ungodly; cf. Jeremiah 9:12-14; 23:15.

8:13 Woe! Woe! Woe: each of the three woes pronounced by the angel represents a separate disaster; cf. Revelation 9:12; 11:14. The final woe, released by the seventh trumpet blast, includes the plagues of Revelation 16.

9:1-12 The fifth trumpet heralds a woe containing elements from the eighth and ninth plagues of Egypt (Ex 10:12-15, 21-23) but specifically reminiscent of the invasion of locusts in Joel 1:4–2:10.

9:1 A star: late Judaism represented fallen powers as stars (Is 14:12-15; Lk 10:18; Jude 13), but a comparison with Revelation 1:20 and Revelation 20:1 suggests that here it means an angel. The passage to the abyss: referring to Sheol, the netherworld, where Satan and the fallen angels are kept for a thousand years, to be cast afterwards into the pool of fire; cf. Revelation 20:7-10. The abyss was conceived of as a vast subterranean cavern full of fire. Its only link with the earth was a kind of passage or mine shaft, which was kept locked.

9:3 Scorpions: their poisonous sting was proverbial; Ezekiel 2:6; Luke 11:12.

9:5 For five months: more or less corresponding to the life-span of locusts.

9:7-10 Eight characteristics are listed to show the eschatological and diabolical nature of these locusts.

9:11 Abaddon: Hebrew (more precisely, Aramaic) for destruction or ruin. Apollyon: Greek for the “Destroyer.”

9:13-21 The sixth trumpet heralds a woe representing another diabolical attack symbolized by an invasion by the Parthians living east of the Euphrates; see the note on Revelation 6:2. At the appointed time (9:15), the frightful horses act as God’s agents of judgment. The imaginative details are not to be taken literally; see Introduction and the note on Revelation 6:12-14.

9:13 [Four]: many Greek manuscripts and versions omit the word. The horns were situated at the four corners of the altar (Ex 27:2; 30:2-3); see the note on Revelation 8:3.

9:14-15 The four angels: they are symbolic of the destructive activity that will be extended throughout the universe.

9:17 Blue: literally, “hyacinth-colored.” Yellow: literally, “sulfurous.”

9:20 The works of their hands: i.e., the gods their hands had made.

10:1–11:14 An interlude in two scenes (10:1-11 and 11:1-14) precedes the sounding of the seventh trumpet; cf. Revelation 7:1-17. The first vision describes an angel astride sea and land like a colossus, with a small scroll open, the contents of which indicate that the end is imminent (chap. 10). The second vision is of the measuring of the temple and of two witnesses, whose martyrdom means that the kingdom of God is about to be inaugurated.

10:2 He placed … on the land: this symbolizes the universality of the angel's message, as does the figure of the small scroll open to be read.

10:3 The seven thunders: God's voice announcing judgment and doom; cf. Psalm 29:3-9, where thunder, as the voice of Yahweh, is praised seven times.

10:6 Heaven and earth and sea: the three parts of the universe. No more delay: cf. Daniel 12:7; Hebrews 2:3.

10:7 The mysterious plan of God: literally, "the mystery of God," the end of the present age when the forces of evil will be put down (17:1–19:4, 11-21; 20:7-10; cf. 2 Thes 2:6-12; Rom 16:25-26), and the establishment of the reign of God when all creation will be made new (21:1–22:5).

10:9-10 The small scroll was sweet because it predicted the final victory of God's people; it was sour because it also announced their sufferings. Cf. Ezekiel 3:1-3.

10:11 This further prophecy is contained in chaps. 12–22.

11:1 The temple and altar symbolize the new Israel; see the note on Revelation 7:4-9. The worshipers represent Christians. The measuring of the temple (cf. Ez 40:3–42:20; 47:1-12; Zec 2:5-6) suggests that God will preserve the faithful remnant (cf. Is 4:2-3) who remain true to Christ (14:1-5).

11:2 The outer court: the Court of the Gentiles. Trample … forty-two months: the duration of the vicious persecution of the Jews by Antiochus IV Epiphanes (Dn 7:25; 12:7); this persecution of three and a half years (half of seven, counted as 1260 days in 11:3; 12:6) became the prototype of periods of trial for God's people; cf. Luke 4:25; James 5:17. The reference here is to the persecution by the Romans; cf. Introduction.

11:3 The two witnesses, wearing sackcloth symbolizing lamentation and repentance, cannot readily be identified. Do they represent Moses and Elijah, or the Law and the Prophets, or Peter and Paul? Most probably they refer to the universal church, especially the Christian martyrs, fulfilling the office of witness (two because of Dt 19:15; cf. Mk 6:7; Jn 8:17).

11:4 The two olive trees and the two lampstands: the martyrs who stand in the presence of the Lord; the imagery is taken from Zechariah 4:8-14, where the olive trees refer to Zerubbabel and Joshua.

11:5-6 These details are derived from stories of Moses, who turned water into blood (Ex 7:17-20), and of Elijah, who called down fire from heaven (1 Kgs 18:36-40; 2 Kgs 1:10) and closed up the sky for three years (1 Kgs 17:1; cf. 18:1).

11:7 The beast … from the abyss: the Roman emperor Nero, who symbolizes the forces of evil, or the antichrist (13:1, 8; 17:8); cf. Daniel 7:2-8, 11-12, 19-22 and Introduction.

11:8 The great city: this expression is used constantly in Revelation for Babylon, i.e., Rome; cf. Revelation 14:8; 16:19; 17:18; 18:2, 10, 21. "Sodom" and "Egypt": symbols of immorality (cf. Is 1:10) and oppression of God's people (cf. Ex 1:11-14). Where indeed their Lord was crucified: not the geographical but the symbolic Jerusalem that rejects God and his witnesses, i.e., Rome, called Babylon in Revelation 16–18; see the note on Revelation 17:9 and Introduction.

11:9-12 Over the martyrdom (11:7) of the two witnesses, now called prophets, the ungodly rejoice for three and a half days, a symbolic period of time; see the note on Revelation 11:2. Afterwards they go in triumph to heaven, as did Elijah (2 Kgs 2:11).

11:13 Seven thousand people: a symbolic sum to represent all social classes (seven) and large numbers (thousands); cf. Introduction.

11:15-19 The seventh trumpet proclaims the coming of God's reign after the victory over diabolical powers; see the note on Revelation 10:7.

12:1–14:20 This central section of Revelation portrays the power of evil, represented by a dragon, in opposition to God and his people. First, the dragon pursues the woman about to give birth, but her son is saved and "caught up to God and his throne" (12:5). Then Michael and his angels cast the dragon and his angels out of heaven (12:7-9). After this, the dragon tries to attack the boy indirectly by attacking members of his church (12:13-17). A beast, symbolizing the Roman empire, then becomes the dragon's agent, mortally wounded but restored to life and worshiped by all the world (13:1-10). A second beast arises from the land, symbolizing the antichrist, which leads people astray by its prodigies to idolize the first beast (13:11-18). This is followed by a vision of the Lamb and his faithful ones, and the proclamation of imminent judgment upon the world in terms of the wine of God's wrath (14:1-20).

12:1 The woman adorned with the sun, the moon, and the stars (images taken from Gn 37:9-10) symbolizes God's people in the Old and the New Testaments. The Israel of old gave birth to the Messiah (12:5) and then became the new Israel, the church, which suffers persecution by the dragon (12:6, 13-17); cf. Isaiah 50:1; 66:7; Jeremiah 50:12. This corresponds to a widespread myth throughout the ancient world that a goddess pregnant with a savior was pursued by a horrible monster; by miraculous intervention, she bore a son who then killed the monster.

12:2 Because of Eve's sin, the woman gives birth in distress and pain (Gn 3:16; cf. Is 66:7-14).

12:3 Huge red dragon: the Devil or Satan (cf. 12:9; 20:2), symbol of the forces of evil, a mythical monster known also as Leviathan (Ps 74:13-14) or Rahab (Jb 26:12-13; Ps 89:11). Seven diadems: these are symbolic of the fullness of the dragon's sovereignty over the kingdoms of this world; cf. Christ with many diadems (19:12).

12:5 Rule … iron rod: fulfilled in Revelation 19:15; cf. Psalm 2:9. Was caught up to God: reference to Christ's ascension.

12:6 God protects the persecuted church in the desert, the traditional Old Testament place of refuge for the afflicted, according to the typology of the Exodus; see the note on Revelation 11:2.

12:7-12 Michael, mentioned only here in Revelation, wins a victory over the dragon. A hymn of praise follows.

12:7 Michael: the archangel, guardian and champion of Israel; cf. Daniel 10:13, 21; 12:1; Jude 9. In Hebrew, the name Michael means "Who can compare with God?"; cf. Revelation 13:4.

12:9 The ancient serpent: who seduced Eve (Gn 3:1-6), mother of the human race; cf. Revelation 20:2; Ephesians 6:11-12. Was thrown down: allusion to the expulsion of Satan from heaven; cf. Luke 10:18.

12:10 The accuser: the meaning of the Hebrew word "Satan," found in Revelation 12:9; Job 1–2; Zechariah 3:1; 1 Chronicles 21:1; he continues to accuse Christ's disciples.

12:14 Great eagle: symbol of the power and swiftness of divine help; cf. Exodus

19:4; Deuteronomy 32:11; Isaiah 40:31.

12:15 The serpent is depicted as the sea monster; cf. Revelation 13:1; Isaiah 27:1; Ezekiel 32:2; Psalm 74:13-14.

12:17 Although the church is protected by God’s special providence (12:16), the individual Christian is to expect persecution and suffering.

12:18 It took its position: many later manuscripts and versions read “I took my position,” thus connecting the sentence to the following paragraph.

13:1-10 This wild beast, combining features of the four beasts in Daniel 7:2-28, symbolizes the Roman empire; the seven heads represent the emperors; see the notes on Revelation 17:10 and Revelation 17:12-14. The blasphemous names are the divine titles assumed by the emperors.

13:2 Satan (12:9), the prince of this world (Jn 12:31), commissioned the beast to persecute the church (13:5-7).

13:3 This may be a reference to the popular legend that Nero would come back to life and rule again after his death (which occurred in A.D. 68 from a self-inflicted stab wound in the throat); cf. Revelation 13:14; Revelation 17:8. Domitian (A.D. 81–96) embodied all the cruelty and impiety of Nero. Cf. Introduction.

13:4 Worshiped the beast: allusion to emperor worship, which Domitian insisted upon and ruthlessly enforced. Who can compare with the beast: perhaps a deliberate parody of the name Michael; see the note on Revelation 12:7.

13:5-6 Domitian, like Antiochus IV Epiphanes (Dn 7:8, 11, 25), demanded that he be called by divine titles such as “our lord and god” and “Jupiter.” See the note on Revelation 11:2.

13:5 Forty-two months: this is the same duration as the profanation of the holy city (11:2), the prophetic mission of the two witnesses (11:3), and the retreat of the woman into the desert (12:6, 14).

13:11-18 The second beast is described in terms of the false prophets (cf. 16:13; 19:20; 20:10) who accompany the false messiahs (the first beast); cf. Matthew 24:24; Mark 13:22; 2 Thessalonians 2:9; cf. also Deuteronomy 13:2-4. Christians had either to worship the emperor and his image or to suffer martyrdom.

13:18 Each of the letters of the alphabet in Hebrew as well as in Greek has a numerical value. Many possible combinations of letters will add up to 666, and many candidates have been nominated for this infamous number. The most likely is the emperor Caesar Nero (see the note on 13:3), the Greek form of whose name in Hebrew letters gives the required sum. (The Latin form of this name equals 616, which is the reading of a few manuscripts.) Nero personifies the emperors who viciously persecuted the church. It has also been observed that “6” represents imperfection, falling short of the perfect number “7, ” and is represented here in a triple or superlative form.

14:1-5 Now follows a tender and consoling vision of the Lamb and his companions.

14:1 Mount Zion: in Jerusalem, the traditional place where the true remnant, the Israel of faith, is to be gathered in the messianic reign; cf. 2 Kings 19:30-31; Joel 3:5; Obadiah 1:17; Micah 4:6-8; Zephaniah 3:12-20. A hundred and forty-four thousand: see the note on Revelation 7:4-9. His Father’s name … foreheads: in contrast to the pagans who were marked with the name or number of the beast (13:16-17).

14:4 Virgins: metaphorically, because they never indulged in any idolatrous practices, which are considered in the Old Testament to be adultery and fornication (2:14-15, 20-22; 17:1-6; cf. Ez 16:1-58; 23:1-49). The parallel passages (7:3; 22:4) indicate that the 144,000 whose foreheads are sealed represent all Christian people.

14:5 No deceit: because they did not deny Christ or do homage to the beast. Lying is characteristic of the opponents of Christ (Jn 8:44), but the Suffering Servant spoke no falsehood (Is 53:9; 1 Pt 2:22). Unblemished: a cultic term taken from the vocabulary of sacrificial ritual.

14:6-13 Three angels proclaim imminent judgment on the pagan world, calling all peoples to worship God the creator. Babylon (Rome) will fall, and its supporters will be tormented forever.

14:6 Everlasting good news: that God's eternal reign is about to begin; see the note on Revelation 10:7.

14:8 This verse anticipates the lengthy dirge over Babylon (Rome) in Revelation 18:1–19:4. The oracle of Isaiah 21:9 to Babylon is applied here.

14:10-11 The wine of God's fury: image taken from Isaiah 51:17; Jeremiah 25:15-16; 49:12; 51:7; Ezekiel 23:31-34. Eternal punishment in the fiery pool of burning sulfur (or "fire and brimstone"; cf. Gn 19:24) is also reserved for the Devil, the beast, and the false prophet (19:20; 20:10; 21:8).

14:12 In addition to faith in Jesus, the seer insists upon the necessity and value of works, as in Revelation 2:23; 20:12-13; 22:12; cf. Matthew 16:27; Romans 2:6.

14:13 See the note on Revelation 1:3. According to Jewish thought, people's actions followed them as witnesses before the court of God.

14:14-20 The reaping of the harvest symbolizes the gathering of the elect in the final judgment, while the reaping and treading of the grapes symbolizes the doom of the ungodly (cf. Jl 4:12-13; Is 63:1-6) that will come in Revelation 19:11-21.

14:18 Altar: there was only one altar in the heavenly temple; see the notes above on Revelation 6:9; 8:3; 11:1.

14:20 Two hundred miles: literally, sixteen hundred stades. The stadion, a Greek unit of measurement, was about 607 feet in length, approximately the length of a furlong.

15:1–16:21 The seven bowls, the third and last group of seven after the seven seals and the seven trumpets, foreshadow the final cataclysm. Again, the series is introduced by a heavenly prelude, in which the victors over the beast sing the canticle of Moses (15:2-4).

15:1-4 A vision of the victorious martyrs precedes the vision of woe in Revelation 15:5–16:21; cf. Revelation 7:9-12.

15:2 Mingled with fire: fire symbolizes the sanctity involved in facing God, reflected in the trials that have prepared the victorious Christians or in God's wrath.

15:3 The song of Moses: the song that Moses and the Israelites sang after their escape from the oppression of Egypt (Ex 15:1-18). The martyrs have escaped from the oppression of the Devil. Nations: many other Greek manuscripts and versions read "ages."

15:5-8 Seven angels receive the bowls of God's wrath.

15:5 Tent of testimony: the name of the meeting tent in the Greek text of Exodus 40. Cf. 2 Maccabees 2:4-7.

16:1-21 These seven bowls, like the seven seals (6:1-17; 8:1) and the seven trumpets (8:2–9:21; 11:15-19), bring on a succession of disasters modeled in part on the plagues of Egypt (Ex 7–12). See the note on Revelation 6:12-14.

16:2 Like the sixth Egyptian plague (Ex 9:8-11).

16:3-4 Like the first Egyptian plague (Ex 7:20-21). The same woe followed the blowing of the second trumpet (8:8-9).

16:10 The throne of the beast: symbol of the forces of evil. Darkness: like the ninth Egyptian plague (Ex 10:21-23); cf. Revelation 9:2.

16:12 The kings of the East: Parthians; see the notes on Revelation 6:2 and Revelation 17:12-13. East: literally, “rising of the sun,” as in Revelation 7:2.

16:13 Frogs: possibly an allusion to the second Egyptian plague (Ex 7:25–8:11). The false prophet: identified with the two-horned second beast (13:11-18 and the note there).

16:15 Like a thief: as in Revelation 3:3 (cf. Mt 24:42-44; 1 Thes 5:2). Blessed: see the note on Revelation 1:3.

16:16 Armageddon: in Hebrew, this means “Mountain of Megiddo.” Since Megiddo was the scene of many decisive battles in antiquity (Jgs 5:19-20; 2 Kgs 9:27; 2 Chr 35:20-24), the town became the symbol of the final disastrous rout of the forces of evil.

16:19 The great city: Rome and the empire.

16:20-21 See the note on Revelation 6:12-14. Hailstones: as in the seventh Egyptian plague (Ex 9:23-24); cf. Revelation 8:7. Like huge weights: literally, “weighing a talent,” about one hundred pounds.

17:1–19:10 The punishment of Babylon is now described as a past event and, metaphorically, under the image of the great harlot who leads people astray into idolatry.

17:1-6 Babylon, the symbolic name (17:5) of Rome, is graphically described as “the great harlot.”

17:2 Intercourse … harlotry: see the note on Revelation 14:4. The pagan kings subject to Rome adopted the cult of the emperor.

17:3 Scarlet beast: see the note on Revelation 13:1-10. Blasphemous names: divine titles assumed by the Roman emperors; see the note on Revelation 13:5-6.

17:6 Reference to the great wealth and idolatrous cults of Rome.

17:6b-18 An interpretation of the vision is here given.

17:8 Allusion to the belief that the dead Nero would return to power (17:11); see the note on Revelation 13:3.

17:9 Here is a clue: literally, “Here a mind that has wisdom.” Seven hills: of Rome.

17:10 There is little agreement as to the identity of the Roman emperors alluded to here. The number seven (17:9) suggests that all the emperors are meant; see the note on Revelation 1:4.

17:11 The beast: Nero; see the note on Revelation 17:8.

17:12-13 Ten kings who have not yet been crowned: perhaps Parthian satraps who are to accompany the revived Nero (the beast) in his march on Rome to regain power; see the note on Revelation 13:3. In Revelation 19:11-21, the Lamb and his companions will conquer them.

17:16-18 The ten horns: the ten pagan kings (17:12) who unwittingly fulfill God’s will against harlot Rome, the great city; cf. Ezekiel 16:37.

18:1–19:4 A stirring dirge over the fall of Babylon-Rome. The perspective is prophetic, as if the fall of Rome had already taken place. The imagery here, as elsewhere in this book, is not to be taken literally. The vindictiveness of some of the language, borrowed from the scathing Old Testament prophecies against Babylon, Tyre, and Nineveh (Is 23; 24; 27; Jer 50–51; Ez 26–27), is meant to portray symbolically the inexorable demands of God's holiness and justice; cf. Introduction. The section concludes with a joyous canticle on the future glory of heaven.

18:2 Many Greek manuscripts and versions omit a cage for every unclean … beast.

18:3-24 Rome is condemned for her immorality, symbol of idolatry (see the note on 14:4), and for persecuting the church; cf. Revelation 19:2.

18:4 Depart from her: not evacuation of the city but separation from sinners, as always in apocalyptic literature.

18:11 Ironically, the merchants weep not so much for Babylon- Rome, but for their lost markets; cf. Ezekiel 27:36.

18:13 Spice: an unidentified spice plant called in Greek amōmon.

19:1, 3, 4, 6 Alleluia: found only here in the New Testament, this frequent exclamation of praise in the Hebrew psalms was important in Jewish liturgy.

19:5-10 A victory song follows, sung by the entire church, celebrating the marriage of the Lamb, the union of the Messiah with the community of the elect.

19:7 The wedding day of the Lamb: symbol of God's reign about to begin (21:1–22:5); see the note on Revelation 10:7. His bride: the church; cf. 2 Corinthians 11:2; Ephesians 5:22-27. Marriage is one of the biblical metaphors used to describe the covenant relationship between God and his people; cf. Hosea 2:16-22; Isaiah 54:5-6; 62:5; Ezekiel 16:6-14. Hence, idolatry and apostasy are viewed as adultery and harlotry (Hos 2:4-13; Ez 16:15-63); see the note on Revelation 14:4.

19:8 See the note on Revelation 14:12.

19:9 Blessed: see the note on Revelation 1:3.

19:10 The spirit of prophecy: as the prophets were inspired to proclaim God's word, so the Christian is called to give witness to the Word of God (Rev 19:13) made flesh; cf. Revelation 1:2; 6:9; 12:17.

19:11-16 Symbolic description of the exalted Christ (cf. 1:13-16) who together with the armies of heaven overcomes the beast and its followers; cf. Revelation 17:14.

19:12 A name: in Semitic thought, the name conveyed the reality of the person; cf. Matthew 11:27; Luke 10:22.

19:13 Had been dipped in: other Greek manuscripts and versions read "had been sprinkled with"; cf. Revelation 19:15. The Word of God: Christ is the revelation of the Father; cf. John 1:1, 14; 1 John 2:14.

19:15 The treading of the wine press is a prophetic symbol used to describe the destruction of God's enemies; cf. Isaiah 63:1-6; Joel 4:13.

19:17-21 The certainty of Christ's victory is proclaimed by an angel, followed by a reference to the mustering of enemy forces and a fearsome description of their annihilation. The gruesome imagery is borrowed from Ezekiel 39:4, 17-20.

19:20 Beast … false prophet: see the notes on Revelation 13. The fiery pool … sulfur: symbol of God's punishment (14:10; 20:10, 14-15), different from the abyss; see the note on Revelation 9:1.

20:1-6 Like the other numerical values in this book, the thousand years are not to be taken literally; they symbolize the long period of time between the chaining up of Satan (a symbol for Christ's resurrection-victory over death and the forces of evil) and the end of the world. During this time God's people share in the glorious reign of God that is present to them by virtue of their baptismal victory over death and sin; cf. Romans 6:1-8; John 5:24-25; 16:33; 1 John 3:14; Ephesians 2:1.

20:1 Abyss: see the note on Revelation 9:1.

20:2 Dragon … serpent … Satan: see the notes on Revelation 12:3, 9, 10, 15.

20:4 Beast … mark: see Revelation 13 and its notes.

20:6 Blessed: see the note on Revelation 1:3. Second death: see the note on Revelation 2:11. Priests: as in Revelation 1:6; 5:10; cf. 1 Peter 2:9.

20:7-10 A description of the symbolic battle to take place when Satan is released at the end of time, when the thousand years are over; see the note on Revelation 20:1-6.

20:8 Gog and Magog: symbols of all pagan nations; the names are taken from Ezekiel 38:1–39:20.

20:9 The breadth of the earth: Palestine. The beloved city: Jerusalem; see the note on Revelation 14:1.

20:11-15 A description of the final judgment. After the intermediate reign of Christ, all the dead are raised and judged, thus inaugurating the new age.

20:12 The book of life: see the note on Revelation 3:5. Judged … scrolls: see the note on Revelation 14:12.

20:13 Hades: the netherworld; see the note on Revelation 1:18.

20:14 Second death: see the note on Revelation 2:11.

21:1–22:5 A description of God's eternal kingdom in heaven under the symbols of a new heaven and a new earth; cf. Isaiah 65:17-25; 66:22; Matthew 19:28.

21:1 Sea … no more: because as home of the dragon it was doomed to disappear; cf. Job 7:12.

21:2 New Jerusalem … bride: symbol of the church (Gal 4:26); see the note on Revelation 19:7.

21:3 People: other ancient manuscripts read a plural, "peoples."

21:3-4: Language taken from Ezekiel 37:27; Isaiah 25:8; 35:10; cf. Revelation 7:17.

21:5 The one … on the throne: God himself; cf. Revelation 4:1-11.

21:6 They are accomplished: God's reign has already begun; see the note on Revelation 20:1-6. Alpha … Omega: see the note on Revelation 1:8. Life-giving water: see the note on Revelation 7:17.

21:7 The victor: over the forces of evil; see the conclusions of the seven letters (2:7, 11, 17, 26; 3:5, 12, 21). He will be my son: the victorious Christian enjoys divine affiliation by adoption (Gal 4:4-7; Rom 8:14-17); see the note on Revelation 2:26-28.

21:8 Cowards: their conviction is so weak that they deny Christ in time of trial and become traitors. Second death: see the note on Revelation 2:11.

21:9–22:5 Symbolic descriptions of the new Jerusalem, the church. Most of the images are borrowed from Ezekiel 40–48.

21:9 The bride, the wife of the Lamb: the church (21:2), the new Jerusalem (21:10); cf. 2 Corinthians 11:2.

21:14 Courses of stones … apostles: literally, “twelve foundations”; cf. Ephesians 2:19-20.

21:15-17 The city is shaped like a gigantic cube, a symbol of perfection (cf. 1 Kgs 6:19-20). The measurements of the city and its wall are multiples of the symbolic number twelve; see the note on Revelation 7:4-9.

21:16 Fifteen hundred miles: literally, twelve thousand stades, about 12,000 furlongs (see the note on 14:20); the number is symbolic: twelve (the apostles as leaders of the new Israel) multiplied by 1,000 (the immensity of Christians); cf. Introduction. In length and width and height: literally, “its length and width and height are the same.”

21:17 One hundred and forty-four cubits: the cubit was about eighteen inches in length. Standard unit of measurement the angel used: literally, “by a human measure, i.e., an angel’s.”

21:18-21 The gold and precious gems symbolize the beauty and excellence of the church; cf. Exodus 28:15-21; Tobit 13:16-17; Isaiah 54:11-12.

21:22 Christ is present throughout the church; hence, no temple is needed as an earthly dwelling for God; cf. Matthew 18:20; 28:20; John 4:21.

21:23 Lamp … Lamb: cf. John 8:12.

21:24-27 All men and women of good will are welcome in the church; cf. Isaiah 60:1, 3, 5, 11. The … book of life: see the note on Revelation 3:5.

22:1, 17 Life-giving water: see the note on Revelation 7:17.

22:2 The tree of life: cf. Revelation 22:14; see the note on Revelation 2:7. Fruit … medicine: cf. Ezekiel 47:12.

22:4 Look upon his face: cf. Matthew 5:8; 1 Corinthians 13:12; 1 John 3:2.

22:6-21 The book ends with an epilogue consisting of a series of warnings and exhortations and forming an inclusion with the prologue by resuming its themes and expressions; see the note on Revelation 1:1-3.

22:7, 12, 20 I am coming soon: Christ is the speaker; see the note on Revelation 1:3.

22:7, 14 Blessed: see the note on Revelation 1:3.

22:10 The appointed time: see the note on Revelation 1:3.

22:13 Christ applies to himself words used by God in Revelation 1:8.

22:14 The city: heavenly Jerusalem; see the note on Revelation 21:2.

22:16 The root … of David: see the note on Revelation 5:5. Morning star: see the note on Revelation 2:26-28.

22:17 Bride: the church; see the note on Revelation 21:2.

22:20 Come, Lord Jesus: a liturgical refrain, similar to the Aramaic expression Marana tha—“Our Lord, come!”—in 1 Corinthians 16:22; cf. the note there. It was a prayer for the coming of Christ in glory at the parousia; see the note on Revelation 1:3.
